FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1863, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 431—VOL. XVII.] NEW YORK, JANUARY 2, 1864. [PRICE 6 CENTS.

Our $5,000 Prize Tale.

THE GULF BETWEEN THEM.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens,

Author of "FASHION AND FAMINE," &c., &c.

OUR readers are well aware of the numerous prizes offered by the proprietor of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED PAPER for the best novels and tales, with the view of cultivating American talent, and calling forth new aspirants to the honors of Irving, Cooper, Hawthorne and Holmes.

The minor tales to which prizes were awarded have already appeared, illustrated by the most talented artists in the country.

For the great prize of $5,000 more than two hundred novels were submitted. After a close and impartial scrutiny, the prize was awarded to which proved to be by the accomplished author of "Fashion and Famine," "The Deserted Wife," &c.

"The Gulf Between Them,"

Her novel of "Fashion and Famine" was the most successful work of pure fiction ever written in America. Its circulation was beyond parallel, and exceeded only by that of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Translated into most of the languages of Europe, it gave the great American authoress a worldwide reputation.

"The Gulf Between Them," a work of singular power and beauty, will appeal to every heart, from the fact that the scenes are laid in our own land, with whose life and finest impulses she is so deeply imbued. It is, too, a novel of our day, and by its extraordinary interest will fascinate and absorb every reader by its thrilling incidents, deep human interest and rare discrimination of character.

The awarding of the prize among so many competitors will alone show that it is of a superior order, as the Proprietor wishes his liberality to redound to the pleasure and gratification of his readers.

The manuscript is now ours. The following documents will show its transfer to us:

NEW YORK, Dec. 16, 1863.

DEAR SIR—Your note, announcing that my story has drawn the prize offered in your Illustrated Paper, has, you may well suppose, given me great pleasure.

With many thanks for your prompt action in the premises, and a sincere desire that you may find as much benefit from the story as your munificence and extraordinary spirit of enterprise has conferred on me, I enclose a receipt for the money, and remain,

Your obliged Friend,
ANN S. STEPHENS.

FRANK LESLIE, Esq.

NEW YORK, Dec. 16, 1863.

Received of FRANK LESLIE Five Thousand Dollars, in payment of a prize awarded to my story, entitled "THE GULF BETWEEN THEM," which he is hereby authorized to publish in his Illustrated Paper.
ANN S. STEPHENS.

We bespeak for this tale a warm and hearty American welcome, and are happy to announce that the publication will commence in No. 435 of the paper. It can be ordered of any newsdealer in the United States.

The liberality of the proprietor in thus encouraging American authorship will be another evidence to the public of the enterprise of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED PAPER. It is not only the first American Illustrated Journal in date, but in merit far exceeds any competitor that has ever arisen. Its sketches of every kind, of war and peace, incidents of every description, are of acknowledged accuracy, as testimonials from all quarters attest. The paper is thus a living graphic history of the world, and especially of our own country, as time glides by every great event being fixed with photographic accuracy.

But FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED PAPER is not merely a pictorial journal, it is in every sense a FAMILY PAPER, containing always in each number several stories by talented writers, beautifully illustrated, a serial novel of some author of worldwide renown, poems, sketches, incidents, and the lighter miscellany that charm the fireside.

With the new attraction of the great novel,

"The Gulf Between Them,"

BY MRS. ANN S. STEPHENS,

FRANK LESLIE'S PAPER will surpass itself and cannot fail to meet with the approval of the public.

EXPLOSION OF A SHELL
In the Ladies' Saloon of the Steamer Welcome.

THE dastardly character of the war on the part of the South has evinced itself in a thousand ways. Torpedoes in the rivers, on the roads, in work a they lacked means or courage to hold, have been used on one side only, and history will record, with stern condemnation, on which side.

Barbarism shows itself, too, in the constant attack on passenger boats and unarmed conveyances. The sketch portrayed by our Artist gives recent instances of this spirit. The guerillas have become very troublesome on the Mississippi. The Welcome, Capt. Bryan, from St. Louis to New Orleans, with a cargo of Western produce and cattle, as well as a number of passengers, including several ladies, among others Mrs. Crocker, wife of the General in command at Natchez, was attacked by guerillas about eight o'clock on Sunday, Nov. 29, when passing a place called Waterproof, below Vicksburg. Without warning, and regardless of the lives of women and children these wretches poured volley after into her. In the short time that she was exposed, she received 11 cannon balls and 160 Minie bullets. One shell burst in the social hall or ladies' cabin, tearing away the flooring and two doors and scattering the passengers in dismay. The wheel was struck and the pilot so alarmed that, but for the presence of Gen. Benton, who stood by, and, regardless of a severe wound he received, directed his movements, the steamer would have been taken.

THE STEAMSHIP ETNA IN A GALE.

ONE of the most difficult passages of late years was that of the steamship Etna Capt. McQuigan, of Inman's line. Almost from the time of leaving Queenstown she was exposed to storms, which continued till she made Cape Race. When about 400 miles from Cape Clear, the gale was almost a hurricane. The mainmast gave way, and had to be cut from her side, over which it fell, staving in the bulwark. The engines were stopped and the fires were almost out. She was, however, so staunch and well managed, that she came safely through.

THE GUERILLA WAR ON THE MISSISSIPPI—EXPLOSION OF A SHELL IN THE LADIES' SALOON OF THE STEAMER WELCOME, AT WATERPROOF, MISS.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, FRED. B. SCHELL.

THE HOME JOURNAL

For 1864.

New Series,

New Features,

New Type.

On the second of January this JOURNAL OF CONVERSATION TOPICS will commence another volume.

A continued success (which has been exceedingly flattering to us during the trying times of war) enables us now to make a still further display of enterprise, and to promise NEW ATTRACTIONS.

The paper for the coming year will appear in an entirely "new dress;" several fonts of type having been ordered for this purpose. It will continue to be printed on the best of white paper, its MECHANICAL EXECUTION is still to be unsurpassed, and its pre-eminence of clearness and legibility (so valuable to the sight and so needful for a family paper) is to be yet more marked.

With the January number will be commenced the publication of an intensely interesting story translated from the French for our columns, entitled,

De Valvrede.

This work is carried to the full proportions of a modern novel, and will occupy about four months in the publication. It will be succeeded by several other by our own narrative writers; while some of the ablest of contemporary authors are engaged for us in translating from the French and German.

Original and Thrilling Stories

N. P. WILLIS will continue to devote his exclusive industry to the Journal—editorial and literary—resuming (as far as the illness of his partner will permit) those which have proved so acceptable. Residing within reach of the city, he will continue to prepare his own more elaborate description of memorable events; to give extracts from his interesting personal correspondence; and to contribute those portraitures of the people of mark, and of the immediate occurrences of the time, which have become, in a manner, characteristic of his pen.

Sketches of Rural Life

The Editors will still be assisted by able contributors, foremost among whom will be the scholarly and dainty essayist known to our readers by the signature of "F. C." We take great pleasure in assuring to the HOME JOURNAL readers the continued assistance of a writer always so felicitous!

A particular feature of the coming volume will be the Foreign News and Correspondence, by which our readers will be kept informed more especially of the gayer "goings on" of society and fashion in the capitals of Europe. Those popular departments of our paper, known as Foreign Gossip

First Look at New Books, and the criticisms of Literature and Art,

are still to be retained. In the first of these departments are included the news and sparkling gossip of English and French newspaper literature. In the second, we make extracts from the new books, duly as they appear: while under the third head ("Literature and Art") are discussed the interesting topics of the Literary and Art World. In short, the HOME JOURNAL for 1864 will contain the Foreign Correspondence of a large number of contributors—the selections from the most interesting periodicals of the day—the racy novels—the stories of real life—the sparkling wit and amusing anecdote—the personal sketches of public characters—the stirring scenes of the world we live in—the prompt record of news for ladies—the fashions—the outlines of news—the wit, humor and pathos of the times—the essays on life, literature, society, and morals, and the usual variety of careful choosings from the wilderness of Foreign periodical and magazine literature, criticism, poetry, etc.

TERMS—For one copy, $2 50; for three copies, $6, or one copy for three years, $6; for a club of six copies, $12, and, at that rate, for a larger club—ALWAYS IN ADVANCE.

Those who wish to begin with the new volume, will please send their subscriptions at once.

Address,

MORRIS & WILLIS,

and Proprietors, 107 Fulton St., New York.

FURS are so complete a necessity as a part of winter attire that all seek to have them. A choice among the various fashionable dealers will at times embarrass a lady, but at Burke's, 210 Broadway, on the corner of Fulton, they will find a very extensive assortment, well made up, sold at low prices, and will be waited upon with politeness and courtesy.

MRS. Z. R. PLUMB'S Gymnasium, 59 West 14th street, New York, is an institution of a new order, and well deserving the hearty patronage of our best society. The necessity of calisthenics as a part of education is admitted, but there has not been hitherto an institution especially fitted for ladies and gentlemen. This one, directed by Mrs. Plumb and her brother, Mr. Robinson, affords all needed for young or old.

Barnum's American Museum.

MONSIEUR JOSEPH, THE GREAT FRENCH GIANT, 8 feet 4 inches; ANNA SWAN, the GIANT GIRL, 8 feet 1 inch; GIANT BOY, 8 feet; LILLIPUTIAN KING, 14 years old, only 22 inches high; Automaton Musical Troupe, Moving Wax Figures, Enormous Serpent, &c., &c. Tom Taylor's great drama, the TICKET-OF-LEAVE MAN, every AFTERNOON AND EVENING. Admission to all, only 25 cents; Children under 10, 15 cents.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 2, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 72 Duane Street, between Broadway and Elm, New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, also FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR OF 1861, by GEORGE P. BEMIS & CO., Proprietors of the London American, 100 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER:

One copy one year		$3 50
Two copies, "	to one address	5 00
Four " "	"	9 00
Magazine and Paper one year		5 00

Notice to Advertisers.

The value of our paper as an advertising medium has become so generally known, that we are compelled every week to refuse columns of advertisements. The vast increase of our circulation, penetrating as it does into the most profitable channels, renders our space doubly valuable, and justifies us in the course we have determined upon—that of increasing our rates of advertising in the following ratio:

75 cents a line on the outside or last page.
40 " " on the 14th and 15th pages.

Notice to Contributors.—Superior original Tales will be always received, and if accepted remunerated according to their merit. All not accepted will be promptly returned. They should be plainly written on one side only, and the address of the writer given distinctly.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

A reconnoissance to Sperryville and Little Washington showed the enemy not to be in force along the Blue Ridge. The rebel spasmodic raids in the rear begin again. A body of 700 attempted on the 13th to destroy the bridge over Cedar run, near Catlett's station.

On the 18th a body of rebel cavalry, 800 in number, attacked the guard on the railroad, near Fairfax station, consisting of the 145th New York, and captured the whole of them.

The rebels are greatly annoyed by Averill's operations in Western Virginia, and admit serious loss. He was on the 17th at Stanton, destroying the railroad.

Gen. Butler is not apparently inclined to remain idle. Besides sending Gen. Wild to take Elizabeth, he sent B. G. Wistar up the Peninsula, and that officer moved so rapidly as to surprise and capture the entire rebel garrison at Charles City Court House, consisting of two companies of the 42d Virginia Cavalry, on the 14th. He then destroyed the camp, equipments and provisions.

TENNESSEE.

Gen. Foster has assumed command of the troops lately under Gen. Burnside.

Hardee is at Dalton, temporarily in command of Bragg's army.

Longstreet retreated as far as Rogersville, where he made a stand, and on the 14th engaged the advance of our forces, under Gen. Shackleford, near Bear's station. An attempt to take him in the rear was defeated by Ferrero, and Shackleford, though driven back a half mile, fought all day with little loss, Longstreet receiving rapid accessions from all quarters.

Gen. Granger has, however, got ahead of him, and he will have to fight a desperate battle before he can escape.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Brig.-Gen. Wild's negro brigade started from Portsmouth, Va., on the 5th, and on the 10th occupied Elizabeth city, N. C., taking the rebels by surprise. Artillery, cavalry and steamers have gone up, and further operations will soon be heard of.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

A fire, accompanied by the explosion of a magazine on Fort Sumter on the 11th, killed and wounded 40 of the small rebel garrison.

MISSISSIPPI.

On the 5th the rebels, under Adams, Crosby and Logan, numbering in all 4,000, made an attack on Natchez, but were repulsed by Gen. Gresham, who pursued them and took 800 prisoners.

The rebel attacks on the Mississippi steamers increase. On the 8th the captain and bartender of the Von Phul were killed near Bayou Sara.

TEXAS.

The capture of Fort Esperanza, with Port Caballo, gave Gen. Washburne control of the important points, Saluria, Port Lavaca and Matagorda. Victoria and other towns well stored with cotton are open to occupation by our troops. The rebels deserted Fort Esperanza, losing all hope when a shell penetrated their iron walls and entered the magazine.

Quantrell is in Texas, keeping down, by wholesale murder, all Union manifestation or expression of dissatisfaction with the bloody tyranny under which the people are crushed.

LOUISIANA.

Gen. Franklin is still at New Iberia, with about four divisions. Gen. Weitzel has gone North.

NAVAL.

The schooner Two Sisters, tender to the San Jacinto, captured, on the 27th of Nov., the British schooner Maria Alberta, from Havana, attempting to enter Bayport.

The Chesapeake, so boldly carried off by a piratical plot, was caught in Sambro harbor, near Halifax, on the 17th Dec., by the Ella and Annie. Nearly all the crew escaped to the woods, only three of the original piratical gang being taken. When these were taken to Halifax and transferred to the custody of the British officials, they were immediately rescued by a mob; and attempts to arrest the ringleaders in the woods were resisted.

The case resembles the recent outrage of the Prince of Saruma, and our Government should follow the course of the French and English in that case.

The Planter has been recaptured by the rebels in Lighthouse inlet, having run, during a fog, into the midst of the rebel picket-boats. Smalls is supposed to have been on board as pilot.

On the 1st the blockade-runner Ceres, a fine English vessel, was destroyed, with all her cargo, at New inlet, N. C.

THE IDLER ABOUT TOWN.

THE season of German opera has come to an untimely close. It was the intention, we believe, to continue the performances until the return of Maretzek, with his company, on the 1st of February, but it was found impossible to bear up against the ill luck which attended the enterprise, and so the German opera is, for the present at least, silenced. We regret this very much, because its repertoire contains many operas that we love to hear, and because the chorus and orchestra were so truly admirable. The want of success in this instance was the result of injudicious management; first, in charging a dollar admission, without the attraction of new and excellent singers; and secondly, in the bad selection of the operas. If the season had been opened with "Faust," which was a novelty and was growing rapidly into popularity, half a dozen splendid houses would have been obtained, and a fund would thus have been supplied which would have enabled the management to bear up against a few bad houses. But instead of being the first production it was the last, and even then, with all the disadvantage of previous ill-success, the house was crowded from parquette to dome. Mr. Anschutz labored assiduously, and produced an excellence of ensemble rarely achieved in our opera-house. He did all that a man could do, and did it well, and we trust that another season will by-and-bye be inaugurated under more flattering auspices and with a better prospect of success. But before this can be done Mr. Anschutz must reorganise his principal vocal strength; unless that can be done, German opera cannot be a money-making enterprise.

Max Maretzek is again at the Academy of Music, and will give us four grand operatic performances and one matinée, next Saturday, Dec. 26th, when Mozart's "Don Giovanni" will be performed. The opera nights will be Wednesday, 23d; Friday, 25th; Monday, 28th; and Wednesday, the 30th inst. After this brilliant operatic raid, the company proceed to Boston, where they will perform during the month of January, returning to New York, to commence the spring season in February. If their success in Boston proves as great as their season in Philadelphia, the treasury will surely be in a state of greenback plethora.

The New York Philharmonic Society gave its second concert of the season at the Academy of Music on Saturday evening, the 19th inst. The programme was very fine. It consisted of the Pastoral Symphony, by Beethoven, which is a great favorite with the subscribers, and was admirably performed; Morçeau Symphonique, for orchestra, and piano obligato, composed and performed by Robert Goldbeck; Scotch Overture, by N. W. Gade; "Ballade" for Piano, by Mason, performed by Robett Goldbeck; and Wagner's Overture, "Rienzi." Signora Virginia Lorini sang the grand aria from "Don Giovanni," "Ah, mio bene," and Artot's concert variations, with violin obligato, by Mr. Noll. Signora Lorini sang with great spirit and effect. She is a thoroughly accomplished vocalist and shines as brilliantly in the concert-room as she does upon the stage. We can speak in terms of unqualified satisfaction with regard to the execution of the instrumental music. It was performed with great precision, power and rare artistic sentiment. We were much pleased with Mr. Goldbeck's Morçeau Symphonique. He aimed to produce a piece in which the piano should retain its character as a solo instrument, and still be not unduly prominent. He achieved a success. His performance of Mr. Mason's very charming "Ballade" was distinguished by grace, fluency and fine artistic discrimination. Mr. Eisfeld conducted the concert with his usual ability.

Theodore Thomas's ninth popular matinée luckily fell upon a fine Saturday, and consequently drew together a brilliant audience. Besides the attraction of an excellent programme, a charming Polka, by Charles Fradel, was presented to every lady present. Theodore Thomas's Christmas week matinée is to be specially brilliant in its selections.

Mason and Thomas's classical quartette soirées, will commence early in January, 1864. They will comprise a varied selection from the finest works of that class of composition. We know no better means of forming a pure taste than these quartette soirées offer. Every good musical amateur should be subscriber.

At Wallack's Theatre "Rosedale" was only played four times last week. On Thursday "The Love Chase" was given, for the purpose of introducing Mrs. Watkins, from London, to a New York audience. She took the character of Widow Green, and a whole-souled, genial, buxom widow she proved. She is a most capital actress, and is likely to prove a valuable acquisition to the excellent company at this house. She will repeat the character on Christmas night.

At Winter Garden the new drama, "The Ticket-of-Leave Man," is meeting with remarkable success. It is so admirably acted by the Florences and others and is of so thrilling and so striking a character, and so full of that deep interest which the sorrows of real life never fail to excite, that it is not strange that crowded audiences are present on each performance. It has already held the stage for several weeks and will, in all probability, run for several weeks to come.

A pleasant bit of fun and humor, called "Easy Shaving," in which Mrs. John Wood makes the most fascinating barber, made quite a hit at the Olympic Theatre last week, and will be performed every night this week. It is not troubled with much of a plot, but it is just such a sparkling trifle as puts one in good humor with everything. The piquant, dashing acting of Mrs. John Wood must be seen to be appreciated. The programme for this week consists of "My Preserver," "Easy Shaving" and "Mischief-Making."

The French Theatre at Niblo's Saloon goes on its quiet way of success, gaining new friends and admirers with every performance. We know of no place of public amusement in the city more thoroughly enjoyable than the French Theatre. Common sense is not outraged by ranting or bombast, nor taste by outré dressing, nor comfort by too great an inequality among the actors. Whatever is done is well done, and the enjoyment is consequently perfectly unalloyed. There will be an extra performance on Christmas evening, by special request.

Barnum has secured still another great length of humanity, in the shape of an ex-officer of the French army, who only measures eight feet four inches, and only weighs four hundred pounds! Besides this extraordinary giant, there are the Tall Girl, the Tall Boy and the King of the Dwarfs, forming together one of the most remarkable exhibitions of the age. Tom Taylor's thrilling drama, "The Ticket-of-Leave Man," has created a great sensation at this establishment, and attracts large audiences to the Lecture-Room, both afternoon and evening. There are a vast number of other attractions, especially this week—the merry Christmas week—so that all the children in the city and vicinity should flock to Barnum's Museum, and pay their half-price, like good little boys and girls as they are.

The Menagerie, Van Amburgh's Menagerie, and the Broadway Circus, both hold out special attractions for the young folks and families at this season. We have not time or space to name a tithe of the astonishing and interesting things to be seen there, but that they are both interesting and astonishing every one may believe. We commend them specially to the patronage of the public. The beautiful and dashing rider, Madame Tournaire, will appear at the circus every afternoon and evening this week.

BOOK NOTICES.

THE HALF-SISTERS and other Tales. New York: Frank Leslie, 1864.

LIVING OR DEAD and other Tales. New York: Frank Leslie, 1864.

This charming series of tales, begun so well by Miss Braddon's exciting novels, will meet with a large circulation. These two contain very pleasant and entertaining tales, are well printed and illustrated, and just the size to hold conveniently as you sit by your cosy fire of a stormy winter night.

THRICE DEAD. By MISS BRADDON. New York: Dick & Fitzgerald.

This is the earliest of Miss Braddon's novels, and at first fell stillborn from the press, having ruined or helped to ruin her provincial publisher. Her subsequent success has enabled the world to see its merit. It has great power, and is marked with all her ability and all her faults.

BATTLEFIELDS OF THE SOUTH, FROM BULL RUN TO FREDERICKSBURG, with Sketches of Confederate Commanders and Gossip of the Camps. By an ENGLISH COMBATANT, Lieutenant of Artillery on the Field Staff. New York: John Bradburn, 1863.

This is undoubtedly the most interesting work on the war yet issued by the South. The author is English by birth, but he is to all intents and purposes a Southerner, and his pages have all the voluble abuse which characterise the Southern school. His narrative is, however, extremely interesting, beginning with the raising of a company at Yazoo, Miss., and carrying through Bull run, Dranesville, Ball's bluff, Belmont, Donelson, Kearnstown, Shiloh, the siege of Richmond, Pope's campaign, Antietam and Fredericksburg. It abounds in incident, anecdote and detail.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The receipts of the Sanitary Fair at Boston during the 15th and 16th inst. are estimated at $60,000. Those the most sanguine of success, in getting up the exhibition had no conception of the immense throngs of people from all parts of New England now being attracted to it.

—— Both wings of the Capitol of Washington are now connected by telegraph, and an office is established in each for the convenience of the President and members of Congress. The American Telegraph Company having just completed the arrangements, messages are now dispatched to all points.

—— The City Controller invites, until two o'clock P. M. on the 26th Dec., proposals for $200,000 of the water-bonds of the city of New York, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, payable quarterly, and the principal reimbursable on the 1st of Nov., 1879.

—— An effort will be made to pass in the Senate, before the holidays, the bill of Gen. Lane (Kansas), to restrict speculative traffic in gold, silver and exchange. It was not introduced without consultation with other gentlemen occupying high public positions.

—— The usual fortnightly meeting of the Emigration Commissioners took place last week. From the report of Mr. Casserly, the Secretary of the Board, it appears that 4,175 emigrants landed last week, which makes the total number of arrivals since January 1st 151,820, against 71,353 during the corresponding period of 1862. The balance of the commutation fund now in bank is $24,955.

—— 24 of the Arctic fleet of whalers have arrived at Honolulu, averaging each 1,160 barrels of oil and 400,000 pounds of bone. Whales were very abundant during the latter part of the season—the water was perfectly alive with them. Hundreds of vessels could easily have been filled with them without perceptibly diminishing their number.

—— An old law exists (made in 1777) in Maryland imposing a penalty of 500 pounds sterling upon any minister who marries a man under 21 and a girl under 18, without the written consent of their parents and guardians. The law has never been regarded until now, when the Rev. Jas. J. Marks is sued for the penalty by the friends of a girl aged 15, whom he united in September last to Samuel McManus, since arrested on a charge of murder and desertion from the army. A divorce is also applied for.

—— Mr. Bliss, Secretary of the American Bank Note Company, publishes a detailed account of the manner in which he frustrated the attempt to send $750,000 in notes of the Washington County Bank, R. I., to our soldiers South for circulation. Mr. Bannister, the President, had been certified to Mr. Bliss, who printed $60,000 for him. Soon afterward Bannister asked for $750,000 more, and gradually developed his plans for using the notes to Mr. Bliss, who found that he must either refuse to print or give up the plates, which latter would have only caused the notes to be printed privately elsewhere. He therefore allowed Bannister to imagine that he fell in with his views, and, meanwhile, adopted measures to prevent the fraud, in consequence of which the plates were seized. Mr. Bliss adds, as a proof to many statements to the country, that he did not actually print, nor intend to print, a single note of the desired issue, though preparations were made to do so in order to hoodwink Mr. Bannister.

—The New Jersey Legislature is to be applied to, to allow a railway from Forth Amboy to some point on the Delaware River, in the county of Warren. The vote, to be used chiefly for transporting coal.

—The Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church paid, in the year ending Sept. 30, 797 34 to realize $10,695 15 in sterling money, to send to their missions in India.

—Judge Williams decides that railway companies are liable for injuries to passengers while travelling with complimentary tickets.

—The Hon. Gerrit Smith guarantees a town bounty of $100 to recruits from Smithfield, New York, in addition to the State and Government bounties.

—The American Geographical Association, at their annual meeting in the city, recommended raising the wages of steerage crews to $20.

—Three years ago, not a pound of salt was made in Saginaw valley, Michigan. There has been exported from the valley the present year 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 barrels.

—The Sylvan Lake, Hoboken, was formally opened to the public on the evening of the 21st Dec., with considerable ceremony. Although a very cold night, the grounds it is every respect. The space is ample, and the ice is good, and the whole arrangement was remarkable for beauty and respectability. The Pioneer Club also opened its house on the lake, and there the lady-warmed her hands and pedal extremities, vulgarly called toes, in the open air.

—The Board of Aldermen have voted $12,000 to raise a monument to the memory of the Catholic soldiers who have fallen in battle, and the same will be erected in Calvary cemetery.

—Some very clever scenes were sold the gullible public on the evening of the 16th December by issuing an extra of the Herald, containing a fight, which stated to have ended in a victory for Herman after 160 rounds, which involved a night, and a new moon. The hoax was a perfect success. The account was admirably written.

Western.—There are indications (says a Washington dispatch) which point to a change in the command of the Department of the Ohio. Gen. Schofield, now in Washington, may be transferred to Baltimore, and either Gen. Schenck or Gen. Burnside (probably the latter) ordered to the Missouri Department. Western men say the change will be hailed by the whole factory and alloy all strife.

—Ann Reed, acting Governor of Utah, delivered his annual address on the 14th Dec. He congratulates the people on the advancement in the value of property, richness of the mines, and peace with the Indians. He recommends the establishment of a branch mining bank, and immediate preparation for the reception of a large emigration.

—A convention of United States Assessors met on the 16th Dec. at Cleveland, O. The session will be secret. Their objects are to "put a stop to the sale of whiskey and beer in being agitated." Whether by the United Keepers of Cleveland or by the Assessors is not stated.

—Our correspondent at St. Louis, writing on the 15th Dec., says: "We are still waiting for an official declaration of the votes of the State at the late election. The returns received at the Secretary of State's office are complete, with the exception of a few counties along the borders, wherein exists more than likely no questions will arise. The returns include the military vote, and give the Conservatives less than [illegible]. If the case of Gamble vs. Gamble in the Supreme Court is carried before the State Senate, [illegible] to sustain the rejection of the soldiers' votes in several of the North Missouri counties will be overruled."

—Hon. B. F. Stow (Missouri) addressed a large audience at the Union League House in Washington on the 16th Dec., on the "Causes and Consequences of Slave States, and particularly of Missouri, which he considers as originating in the efforts of aristocrats in other Slave States. Mr. Stow showed how, but for the Free Soil Democratic party, the secession element in Missouri would have carried triumphant; now the formation of a Radical party was a necessity, created about by the acts of Gamble and his subordinates, and how that party would not be satisfied with the eradication of the curse of the State, and the source of the rebellion.

—Cairo dispatches of Dec. 16 say that in Memphis the military authorities are seizing all horses and mules and agentily reserving them for the use of the spring trade. There was a large fire in Memphis on the 15th.

—James Hibbs and James Anderson, horse thieves, confined in Nashville, were taken out by two men, who exhibited a pretended order from Gov. Johnson requiring them to be sent to another county, and were found a few hours afterward tied to a tree and dead. They had been shot.

—Three soldiers at Nashville, ill with smallpox, were being taken in a hack to the pesthouse a few days since when the driver refused to take the sick complaint and immediately ran off. One of the soldiers then took the reins, but he also decamped with the fact drove the hack on a embankment into deep water and was thrown out, but succeeded in getting to land the horses.

Southern.—Richmond papers have dispatches from Charleston to 15th Dec. They report the frequent shelling of the city on the previous day. Many buildings are damaged, but "nobody hurt," for the passing reason that the people have left the city. Fort Sumter has been on fire; to no more killing and wounding. (This was during the absence of the monster's shells, but the rebels are silent as to the cause).

—One of our prisoners just escaped from Tyler, Northern Texas, says that large gangs of slaves, frequently numbering 500, are daily passing northwestward to the interior of the State. Many of the Texans were looking forward to the time when the French would reduce Mexico to subjugation and make it a slave country; in which case, the Union was restored, they would have a place of refuge for themselves and their human chattels.

—The reason given in the Richmond papers for the refusal of the rebel Government to exchange more supplies to be sent by our Government to the Union prisoners is, that the rebels are in want of the supplies themselves.

—A Greenback for $10 is worth $100 Confederate money in Richmond, and nothing said about it.

—Gen. Grant's attack on Gen. Polk's line was made him very popular, while his denunciation of Northrop's behaviour to the Union prisoners has made him equally unpopular with certain classes.

Military.—As the day stands, no minor order of sports can be enlisted, such as a spirited cock fight with good authority from the Adjutant General as a musician, and with the written consent of the persons having a legal right to one thing. If a lad represents himself as over eighteen, and on recruiting officer sees evidently that he is under that age, he should be absolutely rejected. But if the officer has a reasonable doubt as to his being 18 years old, he should cause him to swear to the declaration as to his age, which every recruit signs on the back of his enlistment.

—An officers of the regular army complains that while the dead of the volunteers at Gettysburg are interred in plots accorded to the several States, those of the regulars are buried with the "unknown."

—A Newport, R. I., young man, who joined the rebels, and has been taken prisoner, wrote from his prison to his uncle for aid in food, etc., and saying that the North brought the war on and ought to feed him. The uncle sent him a rope, with instructions how to use it in hanging himself.

—On the western margin of the grand lake abreast of the Brunswick side of the line, a settlement has lately sprung up, which goes by the name of "Speckled Trout Ridge," as the dwellers there have fled from their country residences to escape the fate of Lawrence.

—Gen. Butler is raising an army of colored troops in his department. The three black regiments of cavalry recently raised by him in Virginia fill up.

Naval.—A Swiss in New York has offered to sell to Mr. Welles, the Secretary of the Navy, three very fast sidewheel steamers, now lying at Liverpool, England. The Washington correspondent says they have two objections in the Secretary's eyes—they are not very fast, and they were built by the rebels; and he does not consider it honorable to steal a vessel upon an enemy.

—The President has pardoned John Ratzey, one of the Chesapeake pirates, captured last March in San Francisco, in consequence of his being a British subject and a friend of Queen Victoria. Lord Lyons wrote to the President, asking his pardon as a favor. In consideration of Ratzey's previous character, the President at once acceded to his request. Mr. Bright has some strange friends.

—The Chesapeake, whose capture by some 20 pirates we recorded in our last paper, was retaken by the U. S. steamer Wyandotte, after a chase of the vessel of the 17th Dec., in Samoo river, about 30 miles from Batavia. All the pirates, except two, were captured, and have been arrested by the British authorities.

—Rear-Admiral Foote has resigned as the Navy Commitee, has avowed, in his place in Congress, that he received $10,000 to suppress two men charged by the War Department with fraud.

Personal.—The mixed Commission of the United States and Peru, which assembled at Lima on the 1st of November, after adjusting all questions pending between the two Governments, adjourned. Mr. Clay Mackie, one of the American Commissioners, has returned to Washington. Mr. Adams, Secretary of Legation, Squier, remains in Peru for the purpose of exploring the ruins of the ancient capital of the Incas.

—In a letter to a friend in New Jersey, Gen. Meade says: "I am fully aware of the great anxiety in the public mind for the capture of Mr. Jeff. Davis, as in receipt of many letters, some from persons in high positions, urging me to do all in my power to have him destroyed and the country filled up with the bodies of myself and my command. I have only to say that I suffer myself to be influenced by such communications. I am not a bloodthirsty person, and do not like something; but am determined, at every hazard, not to attempt what I do not believe I can perform, as the probability of accomplishing some object commensurate with the sacrifice of life it would involve. I would rather a thousand times be relieved, charged with unfaithfulness or incapacity, and sent to the science bandied with a wanton slaughter, unnecessarily to leave men, or with the imputation of the greatest cause by doing what I thought wrong." The country has a right to expect its generals to be governed by high positions" who wish to have the Union army destroyed.

—Mrs. Wilkins, whose debut at Walleck's we have chronicled, is the granddaughter of Sir Joseph, of the famous Serjeant Wilkins, one of the most eminent barristers of Great Britain.

—Shoddy is now the order: "The tropical eye, when found in conjunction with Caucasian features, is indicative of a mixed race." Our ethnologists say that certain treacherous sensibilities are reposing upon a bust of Hogue. No one can see fit to deny a gentleman once that great Northern statesman without perceiving that the great statesman is the embodiment of the traits of what he was and what he did. That deep, black line, enclosed in a circle of white, marked, more than all, that fervid, torrid glance and gleam, were the exponents of the character of the late Democratic party, while the roughened Sesonism of all the features, the [illegible] and the [illegible] were the unmistakable progeny of that underlay and supported all the rest. Such was the man, and such was the party—one human type in a single personality. It was the whole horrid story of treason and slavery.

Obituary.—Capt. Albert M. Gammell of the 11th Massachusetts regiment, and his wife, were instantly killed by the explosion of a locomotive boiler on the 16th inst., by the Eastern Railroad train coming in collision with their train, near Exeter, New Hampshire, on the 14th, on a brief furlough. He was a gallant and meritorious officer.

—Lepreleto Sweet, a well-known telegraph operator, died on the 8th December, in this city, although quite young, was well known in the profession of the profession.

—Dr. Dykeman, a fireman of the Hoboken Excelsior Fire Company, died on the 11th December at his house in Hoboken, aged 30 years.

—Gen. Rosecrans, the famous cavalry officer, died in Washington on the 16th December—he was a graduate of West Point, in the class of 1842, graduating 2nd in rank in the First United States Dragoons, July 1st, 1842. He resigned from the United States service from Illinois. His commission as Captain in the Regular Army dated from May 14th, 1861, and on the July, 1862, he was appointed a Brigadier-General of Volunteers. He was engaged in many of the most dashing, brave and brilliant cavalry officers in the service. He was severely injured in the early part of cavalry engagements under General Stoneman and Gen. Averell, which resulted in the retirement of General Stoneman almost to the gates of Richmond, and at the battle of Gettysburg he was in the rear of Meade's left, and drove the rebels from the town. His superintendence as another cavalry officer under the General Stoneman to him during his illness, and in his second engagement with the rebels, he was appointed him a Major-General, and the dying hero had the pleasure of receiving the news of his promotion, as his friends raised him up in bed, that he knew he could not see it. His disease was typhoid fever.

—Lieut. Col. Wm. Ludlow, who died at Rome in a declining state of health for a long time past, died at his residence, No. 1 Bond street, on the 16th inst. Mr. Fremont has been member for the Fifteenth Assembly District. The Herald says: "The first National Bank was co-day [illegible] scene of the coolest burglary ever known in these parts. The bank is situated in Broad street, near the canal, in the second story of the building. At noon the community was aroused by a great explosion, which shook the building. The indications are that the burglars had been there all day. The safe was thoroughly rifled. A large safe was broken to a great distance from the building and blown up. The burglars evidently made a calculation as to the amount of powder used. The safe was destroyed and the building terribly shattered. The burglars obtained the large amount of three dollars, the entire contents of the safe. No trace of the rogues has yet been discovered." After this no Jersey bank need fear of a visit, except from the Sheriff.

—On the 15th December, while Mr. Converse, Jr., son of the President of the Malden Bank, Boston Mass., was left in charge, some person or persons entered the premises, murdered him by shooting through the head, and robbed the safe. A reward of $6,000 has been offered for the apprehension of the murderer. Mr. Converse died early in the morning.

—A man named Ferguson stabbed a fellow lodger, Ed. Doherty, early in Jackson street, on the 17th December, so savagely, that he died soon afterwards. Fergus was arrested.

—Col. Bliss, who has been extensively engaged in raising cavalry regiments, has been arrested for recruiting soldiers in a State which has only opposed to the Union, but a decided secessionist.

—Mrs. Lucretia Jones, of Shelby, was arrested on the 18th December, charged with having, in company with a man named Bartlett, murdered and robbed the person of a young woman, Anne Lynch. He was arrested in Ohio, but Mrs. Jones has kept all trace of his accomplices, whose names he divulged.

Foreign.—By the arrival of the British brig Ada Lloyd, Doherty, at Kingston, Jamaica, we have that of the Mexican Republic until Nov. 19. The troops of Maximilian are in Mexico, and by the French, and all supplies cut off. The native Americans were expecting aid from the United States.

—Gen. Barrios, of San Salvador, with his wife and suite, arrived at Liverpool, England, on board the British frigate Sutlej, from La Union. His escape—which closes for the moment the history of the war which has distracted Central America and the hostile officials of Honduras and Nicaragua, was effected under circumstances of the most romantic manner, after he had endured sufferings and privations of the most appalling character. The reigning ex-ruler was taken to a brilliant ball given by Mrs. Livingston, the wife of the British Consul, to say that a vessel of war partly made up of natives and the officers of the United States navy were waiting for him (Barrios) in the Sutlej. Leaving the ballroom he assumed the uniform of a naval officer, and, with his family, and with his gallant allied friends to the landing place, and sprung to the deck of the Sutlej, after bowing to the officers of his mortal enemy in the street. The Sutlej, with her flag of defiance flying, left the dock port he, with his companions, are to sail for New York.

—The correspondence between the British and French Governments relative to Mexican affairs has been published. Earl Russell's dispatch, giving the reasons for England's refusal to join it, is considered a powerful diplomatic shot over fired at Louis Napoleon. It shows in a manner not to be gainsaid that the object of the war was to give the whole force and a suggestion of Lord Palmerston to get his private letter to Napoleon published.

Art, Science and Literature.—A collection of autographs of the Queen is announced. The price did not reach the standard: former numismatic sales, however, have shown that the Queen's autograph was anticipated. A collection of American cents and dimes, with the exception of 1804, was knocked down for $6; another, $4 10: two copies of the same year, with variations, $2 50; another, $2 50; one sold for $20, and another for $8. A Liberty cap cent of 1795, of which there are few now in existence, sold for $39.

—The number of letters in the alphabet of different languages is as follows: Russian, 36; French, 25; German, 26; Spanish, 24; Dutch, 26; Greek, 24; Latin, 25; Slavonic, 41; Italian, 20; Welsh, 29; Swedish, 33; Georgian, 35; Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac and Samaritan, 22; Persian, Coptic, 32; Sanscrit, 50; Bengalee, 52; Burmese, 19.

—A London paper announces that Thackeray is about to marry the second daughter of the famous novelist Margaret Ellen Boddon. It is seldom that literary marriages are happy, but Mr. Thackeray and Miss Bourne ings being the exception to a very dismal and general rule. Charlotte Bronte was also married.

—There have been only four translations of the Bible into the Chinese, while there have been nearly 40 of the first part, which turns upon socialism.

—It is related that Mr. Sothern was very un willing that Lord Dundreary, the character which was of small consequence as at first written, should grow into the favor it soon attained, even through his part in the most absurd and extravagant scenes of the piece. But Mr. Sothern finally was resolved to stop the same style in public, and did so, and the character, from that time, was separated.

Chit-Chat.—The Philadelphia Inquirer contains the following: "Mr. Benjamin Cox, Esq., on the 15th Saturday, Benjamin Cox, Esq., on the 15th Inst., was married to Miss Ann Cox, a remarkable change in the same romain in which he had taken it on every succeeding anniversary of his birth, since he reached, by having never since been absent on account of sickness or any other cause."

—It is reported that Madame Schnell, a fortuneteller of Louisville, and her two children, were lost in the burning steamer. She had accumulated $70,000 by the practice of her art, but failed to read her own fate.

—Dr. Adam was cowhided at Chicago lately by Dr. Gardner, because of the former's wife. They decided that the defendant should swallow their cowhide, which he refused to do, and was cowhided, but instructed them that a joke was not a verdict.

—The story goes that, when 12 years old, U. S. Grant was offered a horse by a boy named Ralston. A man named Ralston. "How much do your father want for the horse?" "Not any natural bigger than from the owner of the steed. "Why," said Ulysses, "I'll buy the horse of you myself." Ralston said he'd give you $35, and if you wouldn't take less than $40 he'd throw in a saddle, so many boys thought it was $60.

—It is said that the Prince of Wales is smoking very far too much for his constitution, that he is seldom without a cigar in his mouth, and that the leaders are beginning to talk about the subject, talking about "a breach of standard of manners," etc., is said to be leveled at the Prince. Be that as it may, he just previously had been smoking a cigar as big as a bowsprit round the Mediterranean, and was not at all considered awfully tabooed.

—An anecdote relative to the late Prof Wilson is just now circulating. When the suitor for the hand of the daughter of the late Prof. Wilson's position, he was, of course, referred to "papa." Having obtained the old man's consent, he was directed to desire the young lady to come to her father, and was received with open arms and a kiss. The young man had before him for reverse some book on the fly-leaf of which he wrote, "I love you, Christina, with all my affections." He tore this out, placed it to his daguerreotype case, as usual, and let her to the young lover, and went back to his work.

—Senator Hale has published a very suggestive letter on the subject of the removal of Seward from a court sinn from his position as Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Seward is a leading Whig Welcee and his were not "hate fellows well met."

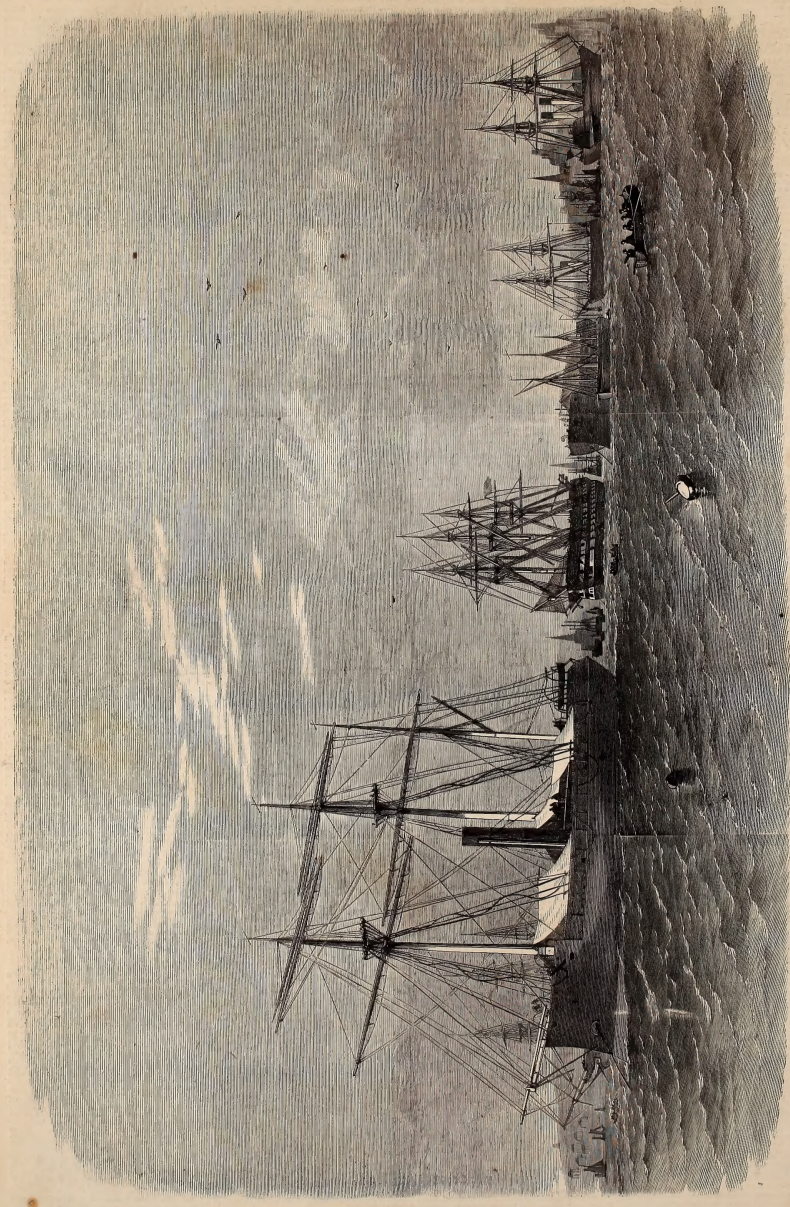
CAYENNE AND COWHIDE.

A Romance of Forkopolis.

We often read thrilling scenes in Miss Braddon's romantic novels, but we think Eleanor's Victory is nothing to Miss Jacob's Victory, and that altogether Mack Barnitz cuts a worse figure than Lancelot Darcell. It appears that the above-named ladies had a wife, who employed a sempstress, named Jacob, with whom Barnitz fell desperately in love, as all lovers do, at first sight, or after taking, or after he took a room, and wanted Miss Jacob to take the key and to meet him there, solitary and all alone, during her absence on a settlement a six days' week $100, besides other fabulous presents. But Miss Jacob was a second Lucretia, and resented the Forkopolis Tarquin, whose love thereupon turned into such furious hate that he went about defaming the conduct of the poor sempstress, declaring and asserting a time when the fair wronged one was out of the city, he brought false charges against her, and in a sudden spite left the house, and published the slander to the proprietor suggesting to her not to whip children with that cowhide." On her way home she purchased a quarter of a pound of cayenne pepper, and when Barnitz came to pay her wages she stood up on Sunday morning, as usual, took her station at the door of the church in the street at the chapel before the services commenced, and when Barnitz approached she made a sudden to the eyes and Mrs. Barnitz. Mr. B. who is the leader of the singing in the choir, was obliged to leave the church opposite him and eyes him closely. His eyes dropped, and his countenance appeared ashy pale, and not singing, the task being assigned to brother Hidden. Miss Jacob then took her seat, and sang with the congregation were on their feet except Mr. Barnitz and Miss Jacob, they two only remained seated. The first one to kneel was Barnitz, covering his face with both hands. As soon as the fire in his excited nose had commenced his prayer, Miss Jacob deliberately pulled out from her pocket the cowhide, carrying the whip, which was under her cloak, drew it out, and walked up to the kneeling Barnitz, and, standing over six busy heaves across his head, face and hands, and then she left the church by the rear part of the house. The minister ceased prayer, the congregation rose to their feet, and Barnitz, rubbing his eyes, raised up, and seizing the cowhide, whipped it. He never had such a cowhide to strike her, but was prevented by a Mr. Canning, who caught hold of it. As soon as he got loose, he clinched the hair of his head with her left hand, and with her right struck her a severe stroke all over his person, exclaiming, 'Mack Barnitz, you are a black-hearted, lying villain, and I will be the death of you.'

"At this instant some person put his hand over her mouth, when she took another handful of pepper, and throwing it over her shoulder at him, the crowd, which were round the door, received their first hasty retreat. A Mr. Kennick caught her round the waist and threw her towards the pulpit, when Mr. Sing seeing Mr. Kennick, recognized in him one of her persecutors, and struck him a severe blow in the face with the pepper. The Rev. Mr. Marley was seated in the pulpit during the whole proceedings, and quite composed, and the services could go on more than half the congregation had left the church."

MARRIAGE.



THE customs of marrying and giving in marriage is Sweden, in former years, were of a remarkable barbarous character. The bride was the daughter of a Scandinavian warrior to court a lady's favor by voluntary and unbounded love, but the lover had bestowed her affections on another and was on her way to the marriage ceremony, when, collecting his followers, he fell upon the wedding cortège, and the stronger carried off the bride. The lover was in favor of the practices that marriages were always celebrated at night. A pile of knees is still preserved in the Museum of the Royal Antiquarian of Rimsby, in Gothland, into which were fitted torches, and which were carried by the bridesmaids before the double purpose of giving light and protection. It was the privilege of the bridesmaid, when the first were named "best man," to carry these, and the strongest and handsomest of the bridesmaids was selected because for this purpose.

The marriage service is very nearly the same as that used by our forefathers, a few obsolete words only having been changed. The bride was given by the father, for four, for better, for worse," and promised "to be to loosen and obedient to her future husband. The bridegroom put the ring on each of the bride's left hand fingers, and then on the fourth, "in the name of the Father," at the second, "in the name of the Son," and on the fourth "in the name of the Holy Ghost," and at the fourth "Amen." The father presented the bride to her future lord, and the ring remains as a token of the transfer of authority, and the bride was known to Swedish law as owned by a lord, and given with the shoe. The husband was bound by oath to be true to his wife, to love her, to keep her from harm; yet, as a point of honor, he was allowed "to beat her on the back without exciting general reprobation." An old Welsh law tells us that three blows with a broomstick on the back, or one blow across the head, is a fair allowance," and another provides that the wife may never leave the husband's arm, nor thicker than his middle finger.

ECONOMY OF SEWING MACHINES.—We need not dwell upon the economy of the sewing machine in its conversion to say that a woman can in a day do ten times as much ordinary sewing as she could do without one. The interest on a fifty-dollar machine is only fifteen cents per week, and the saving in time and labor compared to its advantages, as a matter of economy, is almost nil. Of all the machines, that of Grover & Baker's stands highest; which is a strong proof of the satisfaction they give. They are in daily use in thousands of the best families knowing the same stitch. For every kind of sewing, especially for the manufacture of clothing for the soldier, we prefer the Wheeler & Wilson.—American Agriculturist.

REJUVENATION.—The great advantage of having a complexion which is at once beautiful is proved by the fact that Dr. Gouraud's famous preparations are now in universal demand. Ladies who eminently by these discoveries made from day to day in the laboratory of every studious experimentalist. His Medicated Soap is now as near perfection as any preparation can be, and it may be now considered as a permanency in the dressing-room. It not only cleanses but it softens the skin. His Poudre Subtile [illegible] another valuable preparation, as it removed superfluous hair without injuring the skin. Dr. Gouraud's Emporium is 431 Broadway.

An editor out West boasts of having had a fight with a woman and got the last word.

H. B. MAJESTY'S STEAMER MAJESTIC WATCHING THE REBEL RAMS IN THE MERSEY.

THE STEAMER KINA DISMASTED IN A FURIOUS STORM.—FROM A SKETCH BY J. GILLILAND.

THE APPROACH OF WINTER.

THE IDEA FROM THE GERMAN.

SEE NOW with all his mighty power
Approach the Wintry King:
Our cherished flowers are faded quite,
No warmth the sunbeams bring.

Alas! the cold white-bearded Man
Draws nearer every day—
Ye blest with youth, and health, and strength,
Hasten his march to stay.

Then fasten every window close,
Let him not enter there:
He steals away our summer joys,
And chills the genial air.
See—see—the children 'gainst him rush,
Their faces in a glow,
In vain!—each year he comes alike,
And brings us ice and snow.

He brings the long, long dreary nights,
And shortens daylight hours,
Wild storms of hail, and rain, and mist,
And snow in fleecy showers:
And yet, how many joys he brings,
New tales we read with glee:
And first, and best of all his gifts,
The far-famed Christmas Tree.

And while we sleep he paints a scene
Surpassing mortal power,
Bright, glittering drops each pane adorn,
And frame an icy bower
Of flowers and leaves in silver sheen,
Like garlands gay entwined,
With mountains, rivers, castles, trees,
A landscape fair combined.

He brings us in and out-door sports,
Golf, Skating, Sliding too,
While in the house we chase poor Puss,
And hunt the hidden Shoe.
Snow-man he brings, and Blindman's-buff,
And Magic-lantern bright—
Then call the old Man kindly in,
We'll welcome him to-night.

Come in—come in! thou Winter-Man,
We'll give thee "Cakes and Ale;"
Come, warm thy hands, and tell us now
A stirring Christmas Tale.
A tale—a tale; in silence deep
We'll list with all our might—
Till midnight tolls its ghostful hour,
Then—Winter-Man—good-night.

FARMER GRAHAM'S CHRISTMAS EVE.

By John B. Williams, M.D.

MANY of readers will remember the 24th of Dec., 1855, which was so remarkable for its excessive coldness. Few people were stirring in the streets on that day, and those who did venture out thrust their hands deeply into their pockets, and vainly tried to keep their blood warm by transforming their usual gait into an inelegant kind of trot. The wind blew from the northeast, and was of the most piercing character, apparently taking delight in attacking the unprotected parts of the body with particular virulence; whistling in one's ears, stinging the cheeks and nose as if they had been cut with a whip, and then roaring and rattling away round sharp corners, down open chimneys, and banging open doors as if it were in the highest possible glee at the discomfort it occasioned.

Towards the middle of the day it began to snow, not in fair, honest, straight down flakes, but mean, sharp-pointed sleet, which the before-mentioned unruly wind did with just as it liked, now carrying it before it with a scream of triumph through the open streets, now beating it against dead walls and roofs, and now forcing it into alleyways and blind entrances.

Amongst other freaks performed by the wind, it seized upon an old gentleman's hat who happened to be passing by the corner of Barclay street and Broadway, in the city of New York, and lifting it above his head, twirled and twirled it about for a moment or two, and then carried it away in triumph. When, however, it had reached the corner of Maiden lane, another son of Boreas came to dispute the prize, and between the two they let it fall to the ground, whereupon the old gentleman secured his property again, and fixed it more firmly than ever upon his head.

This old gentleman was evidently from the country. His dress was homespun, his boots were heavy and laced in front, and every step he took left the imprint of large nails in the snow. His hat was low-crowned and broad-brimmed, and his gray hairs hung in waves from underneath it. He carried in his hand an oaken staff, and it was plainly to be seen, that although he was still strong and hearty, his limbs had lost the elasticity of youth. His face was weatherbeaten, and showed that he had been accustomed to outdoor employment. There was an expression of sadness in his countenance, and his gait, as he plodded along Broadway, revealed dejection in his mind.

He seemed utterly regardless of the cold; it is true when he passed Fulton street a shiver ran through his frame, but, whether this was occasioned by an extra cold blast or by his own thoughts it would be impossible to tell. He passed down Wall street until he reached about its centre. He stopped before a house of considerable size.

This dwelling was evidently let out for offices. The lower windows were decorated with numerous signs and placards, which revealed to the passers-by that the "Save-all Insurance Company" did business there. The entry was also studded with signs on the doorpost, and in the passage—some in all the glory of fresh gold letters on a black ground, others with more modest letters on a white ground. From the various inscriptions on these signs, it would seem that persons following almost every description of employment had offices there. House-agents, coal-dealers, hill-brokers, collectors, lawyers and insurance companies, all seemed to vie with each other in displaying their names to the public.

The old gentleman, as we have before stated, paused before this dwelling, and putting on his spectacles, began to scrutinize the names on the various signs very closely. At last he fixed his eyes on one which he appeared to be seeking for. This bore the inscription, "Robert G. Carr, Attorney at Law," and conveyed the further information that the said Robert G. Carr's office was situated on the second story of the building.

The old man heaved a deep sigh, pulled off his hat, smoothed down his scanty locks, and began slowly to ascend the stairs. He soon arrived at the door, on which another label informed him that he had reached his destination. He knocked timidly—so timidly in fact that he obtained no answer. He knocked again, a little louder this time, and a loud voice bade him "Come in."

He gently opened the door, and found himself in a moderately sized room, slenderly furnished with several hard wooden chairs, a table covered with inkspots and two desks. This was Mr. Carr's public office. His own private sanctum was the next room back, similarly furnished, with the addition of some shelves, on which were arranged rows of books, which, from their peculiar style of binding, evidently treated on the driest of all subjects—Law.

The old gentleman paused on the threshold, and glanced peculiarly around him. The front office was unoccupied, and he was about to make known his presence by rapping with his foot on the floor, when he suddenly saw, in the entrance of the door separating the public from the private office, the grim form of Mr. Carr himself.

We have just written grim form, and we use the phrase advisedly, for a more stern, uncompromising, destitute-of-the-milk-of-human-kindness face than that of the attorney it would have been impossible to find. He was above the middle height and rather stout. His hair was thin and wiry, his dark eyes were deeply sunk in his head, and glistened with peculiar malevolence. His lips were thin and colorless, and there was that peculiar expression about his mouth which plainly indicated that he was naturally cruel, and that inflicting pain on others was a source of real pleasure to him.

Farmer Graham's Homestead.

"How are you, Mr. Graham?" said the lawyer, advancing and saluting the old gentleman with a grim smile, which revealed the fact that several of his front teeth were wanting.

"How do you do, sir?" returned the farmer, bowing low.

"Walk in and take a seat, Mr. Graham, it is a cold, raw day. I am glad to see you. I expected you would be here to-day."

The old farmer obeyed the invitation, and seated himself near the glowing stove. The lawyer reclined in his luxurious armchair, and appeared to wait for his visitor to commence the conversation. The latter, however, evidently did not know how to begin it; he twirled his hat in his hand and fixed his eyes on the floor.

"I suppose, Mr. Graham, you have come to settle the rent," said the attorney, at last breaking the awkward silence, "it is due, I believe, to-day?"

"Well, sir, I have come about the rent," stammered the old man; "I have come to throw myself on your generosity."

The farmer sighed and glanced inquiringly into the attorney's face. He met no encouragement there, for he only saw a sardonic smile lighting up Carr's hard features.

"Go on," said the lawyer.

"Well, sir, the fact is," resumed the old man, summoning up his courage, "I am a little behind hand, six crops have failed me, and I have come to beg a little time."

"Oh! you have come to beg a little time, have you?" remarked Carr in a cold tone.

"If you please, sir," replied Graham, "if you will give me a month or two, I shall be able to raise the money."

"Oh, you will be able to raise the money, will you?" again repeated the lawyer, in an ominous tone, rubbing his hands together with apparent satisfaction.

"Yes, sir, I am almost certain of it."

"Well, Mr. Graham, I may as well come to the point at once. You owe me half a year's rent, and that rent I must and will have at once; if it is not paid by the day after to-morrow, I shall be under the painful necessity of distraining for it."

"You surely would not have the heart to sell me up," exclaimed the old man in an agonising voice."

"You would not bring ruin and disgrace on an honest man's household. Oh, sir, give me a little time; you shall be paid—indeed you shall!"

"The money must be paid to-morrow, or the law must take its course."

The old man let his head fall between his hands, and sobbed like a child.

"God help your wife! God protect my poor girls!" was all that he could utter.

Robert Carr sat there unmoved. He seemed rather to derive pleasure from the old man's agony. He rubbed his hands together with increased vehemence, as if he were experiencing the most exquisite sensations.

"You will not give me longer than the day after to-morrow, then?" cried the farmer, after a pause.

"Not a day!"

The old gentleman picked up his hat, which he previously deposited on the floor, and slowly quitted the room. He walked with head bent down, and faltering step, through the reached the Williamsburg ferry, which he crossed. A stage was just ready to start. He got in, and in a few minutes was on his way towards his home.

The wind continued to howl and whistle; the snow continued to fall; the cold piercing blast penetrated the crevices of the omnibus, causing the other passengers to creep closely to each other for the sake of the warmth, and to bury their feet deeply into the straw which was strewn on the bottom of the vehicle. But the farmer appeared to be unconscious of cold. He sat in one corner of the vehicle utterly oblivious to what was passing around him. He was completely prostrated by his misfortune.

The stage progresses on its way; the town of Williamsburg is left behind; the toll-keeper exchanges a friendly nod with the driver; the covered bridge is passed; the progress up the hill is slow; at last, after three hours were passed for the horses, the vehicle stops at the head of a lane. The old man gets out, and the stage proceeds on its journey.

Over a rustic bridge, the bubbling waters of the stream below can be heard in ice-bound fetters; along a lane, beautiful in summer, but dreary and desolate in winter; past a cottage, the entrance of which is blocked up with untrodden snow, showing that its inmates have not left it for some days; past a house of better pretensions, where the pathway is kept clear, through a gate which creaks on its hinges as it swings back, and the old man stood before his own home. He leaned for a moment against one of the pillars supporting the portico, and then with a sudden resolution he dashed into the house.

He enters the sitting-room. It is comfortably furnished, as might be expected by an elderly woman, who is evidently farmer Graham's wife, and two girls. One is the old man's daughter, the other his niece.

Farmer Graham fell into a chair, and vainly tried to calm his emotion, but in spite of himself, when he saw his beloved family around him, the tears coursed each other down his weatherbeaten face.

"God help thee, my poor wife, there is no hope for us. I have seen our hard-hearted landlord, and he refuses to give us a single week to—"

"Surely, James, you mistake," exclaimed his wife. "Mr. Carr can scarcely be so exacting. Why we have lived on this farm more than twenty years, and we have never been behind hand with our rent before."

"I know it, but he would not hear a word; if we do not pay the rent by the day after to-morrow, he will sell us out stick and stone. What will become of us, and these two dear girls, too?"

"Oh, father, have no thought about us," exclaimed the elder of the two, a fair-haired, rosy-cheeked, healthy-looking girl. "We can work; do you not know that both Mary and myself are excellent seamstresses? We will go to New York to live, and we will take in sewing—won't we, Mary?"

"Yes, dear uncle," returned the other girl, "do not give way to grief. Indeed, we can make enough in New York to support us all."

"God bless you, my dear girls, I know your will is good, but you little know the trials of a city life. Would to God that my dear boy was here! Oh, Harry, why did you forsake your poor old father?"

The recollection of his son appeared to quite overwhelm the old man, his sobs choked his utterance.

"Father, dear father!" exclaimed his daughter, kneeling beside him, and seizing his hands. His wife, too, endeavored to console and cheer him. They in some measure succeeded.

The evening meal followed, but, oh! how cheerless! Every heart was depressed at their coming misfortune. Mrs. Graham glanced furtively around the apartment, and when her eyes rested on some familiar object, the thought that in a few days it would pass into other hands caused them to fill with tears. Her husband read her thoughts as well as if they had been uttered aloud. The two young girls tried to converse on different subjects, and endeavored to appear unconcerned, but the attempt was a miserable failure. Anxiety had locked into the old people's faces and saw the suppressed grief visible there, they forced smiles died away, and they had the greatest difficulty to prevent the anguish of their hearts from finding relief in convulsive sobs.

And this was their Christmas Eve! This was the day which had hitherto been the merriest of all the year to them.

"Jane," said Mr. Graham to his wife, after the tea things had been removed, "what day of the month is it?"

"The 24th of December. Have you forgotten it is Christmas Eve?"

"True, so it is—eight years ago to-day our boy left us."

"Hush, dear father, do not think of it," exclaimed his daughter.

They drew around the fire. The wood blazed and crackled, and shed a cheering warmth through the apartment—the sparks danced merrily up the chimney, and waged fierce war with the cold without. A wood was spoken by the farmer's family, but they sat there gazing on the burning wood as if they would read their future destiny in the fantastic forms assumed by the glowing embers. Every now and suddenly aroused from their reverie by a loud knocking at the door. The farmer's daughter hastened to open it, and admitted a gentleman, who by his air in large overcoat.

"Excuse me," said he, entering the passage, "but I have taken the liberty to call for shelter; it is snowing so fast and the roads are so impeded that I am not recognise further than this. My horse is completely worn out and stumbles at every step."

"You are welcome, sir," replied the old man, rising from his chair. "I will put your horse into the stable while you go to the fire and warm yourself."

The stranger thanked the farmer, and, approaching the fire, divested himself of his muffling. He was a fine-looking young man, about five-and-twenty years of age. He was tall, robust, and evidently in the enjoyment of the best of health. His manners were free and easy, and showed that he had seen a good deal of the world.

"Your daughters, I suppose, madam," said the stranger, indicating with a motion of his hand the two young girls.

"One is my daughter, the other my niece, sir," replied Mrs. Graham, in rather a cold tone.

"Indeed! Are you from Europe, miss?"

"Yes; I was in San Francisco six weeks ago."

"Did you ever happen to meet or hear of a young man named Henry Graham?" asked the farmer in a tremulous voice.

"Harry Graham!" exclaimed the stranger, "why he is my dearest friend—know him, to be sure I do."

"He is alive, then, and well?"

"When I left he was as hearty as could be. I am now on the lookout for his father, who, he told me, lives somewhere in this neighborhood. I am charged with a commission for him."

"God be praised that he is well—I am his father."

"You father! Then I am lucky, and can fulfil his commission. I have carried this bag of money about with me," continued the stranger, pulling out a canvas bag from his pocket, "until I am tired of it. There are three thousand dollars which Harry requested I would deliver into his father's hands."

"My poor, dear boy—my dear boy," was all that the father could say.

The elder daughter observed had watched the stranger's face at that moment; he would have seen a change twitching about his lips, and, strange to say, his eyes filled with tears.

"Mother—father! do you not recognise your son!" he suddenly exclaimed, embracing both his parents. "It is I, Henry, your long lost Henry. I have made my fortune in California, and have come to place you both above the reach of want. Sister, you know me, you must recognise me."

The old man appeared bewildered for a moment, a light seemed to break upon him, and he folded his son in his arms.

"It is Henry, my own boy!"

Explanations followed. Henry Graham related how he had been seduced in going to California, how he had delayed writing until he had made his fortune, and how wealth had poured in upon until he had become a millionaire, and how he had determined to come and share his good fortune with his beloved parents.

The sun shone out brightly the next day, the snow was frozen hard, and sparkled and glittered in its rays like virgin silver. We might tell how light everybody's heart was when they rose on that glorious Christmas morning—we might tell with what glee farmer Graham, after breakfast, hurried to New York and discharged his rent—we might tell how Mr. Carr was rather disappointed than otherwise that it had been paid so promptly—we might tell how the two girls and Henry Graham became very great friends—how he actually kissed her on that happy Christmas night before he retired to bed, claiming as a cousin's privilege—we might tell all these things, but we are certain the reader has already guessed them.

Three months afterwards Henry Graham was married to his fair cousin. On the day that this event took place, the old farmer exclaimed to his wife:

"Dear Mary, the events of the last few months have taught me a lesson which I trust I shall never forget."

"What is it?"

"It is this—that however thick and heavy the clouds may be which occasionally overshadow our path, we have no reason to despair, for sooner or later the sun will pierce through them, and scattering them to the four winds of heaven, leave the sky calm, serene and clear."

TO MY CHILDREN.

BY A SOLDIER IN CAMP.

DARLINGS, I am weary pining,
Shadows fall across my way;
I can hardly see the lining
Of the cloud—the silver lining;
Turning darkness into day.

I am weary of the sighing,
Moaning, wailing through the air;
Breaking hearts in anguish crying
For the lost ones—for the dying;
Sobbing anguish of despair.

I am weary of the fighting;
Brothers red with brothers's gore.
Only that the wrong we're righting—
Truth and Honor's battle fighting—
I would draw my sword no more.

I am pining, dearest pining,
For your sweet, soft cheek;
For your dear arms round me twining;
For your soft eyes on me shining;
For your loved words—darlings, speak!

Tell me, in your earnest prattle,
Of the sweet, innocent, humble sports
Call me from the cannon's rattle;
Take my thoughts away from battle;
Fold me in your dearest love.

Darlings, I am weary pining;
Shadows fall across my way;
I can hardly see the lining
Of the cloud—the silver lining
Turning darkness into day.

OLD WIDGERTON.

I FEAR that my friend, Widgerton, is a misanthropic man!

Perhaps I may be only my egotism that leads me so to think, and simply upon the fact that while I am the happy possessor of a round half dozen of stubby faces to gather about my domestic board, Widgerton is obliged to sit en widema state at his boarding-house table, and bear all the small jokes that may be heaped upon him, for the reason that he is an old bachelor.

Now at this season, especially, I have sincere sympathy with all the Widgertons on earth, and people generally, that ever stumble apartments in Twenty-second Avenue sufficiently large, it would give me great pleasure to entertain them collectively at my family Christmas dinner.

This not being the case, I must do the next best thing, which shall be to invite Widgerton to spend the Christmas Eve with us—by us, I make reference to Mrs. Dabney and myself—and walk forth, to aid with his counsel and advice, in the purchase of those little tokens intended for the stockings of the six young Dabneys and by them supposed to emanate from the stores of the highly respected Santa Claus.

To return to Widgerton, I would simply remark that Widgerton is not liked, and for that reason I like Widgerton. He is a doubting man, and therefore I cultivate him. His doubts are the means I use for clearing away my own.

And these are the reasons that I avow for insisting upon making Widgerton one of the party on the Christmas Eve to explore the town, and hunt from amid the thousand treasures those which will gladden the hearts of my little circle, and teach them how to make glad other hearts, not only on the Christmas, but to make all the year one holiday of happiness.

"A magnificent night! Widgerton," I said, rubbing my hands in the cold, cheerless parlor of his boarding-house, as we stopped for him to join us in our walk.

"I yes!" says Widgerton, querulously, "but you see it might rain, and then you know I would be monstrous uncomfortable."

"Rain!" I almost shouted, "Why, man, it's cold, clear and bracing. A grand night, with nothing but crowds of stars in the sky, and crowds of happy people in the street."

"Yes, I know, I am yelling and screaming 'merry Christmas!' I don't see what people want to go about saying 'merry Christmas!' to other people for, on such a cold night as this. I don't see anything merry in it."

And all the time the poor fellow was saying this he was shivering around in every corner of the room to find an umbrella, a want I ever in a speedy end to by setting his arm and leading him into the street, which I did at the same time as I did so. This was what I told Widgerton.

"You don't see anything merry in it, eh! Why, man, it's one of the merriest customs in the world. It is as old as the Christmas, and arose from the fact of their calling the words aloud in all their churches on Christmas Day, after which they sang songs of welcome to the time. From this arose the practice of waits or singers going from house to house, singing their carols, and wishing the people a good time, as a pretty custom. Widgerton, and one that ought to be adopted in America."

"Pooh! I don't think it much of a custom to come around the house making a noise when people want to sleep, especially if the night is cold and damp."

"Confounded sight better, my boy, than this wretched habit of blowing tin horns that has arisen within the past few years."

To which he said nothing, and Mrs. Dabney pressed my arm in token of approval.

"And what's more, my dear fellow, I think it would be much better for the rising generation if there was a little more of the simplicity of the olden time about them. Not that I want to see the days of superstition revived, but the people were more honest when they believed that the cattle knelt at midnight, and the bees sang in their hives on the Christmas Eve."

"Ignorance!" says Widgerton.

"Granted, but it served a purpose, and always had some touch of faith or devotion about it. By the same rule women would not leave wool or flax upon their spinning wheels over that night, lest a evil one should come and wind it, which, if he did, would give him an unpleasant hold on them the day they were married. This legend arose from the story that on the day of the crucifixion no rope could be obtained to bind our Saviour, until some flax was found on a wheel, and twisted into one. Hundreds of such legends exist in the early ages of many of them very beautiful and very poetical."

"Very like Pagan customs," was Widgerton's remark.

I could not deny it, and had no doubt that many of them had been transmitted from those times, but I did not like to say so, because that the worst of our customs had come from such a far period that it was impossible to account for many of them, except by giving credit, for instance, originated with the Romans, who, at the commencement of the year, would send packages of candied fruits, sweetmeats and confectionary of all kinds, to their friends, wishing them happiness, health, and power to enjoy the sweets of the year to come."

"A wretched custom!" Widgerton says, in a shudder at the reading respecting the sending to a friend and wishing them health, when it's the very thing to produce dyspepsia. Why, I'd just as soon think of sending a friend a pestle and mortar, and doing the same thing, when he knew I might take it."

I did not answer Widgerton's remark, but I went down into my boy memories to see what I could find there to awaken some sympathetic chord in his nature, and recollection of the day, or rather night, when he hung up his stocking. While I was thinking, Mrs. Dabney—Mary Jane, I call her—came to my relief.

"I am sure, Mr. Widgerton, there is nothing more poetically beautiful than the idea of Santa Claus. The story is full of fairy lore."

"Oh!" says Mr. Widgerton's remark, as he stopped full before a window where a figure, purporting to be a representation of the saint, was exhibited. I could not help but think, that in the real genuine article, but a German interpretation, or rather a local Germanizing of Mr. Santa Claus, giving him the name of Pelznichel or Pun Martin. This arises from Southern Germany, and is recorded in bogus Santa Claus. Therefore, when Widgerton said:

"I don't see anything very poetical in that. It rather looks like some old beggar, who has succeeded in getting too much to drink, if not enough to eat."

I answered what I had just been thinking, and said, further, that this Mr. Pelznichel was somewhat of a wreck, and instead of carrying love and joy with him was more apt to carry fear. He comes several weeks before Christmas, asking questions as to my conduct, and, finally, when I come on Christmas Eve calls upon the mothers to bring out the naughty children that he may whip them. I

THE WINTER FIRE.

A FIRE's a good companionable friend,
A comfortable friend, who meets your face
With welcome glad, and makes the poorest shed
As pleasant as a palace. Are you cold?
He warms you—comforts you—refreshes you—
Hungry? he doth prepare your food for you—
Are you in darkness? he gives light to you—
In a strange land? he wears a face that is Familiar from your childhood. Are you poor?
What matters it to him. He knows no difference Between an emperor and the poorest beggar.
Where is the friend that bears the name of man
Will do as much for you?

HOW MR. SMYTHE,

Through Love,

CAME to GRIEF.

By Belphegor.

CYRUS MUGWATER was the name painted, in bold Roman characters, over a small but well-stocked fancy store in Grand street.

Cyrus Mugwater was a stout, little red-faced man of some forty years standing, warm-hearted, even-tempered and a bachelor. His store was the lower portion of a dwelling-house, and the dwelling-house was the property of which he had spent twenty years of his life, and there he intended to remain so long as trade and life lasted. Not insignificant was the amount of business transacted in that little store. The little bell that rang with every opening of the door had seldom its tongue still during the livelong day, and a pleasant music it was—a tinkle, tingle, tingle, every minute. Right envious were neighboring shopmen of Mr. Mugwater's success. They didn't see why Cyrus should buy his handkerchiefs and gentlemen should buy gloves at Mugwater's, when articles just as good and just as cheap could be obtained at their own counters. But about Mugwater's store there was an inviting appearance of honesty and tidiness, which, perhaps, was not so prominently marked in its neighbors.

In the wall upon entering Mr. Mugwater employed two individuals, a gentleman and a lady, named respectively Miss Eliza Spink and Mr. Orestes Smythe. Miss Spink was unmarried, and, for more about nineteen years old, for Miss Spink was a lady, and, like most ladies, Miss Spink had an impaired memory and a mistaken family Bible. Erect in stature, plump in person, was as fair was Miss Spink, with never so dark eyes and never so white teeth. Quick in walk, quick in speech, quick in figures and quick in temper. Miss Spink was a smart a little body as one could find behind a counter. Mr. Smythe was tall, slim and five-and-twenty. A small blue-eyed, sandy creature had Mr. Smythe, fiery-red whiskers, too, and a voice small and shrill as a whistle. A neater man in appearance than Mr. Smythe could not be readily produced. His scanty locks were always well plastered down, and in such a manner as to make the most of his forehead. His shirt-collars were always confined to their utmost, the rest of his face well shaven, his linen spotless and his clothes stylish.

Now when it is stated that Mr. Mugwater had so much to do with his meerschaum and "down town" that he rarely found time to honor the store with an hour's presence of his smiling face, it will enter the heads of some that for Miss Spink and Mr. Smythe to be thrown together daily, from nine A. M. to nine P.M., was improper, if not dangerous. Such a thought never entered Miss Spink, in the course of time, came to entertain a romantic passion for Mr. Smythe, which passion the latter, with equal romance, returned. The fact that Mr. Smythe was blind—not that he was indifferent to feminine attractions, but that he had a pet notion that dark eyes were deceitful, and should be avoided accordingly. Moreover, Mr. Smythe had ambition, and a penniless shopgirl was not the aim and object of his existence. Miss Spink's feelings, it was, of course, very tantalizing to throw fond glances at a gentleman and have no fond glances thrown back in return; and to let personal charms run to waste, only to be with that gentleman in the store after the lights had been extinguished, and have neither a kiss snatched from her eager mouth or a kiss returned upon her eager hand. But then it was so satisfactory for Mr. Smythe to be able to say to himself:

"Ah, you little dark-eyed schemer, I have successfully evaded you!"

One cloudy, chilly afternoon in November Mr. Smythe sat behind the counter paring his nails. Business was very dull, and Mr. Smythe was not at a loss what to do with himself. He had been reading a novel in the little room that was partitioned from the store by a curtain, but, as his eyes were sewing there, had been sighing frequently, deeply and despondingly, the gentleman had left in alarm and disgust. Now, therefore, Mr. Smythe was paring his nails. Just as he was commencing the ring-finger of the left hand, the store-door opened, ringing the bell and admitting a lady dressed in black. The lady was young, well-formed and graceful, and when she threw back her veil exhibited a face of a beauty so unusual that Mr. Smythe first started pale, then turned red and then as though his delicate structure was about crumbling into ruins. Such a clear complexion, such langushing eyes, such a faultless nose and such perfect teeth never before had Mr. Smythe seen, and he had seen many ladies.

The lady barely noticed the effect her charms had produced.

"I want," said she, "a pair of gloves."

In his perturbation, Mr. Smythe placed before his customer a box of socks, and when she repeated, with a bewitching smile,

"A pair of gloves, sir!"

He blushed, as only a gentleman of refined delicacy could.

"What size do you wear, miss?" inquired he.

"Really," returned she, "I can't say. Mamma has always bought my gloves. Perhaps you can tell, sir?" and she extended a hand small and white.

Mr. Smythe certainly had no business to touch that hand, yet he did, and simultaneously a thrill went through him from head to foot. He had touched ladies' hands before, but never had hand thrilled him so that one.

Never before had Mr. Smythe such difficulty in finding a glove to fit a hand; he did succeed in finding it, though, and when it was found it was wrapped it in paper and gave it to the purchaser.

"Will you be so kind as to give me a card?" said the young lady.

"Certainly," replied Mr. Smythe, and he took a card from his pocket and handed it to her.

"Hays' shop—no business card, Mr. Smythe?"

"Bless me!" exclaimed Mr. Smythe, glancing at the card he had given her, "I've given you one of my own."

Correcting the error he saw the lady to the door, and followed her with his eyes until she was out of sight.

Abstractedly Mr. Smythe walked to the little room and seated himself beside Miss Spink. Abstractedly he placed his hand upon that of the fair Eliza, and gazing on it abstractedly he sighed:

"What a soft little hand!"

"Sir!" exclaimed Miss Spink, violently withdrawing her hand, "what do you mean by this insulting conduct?"

Mr. Smythe's eyes fell from the ceiling; his countenance was that of a man suddenly aroused from sleep.

"Mean!" faintly echoed he, with some dim idea of his position.

"Yes, sir, what do you mean? Oh! Mr. Smythe, you should be ashamed of yourself," and the tender creature fairly went into tears.

"Miss Spink, I—I—I done?" gasped Mr. Smythe, becoming alarmed at the serious aspect the matter had assumed.

"What have you done, sir? You—you pressed my hand and called it soft, and—and I won't stand it."

"Good heavens!" ejaculated the now thoroughly frightened Mr. Smythe, "really, Miss Spink, I assure you, on my honor I do, I never meant it, I did it unthinkingly, and—and it all back."

"Wretch!" screamed Miss Spink, "is it thus you trifle with my affections, is it thus you sport with my heart, a humane heart, a heart, too, that has been trifled with, mistreated, for you and you only. Oh! Orestes! Orestes!"

In the excess of her grief she actually threw herself in Mr. Smythe's arms, to the indescribable horror of that gentlemen. For a moment he allowed her to remain there, but the spirit that was in was roused within him, he recollected himself, concluded that she fainted, and acting upon that idea, he put his arm around her waist that he might lay her on the sofa until she recovered. While he was in the act of so doing she slowly suddenly enter the room but Mr. Mugwater.

At the time of entering Mr. Mugwater's face bore an unusually cheerful expression, but, upon perceiving the affectionate positions of his two employees, that expression deepened, into gravity; almost immediately afterwards, it broke up into innumerable goodnatured wrinkles, and was accompanied by a fit of laughter that threatened apoplexy.

"Ho! ho! ho! ho! Thread my needles! Saw my limbs off! Ho! ho! ho!" and unable to speak further Mr. Mugwater pointed and shook his finger at the couple.

"Sir——sir——" began to speak the unfortunate shopman.

"Not a word, not a word," interrupted Mr. Mugwater, "I'm just as I wished. Thread my needles, my boy, take her. God bless you, and may you be happy!"

Another fit of laughter forced him from the room.

"Orestes!" sighed Miss Spink.

"Confound you, get up!" returned Mr. Smythe, gruffly.

"Orestes, don't leave me!" sighed Miss Spink.

"There's the store-bell, take care of yourself!" and the inhuman Mr. Smythe broke from the embrace of the imploring Eliza and passed into the store.

That evening Mr. Smythe did not sup with Mr. Mugwater and Miss Spink, as was his wont; in fact, he eat nothing until store was closed, then he seized his hat, ran to a restaurant, paid for a meal that he had no more than tasted, and wound up the evening by dressing, over the afterpiece at the theatre, and scalding his mouth with a hot whiskey punch.

The following morning Mr. Smythe had a heavy headache instead of a hearty breakfast. At nine o'clock he went downstairs, passed through the little back room without noticing Miss Spink's tearful face, and presented himself behind the counter, Mr. Smythe wondered why he ever was born, and if mankind generally would not be benefited by the decease of his juvenile form with a penknife. Wondering thus, Mr. Smythe was startled by the opening of the door, and the entrance of a lady. The lady wore black, and was a tall, handsome, fair customer of the day before. Mr. Smythe recognized her with a blush, and she acknowledged the recognition by the sweetest of smiles. A package of all-conceivable articles that they needed for winter use.

Mr. Smythe stammered that he would be most happy to sell her whatever he had, and obtain for her whatever she wanted and he had not. The young lady, thereupon, produced a list of things she desired. Mr. Smythe took the list, ran over it with his eyes, and marked opposite to the name of each article its value; then adding up, he announced the sum total as being sixty-six dollars. The lady expressed her satisfaction, and asked if the things could be sent that evening.

"Certainly," said Mr. Smythe; "what is the address?"

"Miss Cleonia Merwood, Clarendon Hotel; and, if you please, send the bill."

To which Mr. Smythe also said, "Certainly." Then they then left.

The poor shopman sighed as his charmer disappeared.

"Oh!" said he to himself, "there's no use denying it, I am in love. In love, too, with a woman that probably has a thousand admirers, each of whom is better-looking, more gifted, and better off in the world than myself. And she is gone; I may never see her again. She has gone, too, without affording me even the poor satisfaction of a refusal. Ha!" a brilliant thought darted, meteor-like, across Mr. Smythe's mind. "I'll see her to-night—I'll take her the bill."

The entire morning was consumed in getting together the goods ordered by Miss Merwood, and in the afternoon they were sent by express to her address. In the evening Mr. Smythe, in his best clothes and a high state of nervous excitement, repaired to the Clarendon Hotel, and sent up his card. In three minutes he received an answer.

Miss Merwood would see Mr. Smythe, Room Fifty."

Miss Merwood received Mr. Smythe with an encouraging smile and bade him be seated. On the inexpressible joy of the gentleman she was alone.

"I suppose, sir," said she, opening the conversation, "that you have brought your bill?"

Mr. Smythe took from his pocket a tinted envelope containing a sheet of tinted paper, on which he had, in his best hand, made out the bill, and gave it to the lady. The latter looked over the items, and taking from a small reticule a one hundred dollar banknote, gave it to her visitor.

"There is nothing less than this?" inquired Mr. Smythe.

"Nothing."

"Really, I can't make the change."

"Oh, no matter!" she replied, and then with an arch smile, "you can come to-morrow evening and bring the change then, and——" oh, the glance she cast at the gentleman!—"if you like you may leave me your ring as a surety for your appearance."

Intoxicated by these words, Mr. Smythe drew the diamond from his finger and offered it to Miss Merwood.

"Put it on my finger," said she, and the order was obeyed.

Two hours was Mr. Smythe in the delightful society of Miss Merwood, and when the clock struck the sunshine of joy was upon his heart, for he was the accepted husband of the beautiful Cleonia.

When Mr. Smythe reached his room he shut it closed, but entering the private door by means of a nightkey, he retired to his bed the happiest of men.

The next morning, upon the conclusion of breakfast, Mr. Smythe informed Mr. Mugwater of the good sale he had made the day previous, at the same time giving him the one hundred dollar bill.

Mr. Mugwater took the bill, looked at it, went into the store, consulted a banknote list, returned, and stated Mr. Smythe out of countenance.

"Sir," said Mr. Mugwater, "this bill is worthless, and the woman that passed it upon you is a base, designing, deceptive piece of cheap calico!"

"Sir—Mr. Mugwater," stammered Mr. Smythe, growing red in the face, "I consent, will allow such epithpahs as those to be flung at an honorable lady. A lady to whom I am pledged, that has accepted my heart, and is to be my wife."

A fearful scream burst from the throat of poor Miss Spink, as she threw herself on a chair.

"Your wife, sir!" echoed Mr. Mugwater, "darn my socks, what do you mean? Two days ago you were to marry me, now you're going to marry somebody else. Is that honorable, sir, is that honorable?"

"I never promised to marry Miss Spink," said Mr. Smythe.

Another scream arose from the lady mentioned.

"Pins and needles!" ejaculated Mr. Mugwater, "didn't I see you hugging and kissing her the other day?"

"Yes, you did!" exclaimed Miss Spink, violently, "and you did more, you saw me, locked in her room, sir, he would have kissed me. Oh, the deceitful man! did I deserve this of him?"

Mr. Smythe was getting desperate, said Mr. Smythe, "I never promised to marry that woman, and I never will. If she wants to sue me for breach of promise, let her sue me. If she has a big brother that wants satisfaction, let him come to me, and I'll give him satisfaction. And as for you, Mr. Mugwater, you have lacerated my feelings, and are my debtor to the amount of twenty-four one hundred dollar bill, I'll see the lady immediately, and prove to you, sir, that her character is as unimpeached as she drives one."

So saying, Mr. Smythe left the house, rode to the Clarendon Hotel, and inquired for Miss Merwood.

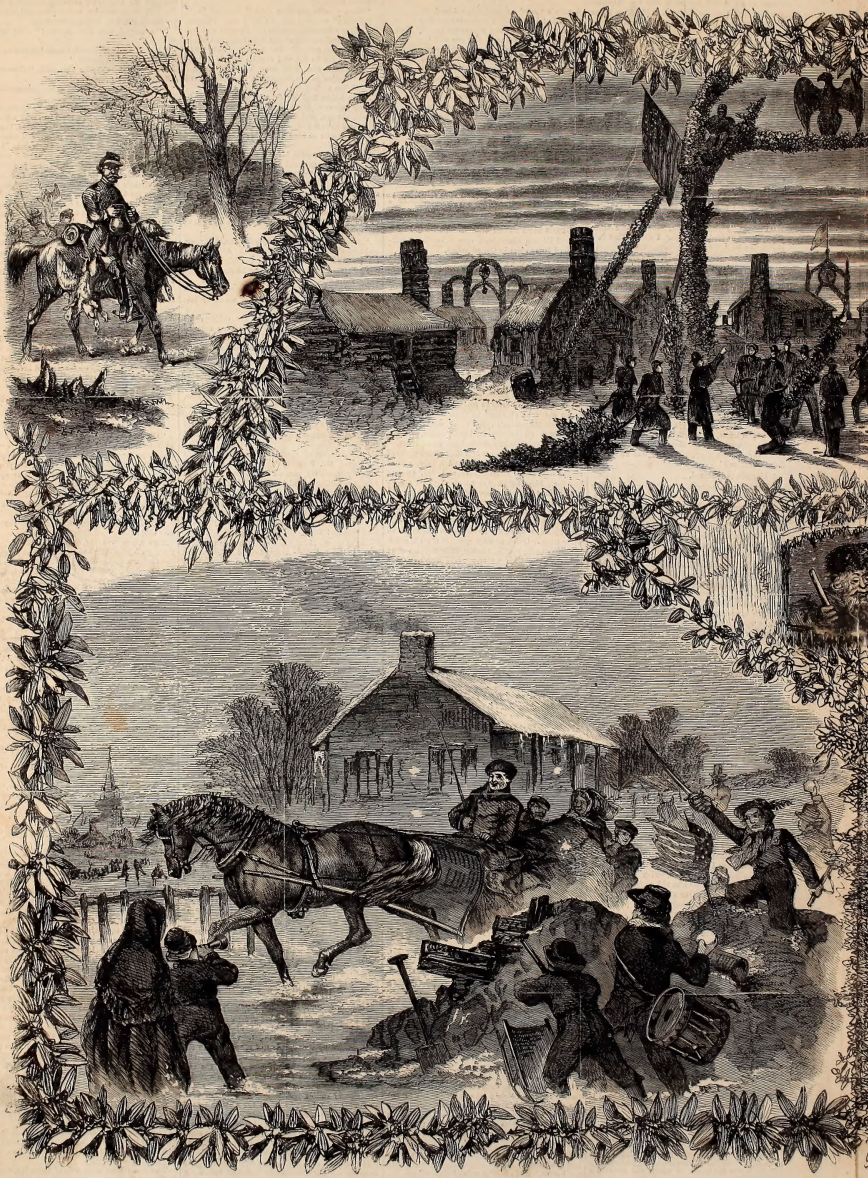
"Miss Merwood," said the clerk, "left this morning early."

"Left!" repeated Mr. Smythe, incredulously.

"Yes, sir," replied the clerk, "and if she is a friend of yours, and you should see her again, be so kind as to inform her that the bill she left in payment for her board was a counterfeit."

The unhappy shopman clasped his hands, looked piteously heavenwards, and tottered to a seat.

So it was that Mr. Smythe, through love, came to grief.



Two years have passed since then, Mr. Smythe is in a tailoring establishment, but he is still a single man. Miss Spink has become Mrs. Mugwater. The little store is yet in existence, and business is brisk.

Two countrymen went into a hatter's to buy one of them a hat. They were delighted with the simple, inside the crown of which was inserted a looking-glass.

"Why is the glass for?" said one of the men.

The other, impatient at such a display of rural ignorance, exclaimed:

"What for? why, for the man who buys the hat to see how it fits him!"

CHASING SHADOWS.

BY EDWARD WILLET.

CHASING shadows on the wall,
Snatching here and grasping there,
Reaching vainly for them all,
Chasing shadows everwhere.

Thus my little darling one
Chases shadows on the wall,
Till the setting of the sun
When her weary eyelids fall.

Little fairy, it is right,
Right enough for such as you,
From the morning to the night,
Fleeting shadows to pursue.

But it saddens me, my dear,
Thus your childish play to see,
For your simple sport, I fear,
Is mankind's epitome.

Thus do all of us, I know,
Chase the shadows all our lives;
Shadows ever and quickly go,
Never one of them survives.

While we chase them on through life,
Oh, what is it that we gain?
Sorrow, anguish, care and strife,
All our days still in vain.

Till, when comes the set of sun,
Soon we fall for lack of breath,
And, our shadow chasing done,
Close our weary eyes in death.

Little darling, all your days
May the light who reigns above
Drive the shadows from your ways
With his sunny smile of love.

Then this wisdom you will know—
Better truth was never heard—
All are shadows here below,
Nought is real but His Word.

LADY LORME'S STRATAGEM.

By Annie Thomas,

AUTHOR OF "THE CROSS OF HONOR," "THE HOUSE IN PICCADILLY," &c.

CHAPTER V.—THE UNSELFISH WISH.

Well, peace to thy heart, though another's it be,
And health to thy cheek, though it bloom not for me.

WHEN Moore wrote these lines he had ceased to care for, or at least to love, the apostrophized one. We don't wish the one—the cherished one—all manner of good things as the bride of another, while we still secretly desires that she should have been our own. Peace to the heart that has been false to us may be wished, but not while that heart is still in mortal change on earth to us. Health to the cheek is a thing that men don't pray for when the owner of the cheek has first proved fickle or morally jilted them; they do that when the lady is supernatural in their hearts and imaginations, but not before—not while the wound is young.

Lord Evesham had prepared for the interview with the woman who had once had the power to sway his soul powerfully with mixed feelings. He had dreaded the display of any lingering feelings of tenderness towards himself on the part of this lustrous-eyed Venus; he had writhed under the thought that possibly she might display tenderness towards her lord. But this last was a very wrong thing, and he soon killed it; but he found himself so wrought upon by Audrey's story of Leonie's devotion, that he did not care to have seen Leonie herself come and hammer the fact down harder. Leonie was not a woman that you could love once and leave off loving the next; she was formed to hold as well as to win, and though Lord Evesham was very loyal in his soul to Audrey, he had loved Leonie very dearly in the days that were gone by.

He had met her under romantic circumstances, and these had first roused his interest and then excited his love. Staying one night at an hotel in Marseilles en route to the East, he had been disturbed by a wild commotion and a general uproar amongst the lower classes of his country people, who were terribly apparent. As a rule, Fred Compton troubled himself little and cared less as to the affairs of the democratic masses; but on this occasion he happened to ask what had caused the row, and from information received he gathered that an English milord and his lady had quarrelled on an occasion of pleasure of the latter. Pursuing the subject further, that the lady was querulous, middle-aged and plain—that the lord was gay and gallant to the ladies, who was young and lovely. The lady, he heard, had gone off in a rage, carrying with her husband, courier, luggage, in fact, all her belongings, and except her own cousin, whom she had left behind her in a fit of jealous frenzy and weak spleen, penniless, helpless and alone.

When a man, generally, cruel wrong is wrought upon a woman, you will generally find, if you search into the case, that another woman is at the bottom of it. When a blow in the dark falls on a feminine head, be sure that it is dealt by a feminine hand. When a condemnatory tone pervades in a speech that is uttered relative to a girl who has neither of those mighty barriers, "care and cash," surrounding her, doubt not for an instant that it is spoken by a woman. Men never descend to such depths of base bitterness as do the ministering angels of our hearts, homes and lives.

The being mentally suspected of a vile wrong is the only relative she had left in the world to elicit faith and kin with turned the milk of human kindness sour in the breast of poor Leonie Powers. Young, beautiful, orphan, and—harder than all else to endure—poor, she had sweetened the bread and water of dependence on her ungenial cousin by a sort of half-friendly, half-saintly intercourse with that cousin's husband. The intercourse was harmless enough, God knows, and poor enough in its compensating powers for the numerous trials, hardships and mortifications of her life; but it was the brightest thing she had in her gloomy daily path, and its brightness was soon sullied therefore, and clouded.

The man was a fool—a vain, handsome, weak fool, but nothing worse; the wife was a hard, ugly, vain, selfish woman, nothing better. The result was that, through marculine folly and feminine unkindness, and low, pettifogging jealousy, suspicion fell upon one whose heart and life were sacred to God then, and perverted the nature formed for better things.

She was left alone—alone in Marseilles—alone in the world, for the wife was rich and the husband poor, and he liked his bread buttered thickly too well to risk angering his wife by asking for justice for poor Leonie. Alone, with little money and fewer friends; alone in a foreign land, and in a fashionable place.

But the girl had a spirit that quelled at nothing, and dreaded nothing, and dared anything—a spirit that had made her race noble and feared in the days when they lived in the great city from whence she came—a spirit that misfortune could not daunt, that loved difficulties and dangers for the sake of overcoming them, and that went to be revenged upon one who had cast the semblance of the shade of dishonor on her—that breathed to take a higher place in the world than that world had ever spurned her could boast—that panted and throbbed to attain a position from whence she could look in scorn on the world, heartless cousin who had stooped her soul in the waters of bitterness.

She wanted no help, she claimed no protection: she told her story with haughty frankness, and defied comment. The comment was not given, and she was polite, but not grateful; the consul's wife called, and Miss Powers was affable, but absorbed, the fact was, she considered the "row" was anxious about getting music lessons." And very soon she got them, and when she had given them long enough to establish a claim to remunerations, she left Marseilles and came back to London: and all this time Fred Compton, instead of being in the land of the cypress and myrtle, was following her like her shadow, and worshipping her in silence.

They met at last, and then he spoke, and she listened eagerly enough, for by marriage alone could she place her secure from the power to sting socially the one who had stung her. He was young, clever, handsome, well-born, well-bred, well-connected, but still he was not rich. She accepted him, and determined to wait for awhile and take the goods the gods gave her, in the shape of love, and be grateful. She was very happy and contented, and believed his betrothed to be the same. And it was during this calm that the misfortune of Lord Evesham, and the diamond opal bracelet purchased.

At last she tired, not so much of the lover as at the poor prospects of his future position, for he was loyal to fell that as he was interested; he strove to keep her heart by freely showing her his love and trust and confidence in her, and without any appeal to emotion fully laid before her his prospects as a title and estates and wealth, and all the rest of the things she longed for—and he failed. With threats of promises of marriage she had worked on their intercourse, the cancelling of their vows. She was cold, cautious, calculating. He could not win her from her purpose of waiting, and left her, but left with his heart wrung and wounded, and his faith in womankind considerably weakened.

Now the tables were turned. When he heard that Audrey Lorme had married, and that married Leonie Powers his heart had gone quicker than was well at the thought of this woman from whom he had parted in anger with the girl he loved, who even avoided seeing her till he had used himself to the fact of her being another man's wife; with a touch of the old tenderness that he thought himself like one he had given her when he had deemed himself dear to her, half hoping that it might awaken kindly, generous feelings in her breast towards himself. He had no intention of rousing the torrent of passion that he had aroused; the woman frightened him with her vehemence and her wildness, but he was not refusing both when others approached; he turned with a feeling of fatigue from her to the calm haven of rest a pure one, in Audrey Lorme, and Lord Evesham felt that she was a dangerous woman to deal with, this once adored, gray-eyed Venus, and that to win was safely clear of Combhurst with his own wife.

Meanwhile my lady was chewing the cud of disappointed mortification; she had whistled Fred Compton down the wind because he was rich and unimportant; and now here, after she had married a baronet for whom she was beginning to entertain the tender feeling of affection, she caught a glimpse of the surface again, and crossed her path with all this world has to bestow of titles and riches and honors.

"If I had only been free," she muttered, fiercely; "if I had not been plodding along my sordid way so grovellingly, I should have known better—but I did not know; but I never cared to look at papers, and I, a music-mistress, was never thrown with any of his friends. I should have been a countess, and I could have waited. I could have put my foot on the necks of those who slighted and stung me in old times."

And then Lady Combhurst and her little hands together till the veins stood up like cords on their backs, and ground her glittering teeth till Dickson suffered from "gooseflesh."

Then a more composed stage followed: she sat down on the couch and indulged in dreams of what she would have been if she had been a countess. With her rare beauty and grace, her talent and wit, her rare accomplishments and matchless fascination, these dreams were not absurd. She pictured herself leading the fashions and being queen of the most select coterie in London; she saw herself ruling in that world of ton, at which she had gazed as an outsider. She fancied the sensation she would have caused when first that world saw her in the coronet of a countess. And then she thought of the handsome life that would be hers probably in Warwickshire, and she loathed her position and her husband.

Inordinately ambitious, extravagantly beautiful, extravagantly vain and fond of display and splendor, brilliant as a diamond and hard as one, Lady Lorme, as she sat on the couch with her dainty fingers twisting the lovelocks round and round her fair white arm, was as much to be dreaded as a hungry panther. Utterly fearless, utterly unscrupulous, with a mind capable of planning well, and a will capable of carrying out unflinchingly whatever she planned, with such beauty as an ally, and such a nature saved, and a horrible gnawing at her soul, she sat there a thing to be admired, feared and fled from.

The flickering firelight fell on her head and brow as she sat there brooding over her fancied wrongs and disappointments; the sheeny, silver light of the wax candles in the toilet-glass fell on her rich bridal robe and on the gems that she had so mingled light the embroidered jacket sparkled and glittered with gorgeous effect. An Eastern queen! No Cleopatra ever looked, and a horrible gnawing do no more than make "defect perfection," and that did Lady Lorme.

At last some new thought could have crossed her mind?—she started from her seat with a low cry of almost horror—a gasping, stifled cry it was, and it seemed to rend her large and come heavily and painfully with agony from her heart. Heaven help the woman who utters that kind of cry, for either a horrible crime or a horrible fear oppresses her.

She stood by the wax candles and looked before her face, as if she would shut out some horrible vision, and then she tore them down with an effort, and looked at the lights and shuddered and recoiled, and trembled and panted. The face she saw was livid, the lips were bloodless, the brow livid, and the eyes unnatural, with a wild, eyes-were-fixing like coals of fire. No wonder that, seeing such a face as this, my lady should shudder, and tremble, and pant. It was a face that it was not well to see.

"What can I do?" she muttered to herself, after a minute or two, and Dickson, in the next room, looked up, and wondered what her mistress could have called her, so she came and was dismissed with a sharp reprimand. But the break to her thoughts was a relief to her, and she would not disorder it again now they had been interrupted in such a commonplace manner.

"What can I do?" she repeated, "I will not have been mine—of that I'm fully determined; so I must do the best I can and befriend myself, since I am such a friendless creature as to be in such an undertaking. Oh, that something would happen that I could be free to claim his promise before the next maddening fortnight has passed, at the end of which I shall lose (or gain) Lord Evesham for ever!"

It was evident that Lady Lorme could not wish "peace" to Lord Evesham's "mind" under the circumstances by which he was surrounded. Her thoughts flowed in a different direction, for she did not reflection brought no comfort to her, that she herself was to blame for all that was unpleasant to herself in the future. She had not banished Fred Compton she would have married Lord Evesham. Her principal rage was directed against Audrey, for that young lady having had the audacity to be a rich heiress, and to have an order of hatred, after Audrey, came Audrey's brother.

He had been kind to her and generous and loving in his manner, and had put those things softened her bitter feeling against him for standing in the way of her attaining the heights she would have yearned her soul to reach, and which she could attain and hatred, and revenge in her heart so long that they had blackened it and made it dense to the perception of the line between right and wrong. In Lord Evesham's gentle and sweet as she was outwardly, she was unsexed by the cruelty of her own heart and feelings, and was a woman no longer in the soul.

When the clock struck seven my lady rose, and now she could gaze in the glass with pleasure again, for the flickering candles had come back, and the lustre of her face had renewed itself. Once more the full sweet lips pouted scorly, once more the smooth cheeks were unwrinkled, once more the light came softly shaded by the long lashes from those glorious eyes. Once more the tension was removed from the lip and the mind, and once more my lady looked pleased with herself again.

She had dressed to some purpose. She saw that the moment she entered the drawing-room where Audrey and Lord Evesham sat she was dazzled and her. Her husband came to meet her with unchecked pride in her radiant grace and tastefully splendid attire, and was supplemented her upon her appearance in the piquant little jacket, and a half-frightened admiration came into Lord Evesham's eyes as he looked on what he had been used on her way to the dining-room a trembling one.

All through the dinner my lady never flagged. How gay she was! How witty, and bright, and vivacious! She startled Audrey, and enchanted Sir Robert, and puzzled Lord Evesham.

"Why, since she can carry on like this," he thought, "I may hope, I suppose, that she won't attack me any more." And like a wise man he prayed most fervently to be delivered from the temptation. "She's made me tell one falsehood," he thought; "for if she was free fifty times over, I wouldn't change Audrey for her."

And Lord Evesham pitied his friend profoundly for having such an excitable wife, instead of envying him for such a charming one.

They might have known that one chord was wrongly strung, if they had only paused to think of those three luckless ones who were so unconscious. In a party of four something must have been false for the evening to seem sombre and dull as it did, when a bridegroom and his bride, a lover and his betrothed made the quartette. My lady seemed to lull down as the hour passed on, and at last she took refuge in the assertion that she had a nervous headache. So Sir Robert plied the machine up comfortably on the most luxurious couch in the room, and placed thereon, with the tenderest care, the richly-robed form of his enchantress, and she lay there with her filmy handkerchief pressed to her brow, weaving her spells still more strongly around him as he sat by her side. Sir Robert was happy enough, but somehow or other, the atmosphere seemed oppressive to both Audrey and Lord Evesham.

CHAPTER VI.—BRAVE HEART.

HAD a period ever been passed by you, reader of these pages, which, without being absolutely unfortunate, had been provokingly unlucky—a period when the friend you liked best in the world was either sent to the other end of it on a special mission, or had suddenly unscrupulous people, or went into those paths of life at home into which many things forbade your following him—a period when the sun in the sky was constantly in the way, while you, in pursuance of some pertinaciously followed plan, betted as constantly on the rain—a period when you were crushed your umbrella whenever you wanted to walk the earth without any visible cause—a period when all the gloves you became possessed of split up the centre, leaving the palm of your hand exposed when you did not want the palm of your hand exposed—a period when the letters from the friends you loved went to enlighten the minds and hearts of the tedium of the ills in the dead-letter office, while the ones from the friends you hated arrived with maddening regularity—a period when your pet sparrow escaped from his home and caused you much anguish—a period when your dinners were perpetually under or over cooked, and your physical existence, from whatever old expectations and who were also fastidious to a degree, were always coming in to dine with you—a period when the boldest, blackest and most legible advocacy could not keep things "right side up?" If such a period has ever passed by you, you will understand and sympathise with the anger and annoyance of Audrey Lorme when those different days appointed for the arrival of the different articles of her trousseau came round and the millinery did not arrive.

There was dire wrath and confusion and commotion at Combhurst, not alone on the part of Audrey, but on the part of Lord Evesham, who was livid with fury when the special messenger dispatched to Swan & Edgar's, to Eagle's, to Howell & James's, and to Madame Emanuel's came back from each and every place the same answer, which was to the following effect:

That a gentleman, looking like a lawyer, had shown Miss Lorme's written direction that the things should be handed over to him, and paid the sum due for them on the spot. There had been the robbery for the articles in every case that had been handed over to him full payment had been made, but there had been a forgery, for no such document had ever been signed by Audrey Lorme.

Lady Lorme was voluble in her prettily uttered regret that such an unforseen circumstance should have arisen to delay the wedding; Sir Robert was savagely indignant with the originator of so bold and daring a robbery. "But it had not delayed the marriage, I should think," he added, when the special messenger had marched and countermarched all he had heard. "Audrey can get up a wardrobe after her marriage as well as before."

"Yes," Lord Evesham interrupted, eagerly, "in Paris."

But this my lady would not hear of for an instant. What! Had she been a few years in her home be married in aught but the garments befitting the bride's future high station and her (Lady Lorme's) own? No, no; the wedding must be put off. New things must be ordered. All could be rearranged by the first week in January. The end of it was, that the husband conquered the brother, and Sir Robert stood proud to his wife's part in the case.

In vain Lord Evesham grumbled and protested; there was no appeal for him, for Audrey was too much taken with my lady's decision.

"For the sake of us all, let it be when we always meant it to be, Robert," said Lord Evesham; "you don't know how much I should enjoy come out of it if you don't. Audrey, be firm."

But Audrey looked at her brother, and saw her brother evidently wished for peace that were so eloquent in their gray velvet depths; and Audrey turned and left the room in a passion of womanly disappointment and self-sacrifice.

"You must consent to wait, Fred, till my sister can go from my house as my sister ought to go. Leonie says all can be ready by the middle of January, and that means time I'll put a detective on the track of the clever thief."

"For God's sake don't do that," cried Lord Lorme, starting to his feet.

"Why not?" asked Sir Robert; "extraordinary fellow you are, to be sure. Why not? Don't you think it would be better? in fact, only right, Leonie?"

Leonie, lovely Lady Lorme, doubly lovely in her excitement of the preceding hour, rose from her seat with rather less than usual of her languid ease; how brightly, too, the wild-rose bloomed in her fair cheeks as she crossed the room and clasped her pretty white hands over her future brother-in-law's arm.

"You must not get angry with each other, Robert; and you," she said, plaintively, "if you think it better to let the matter drop I will not raise my voice to urge Robert to carry it on. You shall decide, Lord Evesham."

Lord Evesham's arm trembled like a leaf in the clasp of his friend's wife. He kept his face averted from her, crossly Sir Robert Lorme thought; and when he did speak it was with an effort.

"I have been bothered and worried quite enough," he said; "I shall take it unkindly, Robert, if you meet the affair [illegible]; let it drop."

"Let it drop!" echoed my lady. "Robert, dear," she continued, quitting Lord Evesham's side, and lightly laying her hand on her husband's arm, "you will not be so unkind, will you, if I join my request to his; take no further notice of it—promise me."

"Well, on my word," exclaimed Sir Robert, petulantly, "if you people take the greenest view of things; first, Evesham's frantic with rage and all that sort of thing against an insolent, bold scoundrel who should be thrust out and hunted down in no time if only proper steps were taken. It is dead against my principles to shield a thief—a dirty, low, unscrupulous thief and forger, as this fellow must be."

Lady Lorme laughed; her little, trifling, bell-like laugh was used in the room, and this she put both her tender white hands up to her hair and pushed it under, with a pleased, childish action of impatience. Her face looked so frankly fair as she did it—so young, and unsullied and pure.

"Robert," she said, growing grave again suddenly, "What a regular John Bull you are to be so dense; and, dear your poor little wife to explain things a little, if she would not see a quarrel. I may be wrong, but I fancy Evesham would not care to have things traced perhaps, because—"

She paused, and flung a half-frightened, half-defiant glance at Lord Evesham, who sedulously kept his eyes turned away from her.

"Because what?" asked her husband angrily.

"Because—now be quiet, and good, and calm, Robert; and above all things avoid a scene and a disturbance which will do nothing but aggravate Audrey—because, good boy as Evesham is now, he may have loved and ridden away, and left some fair, unscrupulous damsel in the lurch who has dared to pay herself for his defection by appropriating his bride's dresses. That is my solution of the affair."

"By my soul this is too much!" And so it seemed, for Lord Evesham's voice was thick with passion. "If you are pass, my lady Lorme, it was not for my sake that I urged tolerance; hunt the forger down to the death—I will not be the man to stay your hand."

"How heroical he is!" exclaimed Lady Lorme, as the enraged lover and insulted lord left the room. "Now, Robert, I warn you, I am not very impudent of me to say it before him of course, but I wonder you were stupid enough not to read the truth in his unwillingness. I, for one, must pay Audrey's visit to the matter rest. He has been very gay, you know, and a worthless woman will stop at nothing."

"Dear love," said Sir Robert, rather solemnly, "I could have wished though you had not enraged him so. At any rate say nothing to poor Audrey about it, for they are uncommonly attached to each other."

"Oh, uncommonly!" replied Lady Lorme; "don't be alarmed about Lord Evesham's indignation with me—I think I can make it up with him. Are you going out?"

Sir Robert was not sure; he was uncomfortable about Evesham; he did not like any ill-feeling of that kind rankling in a fellow's mind; it was annoying for a fellow to have a thing of that sort dragged into notice before the brother of the girl he was going to marry, just when he was going to marry her.

Lady Lorme had another plan, however, than Sir Robert's going to seek Lord Evesham.

"You go out for a ride or something, Robert, as you had intended, and leave me to attend to the wounded proper feeling' of this reformed Don Juan. You must seem to have forgotten it when you come in, and you will find him soothed. But do have sufficient regard for him to drop all idea of making a stir in an affair that when sifted might not redound to his credit. Will you?"

When could my lady's softness have fail of having their due effect on her husband. Certainly not now when she brought all her beauty, and grace, and charm of sweetness, and exquisite devotion—always cherished from boyhood miserable, he did what a man is pretty sure to do under such or similar circumstances, stood still and pulled at the end of his moustache.

"I think you are wrong, Leenie, 'pon my word I do; it's no honor even for Evesham to marry a forger, you know; and then there's the child—what am I to do—what can I do, now things have gone so far? It is quite a different thing seeking and getting redress, and punishment, and having the fact that your sister is jilted—that you're thrown over in fact."

"Patience, patience is the only thing, Robert; don't be hasty on the marriage by making those suggestions about her getting her trousseau in Paris; he can but agree when you suggest, you know; and in the time, the interval, Audrey may have the great providence of us poor mortals. In the meantime I promise you that all I can do I will do to bring things to that end I would see them brought to."

And having made this gratifying promise to her lord, Lady Lorme dismissed him to the hour's breathing of air he always took, and as he left, contemplated, and then betook herself to the dark, cosy old library, where, as she had anticipated, she found Lord Evesham.

All that passed during the interview shall not be chronicled here; suffice it to say that the lost words uttered by Lord Evesham, when my lady was leaving him to array herself in fresh millinery triumphs for dinner, were—

"The old legends about selling one's soul seem to be verified in my case, for the sake of a wife for your own sake—for the sake of a poor wretch who feels even now the horrors of the perdition you are hurrying him into—pretty."

"On the road I am taking?" she asked, with a brilliant smile flashing over her face like lightning.

"Never, for you love me, Lord Evesham."

(To be continued.)

SYNOPSIS OF CERTAIN PRESIDENTIAL EDITORIALS.

[SEE THE HERALD.]

Our country never would of thus be scunt,
If it would make a President of Grant.
Fair widows, who a second husband want,
All you've to do is go to Cooper Institute,
Maidens, who for a loving sweetheart pant,
You'll get one if you'll engineer for Grant—
Orpheus, who wants a Democratic saint
About to die, elect great General Grant.
Would ye collapse the Rebellion by main?—
We mean, old Peter—elect U. S. Grant.
You may rely on what we say, 'tis truth—
Abonnés to Volume 20 vote for Grant!
It wed eat off the spurs of that young bant
Am, called the Gallic Rooster—let him crow for Grant.
While there's a Shakespeare great or Dante,
We've got to make a President of Grant.
Ladies, who wish to look "real elegant,"
All you've to do is to go in for Grant.
Parsons, if you would triumph over cant,
Preach from your pulpits for General Grant!
Actors, who wish to strut, and fret and rant,
You can do all if you'll vote for Grant.
And little boys who're greedy for quantity of lollypops, just vote for Grant.
Soldiers, if you want a real out of Stant-
On, the great blunderer, try strat General Grant.
And all, who would desire an elephant
Bigger than Barnum, get great General Grant.

THE WAR IN MISSISSIPPI.

McPherson's Troops foraging in the Head-quarters of the rebel Gen. Whitfield.

FORAGING AS a species of robbery does not, with all the latitude which it gives, admit of more than after fugitive swine and fowl, blind us to its worse features. It is a necessary evil, a system to be declared but exceptionally justifiable. In a case like the present, however, where the foragers light on the headquarters of one of the Governor's generals, the accumulation of good things is lawful prize, and the strictest casuist will not question the propriety of thus supplying a national larder for Christmas Day.

The incident occurred during the recent inroad of Gen. McPherson's troops into the state of Mississippi where original accessions still talk of State Rights, ignorant of the fact that the Rights of the question have passed to the theory all a fallacy, and that their State papers contain little but worthless rags. This touching scene affected all. The most earnest search was made for concealed Confederates, the forgetful husband, who proved to be a volunteer from New York. Our artist has happily caught the spirit of the scene, and words would but mar the impression.

THE LOSS OF THE TURRETED IRON-CLAD WEEHAWKEN.

AT TWO O'CLOCK on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 6, while a thunder-storm was raging from the north-east, the ironclad Weehawken, lying at the entrance of Charleston harbor, went down at her anchorage—a victim to the violence of the tempest. She went to the bottom—and carried with her to a horrible death beneath the waves four of her engineers and 26 of her crew.

Saturday had been a bright and beautiful day, with scarcely a breath of wind, and with a calm, unruffled sea. During the night a breeze sprang up, and the wind, blowing freshly at daylight on Sunday, increased to a gale, and then to a storm.

The ironclad fleet was lying meantime at its usual anchorage. The Ironsides was stationed off Sumter island, about two miles from Fort Wagner. North of the Ironsides lay the flagship Philadelphia, distant about a mile. The Weehawken was next in line, anchored 200 or 300 yards north of the flagship.

The first signal of distress was made from the Weehawken at a few minutes before two o'clock, and answered at once by the flagship, from which four boats were at once dispatched to the rescue. Commander Duncan, of the Weehawken, who chanced to be on the flagship, and Captain Rodgers, of the Philadelphia, whose signal was made, proceeded immediately in a tug with the intention of going to the vessel in distress. He had scarcely left the Admiral when the officer of the deck saw that the Weehawken was sinking, and immediately reported her to be sinking.

A minute later she had swiftly down by the head, crowned slightly over to starboard and disappeared beneath the waves.

It is impossible to convey any idea of the appalling suddenness with which the vessel went to the bottom of a thunderbolt. When the first signal of distress was made the vessel was in perfect trim for going to sea, and when at length the vessel went down it was difficult for any one on board to realize the sudden and fearful. The wind was blowing with great fury, and the sea was lashed into tremendous waves. Those who encountered great peril in picking up from the water the few who were saved from the ill-fated ship Weehawken before she sank. Almost at the moment she went down some 30 or more swam to the boats and succeeded in getting away. As many others were rescued from the surging waves by the crews of the flagship, the South Carolina and the Ironsides Dispatch vessel Dra. Thirty rescued.

The Weehawken had indeed her side in the sea, which kept the waves constantly submerged, and which frequently swept into her forecastle. Two men were washed overboard while he lay at anchor, but accustomed as they were to every peril of the sea, they thought little of it, and when the ship had grown careless of danger, and paid no heed to the encroaching waters until it was too late. They dreamed of no peril till the waves had fairly vaulted to swallow them. When it was certain that the vessel was lost, the terror-stricken crew had little power to help themselves. There were men in irons between decks, and the sergeant-at-arms pushed frantically to set them free. For forward, they rushed down. There were invalids in the sick bay, and to their relief the surgeon went his steward, who never returned. There were firemen at the furnaces, to whom vain appeals for help from hand of their comrades were made. A few of the confident were rushing to their quarters at their wonted places, justifying their hurrying to the deck to save themselves. In the midst of scenes like these the Weehawken went down.

THE MAJESTIC WATCHING THE REBEL RAMS AT BIRKENHEAD.

Our readers are already acquainted with the general features of the extraordinary mission left by Mr. Laird, a Member of the English Parliament, for the Rebel Government. Every deceit and falsehood was pressed to foster the public and the English Government to pretend to believe that they were for the Emperor of China or the Sultan of Turkey, or for any other power save America. England had permitted one man-of-war for the rebel navy to leave port on a pretended trial trip. To allow them to leave England and receive an armament at colony and sail thence, as though her colonies were not under her control, would not do a second time. The broad arrow was placed on the Majestic. They were to do the Mersey, with Her Majesty's ship the Majestic keeping watch and ward over them. No one could say, however, that the work having been stopped. Of the two the Majestic was the more complacent; but the attitude of the English Government towards the rebels, of which Davis so bitterly complains in his message, is aptly portrayed in the picturesque engraving of the Majestic watching the incipient pirates.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

OF a person who was a sordid miser, it was told Mr. Curran that he had set out from Cork to Dublin, on one short and a glass.

"Yes," said Curran, "and I will answer for it he will check the driver of them until he sees it."

WHERE did ye git that hat, Jerry?"

"Borrred it."

"Whin will ye return it?"

"Don't know. Borrred it of a feller asleep in the Park."

THE Boston Transcript has this—Mr. Guffney his boots. I borrowed his hat. Do ye think I'd steal? No, I'll scorn the act.

THE best adhesive label you can put on your luggage is to stick it yourself.

MATRIMONY, like industry is a narrative of many rewards; but the story of love may be told in a few letters.

"Turn out of the wet," as the shark said when he swallowed the sailor.

RUNNING accounts will run away with a person's credit quicker than anything else.

THE man who is fond of puddings and pies places himself fearfully in the power of his wife.

"CAUGHT in her own net," as the man said when he saw one of his daughters married to her cousin.

"JANE," said a wag, "it's all up with Jones!" "Whaste all over town?"

"Mud."

Her eyes dropped.

WHEN a man is hideously ugly the only safety for him is flight in it. Let him boldly claim it as a distinction.

THEODORE PARKER says that a "grain of corn is worth a mountain of gold." Every barn full in the country would agree with him.

A GENTLEMAN who was determined to outdo all competition in raising fine raised chickens from egg plants has succeeded in producing a colt from a hen chicken and a calf from a new laid egg.

THE following announcement is copied verbatim from the original, which is still to be seen in the parish church of Bedford: "Whereas my wife my person Catch a broken Thos fences shall be procuted according Lowe."

WHO finds all the umbrellas that everybody loses? Every man we meet loses the umbrella he had, and we have not yet encountered with the man that finds them. On any one answer the question we will call and see him.

A GIRL, hearing the lady of the house, at dinner, say she would like a little nutmeg with her wine, when he came home to tea, laid two extra plates on the supper-table for the supposed visitors.

"I'll bet you what I take you five mile you can't," said an old-fashioned gentleman, a day or two ago, to a sharp boy who was driving hair-line horses.

"Why?" was immediately asked.

"Because I've got no spare ears."

"My dear," said a gentleman to a young lady to whom he thought to be married, "do you prefer poetry or prose?"

"No," replied the lady, "nature has saved me the trouble."

"I HAVEN'T taken a drop of liquor a year," said an individual of questionable morals.

"Then you've been very temperate are we to believe, your lips or your nose?"

"You would be very pretty indeed," said a gentleman to a young lady, "if you were only a little larger."

"My eyes may be very small, sir, but such people as you don't fill them!"

A DRUNKARD being advised to rub his limbs well with brandy for the rheumatism, said he had heard of the remedy, but added, "I doth better like the inside drinks of brandy, and do not rub me out de pottle."

A NEW YORK ESTATE BUYERS.—When you negotiate for a house having all the modern improvements, don't forget to look for a mortgage as one of them.

"WHAT'S the use," said an idle fellow, "of a man working himself to death to get his living?"

WHAT is the difference between a sailor and a soldier? One tars his ropes, the other pitches his tent.

"JOHNNY, how many seasons are there?" "Six; spring, summer, autumn, winter, open season, and [illegible] season."

A POPULAR writer says that men, like children, are "pleased with a rattle." Not much, if it is at the tail of a mouse.

A NEW SOUTHERN PAPER.—We have received several copies of the New Orleans Daily Times, a thoroughly loyal and slavery paper, recently established in New Orleans. It presents a typical fair appearance with the best of its New York contemporaries, and is, in our hands, a great success. It is edited by Mr. J. K. Hamilton, of this city. An able leader appeared published in New Orleans! Tempora mutantur!

THE WAR IN MISSISSIPPI.—M'PHERSON'S TROOPS FORAGING AT THE REBEL GENERAL WHITFIELD'S HEADQUARTERS.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, FRED. B. SCHELL.

AN INCIDENT OF GETTYSBURG.—THE LAST THOUGHT OF A DYING FATHER.

THE SIEGE OF CHARLESTON—SINKING OF THE MONITOR WEEHAWKEN, DEC. 7.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE.

DR. FELIX GOURAUD'S

Italian Medicated Soap

The annals of Modern Science are blazoned with no grander record than the world-renowned discoveries with which DR. FELIX GOURAUD has enriched the toilet, purest, foremost among which stand the delicious beautifier to which he has given the name of ITALIAN MEDICATED SOAP. Language is powerless to set forth one tithe of its wonderful properties. But the high meed of public approbation has so decidedly and unchangeably stamped the superiority of this remarkable Soap, that no doubt its efficacy in the curation of Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Rubefaction, Roughness, Chaps, Chafes, Cracks, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Moth, Ringworm, Scald Head, Barber's Itch, Worms in the Skin, Erysipelas, Pustules, Scrofula, Scurvy, Obstinate Old Sores, and other cutaneous infirmities, is to imply a doubt of the existence of truth itself! But it is not alone the power possessed by it to cure to an unrivalled and almost skin its pristine health and beauty, to which we more especially refer, as other and still more delightful qualities. It is, for instance, so remarkable a detergent, that, while it has power so thoroughly to cleanse, it is also a most powerful tonic, this Soap, with the curious property of magic, searches the minutest pores of the skin, and in a manner removes every particle of filth and deterioration impeding to the roseate and hardest cuticle a clearness, whiteness and softness as voluptuous and enviable as that which graces "a fair young child." It is consequently not at all an uncommon thing even nowadays for ascribing by the use of GOURAUD'S SOAP, to display adolescence, with which fairest in the presence of their "ladye loves."

GOURAUD'S POUDRE SUBTILE positively uproots hair from low foreheads or any part of the body, warranted.

Found at GOURAUD'S NEW AND SPLENDID ESTABLISHMENT, 450 BROADWAY, near Grand Street, removed from the old depot, 67 Walker Street.

Established Anno Domini 1820.

To be had Wholesale at Wells & Co., N. Y.; Barnes & Co., N. Y.; Schieffelin & Co., N. Y.; and Druggists generally.

Wild Men and Beast Children.

Nursed by the Wolf and other Animals. FURS and the Fur Trade, Hunting and Trapping, Human Possible, Sketches. How Miss K. got a Husband, Must Marry or Fight, His Choice and the results, in the Double Number of the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for January. 15 cents: or $1 50 a year. New Vol. FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,

Agents for the United States for the celebrated

ALBERZINI

EXTENSION HOLDERS & GOLD PENS

Of the most handsome and durable construction, put up in new fancy cases of one dozen each, and not sold in any less quantities. They will retail for $3 each.

Price, per dozen $10 25
" 3 dozen 25 00

Sent by mail or express, prepaid. Address SALISBURY, BRO. & CO., Providence, R. I.

Economy, Durability & Convenience

The Star No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil Lamps. Patented Aug. 11, 1863. Gives a brilliant light; free from smoke or smell. It can be carried and handled freely without being extinguished. The latest and acknowledged the best invention of its kind. Warranted as represented. Sample sent, postpaid, for 35 cents. Agents wanted.

PETER ESSIG & CO., Manufacturers, No. 2 Platt St., N. Y.

Furs! Furs!! Furs!!!

Ladies and Misses Fine Furs, in Sable, Mink, Ermine, Siberian Squirrel, &c.

Gents' Fur Caps, Mufflers and Gauntlets, in Seal, Otter, Beaver, etc.

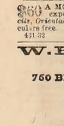
Sleigh Robes in variety. Retailed at Wholesale Prices.

BURKE (successor to WATKINS), 210 Broadway, corner Fulton street. 431-38

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS FROM LIFE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
AUTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.,



25 cents each. $1 50 per doz. Free by mail. Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1818, New York city. Send for circular.

AGENTS A MONTH! We want Agents at $60 a month and EXPENSES paid, to sell our Everlasting Pencils, Oriental Burners, and 33 other articles. 15 Circulars free. SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Me. 431-32

W. H. BARMORE

CONFECTIONER,

760 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Wedding Parties

And Entertainments furnished cellar, with Silver Ware, Glass and China-ware—Same.

Ornamental Pyramids, etc.

Bartlett's Burnished Hand Needles—Dressmakers will find these a wonderful improvement over others, either for HAND or MACHINE SEWING. They possess a peculiar eye and form. Mine. Demorest.

FURNITURE,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

BY

DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,

(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),

No. 87 Bowery, New York.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Christie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash. Their stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $22 to $100.

TUCKER'S NEW STYLE PATENT SPRING BED,

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each. Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

Cavalry.	Artillery.	Co. Pins.	Corps Badges.
Solid Silver, $3.	Solid Silver (without battles) $1 50.	Solid Silver, $1.	Solid Silver, $1.
do Gold Relief, $3 50.	do Gold Relief, $2.	do Gold Relief, $1 50.	do Enamelled, $1 50.
	Battles, 25 cents each, extra.	$1 50.

Solid Gold, $8. Solid Gold (without battles), $5. Solid Gold, $3 50. Solid Gold, $5.

Every Co., from A to M, and every Corp Badge worn by the army constantly on hand. Engraved to order and send free on receipt of price. Name Cash, in advance. Freight or postage to be paid. Send for a Catalogue.

Address C. L. HALCH & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

(Formerly Packard & Co.)

Dreams.

Their Significance, Space and Time Annihilated, Poetry and Music in Sleep, Horrid Dreams and Happy Dreams—A Dreams Experience by Rev. Reed PSYCHOLOGY: or, the Science of the Soul, in Jan. Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. Only 15 cents; or $1 50 a year. Address

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

WILLIAM TAYLOR,

No. 555 Broadway.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS!

CONFECTIONERY,

ARTICLES FOR CHRISTMAS TREES,

Christmas Candles, Lanterns, Flags, Drums, Fruits and Surprises,

Petite Cornucopias, etc.

Also, Bonbon Boxes in great variety; Silk and Paper Cornucopias, Mottoes, &c. Meat, Oysters, Ice Cream and Cakes, for New Year's Tables. 430-3

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS

TO THE MARTYRS OF LIVER COMPLAINT —Among the wonderful medical properties which have rendered HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS pre-eminent among the health-restoring preparations of the age, its sanitious virtues are not the least remarkable. No words can do justice to its marvellous effect upon the diseased liver. Perhaps the simple words of a convalescent sufferer, who describes it as "going right to the spot," tell the story as clearly as many do. It does go right to the spot. It operates directly upon the disordered organ, and whether usually a tree or in a state of paralysis, restores it to a condition of health. For sickness at the stomach, pain between the shoulders and in the right side, yellow suffusion of the skin, costiveness, drowsiness and languor, dimness of sight, colic, palpitation of the heart, dizziness, low fever, and other symptoms which indicate the various phases of acute and chronic liver complaint, use one and all promptly relieved, and finally removed, by the action of this famous preparation, which is at once the best of correctives, the gentlest and most genial of aperients, an invigorating regulator, and a powerful restorative. For cases of a bilious habit, who use the Bitters as a protective medicine, will never suffer the pains and penalties of liver disease or bilious remittent fever. This the proprietors guarantee.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 470 BROADWAY.

FURNITURE,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

BY

DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,

(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),

No. 87 Bowery, New York.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Christie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash. Their stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $22 to $100.

TUCKER'S NEW STYLE PATENT SPRING BED,

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each. Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

Cavalry.	Artillery.	Co. Pins.	Corps Badges.
Solid Silver, $3.	Solid Silver (without battles) $1 50.	Solid Silver, $1.	Solid Silver, $1.
do Gold Relief, $3 50.	do Gold Relief, $2.	do Gold Relief, $1 50.	do Enamelled, $1 50.
	Battles, 25 cents each, extra.	$1 50.

Solid Gold, $8. Solid Gold (without battles), $5. Solid Gold, $3 50. Solid Gold, $5.

Every Co., from A to M, and every Corp Badge worn by the army constantly on hand. Engraved to order and send free on receipt of price. Name Cash, in advance. Freight or postage to be paid. Send for a Catalogue.

Address C. L. HALCH & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

(Formerly Packard & Co.)

A HANDSOME HOLIDAY GIFT.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT

SMOKING CASE!

Most important in its combination of the Meerschaum, containing Pipe and Stem, Mouthpiece and Pipe Cleaner, with a handsome Tobacco Pouch at chest, filling the Pipe by the native ingenious use of the fingers or waste of tobacco, the whole securing freedom from all odor, and perfection to your Case. It is made for service, of various and handsome styles, at $1 50, $2, $2 25, $2 50 and $3 to $3 75 and $5; the two latter richly Plated and Engraved. Nothing can excel its Comfort. Sold by Rooney for all Smokers. As a PRESENT TO FRIENDS nothing could be more acceptable.

FOR THE SOLDIER IT IS INVALUABLE.

The Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco!

Of superior quality and flavor, in packages to fill the case, and of various sizes for the general Trade. A liberal discount to Dealers. Single Cases sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of price and 25 cents.

RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,
Office 479 Broadway, cor. Howard St., N. Y.

Beautiful Women.

For Portraits, with the Secret of Beauty, and "How to be Beautiful," see the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. The January Double Number has more than 30 Portraits. Only 15 cents, by first post, or $1 50 a year. New Volume.

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

Soldiers' Co. Pins.

LETTERS FROM A TO M.

A new Pin in fine Gold Plate, Enamelled with Letters in Silver relief. Single Pin 50 cents each; $4 50 per doz. Sent to any part of the Army by mail, upon receipt of the price. Also every kind of Corps or Division Pin sent to order. Address R. KEITH, 208 Broadway New York.

J. G. SCHULL,

MERCHANT TAILOR

32 Ann Street, New York,

Has on hand a splendid assortment of French, English and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings, which he is prepared to make up in the most fashionable style and on the most reasonable terms for cash.

Physiognomy, or Signs of Character,

Revealed in THE BRAIN, as seen by Jews, Orientals, Greeks and Romans; Bearded Women, with illustrations. The Beard in Chart by Different Nations, size and a yoke; very interesting, at 3s. Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, by first post. Only 15 cents; or $1 50 a year. Send orders to

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

W. FORSYTH & CO.,

42 and 44 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office), offer for sale the following Magnificent List of

WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.

Valued at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

	EACH
150 Gold and Silver Watches	$15 to $100
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	12 00 to 35
200 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	8 to 15
2500 Vest and Guard Chains	3 00 to 10
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 to 10 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 to 10
3000 Cameo Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Coral Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Gents' Breast Pins	2 50 to 8 00
3000 Watch Keys	2 00 to 6 00
2500 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 6 00
2500 Sets of Roman Studs	2 00 to 6 00
2500 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 6 00
2500 Scarf Pins	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Lockets	2 50 to 6 00
10000 Sets of Ladies' Jewellery	5 00 to 10 00
5000 Gold Pens, Silver Mtnd Holders	3 00 to 6 00
5000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00

The articles in this stock of Jewelry are of the neatest and most fashionable styles. Certificates of all the various articles are put in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, thus giving all a fair chance, and sent by mail for 25 cents each; and on receipt of the Certificate, it is at your option to send ONE DOLLAR and take the article named in it, or not. Five Certificates, $1; eleven, $2; thirty, $5; sixty-five, $10; one hundred, $15; Certificate money to be enclosed with order. Correspondence promptly answered.

AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow them ten cents on every Certificate, provided their remittance amounts to $1, and more liberal inducements to those who buy largely. Send for Circular. Address

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

ANOTHER VOICE

FROM THE

POTOMAC!

Fathers and Mothers,

Sisters and Brothers,

HEAR THIS:

SOLDIERS, ATTENTION!

A Voice from the Potomac!

Read the following letter lately received by Prof. HOLLOWAY, No. 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.:

CAMP NEAR CULPEPER, Va. Nov. 23, 1863.

Thomas Holloway, Esq:

Dear Sir—Please send me some of your valuable Pills, for which you will find money enclosed. Soldiers who have used them say they are just the thing for us.

I have been in the service now over fifteen months and have had no sickness, except diarrhœa, and I want to have your medicine by me, in case of need.

Yours, with respect,

ANTHONY OGDEN,

Company D, 76th Michigan Regiment, 1st Brigade 1st Division, 3d Army Corps, Army of the Potomac

Let the reader go to the nearest Drug Store and purchase a box of

Holloway's Pills

OR

OINTMENT!

And send it to their relatives in the army.

Hasten! Delays are Dangerous!

To insure getting genuine, go to the Depot,

431-34 No. 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

J. W. Bartlett's Needle Factory, 242 Broadway, N. Y.—Burnished Needles for all the Machines.

Barnished Needles for HAND SEWING.
Crochet, Knitting, Darning, 340, Pack, Gill, Hackle Pins, &c.

Try sample: 150, any size, HAND NEEDLES for 25 cents by mail or otherwise.

Presents.—Sewing Machines for $5 that use the common Hand Needle.

Hand Sewing Needles for $1:
Hems, Tucks and Gathers the work for the operator.
Needle Threaders, 25 cents. Bartlett's Scissors 75 cts.
Silver Work and Toy Holders 10 cents per pair.
Silver Hemmers and Fluters sized to 12 cents.
At Bartlett's Needle Depot, 242 Broadway, N. Y.

A Pretty Present.

Send to your next-of-kin or most valued friend, the ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, for 1864. It would be highly prized, and costs only $1 50.

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

To Nervous Sufferers.

Nervous Sufferers of both sexes will receive a valuable Prescription for the cure of Nervous Debility, Premature Decay and all kindred diseases (free of charge), by sending their address, post paid, to

Respectfully, JOHN B. OGDEN,
431-60 60 Nassau street, New York.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS!

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 13 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

PURE FRENCH

WINES AND BRANDIES.

Paul De Cosnick, Monod & Guiraud,
BORDEAUX, FRANCE.

J. MARC MARTIN,
SOLE AGENT FOR THE UNITED STATES
No. 203 Pearl Street, N. Y.

WILLIAM TAYLOR'S

Ice Cream Saloon and Confectionery,

553 BROADWAY.

Ladies and Gentlemen will find this the most CENTRAL, QUIET AND QUIET place of refreshment in the city. All the DELICACIES AND SUBSTANTIALS of the market are served in a neat and inviting style, and at moderate prices.

ICE CREAM of the best quality served to families at 60 cents a quart.

ITALIAN ICE CREAM, a new and delicious article, served daily. 419-31

C. O. D.

Agents and Dealers, read the following list of our rapidly selling articles:

"Lincoln Smoking Pipe." The Union Fifter,
Vegetable Fever and Ague, Patent Milk Tester,
Patent Match Safe, Magic Tobacco Box.

40 smart, novel and useful inventions. Send Stamp for Circular. S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N.Y., 514 Chestnut St., Phila., Pa

Genuine American Lever Watch in 3 oz. Coin Silver, Heavy Hunting Case, Warranted for $15. They will retail for $25 each. Genuine Full Jewelled American Lever Watch, in 4 oz. Coin Silver, Heavy Hunting Case, Gold Plated, for $18. They will retail for $35. Any of the above Watches will be sent on receipt of price, or C. O. D., as the way will be promptly attended to. All orders from the army must be prepaid, as the express companies will not take bills for collections on Soldiers. (Circular sent free.)

C. L. BRIGGS, Importer,
(Drawer 111.) 227 Main St., Milwaukee, Wis.

10,000 Agents Wanted for the NEW PRIZE COMBINATION STATIONERY AND PENMAN'S PACKAGE. We present one of the best quality and sells to everybody. Circulars free. Address A. J. L. G. PIERPONT, 625 Broadway, New York, care of Miller's Post Office Box, 90. 420-32

Union Playing Cards!

National American Amusement Cards.

Colored for Kings, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. 52 enameled cards to the pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. Two packs mailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for circular. Address
AMERICAN CARD CO.,
000 435 Broadway, or 165 William St., N. Y.

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD!

20,000 Watches, Chains, &c.

WORTH $100,000!

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 20 cents for a Certificate which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list of articles and particulars, also terms to those who act as Agents.
Address C. F. SHULTZ,
431-33 No. 58 Beekman St., New York.

Swords, Sashes, Belts.

Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords, 431-56 B. RITTRIDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

Secret Art of Manufacturing the Celebrated Wenham Lake Apples or other fruit in 12 hours. Sent free for 15 cents and a stamp. Address 431-32 J. H. B., Bowley, Ms.

"The Circular of Wonders,"—Contains Secrets, Arts, &c. sent free for 19 cents. Address
W. F. HARRIS, St. Louis, Mo.

Lord Lyndhurst,

His Portrait, Character and Biography; Major-Gen. Banks; W. H. Wills, Esq., the model Teacher; Miss MARY LEE, Savage and Civilized, continued; BEVING TRUMBLE, by Bishop Potter, Rose, H. W. Beecher, E. H. Chapin, Dr. Tyng, Dr. Thompson, Revs. Lewis Silver, Burlingham, Hepworth, Alger and R. Thompson, in January Double Number PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, only 15 cents; or $1.50 a year. FOWLER & WELLS, N. Y.

$75 to $150 per Month.

THE LITTLE GIANT SEWING MACHINE COMPANY wants Agents in each County, to solicit orders for their new $15 Machine, with gauge, screwdriver and extra needles. We will pay a liberal salary and expenses, or give large commission. For particulars, terms, &c., address as stamp, and address
S. P. SAGE, Toledo, O.
427-32 General Agent for the United States.

THE BEST AND MOST APPROPRIATE PRESENTS FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Fac-simile of Gold Pen and Extension Case and Pencil, Manufactured by S. M. WARD & CO.

75,000 WATCHES, GOLD PENS AND PENCILS,

Vest, Guard and Neck Chains, Chatelaine Chains and Pins, Engraved Bracelets, Engraved Spring Lockets, Seal Stone Rings, California Rings, Chased Rings, Masonic Rings and Pins, Gents' California Diamond Pins, California Diamond Ear Drops, Beautiful Sets of Jewellery, New Style Studs and Buttons, etc., etc., etc.,

WORTH $400,000,

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for doing the business 25 cents each, which must be enclosed when the request is made to know what you can have. After knowing what you can have, if you do not wish to accept the dollar, take the article or not.

Five articles can be ordered for $1—eleven for $2—thirty for $5—sixty-five for $10—and one hundred for $18.

With the information of what you can have will be sent a Circular giving full instructions to Agents and a full Catalogue of articles, and then it will be at your option to send and get any article or not.

Also, for $1 I will send a solid Silver Shield or other Army Cuff Pin, with your Name, Regiment and Company handsomely engraved upon it, or a Roman Cross in Fine Gold Plate; and for 50 cents I will send a New Style Union League Pin in Fine Gold Plate. Address

Box 4670, N. Y. S. M. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway, New York.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Merchants, Bankers, Teachers and Others.

And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular to

J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce Street, N. Y.

WEDDING CARDS.

French Note Paper, Seals and Envelopes, Initial Paper, Ball Programmes, Dance Cards, Menu Cards, &c. Specialty. Price List Sent on Application. Samples Sent for Specimens by mail, send 25 cents.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face, without any injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of 26 cents.
R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

Billiard Balls!

Patent Compressed Ivory Billiard Balls, 2¼ in. and 2⅜ in. at $30 per set. Regulation, $35 per set; 1¼ in. Bagatelle, $6 per set; 15 in. Ball Pool, $30 per set. Manufactured and for sale by THOMAS M. M. WELLING, 202 Centre Street, New York, sign of the Golden Elephant.

A Beautiful, Useful and Perpetual Present. THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL AND LIFE ILLUSTRATED, for 1864, for the first part of each month, at $1.50 a year. This year's volume contained more than 300 engraved illustrations, and is one of the most entertaining works now published. Order it a year, for your sons, daughters and friend. Send regularly, to any address, by
FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and win the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple and harmless secret is sent by mail, with full directions, for 25 cents, together with a highly interesting package of both gold-fascinating, and great interest; Third edition; over 20,000 sold. Address Professor Y. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Marry whoever you wish to! How to woo and be sure to win!

Mail instructions in the "Secret Art of Magic Fascination." with Explanatory Charts, enabling any person of either sex to fascinate and win whom they may. Free from the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc., and to leave the skin in a fine condition, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 823 Broadway, Fourth Street, and 41 South-Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry Why every woman should be married. All may marry to their advantage. Just published, a book containing Secret Advice, by MADAME RESTELL. 100 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cents. Address 68 White Street, New York. 431-34

The Great Money-Making Article.

Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address
J. C. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.
000

1,000 AGENTS TO SELL THE MOST DESIRABLE, attractive and Splendid Set of Engravings ever offered. Agents Wanted Everywhere to good Men or Women to engage in the canvass. Address Christian family needs a copy.
Address for Circular or particulars,
J. BONNET & CO.,
31 Liberty Street, New York.

WANTED

Travelling Salesmen Wanted.
419-31 Apply to A. W. HARRIS, Jr., Philadelphia.

Singer & Co.'s Letter A Family Sewing Machine, with all the new improvements, Binder, Hemmer, Feller, Tucker Corder, Gatherer, &c. &c., is the cheapest, best, and most beautiful of all Machines for Family sewing and light manufacturing purposes. It makes the interlocking stitch (which is alike on both sides), and has great capacity for sewing ALL KINDS of cloth, and with ALL KINDS of thread. Even leather, as well as the finest muslin, can be sewed with perfection on this machine. It will use 250 spool cotton as well as No. 30 linen thread. We will teach any one to learn to work by seeing the machine tested.

Price, $50. Each machine is supplied with silk twist, thread, needles, oil, &c., of the very best quality.

Send for a copy of SINGER & CO.'S PAMPHLET.
000 I. M. SINGER & CO., 458 Broadway, N. Y.

DYSPEPSIA CAN BE CURED!

DYSPEPSIA, no matter how long standing, yields AT ONCE to "UPHAM'S DYSPEPSIA CURE." The effects of this Remedy are truly magical. Try it and be convinced. Price $1 a box. Sent, postpaid, to any address, by S. C. UPHAM, 211 South Fourth St., Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 431-4

A Scalping Dance,

Illustrated, exhibiting a group of Sioux Indians dressed in their new and hideous costumes. Egyptian Mummies, with engravings. How Preserved. Fashionable Mad Stone, Mummy Parenology. Perspiration Guide—Marriage in Russia—Explosive Gases—Music of Insanity—Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. Read it. Only 15 cents; or $1.50 a year.

PORTABLE PRINTING OFFICES!

For the use of Merchants, Druggists and Business generally. These Printing Offices are now extensively and profitably used throughout the States and Canadas, and are accounted indispensable by those who have given them a trial. The printing press is simple in construction, and the printing material is of the best manufacture. Full instructions for use accompany each office.

Press No. 1, 3x 4½,	$10—Office Complete,	$20
Press No. 2, 4x 6,	15—Office Complete,	30
Press No. 3, 9x11 in.,	25—Office Complete,	50
Press No. 4, 11x15 in.,	40—Office Complete,	75
Press No. 5, 13x19 in.,	50—Office Complete,	100

Circular sent free. Sheets of Type, Cuts, etc., 6 cents

ADAMS PRESS CO., 31 Park Row, N. Y.
And also for sale by CHASE & LEAVITT, 35 Lincoln St., Boston, Mass
419-31

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning and a caution to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, and the effects of early vice. The means of self-Cure. By one who has cured himself after being put through a regular course of medical imposition and quackery. Published as a purpose and philanthropic motive. Single Copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYPARD, Esq., Redford, Kings county, N. Y. 000½

DR. R. GOODALE'S CATARRH REMEDY.

It penetrates to the very seat of this terrible disease, and eradicates it in a speedy and harmless manner. For over, DR. GOODALE is the first and only person who ever made the Great Catarrh really cure—where it commenced—and what would cure it. Price $1. Send stamp for a "Treatise on Catarrh," 617 Broadway, N. Y. NORTON & CO., Sole Agents.

Travelling Salesmen Wanted.

$75 a month, expenses paid, or a commission on sales. Apply to ISAAC HALE, Jr., & CO.,
428-31 Newburyport, Mass.

$50 FOR $20.

SOLDIERS IN THE ARMY,

For $20 we will forward by mail or express, prepaid, the following: 1 Set Gents' Jewelry (Studs); 6 Vest Chains; 12 Gents' Scals and Seal Rings; 4 Gold Pens and Pencils; 6 Vest Buttons; 1 Fancy Watch Keys; 12 Bosom or Scarf Pins; 4 pair Sleeve Buttons; 1 Gold Thimble; 1 Case for Miniatures; 2 Double Glass Lockets; and 3 Cluster Stone Pins. Address
THOMAS CAFFERTY & CO.,
429-32 Providence, R. I.

$75 A MONTH—I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address
435-38 S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine

"Tip Top!"

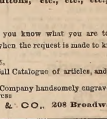
THE JANUARY PICTORIAL DOUBLE NUMBER, PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, is the best ever issued. It has 40 Portraits and other Engravings, including Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER, Eccentric, and many Beautiful Women. Only 15 cents; or $1.50 a year. Now is the time.

IVORY SLEEVE BUTTONS OR STUDS,

RED, WHITE OR BLACK, with initials, for Ladies and Gentlemen, 75 cents per Pair. Also Pearl, 12½ per set each; sent on receipt of the price.

For sale by WM. M. WELLING, manufacturer of Ivory Goods, 202 Centre Street, N. Y., sign of the Golden Elephant. 0000

"Rarey's Process of Horse Taming."—The whole Secret. Sent, postpaid, for 30 cents. Address HARLEY, JR., care Box 38, Hulsey, Pa. Agents send for a copy. 429-31



The Early Physical Degeneracy of AMERICAN PEOPLE,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, pass under review in the Lecture, Physiology of the True Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on these subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes for Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

Full and to the end two red stamps on obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the True Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 46 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 430-52

HUBBARD BROS. IMPORTERS OF WATCHES

SPLENDID HOLIDAY PRESENTS!

"Particularly valuable for officers in the army and travellers."—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 21.

"Prettiest, best and cheapest the Jewelers ever offered."—Boston Illustrated News, Jan. 10.

"Splendidly finished Patent Watches, the beauty of which is only equalled by their cheapness."—N. Y. Weekly, July 23.

MAGIC TIME OBSERVERS!

THE PERFECTION OF MECHANISM!

BEING A HUNTING OR OPEN FACE OR LADIE'S OR GENTLEMAN'S WATCH COMBINED WITH PATENT SELF-WINDING IMPROVEMENT.

A MOST PLEASING NOVELTY.

One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for general and private use ever offered. It has within it, and connected with its machinery, its own winding attachment, thus rendering it self-winding. The cases of these Watches are composed of pure sterling silver, and the Watch when gold, it has the improved non-tarnishing bezel, and the back and centre of rich engraved, per case of half dozen, $36. Sample Watches, in most approved style, $6. By mail the postage is 30 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!

FIRST-CLASS HUNTING TIMEPIECE

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES MUST INSURE

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of two metals, the outer case of fine quality Sterling silver, while the inner one is German Silver, it cannot be recognized by nothing of base quality, nothing it not only in appearance, but in durability, the best resemblance of SOLID STERLING SILVER in existence.

The aim of these Watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $25 and upwards. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single pay-day by any one of ordinary business tact.

AT A WHOLESALE ONLY! In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, with gilt dials, and fancy cut hands, to good running order, by the half-dozen, $60; postage, $2 30; registering, 20 cents. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

SET-TERMS, CASH IN ADVANCE! No Agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. If money is sent us by express or mail to register letter, it is at our risk. Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., IMPORTERS,
428 169 Broadway and 2 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

Love, Courtship and Marriage.

All born to love and to be loved. Mistakes, Unhappy Marriages, The Remedy, Love—signs, in the face. Secret of Beauty. A Woman's Experience. Falling in Love. To Improve the Complexion—with numerous Illustrative Portraits—in Jan. Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. The first of a new volume. Only 15 cents; or $1.50 a year.

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

"Moustaches and Whiskers in 42 Days." Dont be humbugged with ONGUENTS. The Great Secret fully explained in the BOOK OF WONDERS, 132 800 sized pp. 12mo. Only 30 cts.; 8 for $1.

Address C. E. HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

Royal Havana Lottery.

30 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y

$35. WATCHES. $35.

Genuine Full-Jewelled American Lever Watches, in 4 Ounce Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Gold Joints, for $35.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be prepaid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

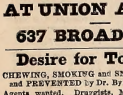
C. F. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
o 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Watches Given to All our Agents!
A GREAT CHANGE.

READER, do not pass another moment until you send for our NEW PRIZE STATIONERY PACKAGE Circular, whether you want it or not. It contains important information for everybody. Great inducement offered to Agents.
6000 WEIR & CO., 34 South-Third St., Phila.

FINE DRESS SHIRTS TO ORDER.



UNRIVALLED In MANUFACTURE,

Fitting and Material, AT UNION ADAMS, 637 BROADWAY.

Desire to Tobacco!

CHEWING, SMOKING and SNUFFING CURED and PREVENTED by Dr. Byrd's ANTIDOTE. Agents wanted. Druggists, Merchants, Pedlars, P. M.'s and Soldiers send for Circulars. Sample package sent to any address, postpaid, on receipt of 50 cents by CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.
422-380

SKATES FOR THE MILLION!
"THE LATEST KINK."

WOODHAM'S
SELF-CLEANING
SKATE FASTENING

Can be attached to any Skate. Skates of all approved kinds, Wholesale or Retail.
ALFRED WOODHAM, SPORTSMEN'S DEPOT, 637 BROADWAY.
o Between Canal and Howard Sts., N. Y.

IF YOU WANT TO KNOW
Men and Women inside and out, what the sexes are made of, and how drawn together; the causes of disease and of matrimonial and social wretchedness, read revised and enlarged edition of
"MEDICAL COMMON SENSE,"
A curious book for curious people, and a good book for every one. Contents tables mailed free to every applicant. Address 429-310 DR. E. S. FOOTE, 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

Soldier's Gift!
A PRESENT
FOR HIS FRIENDS AT HOME.
PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
Manufactured by William W. Harding,
No. 326 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

The following beautiful styles sent by mail on receipt of prices annexed:

	BY MAIL
Photo. Albums, Morocco, 12 Portraits, $1 00;	$ 1 75
Photo. Albums, Morocco, 20 Portraits, $1 75;	2 00
Photo. Albums, Morocco, 30 Portraits, $2 25;	3 00
Photo. Albums, Morocco, 40 Portraits, $2 50;	3 50
Photo. Albums, Turkey, gilt, 40 Port., $3 25;	4 50
Photo. Albums, Turkey, Ant., 80 Port., $3 50;	4 50
Photo. Albums, Turkey, gilt, 80 Port., $4 00;	5 00
Photo. Albums, Gilt, 80 Port., $5 00;	6 50
Photo. Albums, Beautiful, 80 Port., $6 00;	8 00
Photo. Albums, Mus. Oblong, Port., $5 50;	7 50
Photo. Albums, Alb Sid., 60 Port., $7 50;	9 00

Photograph Albums, magnificently ornamented, 100 Portraits, $9 50; mail, $12 00.

Albums sent 100 miles, on Express routes, at the prices in first column, Free; at a greater distance, 25 cents for each additional 100 miles.
WILLIAM W. HARDING, MANUFACTURER,
430-310 No. 326 Chesnut Street, Phila., Pa.

Shuits' Organet.—Warranted to produce a full set of WHISKERS in six weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 30 cents. Address C. J. SHULTS Troy, N. Y.

To Consumptives!

The Advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, etc. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he considers to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address
REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
6000 Williamsburg, Kings Co., N. Y.

ARMS AND LEGS!

Selpho's Patent (established 24 years).
These celebrated Substitutes for lost limbs can be had only of
o WM. SELPHO & SON, 661 Broadway, N. Y.

A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts.,
MAGNIFYING 500 times, mailed on receipt of 30 cents. Five of different powers, $1. Address F. L. BOWER, Box 220, Boston, Mass. o

ELECTION HUMOR.

FIRST JUVENILE POLITICIAN—"Born to school, Walter?"
SECOND DITTO—"I should think not; I never go to school on an election day!"

$15 Per Day Easy $15

AND A WATCH FREE!

100,000 men and women wanted to act as Agents in every Town, village and Camp, to sell our unsurpassed popular, unexcelled and saleable EXTRA LARGE SIZE FELICE PACKAGES, containing huge quantities of STATIONERY, RECIPES, YANKEE NOTIONS, etc. Sells WONDERFULLY. Largest, Best and Cheapest ever manufactured. Each Package contains fine Writing Materials, such as Paper, Envelopes, Pens, Pencils, Blotters, Emblems, Ladies' Paris Fashion Plates, Designs for Needlework, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Companions, Camp Companions (for Soldiers), Parlor Amusements, Guide for Letter Writers, Many Ways to Get Rich, Likenesses of Generals, Gents' Pocket Calendar for the Year, Union Designs, YANKEE NOTIONS of all kinds, Recipes, Games, Army Laws and Advice, Rich and Costly Presents of Fashionable Jewellery, etc., etc., etc., the whole worth MANY DOLLARS if bought separately. Price each Package ONLY 25 cents retail. Wholesale rates to Agents very low. 100 to 200 PER CENT. PROFIT ALLOWED. Packages of all descriptions put up for Sutlers, Pedlars, Wholesale Dealers, etc. GOODS sent TO ALL PARTS OF THE ARMY SAFE. All Soldiers are allowed to Receive and Sell our Goods. A Splendid "Solid Silver Watch," English Movements, and Correct Timepiece, presented "Free" to all who act as Agents. Send for our New Circulars with Extra Premium Inducements, free.

S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., New York, the Great Original, Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World. Beware of impostors of similar names. o

Prepare for the Holidays!

Booksellers, Fancy Goods Dealers, and the Public, will please remember that there is no other Gift which compares with the CRAIG MICROSCOPE and MOUNTED OBJECTS, being an endless source of amusement and instruction. Over 200 Rare Microscopic and 700 dozen objects have been sold within a year from the Boston Agent alone. This Microscope, in brass, is mailed, postage paid, for $2 25; or with six beautiful mounted objects for $3; or with 24 objects for $5. In bare wood for 50 cents, in addition to the above prices. A liberal discount to the trade.
6000 HENRY CRAIG, 335 Broadway, N. Y.

"The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in the World. Send 25 cts. for a "Turn-over" and Paper of a Choker," to Box 5173, and receive it by return mail.
AMERICAN ENAMELLED METALLIC COLLAR CO., 94 Pine Street, N. Y.

250 Rare Receipts!

TELLS WHAT TO DO AND HOW TO DO IT! The Book, with 250 Receipts, sent by mail for 25 cts. HUTCHINSON & CO., Publishers,
422-310 401 Broadway, N. Y.

FRENCH FLANNEL ARMY SHIRTS

Dress Shirts
TO MEASURE.
SIX SHIRTS
$12, $15 & $18.

Dress Shirts,
TO ORDER,
are made a Perfect Fit, Superior Work, and Unrivalled in Quality for the Price.

An extensive assortment of semi-Imported SCARFS, TIES, SUSPENDERS, GLOVES and HDKFS CHIEFS.

JAMES FARRISH, 323 Canal Street, New York.
420

A Secret Worth Knowing.—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER without apples or other fruit, in 24 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
F. B. BOWER, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

The Soldier's Gift

TO THE LOVED ONE AT HOME

We will deliver free of freight charges at any Express office east of St. Joseph, Mo., any of our beautiful Albums of the value of $5 or more that may be ordered by members of the Army or Navy of the United States as presents to their friends at home. We manufacture elegant styles at all prices to $25 and higher.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,
Manufacturers and Importers,
423-290 501 Broadway, N. Y.

Tea Board &c.

If 18, and your Board, Moustache, &c., is of scanty, retarded growth, the use for a short time of the Tennessee Swamp Shrub Balsam will stimulate them to a very fine and vigorous growth. Has been thoroughly tried and found infallible. A small sample box and an account of the discovery of this remarkable Balsam at Shiloh, April, 1862, will be sent sealed, on receipt of return postage. Address John Rawlins, 707 Broadway, New York. o

MUNN & COMPANY,
Solicitors of American & Foreign Patents,
AND PUBLISHERS OF THE ILLUSTRATED SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, N. 37 Park Row, New York.
Pamphlets of information about patents FREE.
Specimen copies of the paper FREE. 420-330

COLD FEET!
USE THE ELECTRO METALLIC INSOLES.
They keep the feet warm in the coldest weather.
MIXTAM & CO., Proprietors,
421-340 No. 4 Astor House, New York.

Price $1; prepaid, by mail, $1 30. Send for Circular.

$1 for 25 Cents.—$1's worth of Rare and Valuable Secrets sent free to any one for 25 cents.
451-30 Address J. H. B., Hawley, Pa.

STAMMERING

And Stuttering Permanently Cured by Bates's Patent Scientific Appliances. For (new edition of) Pamphlets and Drawings describing the same, address o H. C. L. BEARS, 377 West 23d St., N. Y.

GROVER & BAKER'S
Celebrated Sewing Machines
Were awarded the Highest Premiums at 44 State and County Fairs in 1863.
o SALESROOMS, 495 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Disease of the Eye and Deafness,

In whatever form it may exist, continue (as for 20 years past) to receive the special attention of Dr. CALDWELL, OCULIST and AURIST, 34 Clinton Place (Eighth street), near Broadway.

All operations performed in a skilful and scientific manner.

Parties receiving no benefit by Dr. C.'s operations or treatment will not be charged. Unquestionable city references always at hand. o

$7. WATCHES. $7

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED
Gold-Plated Watch,
LEVER CAP,
[Small size, ENGLISH MOVEMENTS,
PERFECT TIMEKEEPER.
Sent free by mail, in neat case, for only $7.

A SOLID SILVER
Same size above, $7.
Specially adapted to the army.
CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., 38 & 40 Ann St., N. Y.

ROMAN SCARFS SENT BY MAIL EVERYWHERE

3,000 DOZ. PURE ROMAN SCARFS,

Made from the Purest and Softest Silk.
These are the most fashionable, elegant and economical Scarfs ever imported, as they are reversible; one Scarf is as good as two.
They are much worn in Europe by both ladies'and gentlemen. Can be worn with either pin or ring.
The whole lot will be retailed at
WHOLESALE PRICES!
$1 50 and $2 EACH.
A single Scarf sent by mail on receipt of the above amount and six cents for postage.
Very fine Gold Plated Scarf Rings or Pins
A $1 50 each.
S. W. H. WARD, 387 Broadway, N. Y.

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELED WHITE,
Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last twelve years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute's time.
To military men and Travellers they are invaluable.
Price $1 each, sent by mail to any part of the Union on the receipt of $1 13.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.
S. W. H. WARD, Sole Agent for U. S.,
o 387 Broadway, N. Y.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVER SHIRTS.

The largest assortment in New York, $2 75, $3, $3 75 each; all of one yard long.
A single shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cost. The size of collar required to be inclosed—36 cents for each Shirt.
And the size of your neck.

English Merino Undershirts and Drawers,
$1 25 and $1 50 each.
Scotch Lambswool Undershirts and Drawers,
ALSO,
FINE WHITE SHIRTS
MADE TO MEASURE AT $24, $30, $36 and $42.
PER DOZEN.

SELF-MEASUREMENT FOR SHIRTS.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.
Orders can be paid to express company on receipt of goods.

S. W. H. WARD,
No. 387 Broadway, New York.

A GOLD OR SILVER WATCH
AND GOLD CHAIN

Presented free to all who act as Agents for our splendid Stationery Packets, containing fine writing materials, such as Paper, Envelopes, Rich Jewellery, Novelties for the Holidays, etc., retail for only 25 cents, worth five times as much. These Packets contain more Stationery, and of a better quality, than any others ever put up. The demand for them is great, sales rapid, and the profits immense; and in addition receive, as a present from us, a Splendid Gold or Solid Silver Watch, warranted perfect timekeepers. Please call or send for our New Circular.

G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
30 Beekman Street, N. Y.

Friends, send a Stamp for my Circulars.
431-20 Address L. M. HARRIS, Boston, Mass.

BALLOU'S
Patented
French Yoke
SHIRTS,
Warranted to FIT, WEAR and WASH
CHEAPER
for the same quality than any other Shirt House in this city.
Circular containing drawings and prices sent free.

F.Y.S.

For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.
BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, New York.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Secret causes, in both Sexes—new and reliable treatment in Report of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South-Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. o

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED

NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1863, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 432—Vol. XVII.] NEW YORK, JANUARY 9, 1864. [Price 8 Cents

THE PRIDE OF THE VILLAGE, BY GRAY.

Our readers must appreciate the engraving on this page of Gray's "Pride of the Village," one of the almost countless illustrations of "Irving's Sketch Book." The painting will be remembered by those who visited the last exhibition of the National Academy of Design, of which Mr. Gray is the honored Vice-President. He is a native of New York, born June 23, 1819, and a pupil of Huntington. After twice residing for considerable periods in Europe, he established himself in his native city. Of his numerous paintings the most highly appreciated are his "Pride of the Village," which we have engraved, "The Roman Girl," "Teaching a Child to Pray," "Cupid begging his Arrows," "Wages of War."

The touching scene depicted by his pencil is thus described by Irving: "Her poor parents hung in mute anxiety over this fading blossom of their hopes, still flattering themselves that it might again revive to freshness, and that the bright unearthly bloom which sometimes flushed her cheek might be the promise of returning health. In this way she was seated between them one Sunday afternoon; her hands were clasped in theirs, the lattice was thrown open, and the soft air that stole in brought with it the fragrance of the clustering honeysuckle which her own hands had trained round the window. Her father had just been reading a chapter in the Bible; it spoke of the vanity of worldly things, and of the joys of heaven: it seemed to have diffused comfort and serenity through her bosom. Her eye was fixed on the distant village church, the bell had tolled for the evening service, the last villager was lagging into the porch, and everything had sunk into that hallowed stillness peculiar to the day of rest. Her parents were gazing upon her with yearning hearts. Sickness and sorrow, which pass so roughly over some faces, had given to hers the expression of a seraph's. A tear trembled in her soft blue eye. Was she thinking of her faithless lover? or were her thoughts wandering to that distant churchyard, into whose bosom she might soon be gathered? Suddenly the clang of hoofs was heard—a horseman galloped to the cottage, he dismounted before the window—the poor girl gave a faint exclamation and sank back in her chair—it was her expectant lover! He rushed into the house and flew to clasp her to his bosom; but her wasted form, her deathlike countenance, so wan, yet so lovely in its desolation, smote him to the soul, and he threw himself in agony at her feet. She was too faint to raise—at the attempt to extend her trembling hand—her lips moved as if she spoke, but no word was articulated—she looked down upon him with a smile of unutterable tenderness, and closed her eyes for ever."

The American artist has, like all his brethren whose genius have been employed in illustrating the great work of Irving given the highest effort of his genius and art. The painting is one of touching and quiet beauty. The dying girl, the heartbroken parents, cheerless, yet cheering, are portrayed with all the hand of a master, and the maiden sinking to the embrace of death is surrounded with an almost ethereal beauty, as she gazes through the window on the quiet churchyard where she is so soon to rest. The read along which the repentant lover is hastening tells its tale of him, who, in the thoughtlessness of gay frivolity and want of principle, crushed to the earth by the bare suggestion of dishonor the "Pride of the Village."

Irving has been most happy in having been so great a favorite with the children of art. The Artists' Edition of his Sketch Book is a marvel of genius and talent, but it does not contain all or nearly all the works called forth by its pages, nor have they all devoted themselves to this alone. His Knickerbocker, Columbus, Bracebridge Hall have been the source of many a canvas that will be wildly competed for a century hence as works of the old American masters.

AN INCIDENT OF THE CREEK WAR.

The romance of that war of 1813–14, which spread through Georgia, Florida and Alabama, and brought forth the genius of Jackson, is still unwritten. Though the red-skinned warriors that sprang to arms under the incitement of Tecumseh, and afterwards of Weatherford, the Red Eagle of the Muscogees, were even then considered as partially civilized, yet when once adorned with the war paint they lost all memory but that of their aboriginal extraction, and denied as well as refused to receive mercy. Many were the incidents that have gone unrecorded, incidents that would have graced the pages of any novel, or told with thrilling effect by the winter's fireside; while again a few have come down in local legend to this day, and are told in the cabins on the Chattanooga, the Chickamauga and the Coosa rivers, with as much minuteness of detail as though occurrence of yesterday. Of these the story of Kaliya and Tholuca appeals deeply to the sympathy.

Kaliya was a young chief of the Muscogees; lithe and handsome, always foremost in every point of danger, fearless in exposing his person, subtle on the trail, and wise in council, he bade fair to be one, if not the first of his tribe. In one of the hundred skirmishes of the war, by an act of great valor he saved the life of the old chief Yargen, and by this act first met Tholuca, his daughter. To see Tholuca was to love her, and Kaliya from the first moment of their meeting gave way to the most ardent passion, a passion that was returned by Tholuca with all the reality of her nature. They were to be married during the first moon of autumn, and that time was only a few weeks distant.

One day there came to the village rumors summoning all the warriors to the war path, and Kaliya was first to respond. A band of pale faces were ravaging upon the banks of the Coosa, and like eagles disturbed from their nests, the Muscogees swept down upon them once, twice, thrice, and were as often beaten back with fearful slaughter. The white men pressed heavily upon them until the red warriors were driven almost upon their villages. At this moment, through sheer desperation, the Muscogees rallied, and turned the battle somewhat in their favor. Kaliya had become separated from his band, and was creeping stealthily through a piece of woods to join them, when suddenly he came face to face with one whom he knew in an instant as a prominent leader of the whites. They stood but a few feet apart for a moment, and then as though with a mutual thought, and with a shout of defiance they sprang together, and clenched with a fierce and deadly grasp. The white man was of gigantic stature, handsome face, and richly clothed in the half-soldier, half Indian costume of the better class of traders and volunteers of the border. His sinewy arm wound itself around the body of Kaliya like the folds of the anaconda, but in the young chief he had fully met his match, both in strength and dexterity. A few struggles they made, heaving backward and forward, for there was no use for the use of weapons, not even to draw knives, and then both fell, Kaliya uppermost, with his hand upon the white man's throat. Another minute and the struggle would have been over, the Muscogee the victor, when at the instant Tholuca came flying through the wood from the direction of the village. The flying savages had brought intelligence to the village of their defeats, and

THE PRIDE OF THE VILLAGE.—FROM THE ORIGINAL PAINTING BY HENRY F. GRAY, VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF DESIGN.

Tholuca could tear no longer the agony of suspense, but was determined to seek her warrior lover, whether he might be among the dead or flying. She found him with his enemy almost in the throes of death, and with womanly terror and compassion she was tempted to plead for his life.

Spare the pale face, Kalaya, and let him return to his people, that he may teach them how much more merciful is the Muscogee than the white man."

The hand of Kalaya relaxed upon the white man's throat, for the respect of Tholuca was law, and he arose panting to his feet, and muttered some indistinct words of thanks to the maiden who had given him his life.

But he had seen Tholuca, and her wondrous beauty struck at once all other feeling from his breast but a desire to possess her. He recalled, gradually, with a suddenly born delirium of passion upon the beautiful girl who had saved his life, and was only awakened by the quick command of Kalaya to depart. Then, with the rapidity of thought, he seized from his belt a pistol and fired upon the warrior, sending a bullet through his heart, and while scarcely giving time for the death struggle to cease threw himself before the motionless and horror stricken Tholuca, and declared his love, promising her, if she would go with him, protection and wealth.

While he was pouring out his wild, threatening prayer she stood like some statue, gazing upon the monster who had so recklessly and falsely shot out all the world from her, and then, as though resigned, said:

"The Muscogee is your slave. You have won her fondly and treacherously, but the white man knows no justice or honor. I am the spoil that is given into your hands. You have saved my love! Before I can give it, bury from my sight the body of him whom you have killed!"

She stooped and kissed the dead lips of Kalaya, and then stood again like the white man, with her bow and hunting-knife, dug the grave of the Muscogee warrior, and laid therein the corpse. Then Tholuca advanced to the grave, and giving a quick look at the dead lover, suddenly seized the hunting-knife from the white man's hand, and before he could move to prevent her had buried the long blade into her bosom, and fell forward into the grave upon the body of Kalaya, dead.

Every Lady should have it.
—Montreal Transcript.

EVERY LADY SHOULD HAVE IT.—Montreal Transcript.

EVERY LADY SHOULD HAVE IT.—Montreal Transcript.

EVERY LADY SHOULD HAVE IT.—Montreal Transcript.

EVERY LADY SHOULD HAVE IT.—Montreal Transcript.

EVERY LADY SHOULD HAVE IT.—Montreal Transcript.

EVERY LADY SHOULD HAVE IT.—Montreal Transcript.

EVERY LADY SHOULD HAVE IT.—Montreal Transcript.

EVERY LADY SHOULD HAVE IT.—Montreal Transcript.

REASONS WHY:
REASONS WHY:
REASONS WHY:
REASONS WHY:
REASONS WHY:
REASONS WHY:
REASONS WHY:
REASONS WHY:
REASONS WHY:
REASONS WHY:

1st.—Because it is the earliest chronicler of the latest Parisian Fashions.

2d.—Because it has established Agents in Paris, London and Berlin, who forward by every Steamer the latest novelties, in advance of their publication in those cities, exclusively for this Magazine.

3d.—Because, having the Largest Engraving Establishment in this country, the Publisher possesses unequalled facilities for rapidly reproducing Fashion Plates for this Magazine.

4th.—Because the Colored Steel Fashion Plate is double the size of the largest plate published in any other Magazine. It consequently contains twice the number of Models for Dresses.

5th.—Because it contains a full-sized Out Paper Pattern of one new garment for Lady's use, imported expressly for this Magazine.

6th.—Because it also contains a Mammoth Four Page Engraving of the latest Modes—the largest Fashion Plate ever published in any Magazine!

7th.—Because, in addition to the Fashions, a large space is devoted to choice Literary Matter, including Illustrated Tales, Biographies, etc.

8th.—Because One Hundred Dollars expended in procuring Foreign Fashion Books would give less available information than can be had in Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine for $3 per annum.

9th.—Because each number contains over 100 Engravings of the latest style for Morning, Walking, Dinner and Evening Costume for Ladies and Children.

The Attention of the Ladies is invited to the Opinions of the Press.

No lady can expect to be considered au fait in matters pertaining to the fashions can well afford to dispense with Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine. It is very cheap at $3 per annum.—Lyons Republican.

It is brilliant in its wealth of fashion plates. It has nearly 50 full length female figures in the various varieties of costume, besides many other illustrations of the different articles of attire.—Roxbury Journal.

We have no hesitation in saying that it is superior, in every respect, to any similar publication in this country.—Poultnic Jackieman.

As a lady's guide in the material and style of her dress it has no equal. It is a welcome to every household.—Lane Register.

The publication is unsurpassed.—Newport News.

The literary department is well filled with stories.—Delaware Gazette

It is one of those bewitching publications that everybody, especially the ladies, want to get.—Methodist Union.

Superb, entertaining and just the magazine for the ladies.—Scranton Times.

It is without doubt, the best and most reliable fashion guide published.—Belvidere Intelligencer.

Fully sustains its reputation as one of the very best magazines in the world.—South Pier Democrat.

In its literary department we have always found, and the department devoted to information of the ladies is conducted in a manner that is more extended than in any like work.—Oyit County Reporter.

Aside from the magazine, the patterns furnished are well worth the cost of subscription.—Fulton Republican.

The unequalled manner in which Frank Leslie illustrates and explains the fashions renders his monthly the most desirable magazine in that particular of any in circulation.—Trenton Gazette.

Every lady should have it.—Montreal Transcript.

The most complete and desirable lady's magazine published in this country.—Stamford Times.

Such profuse and brilliant illustrations of the fashions, and so clear and practical a description of them as Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine for month, to the seemingly increasing delight of devoted readers, is to be found in no other lady's magazine.—Preston Gazette.

To be appreciated it must be seen and examined.—Plymouth Republican.

The literary department is of decided merit.—Roxbury Journal.

Every lady in the land ought to have it.—Staunton Times, Va.

Its pages are replete with interesting and valuable reading matter, and the magazine is fairly crowded with illustrations of the fashions.—Burlington Journal.

It is, emphatically, the magazine for the ladies.—Wilmington Journal.

The proprietor seems determined to make it indispensable to every lady who is desirous of keeping posted in regard to the latest fashions.—Plymouth Republican.

It is the most elegant magazine published in the United States.—Rhinebeck Gazette and Citizen.

The reading matter is of the most unexceptionable character.—Pennsylvania Argus.

The fashion plates and engravings exceed those of all other periodicals, which is generally admitted by the ladies.—Dunkirk Journal.

The literary matter is well selected and elegantly illustrated with fine wood engravings. It surpasses any other magazine.—Highland News.

One of the most attractive magazines published.—Brockport Republic.

No other magazine can compete in the lateness or completeness of its fashion department.—Camden Journal.

The best lady's magazine of the day is Frank Leslie's.—True Republican and Sentinel.

This splendid work has taken rank far in advance of competitors, and we advise the ladies by all means to subscribe for this magazine. If superiority is an object with them.—Erie Dispatch.

The leading lady's book of the country.—Western Chronicle.

We have no hesitation in pronouncing it the best magazine for ladies that is published in this country.—Hudson Argus.

It stands foremost amongst the magazines of its kind.—Shirleysburg Herald.

It is the leading magazine of the United States, containing every month a monster four-page fashion plate, besides many other illustrations of the latest styles.—Rockville Journal.

The reading matter is always attractive and instructive, and being a complete gazette of fashion, is made sought after and studied by the fair sex generally on the first coming.—Pontiac Courier.

How so much can be afforded for 25 cents is a mystery.—Brockport Republican.

As we have repeatedly said before, we know of no similar work which we would prefer for the family circle to this.—Daily Wisconsin.

It is indeed a valuable publication.—Owen County Journal.

The ladies all admire this mammoth work on fashions, and declare that they would not do so, as it is a perfect gem.—Kendallville Standard.

No lady can be guilty of the crime of wearing unfashionable clothes if she subscribes $3 per year for this magazine.—Smyrna Times.

This is decidedly the most complete gazette of fashion now published.—Fulton Republican.

Completely overshadows all other magazines of fashion.—Portland Transcript.

The fashion plates are the largest and most elaborate we have yet seen published in a monthly.—Ottawa Republican.

The fashion plates are superb and faultless.—Paterson Guardian.

It is certainly unequalled by any periodical of its kind published in this country.—Highland News.

Every lady of taste should take this magazine.—Westchester Gazette.

How any family can get along without it surpasses our comprehension.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

As a work of fashion this magazine stands foremost.—Montpelier State Journal.

It surpasses any journal we have ever seen.—Rock Island Union.

By far the best magazine now published for ladies in the world.—New Era.

A magnificent work of art, and will be the admiration of numerous ladies who have the good sense to take it.—Pontiac Jacksonian.

Is full of elegant fashion plates, spirited engravings and illustrations.—Genesee Republican.

It will be hard to equal it as a gazette of fashion and literary ingenuity.—Delaware State Journal.

No work of the kind equals it.—Smyrna Times.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine just comes up to our idea of what a first-class lady's magazine ought to be. We advise every lady who desires to be in the fashion to purchase it.—New World.

This magazine stands a head and shoulders above all others of the same description.—Corydon Democrat.

Nothing equal to it has ever before been published in this country.—Fort Dodge Republican.

Every lady who wishes to keep up with the time should subscribe for Leslie's Lady's Magazine.—Barrington Dollar News.

Excelling everything in that line ever before produced.—Fieldsboro Journal.

The paper pattern alone is worth the price of the book.—Delaware State Journal.

The literary department is of a high character.—Roxbury Journal.

It is full of excellent and choice reading matter.—Bruington Sentinel, Vt.

In addition to other attractions, the current number contains a large paper pattern of a Spanish jacket, with directions for making the same, which is alone worth the price of the number.—Three Rivers Western Chronicle.

It abounds in plates of the latest fashions, done up in excellent style.—Portland Transcript.

This monthly is got up at great expense.—Vermont Phenix.

There is no magazine of the kind more entertaining than this.—Bridgeton Chronicle.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine

Can be ordered of any Bookseller or Newsdealer in the United States and Canada, or subscriptions can be remitted to us direct. Monthly, 25 cents, or $3 per year; or one copy of Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine and Illustrated Newspaper, one year, $6.

FRANK LESLIE,
72 Duane street, N. Y.

NOTE.—To every subscriber sending us $6, we will send the Lady's Magazine for one year, and either of the following works:

Eleanor's Victory, by Miss Braddon.
Lady Audley's Secret, " "
Aurora Floyd, " "
The Half-Sisters, and other Tales.
Living and Dead, and other Tales.
The Lady of Pearls.
Frank Leslie's Illustrated Almanac for 1864.
Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Almanac for 1864.

LADIES' FASHIONS,
From Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine for January.

We give this week a specimen of the mammoth fashion plate which appears in each number of FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE, in addition to a double large colored fashion plate, containing eight figures (twice the number of figures published in any other colored fashioned plate), besides numerous fine engravings of every article of ladies and children's wearing apparel, to the extent of over one hundred, and a paper pattern of some novel and useful article of dress.

Our space is too limited to admit of our giving other than a brief description of the dresses on the mammoth engraving, but full directions for making them will be found in the January number (just published) of FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE.

Figure 1—Blue silk dress, trimmed with bands of black silk and narrow black lace; bonnet of white velvet.

Fig. 2—Jacket and skirt of silver poplin, trimmed with silk fringe and narrow black guipure.

Fig. 3—Dress of cuir-au-lait alpaca, with black stripes, ornamented with black lace quilles, forming a point on each end, and a rosette at the other.

Fig. 4—Evening toilet for opera or theatre.

Fig. 5—Little girl's dress, from FRANK LESLIE'S MAGAZINE.

Fig. 6—Vesuve silk dress, trimmed with lace and bands of black silk.

Fig. 7—Dress of plaid silk; Veleda paletot; bonnet of black velvet.

Fig. 8—Dress of gray Bowered Merino satique; Garibaldi paletot.

Fig. 9—Dress of Empress blue silk, braided.

Fig. 10—Dress and paletot of Mexican blue poplin.

Fig. 11—Dress of Stuart-tartan silk, trimmed with chenille fringe.

Fig. 12—Dress of Italian silk sage green, trimmed with black velvet.

Fig. 13—Dress of mauve silk.

Fig. 14—Evening dress of white Paris muslin, trimmed with black velvet.

Fig. 15—Dress of Empress green silk.

Fig. 16—Dress for little girl of rose-colored foulard.

Fig. 17—Dress of flowered silk.

Fig. 18—Dress of Empress, ornamented with tasseled button and bands of chenille.

Fig. 19—Dress of colored silk dress, trimmed with guipure lace; blue velvet sash.

Fig. 20—Dress of purple silk, trimmed with velvet and black lace.

Fig. 21—Gabriel robe of dark amber silk.

Fig. 22—Dress of lilac silk, trimmed with broad bands of black velvet.

Fig. 23—Skirt of straw-colored mohair; jacket of Mexican blue velvet.

Fig. 24—Evening dress of white tulle, with black lace flounce.

Fig. 25—White silk dress, ornamented with rosette of black lace and pink ribbon.

Fig. 26—Dress of merino satique, trimmed with blue silk, with narrow guipure lace.

Fig. 27—Dress of mauve satin, trimmed with chenille fringe.

Independent of the fashion department, the literary and artistic merit of the MAGAZINE is of the highest order. It contains choice stories of a high character, suited for family reading, thus any other, and those are beautifully illustrated by talented artists.

As a useful and entertaining family magazine it stands unrivalled, as will be seen by reference to the opinions of the press on this page.

Now is the time to subscribe, as the volume commences with the January number, just issued. Specimen copies will be sent postpaid on receipt of 25 cents. Address FRANK LESLIE, 72 Duane street, New York.

Barnum's American Museum.

MONSIEUR JOSEPH, THE GREAT FRENCH GIANT, 8 feet 4 inches; ANNA SWAN, the GIANT GIRL, 8 feet 1 inch; GIANT BOY, 8 feet; LILLIPUTIAN KING, 31 years old, only 22 inches high; Automaton Musical Troupe, MOVING MAY QUEEN, DOUBLE-HEADED CALF, &c. Tom Taylor's great drama, the TICKET-OF-LEAVE MAN, every afternoon and evening. ADMISSION to all, only 25 cents; Children under 10, 15 cents.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 9, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 72 Duane Street, between Broadway and Elm, New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, also FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR OF 1861, by GEORGE B. BEMIS & CO., Proprietors of the London American, 100 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER:

One copy one year.....$4 50
Two copies, " ".....8 00
Four " ".....9 00
Magazine and Paper one year.....8 00

Notice to Advertisers.

The value of our paper as an advertising medium has become so generally known, that we are compelled to refuse column after column of advertisements. The vast increase of our circulation, penetrating as it does into the most profitable channels, renders our space doubly valuable, and justifies us in the course we have determined upon—that of increasing our rates of advertising in the following ratio:

75 cents a line on the outside or last page.
50 " " on the 14th and 16th pages.

Notice to Contributors.—Superior original Tales will be always received, and if accepted remunerated according to their merit. All not accepted will be promptly returned. They should be plainly written on one side only, and the address of the writer given distinctly.

OUR $5,000 PRIZE TALE.

The Gulf Between Them.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.

AUTHOR OF "FASHION AND FAMINE," &c. &c.

This magnificent novel, which won the prize of $5,000 offered last year by the proprietor of this paper, over two hundred competitors, will be commenced in No. 435 of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER. No recommendation of any work of Mrs. Stephens is needed; this, however, is a novel of far greater power, interest and beauty than any novel that has appeared for years. It is in no way inferior to "Fashion and Famine," the most successful work of fiction ever issued in this country. It is, too, a novel of our day, and by its extraordinary interest will fascinate and absorb every reader by its thrilling incidents, deep human interest and rare discrimination of character.

The awarding, among so many, of the unexampled prize, the amount of which has already been paid to the successful authoress, to this novel, will alone show that it is of a superior order, as well as prove the liberality of the proprietor, and his resolution to spare no expense to gratify his readers.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

Gen. Averill, on the 15th Dec., after amusing the rebel horse, reached Salem, on the Virginia and Tennessee railroad, between Longstreet's army and Lynchburg, destroyed the telegraph, depots, an immense quantity of stores of every kind, tore up 15 miles of railroad, destroying culverts, bridges and rails. He then made his way over the mountains, and escaped with scarcely a man killed or wounded.

At the same time, Gens. Scammon and Duffie took Lewisburg, Greenbrier county, after defeating Echols on the 12th.

Col. Thorburn, leaving Averill, made a demonstration against Staunton, which was also threatened by Gen. Sullivan, from Harper's ferry.

TENNESSEE.

New bands of rebel guerillas are swarming in West Tennessee.

In the battle of Bean's station, on the 14th, which lasted from two P.M. till dark, Gen. Shackleford lost 150 or 200 in killed or wounded. The rebels, although they forced Shackleford back a mile, lost 800 killed and wounded.

Gen. Joseph E. Johnston has succeeded Bragg in command of the army in Tennessee.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

A report was circulated, as coming from Richmond, that the Ironsides and two monitors had been hopelessly entangled in the harbor obstructions at Charleston. It has proved to be false.

ARKANSAS.

On the 20th Dec. 1,500 rebels, under Standwaite, attacked Fort Gibson, but were repulsed, and retreated across the Arkansas.

The 3d Wisconsin cavalry penetrated to Red river, capturing many prisoners.

Quantrell was recently defeated at Barren fork, Cherokee county, by some Indian troops, under Capt. Spezman.

MISSOURI.

Gen. Rosecrans has been appointed to the Department of Missouri, in place of Gen. Schofield.

MAINE.

Considerable excitement exists at Eastport and Calais, in consequence of information of a projected raid of rebels and provincial assassins to plunder and destroy. Home-guards have been formed.

NAVAL.

The Vanderbilt, on Oct. 28, captured the rebel barque Saxon, formerly the Lucy Johnson, of New London. The Vanderbilt also confiscated 300 tons of rebel coal found on enguin island.

Warrants have been issued at Halifax to arrest the murderers of Schaefler, but the people and the police are too much in league with the assassins and robbers to leave any ground for hope of their arrest.

THE IDLER ABOUT TOWN.

For a war-ridden people, for a tax-burdened people, for a calamity-stricken people, we are the lightest-hearted, the most thoughtless, reckless people in the world. These holiday times have proved a perfect carnival of pleasure. The week has been squandered in every conceivable article of luxury would seem fabulous could it be noted down in round numbers. We would astonish those who have helped to swell the amount by their lavish extravagance. And yet we are unable to understand this public extravagance, for while it indicates our sympathy with the luxurious customs of European cities, it proves that there is no especially spiritless people, and that the money they gain so easily they are willing to dispose of for the benefit of the tradesmen, the artists, and the thousands dependent upon that trade. Besides, charity is not forgotten. Lectures, concerts, fairs, and even theatres, given in that holy cause, have been largely and liberally patronized in every city of the Union, resulting in a harvest of millions of dollars. Every possible place of amusement, no matter of what grade of excellence, is crowded with pleasure-seekers, and the lobby ticket-office at each establishment devoted wholly to grinning through horse collars, would find patrons without number. We believe this to be the most beautiful Christmas we have had in years. Notwithstanding the high price of every necessary of life, there is apparently less real poverty and much less actual suffering than in any previous year. Whether or not it has been as merry a Christmas as some that we remember is a matter of question. Certain it is, that we never saw so many of our citizens clothed in the garb of mourning. In almost every street of death had entered every family and made some gaps in every home circle. Still, the character of the season, the remembrance of the holy day, while it sanctifies grief, gives assurance and hope that may well make the saddest heart cast off its mourning robes and rejoice.

The skating carnival has commenced, and the rage for that exhilarating out-of-doors exercise appears to have increased a hundred per cent. since last year. Every line of carts will be found crowded with men, women and children of all ages, bound for the favorite regions—all day long, from early morning until ten in the evening. On Christmas day—the loveliest as well as most merry day that ever visited the earth to gladden it—the number of actual skaters on the ponds in Central Park amounted to one hundred thousand, and over a hundred thousand people were spectators of the sport. We believe this was the largest number of visitors to that lovely spot ever chronicled upon one day. It was one of the most charming and animating sights that we ever beheld. The supreme charm and grace of skating is really marvellous. Those who hobbled two years ago now run; the whose run last year now fly; and those who a short time since could scarcely comprehend the idea of the outside edge skating now cut eagles and skate quadrilles. Among the most dashing skaters are the ladies. They combine grace with ease, and are utterly fearless on their slippery footing, and many of them join the parade from start with wheeling gait, as though they travelled on improved Macadam, but strike out on the ice and in free stride of the practised dereskater. As they float along they present a picture of exquisite health and beauty. They are beginning to wear up-to-prairie skating costumes. The dress is not quite to the mark yet, and is not, as yet, universally accepted; but the tendency is decidedly in the right direction, simply to the limbs than the ordinary street dress, which for some time was almost exclusively worn. The Fifth avenue skating pond is the chosen resort of the elite; the most fashionable hour from two to four. The crowding and unpleasant association which every one will appreciate. The skating carnival is now in its career—let every one skate!

The rebel Mrs. Maretzek and his Italian opera company, on a brief visit to the city, was the signal for a grand burst of admiration from the fashionable society. The operas given were "Il Ballo in Maschera," "Lucia," "Linda," and at the matinée on Saturday Mozart's "Il Don Giovanni." The matinées were a grand success, the house literally crowded by a perfect galaxy of elegantly dressed and beautiful ladies. The Italian opera was not very popular as it is at the present time, and it may well be said that it never more than struggled into popularity. Maretzek takes his company next week for a short visit to Boston, and will return to New York in February, to inaugurate a long, and we hope a brilliant season.

Theodore Thomas's Christmas Matinée, the sixth of the series, was a brilliant affair, and presented the finest programme yet selected. The instrumental pieces were, Beethoven's Symphony in C minor; Mayerbeer's overture, "Struensee;" the second movement of Berlioz's "Harold in Italy," and the introduction to the third act of Wagner's "Lohengrin." The lighter orchestral pieces were a spirited Christmas polka, by Charles Fradel, and a most capital set of quadrilles, on themes from the opera of "Faust," also by Charles Fradel. Mr. S. B. Mills performed his "Rêverie and Polonaise" (recollections of rare merit, and Thalberg's "Sonnambula" in his usual masterly style. Judging from the spirit and tasteful judgment characterize his playing, and left nothing to be desired in the rendering of his selections. The instrument he played upon was a superbly toned grand piano, from the factory of Steinway and Sons. The vocal selections were excellent, and were admirably executed by Madame Comple Rochard, Mr. William Castle, and Mr. S. C. Campbell. Mr. Thomas's popular Saturday Matinées may now be considered as a thoroughly established institution of the city of New York.

A new musical monthly, called the Musical Host, has just been issued by J. W. Fortune, 102 Centre street, which deserves to, and we think will, be a decided success. It has a superb titlepage, and is printed on the very finest paper. It contains, in its first number, vocal and instrumental music of a original, and popular character, and is filled with the spirit of the times. One of the pieces, a song and chorus, called "I am Going to the War, Mother," will have a wide popularity and an extensive sale. Mr. Fortune has taken a very happy idea, and to his advantage, that is adapted both for educational purposes and for amusement, and we wish him success for the publication of the teacher. The second number is already announced.

The entertainments at Wallack's Theatre are begining to assume a more varied character. The popularity of the old-standard comedies, for the performance of which this theatre is so celebrated, are not to be lost sight of. The evil movement in favor of "Rosedale; or, the Rifle Bull," and the same exaggerated style of the burlesque, are to be replaced by more refined audiences.

The admirable drama, "The Bridal of the Man," is still running its career of brilliant and deserved success at Winter Garden. This piece has certainly merit, freshness, and a most excellent moral, enforced by its fidelity to nature; chiefly, by its beautiful and Christian morality. It is put on the stage in an excellent manner in which it is acted and produced. Everything upon which the stage can depend is thoroughly enforced by two eminent lawyers. A. Oakey Hall and Edgar Sanders, whose position as the leading lights of the city, and this endorsement has recommended it still more strongly to the public. The piece, therefore, will probably run some weeks yet.

Mr. John Wm. Ellsler, the charming little Olympic Theatre, has succeeded in hitting the public taste very hard indeed. The light, graceful and pleasing pieces which are now given at their theatre should always be her specialty, for in that line she possesses a great deal of fascination.

Van Amburg's Menagerie and the Broadway Circus are attracting crowded audiences both day and evening. They have engaged the services of a large number of families.

The leading entertainments at Barnum's Museum comprise such a vast list of individual attractions that we give up the attempt to enumerate them in despair. What with giants and dwarfs, happy families, all kinds of animals, fishes, reptiles, curiosities, panoramas, automatons and real musicians, there is something to please every taste and to amuse the most exigeant visitor.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—Another large auction sale of coal took place on the 23d of Dec., at No. 35 William street, New York. The property was that belonging to the Western Railroad Company. Nearly 30,000 tons were disposed of at an average price of $9.50 per ton. The average prices did not vary much from those of the November sale. The total sum for the 23d of December was $280,000. Some of the varieties brought higher prices.

——A heavy panic has recently met in Burlington co., New Jersey. Of the whole 24 men the lightest weighs 200 pounds, the heaviest 300 pounds; another 276, one 295, and two each 300 pounds, making the total weight of the 24 men 6,800 pounds. The aggregate weight of the 24 was 6,800—an average weight of 283 pounds each man.

——It may interest our country readers to know that never has Christmas been celebrated in the city of Washington with more fervent zeal. The streets adjacent Washington and Fulton markets, and Broadway, looked as if the whole city was in a fever. Thousands of evergreen trees line the side walks, and the air was redolent with the smell of living and dead, some in feathers and some in brackcloth, while the green was relieved by the bright red of Fulton. Everything is twice as dear as it was last year, and the sale was not as brisk as usual, though some idea may be formed of the abundance of money.

——It is said that the Senate will adjourn on the 5th January to the 1st of February, in order to give volunteering a fair chance to fill the quotas.

——Great defalcations have been discovered in the Treasury Department, and a clerk has been arrested for forgery.

——The Louisville Journal truly says that the President's message "is a declaration of the revolting States to trample their own Constitution, and to make the Government of the Confederation an loyal States of the Union. In a word, it requires them to overthrow the Union and to establish an ancement for the commission of the first."

——The National Union (Washington paper) says: "Four hundred and fifty-two persons—This institution has spread its sails, and is now fairly under way in the sea of education. It is launching their first issue passed into the hands of the public. The number is a large one, and has been printed on the very best of bookmaking paper. In point of beauty the publication is not surpassed by any books, and from their appearance, as far as we can judge, it will be found correct in typography also. The fives have a beautiful engraving on the back of each Sunday, and the tens have a fine steel engraving. The face of the note has also two beautiful engravings at each end. The notes are signed by Mr. Cooke, President, and H. S. Huntington, Cashier."

——One of the most destructive fires that occurred in the morning of the 23d Dec., and about 100 of the "children" are left without a home.

——The first Episcopal edifice erected in this city by a German congregation was, on Christmas Eve, consecrated with appropriate ceremonies. The building is located in East Fourteenth street, near First avenue. The congregation numbers about 1,500 communicants. The congregation formerly gathered at an English church in Second street. The Rev. Dr. Charles Schuman is rector. The church was crowded, and numerous persons were unable to obtain admittance. The first of the note has also two beautiful engravings at each end. The notes are signed by Mr. Cooke, President, and H. S. Huntington, Cashier."

——One of the most destructive fires that occurred in the morning of the 23d Dec., and about 100 of the "children" are left without a home.

——The first Episcopal edifice erected in this city by a German congregation was, on Christmas Eve, consecrated with appropriate ceremonies. The building is located in East Fourteenth street, near First avenue. The congregation numbers about 1,500 communicants. The congregation formerly gathered at an English church in Second street. The Rev. Dr. Charles Schuman is rector. The church was crowded, and numerous persons were unable to obtain admittance. Bishop Potter and the consecration prayer. The sermon in the evening prayer was pronounced. The Rev. S. H. Tyng, jr., preached the sermon. The clergy combined in congratulating the society upon the completion of their edifice, and expressed the hope that the church might prove their efforts in the pioneer enterprise of building a church for the German people.

——The Conservative National Convention of Philadelphia met on the 7th inst., with 400 delegates and nominated Gen. Geo. McClellan for Free dent and ex-Governor Campbell, of Tennessee, for Vice-President. McClellan was formerly Commander-in-Chief of the Potomac army, and gained much distinction at the battle of Antietam. Campbell is a pro-slavery Whig formerly, and is now a mild Unionist—says the New York Herald.

——Com. Vanderbilt and his wife celebrated their golden wedding on the 29th Dec. Mrs. Vanderbilt received his wife celebrated theirs on the 28th Dec.

——The opening of the new year found the old year, and singing in the new, was observed at Trinity Church, Newark, on the 31st December, by Dr. Dix. The service in the church commenced at three o'clock, with the Psalms, followed with a chant by the choir. At seven, and at the close of the evening service Mr. Cubitt's carol, "The Christmas Tree," sung by the children of the Sunday school, Master Hopkins taking the solo parts. The Rev. Morgan Dix, D.D., rector of Trinity, then delivered a short address to the children after which they were marched to the Christmas Tree, and each child received a beautiful and appropriate present. The church was tastefully decorated with evergreens, laurel, &c., and the Christmas Tree, brilliantly illuminated and festooned with ribbons and gifts, attracted a great deal of attention. The church was crowded to excess by members of the congregation and strangers. The singing of Canon Hopkins is highly lauded, and justifies Mr. Cubitt for giving to him the onerous task of rendering the solos. Mr. Cubitt is an artist at the head of his profession. We may here mention, en passant, that we have the lectures on choir which has been universally observed as at the present year.

——Secretary Stanton recently visited the house of Mr. M. A. Linton, a Quaker, residing near Richview, Washington county, Ill. On the evening of the 23d Dec. armed with revolvers, and demanded his daughter, Josephine Linton, 21 yrs. Just home from school, on pain of the instant death of the entire family in case of delay. The request was impossible. The girl was dragged by her room, forced to dress, carried to a carriage, and with her captors commenced a grand house until morning. No clue to the villains or to her whereabouts has been obtained.

——Corn is now higher at the West generally than it has been before for 40 years.

——The decease of a well-known commission merchant of Chicago has instituted a suit against a life insurance company for the payment of marriage—damages $25,000. Another young lady in Chardon, Ohio, has commenced a similar suit for her broken heart in the shape of a verdict of $10,000 damages against a deceased lover.

——Gen. Schofield has been removed from his command in Missouri and Gen. Rosecrans put in his stead. This, although received as a move in favor of the abolitionists (says the Herald), is a popular appointment, and will be received with favor by all save the gainer of so many battles and the loser of only one Chickamauga.

——An exchange says, with regard to the Burnite and Jesse case, that the latter has exaggerated Mr. Barnite's statements to her. Certainly a lady who can publish such a letter as Jesse's must grave reputations, is a very fierce specimen of female gentleness.

Southern.—Among the recently captured rebel prizes is the "Lizzie Weems," a new vessel from a private, fleet of Wassea, Ga., Nov. 20, in which he says: "The fight at Fort Sumter was a splendid one, and very much disheartened, and there is much complaint. It is better off now than it was. I think how our army acted in the fight. The right wing of the army, under General Sherman, behaved nobly; but Gen. Hardee, was badly managed."

——In a letter lately received here by a Southern lady from a relative in Alabama there is this passage: "You can little imagine the condition we are in here. We have not seen a town I have been to twice; and although we have enough to eat, yet it is not like it used to be. We have to do without so many things. Coffee is $5 per pound, and there is great fear that our slaves will rise. Even old nurse says it is time for her to think how our men acted in the fight. The right wing of the army, under General Sherman, behaved nobly; but Gen. Hardee, was badly managed."

——In a letter lately received here by a Southern lady from a relative in Alabama there is this passage: "You can little imagine the condition we are in here. We have not seen a town I have been to twice; and although we have enough to eat, yet it is not like it used to be. We have to do without so many things. Coffee is $5 per pound, and there is great fear that our slaves will rise. Even old nurse says it is time for her to think how our men acted in the fight. The right wing of the army, under General Sherman, behaved nobly; but Gen. Hardee, was badly managed."

Military.—A mutiny broke out in Fort St. Philip, New Orleans, lately, among the Irish portion of the 14th New York regiment, and was crushed by the brutality of the commanding officer, Lieut.-Col. Holbrook.

——The last words of Gen. Buford, in a state of semi-delirium, were characteristic of the man. He exclaimed, with his last breath: "Send for the Fayette cavalry and the regulars on all these roads and keep those men from going to the rear."

——A Washington dispatch states that the War Department is opposed to the enactment of a law approve of the proposition for recruiting colored men in the South. The Department will not issue orders which applications have been received. An amendment, which emanates from the Secretary of War, States will be introduced in the Senate by Senator Wilkinson of Minn., providing that persons in the loyal States may possibly be filled without a resort to the draft.

——The Atlanta Confederacy (Ga.) threatens that if Capt. Conyngham, of the privateer Savannah, Mr. Cook, the rebels will retaliate by hanging a Union officer. Such a threat through these rebels we do not know the difference between cold-blooded murder and legitimate warfare.

Naval.—The Russian fleet has left Washington, and is now anchored in Hampton roads, Fortress Monroe, for the winter.

——A letter from Madras, India, dated 17th Oct., says: "The Confederate steamer Sumter, Commander Capt. Semmes, is expected here every day. Money is very scarce in this country, and I daresay the Bank of Brod. & Co. Mark my words; she will meet with a warm reception from the Madras Europeans here. Piracy here is looked upon in its proper light, if not at the Cape, which is half peopled by a set of barbarians from Europe."

——The frigate Niagara, which left the Navy Yard on the 23d Dec., was towed to Annapolis, reaching on the 23d Dec. During the cruise the vessel touched at Cadiz, Gibraltar, Malta, &c. The officers of the Niagara, ascertaining that the pirate crew had been released from prison, and that the British steamer Peterhoff was reached on the 30th, and departed from there for the Cape of Good Hope, making the run to the city in 70 hours.

——Admiral Dahlgren has made an arrangement to have the Keokuk raised. As the Keokuk is in much the same condition as she was when she sunk, it is not probable that she will be raised. Indeed, it seems universally conceded now that she leaked extensively from the first. Dahlgren is admirable in river defences, but they are certainly coffins when they are put to any other use.

——A committee of merchants has gone to Washington to wait upon President Lincoln and Secretary Welles.

Personal.—Mr. Benjamin Wood, M. C. for New York, has been unanimously elected by acclosus from taking his seat in Congress. This will account for the absence of Mr. Wood from his seat.

——The Rev. Newman Hall, of London, in a letter to us, says that he is about republishing a volume of Union cause, concludes with this emphatic sentence: "I am sure that every page will show that the rebellion would be merely a history of the past. The Lord reigns, and let the earth rejoice—a sixth struggle! Perhaps the continuance of the strife was needed to show the world the magnificence of the Union position politicy. God grant that slavery may soon cease to curse the land, and that people may be free in the wickedness of the war. I hate war, except when it is the only means of saving a nation from ruin. In country ever wage, since Cromwell's day, a war for so glorious a purpose as this."

——The Rev. W. Hartlet has written a letter severely blaming the Government for deciding that Jefferson Davis should be tried by civil law. That they are men of God, and are opposed to war. Why, then, do they continue in the ministry? Why not resign their politics? The above decision has given much satisfaction to the loyal and liberal.

Obituary.—Gen. Michael Corcoran, whose portrait we publish in this issue, died suddenly on Wednesday morning, the 23d Dec., while riding with his staff on the road between Washington and Georgetown. He was thrown from his horse, and falling on his head, fractured his skull. He was in his 37th year. The reader will find his biography in Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper for Sept. 5, 1863.

——Mrs. Seaton, wife the proprietor of the Washington Intelligence, died at Washington, on the 23d of Dec., aged 74. She had resided many years there, and was much esteemed. Mr. Seaton is one of the oldest editors of the city.

——Lord Elgin, one of the oldest and most popular of British statesmen, died in India, Nov. 20. The Earl of Elgin was appointed Governor-Gen eral of Canada three years ago. He had previously been Governor of Jamaica, Governor-General of British North America, twice Ambassador to China, and has been a Cabinet Minister in 1850-60. A shrewd, clear-headed, well-informed, active business man, he had been long in the public service, always doing his work well. During the Indian revolt of '57, he took the responsibility of sending a large re-inforcement of British troops from China to Calcutta, and there is no doubt that this timely and helped to put down the rebellion. At the time of his decease, Lord Elgin of India he was only in his 50th year; his constitution was vigorous, his frame was gaunt, his habits temperate, and his capacity for work enormous. But failing his best friends, he is lamented by millions of Europeans. A message from Calcutta reports his death from heart disease.

——The Rev. Lambert A. Wilmer, which is announced as having occurred in Brooklyn on the 31st last., will cause a deep regret in the minds of a large circle of his personal friends. In early life he was editor of the Philadelphia Saturday Courier. He deceased was a warm friend of Edgar A. Poe, and for many years was connected with the Pennsylvanian, formerly published in this city. He was the author of "Quacks of Helicon," which was published about 15 years since; "Ferdinand de Soto," issued five years ago, and "Poetical Gems," which published since with great success. The deceased was 56 years of age. His last work is entitled "Lucifer Just, and was taken sick and died at Brooklyn as above stated.

Accidents and Offences.—Mrs. Hales and her father, Mr. Lewis, of Philadelphia, were the unfortunate victims of a most horrible and wholly unprovoked murder, by Mr. Hale, the husband of the deceased, charged with having stolen $50 from the murdered person, with the additional enormity of his outcontrivance in the steal, have been honorably discharged, while Mr. Hale is said to be made the defendant. Hales, been put in prison to take his trial for a felonious assault upon his wife and father.

——The Sun newspaper states that the prices paid for cotton in this city by many of the large cotton warehouses is only five cents a-piece. Considering that cotton is worth from 12 to 14 a-piece, there can be no excuse for such barbarity.

Foreign.—The German diet ultimately passed, on the 14th inst., by a small majority, a resolution in favor of the federal execution in Holstein, but reserved the decision as to the amount of the quota to be sent. Orders were immediately issued for the entry of Federal troops into Holstein.

——The law officers of the Crown in Scotland have decided to take legal proceedings in the case of the Alabama, recently constructed in the Mersey at Clyde and said to be intended for the Confederate service. It is also reported that this is only the first case of the alleged infringement of the Foreign Enlistment Act which will be brought before the tribunals.

——The Emperor of Russia's reply to the Emperor Napoleon's invitation to a European congress has at length been published in Paris. The Czar professes his desire for the maintenance of European peace and concurred for the sake of an armed peace weighing so heavily upon the world. In addition, the Czar has his anarchy has been sufficiently attested by the recurrence of the Polish revolt, and he has no desire to menace the security and even the integrity of his own empire by calling him to abandon the task. He will be happy if the Emperor Napoleon's proposed should lead to the "more extended and more lasting" development but the consent of all the Great Powers is needed, and he cannot undertake to decide in advance what should "define the question upon which an understanding should have been arrived at, and the basis upon which it should be established."

Art, Science and Literature.—The great picture of "The Battle of Gettysburg" is progressing. It will contain over 50 original portraits beautifully executed, and when finished will undoubtedly be about it, that the biographies are taken from data communicated by the officers themselves, or their families. This will give it an historical value seldom to be found in a work of this kind. We are told the celebrated supervision of G. T. Childs, the celebrated painter.

Chit-Chat.—Our readers are no doubt aware that Gen. Halleck enjoys the soubriquet of Old Brains among the army. We are not sure whether he has yet won de jeune is sarcastic or complimentary—whether it is given to him in admiration, or in derision. We like an old shoe, he is worn out." But, whatever of the name, we have evidence that the editors of the New York papers in the publication of his report, have given to him the credit of having to what just trains have been considerably diminished this last year. The New York Times calls attention to the that our brains have been considerably diminished this last year. We hope that this is not the case with the truth.

Lord Hartington, whose recent visit here caused so much malignant penny-lining in a cheap pictorial, lately delivered a lecture on America at the Hartington Forum, in which he lauded the school education of New England, and laid all our defeats to the want of a universal basis of training inferior newspapers.

The New York Times calls attention to the ludicrous pretensions made by the State of New Jersey to a special railroad interest in the city of Washington. It is principally owing to the Camden and Amboy Railroad Company that we have to pay such an enormous price for coal.

GUNTHER'S, at this season of the year, is the haunt of every lady's bonnet-maker in town, and certainly desirable. Silks and Laces may be forgotten for the present, but Furs are always in season, and of necessity, which means no hands. When Gunther is connected, when the fashion is established, Gunther is understood, just as we say "Stewarts," "Tiffany's," "Lord & Taylor's." Besides, the Gunther, city institutions recognised by all. The beauty of the Gunther is displayed in the recherché fashions can be found there, at the lowest living prices, and the best of workmanship. Every taste can be gratified and every want supplied at Gunther's, whether it be Ladies' or Gentlemen's Furs, such as Fur Cloaks, Capes, Gloves or Caps, and all kinds of costly articles of Furniture. A visit to Gunther's at this season of this fine wood will repay a visit.

SOMETHING ABOUT CHAMPAGNE.—"MUMM'S" is the only Champagne recommended by the Faculty in addition to eminence, but the MUMM we mean repudiates all kind of trickery, and sends out only such articles forth like a stream of liquid, sparkling diamonds, exhilarating life and joy, and not only imparts these impulses to sentiment and imagination. We need not say that we mean the Mumm de Champagne, which is so universally famous that its name is as familiar in households as the name of household words. They say that "good wine needs no bush"—that is, needs no puff. But in this age it is true for the generous quantities, the delicate flavor, the rich richness of Champagne, are unknown to the public, unless it can be distinguished from all others. The importer of this wine is Mr. Charles Farrell, of No. 45 Beaver street, N. Y., has just received a stock of the vintage of 1861, which is said to have yielded the finest fruit known for many years. It will be rapidly brought up, so that those who desire to lay in a stock should do so at once.

"Pat, you are wearing your stockings wrong side outward."

"Och, and don't I know it, to be sure; there's a hole in the other side, there is."

The most obvious way to make a discordant political party a unit is to kill all its members but one.

LADIES' FASHIONS, FROM FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAG NE F

7
8
9
10
11
12

20
21
22
23
24
25
26

"Col. Morrison dashed into the enemy as if he heading a charge of cavalry. One of the rebel prisoners told me that over 60 shots were fired at the man on the white-faced horse. After the fight the boys hastily went through the rebel knapsacks, and then returned to their own, which they had left in the middle of the road, near the bank of the river. Thus closed the first engagement of the 27th."

THE BRITISH NATION ANALYZED.

ACCORDING to the British census volume for 1861, there were then in the workhouses a total pay clerk, a clergyman, 10 solicitors, 15 surgeons, an other 66 schoolmasters, and 70 schoolmistresses. Not merely poor, but in prison for debt, were 32 officers in the army, 3 in the navy, 9 clergymen ministers, 4 barristers, 32 solicitors, 2 physicians, 3 surgeons, 4 actors, 17 schoolmasters, 2 schoolmistresses, 10 "gentlemen." Still worse off, in luxurious asylums, were 36 clergymen, 10 solicitors, 10 authors, 13 half-pay officers, 23 barristers, 60 solicitors, 9 physicians, 3 surgeons, 3 authors, 34 schoolmasters, and 89 schoolmistresses. According to the occupation list, 45 were called themselves natural philosophers, 1 described himself as a lexicographer, another as a chronologist, and 1 wrote himself down as "optician." Of others we have rather mysterious accounts—3 were stylographers, 2 geometers, 9 kamptulicon manufacturers, 8 truffers, 33 boot-leggers, 15 peddlers, 20 manger merchants, 12 beadmongers, 42 gold-minders, and 2 toothpick-makers. Much has been said respecting occupations open to women. The census has its disclosures upon that subject. The enumerators found, in 1861, among the women of England 30 bankers, 7 money-lenders, 574 commercial clerks, 65 commercial travellers, 24 brokers, 39 merchants, 29 farmers, 419 printers, 3 shepherds, 43,964 agricultural laborers, 13 ladies' maids, 6 costers, 7 were bonesetters, 6 were reporters or short-hand writers, 3 parish clerks, 2 conjurers, 2 watchers of elections, 7 dentists, 2 knackers, 3 conjurors, 1 astronomer, 8 naturalists."

Economy, Durability & Convenience

The Star No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil Lamps, Patented Aug. 11, 1863. Gives a brilliant light, is free from smoke, or smell. It can be carried and handled freely without being extinguished. The latest and acknowledged the best invention of the kind. Warranted as represented. Sample sent, postpaid, for 35 cents. Agents wanted.

PETER ESSIG & CO., Manufacturers, No. 2 Platt St., N. Y.

J. G. SCHULL,
MERCHANT TAILOR
33 Ann Street, New York,

Has on hand a splendid assortment of French, English and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings, which he is prepared to make up in the most fashionable style and on the most reasonable terms for cash

Union Playing Cards!

National American Amusement Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. 52 enameled cards to the pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars and Flags are the suits, and you can play for the usual games. Two packs mailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for Circular. Address

AMERICAN CARD CO.,
000 455 Broadway, or 168 Willam St., N. Y.

Singer & Co.'s Letter A Family Sewing Machine, with all the new improvements (Hemmer, Braider, Binder, Feller, Tucker Corder, Gatherer, &c., &c.), is the cheapest, and best, and most beautiful of all Machines for Family sewing and light manufacturing purposes. It uses the interlocking stitch (which is alike on both sides), and has great capacity for sewing ALL KINDS of cloth, and with ALL KINDS of thread. Even leather, as well as the finest muslin may be sewn to perfection on this machine. It will use 200 spool cotton as well as No. 40 linen thread. What it can do can only be known by seeing the machine tested.

The Branch Offices are well supplied with silk twist, thread, needles, oil, &c., of the very best quality.

Send for a new illustrated 32 to 76 Pamphlet.
000 I. M. SINGER & CO., 458 Broadway, N. Y.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of AMERICAN PEOPLE,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by DR. TODD, Physician to th. Troy Lung and Hygiene Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervousness, Debility, Consumption, Weakness of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes for Impotency. Required Nourishment, Restoration, &c.

☞ Full not to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 96 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 439 6t

Love, Courtship and Marriage.

All born to love and to be loved. Matches. Unhappy Marriages. The Remedy. Love—signs, its Science. Secret of Beauty. A Woman's Experience. Telling the Age. How to improve the Complexion—with numerous Illustrative Portraits—in Jan. Double 20c. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. The first of a new volume. Only 15 cents; or $1 a year.

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative—Superior to every other preparation for the hair in the power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and beautiful appearance. It prevents the hair falling out, to overcome effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.

HOYT'S MINNEHAHA HAIR GLOSS, unexcelled to restore the hair to curl

HOYT'S IMPERIAL COLORING CREAM stains and colors the hair all the same shade; changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.

HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and every requisite of a superior toilet powder for every where.

JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place.

$60 A MONTH ! We want Agents at $60 a month to sell our new and useful inventions. One article, Oriental Burners, and 13 other articles. 15 cents makes free. SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Me. 431-3t

Wild Men and Beast Children,

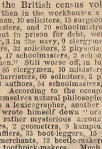
Nursed by the Wolf and other Animals. Feats and the Fur Trade, Trapping and Trapping, Hunting Animals, Skeletons, How Miss K. got a Husband, Must Marry or Pay Fine, His Choice and the result. The Double Number of the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for January. 15 cents; or $1 50 a year. Now Ready.

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

Cavalry.

Solid Silver, $3.
do Gold Relief, $5 50.

Artillery.



Solid Silver (without battles) $1 50.
do Gold Relief, $2.
Battles, 20 cents each, extra.

Co. Pins.

Solid Silver, $1.
do Gold Relief, $1 50

Corps Badges.

Solid Silver, $1.
do Enamelled, $1 50.

Solid Gold, $8.

Solid Gold (without battles), $5.

Solid Gold, $3 50

Solid Gold, $5.

Every Co., from A to M, and every Corp Badge worn by the army constantly on hand. Engraved to order and sent free on receipt of price. Terms Cash, in advance. Premiums offered to Clubs. Send for a Catalogue.

Address C. L. HALCH & CO., 308 Broadway, N. Y.

(Formerly Packard & Co.)

FURS!

FURS!!!

FURS!!!

Ladies and Misses Fine Furs, in Sable, Mink, Ermine, Siberian Squirrel, etc.

Gents' Fur Caps, Muffers and Gauntlets, in Seal Otter, Beaver, etc.

Sleigh Robes in variety. Retailed at Wholesale Prices.

BURKE (successor to WATKINS),
210 Broadway, corner Fulton street.

STILLMAN ADAMS & CO.,
Dealers in Fine Fancy Goods & Jewelry,

Have just received a fine assortment of Goods suitable for the Holidays, viz:

Writing Desks, Work Boxes, Dressing Cases, Jewelry Boxes, Ladies' Companions, Portfolios, Photograph Albums, Opera Glasses, Ruth Brems Combs (in Shell), Amber, Gold, etc., Jet Beads, Necklaces, Belts, Bracelets

Large assortment of Wallets, Pocket Books, Purses, Ladies' Shopping Bags, Card Cases, Jet and Gold Jewelry, and a large assortment of
FANCY ARTICLES SUITABLE for PRESENTS, DRESSED DOLLS in GREAT VARIETY.
A large assortment of TOYS in China and Paper Mache.

STILLMAN ADAMS & CO.,
595 Broadway, opposite Metropolitan Hotel.
(Show Cases in front.)

WILLIAM TAYLOR,
No. 555 Broadway.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS!
CONFECTIONERY,
ARTICLES FOR CHRISTMAS TREES.

Christmas Candies, Lanterns, Flags, Drums, Fruits and Surprises, Petite Cornucopias, etc.

Also, Bonbon Boxes of every Style and Paper Cornucopias, Mottoes, &c. Mott, Oysters, Ice Cream and Cakes, for New Year's Tables. 430-2

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS

THE SOLDIER'S SAFEGUARD.—This is the first-class well spoken of. HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS by an officer of the United States Army. It is a purely vegetable, highly invigorating, and is a letter to the proprietors, Messrs. HOSTETTER & SMITH: "In every instance my soldier friends have been taken regularly and systematically, as a protective against the miasmic epidemic so common and so destructive here, they have answered the desired end, and you may therefore claim for your celebrated Tonic and Preventive the designation of the SOLDIER'S SAFEGUARD. Whenever it has been tried in the army, the results has been the same. The soldiers themselves are clamorous to have it substituted for the pernicious liquors now used as stimulants in the military hospitals. Its well known basis, Spring of Rye, the purest stimulant, in the opinion of chemists, when properly separated from any deleterious impurities, and this matchless invigorant is medicated with a combination of the finest tonic, anti-bilious and corrective herbs, barks, gums, roots, &c., known to modern pharmacy. Hence HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS—the best, and only preventive in malarious diseases and the most powerful of all remedies in cases of debility and other physical prostration—should be in every army hospital and convalescent camp, and should form a portion of the medicine chest of every regiment in the field. Given promptly to the wounded, it would save the lives of thousands who must otherwise fall a prey to exhaustion on the battle field.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
DEPOT 108 NEW YORK, 470 BROADWAY.

Beautiful Women.

For Portraits, with the Secret of Beauty, and "How to be Beautiful," see the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. The January Double Number has more than 20 Portraits. Only 15 cents, by first post, or $1 50 a year. Now Ready.

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

Hawkes's Diamond Pointed Gold Pens.

Medium	Pen	$0 50	Commercial Pen $1 25
Large	"	0 63	Mammoth " 1 50
Engraving	"	0 75	Extra Flexible " 2 00

Also, Fountain Pens—one fitting will write eight to fifteen hours. Sent safely for 25c. extra.

GEO. F. HAWKES, Manufacturer,
432 6 64 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Mendelssohn's Four-Part Songs.

English and German words. This volume contains the whole of these charming compositions of Mendelssohn, 65 in number. Of these, 28 are for mixed voices—Soprano, Alto, Tenor and Bass—and the remaining 15 for male voices, two Tenors and two Basses. The numerous Glee and Quartette Clubs throughout the country should procure copies of this convenient edition of the finest Four-Part Pieces ever written. Price complete $1 00. Cloth $1 50. For Mixed voices 75 cents. Published by DITSON & CO., Boston.

500 More Agents Wanted—Business Now —pay $10 a day—no time and requires no capital. For particulars, address with stamp, 433-3 J. W. STEPHENS, Morristown, N. J.

Dreams.

Their Significance, Space and Time Annihilated, Poetry and Musicin Sleep, Horrid Dreams and Hungry Dreams—Are Dreams Prophetic? Dual Psychology; or, the Science of the Soul in Jan. Double No., PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. Only 15 cents; or $1 a year. Address

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

A HANDSOME HOLIDAY GIFT,

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT
SMOKING CASE!

MORE INGENIOUS IN ITS CONSTRUCTION OF THE Meerschaum Case consuming Pipe and Stem, Matches and Pipe Cleaner, with a harmless Tobacco Pouch attached, filling the Pipe by a valve without use of the fingers or waste of tobacco. Nothing can be more pleasing all older, and portable as a Cigar Case. It is made for service, of various and luxurious styles, at $1 50, $2, $2 25, $2 50 and $3 to $3 75 and $5; the two latter richly Plated and Gilt. Nothing can excel it in Comfort, Utility and Economy for all Smokers. As a Present to FRIENDS nothing could be more acceptable.

FOR THE SOLDIER IT IS INVALUABLE.

The Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco!

Of superior quality and flavor, in packages to fill the case, and of a price to suit for the general trade. A liberal discount to Dealers. Single Cases sent by mail, post, on receipt of price and 36 cents.

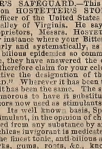
RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,
Office 452 Broadway, cor. Howard St., N. Y.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

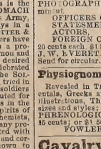
Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS FROM LIFE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, very interesting, in Jan. Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, by first post. Only 15 cents; or $1 50 a year. Now Ready.

ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.,
20 cents each, $1 80 per doz. Free by mail Address
J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1614, New York city.
Send for circular.



Physiognomy, or Signs of Character



Revealed in THE BRAIN, in warm by Jews, Orientals, Greeks and Romans; Bearded Women, with illustrations. The Beard in Cheer 9, Different sorts, Moustache, very interesting, in Jan. Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, by first post. Only 15 cents; or $1 50 a year. Now Ready.

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

Cavalry and Artillery!

Solid Silver, $1 25. Solid Silver, $1 25.

Solid 12 k Gold, $5 each. | Solid 18 k Gold, $5 each.

Sent by mail on receipt of price. Also, all kinds Corps, Co. and Division Pins engraved to order, by the single letter or 1,000 sent to any part of the country. Terms cash, in advance. Send for a Circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewellers,
308 Broadway, N. Y.

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office),
offer for sale the following Magnificent List of

WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.

Unequaled at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

	EACH
125 Gold and Silver Watches	$15 to $100
500 Ladies' Gold Watches	$35
500 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	$15
1000 Vest and Neck Chains	$5 to $10 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Cameo Brooches	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
4000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Coral Ear Drops	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Gents' Breast Pins	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Watch Keys	2 00 to 6 00
2000 Pen and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 4 00
2500 Sets of Bosom Studs	2 50 to 6 00
2500 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Plain Rings	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Lockets	2 50 to 6 00
10000 Sets of Jewellery	5 00 to 10 00
20000 Gold Pens, Silver Mtvd Holders	4 00 to 5 00
10000 Gold Pens, with Pencils	6 00
Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00

The articles in this stock of Jewelry are of the neatest and most fashionable patterns. Ladies can select the various articles are put in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, thus giving all a fair chance, and sent by mail for 25 cents each; and on receipt of the Certificate, it is at your option to send 25c. More than one take the article named in it, or not. Five Certificates, $1; eleven, $2; thirty-five, $5; sixty-five, $10; one hundred, $15; Certificate money to be enclosed with order. Correspondence promptly answered.

AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow them ten cents on every Certificate, proof of their remittance amounts to $1, and more liberal inducements to those who buy largely. Send for Circular. Address

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

ANOTHER VOICE

FROM THE POTOMAC!

Fathers and Mothers,

AND

Sisters and Brothers

HEAR THIS:

SOLDIERS,

ATTENTION!

A Voice from the Potomac!

Read the following letter lately received by Prof. HOLLOWAY, No. 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.:

CAMP NEAR CULPEPER, VA. Nov. 23, 1863.

Thomas Holloway, Esq:

DEAR SIR—Please send me some of your valuable Pills, for which you will find money enclosed. Soldiers who have used them say they are just the thing for us.

I have been in the service now over fifteen months and have had no sickness, except diarrhœa, and I want to have your medicine by me, in case of need.

Yours, with respect,

ANTHONY OGDEN,

Company D, 76th Michigan Regiment, 1st Brigade 1st Division, 2d Army Corps, Army of the Potomac

Let the reader go to the nearest Drug Store and purchase a box of

Holloway's Pills
OR OINTMENT!

And send it to their relatives in the army.

Hasten ! Delays are Dangerous !

To insure getting genuine, go to the Depot,
431-3t 80 No. 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

A Pretty Present.

Send to your nearest, dearest and most valued friend, the ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, for 1864. It would be highly prized, and costs only 15 cts.

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

EXTENSION HOLDERS & GOLD PENS

Of the most handsome and durable construction, put up in neat fancy cases of convenient size, and sold in any less quantities. They will retail for $3 each.

Per dozen $18 25
" dozen 35 00

Sent by mail or express, prepaid. Address
SALISBURY, BRO. & CO., Providence, R. I.

Every User of a Sewing Machine wants the NEW AUTOMATIC SHUTTLE SEWER, Price $10, by T. BARTLETTS, 181 Broadway, New York. Adapted to the Wheeler & Wilson Machines. Sews without the hand, on the FINEST, STRAIGHTEST SEAM. Complete instructions, &c., free by mail. Agents wanted everywhere.

SCENE ON THE ATCHAFALAYA, LA.—FROM A SKETCH BY LIEUT. S. S. DAVID, 133D N. Y. VOL.

SIMMSPORT, LA.—FROM A SKETCH BY LIEUT. S. S. DAVID, 133D N. Y. VOL.

WE'LL SING THE GLAD NEW YEAR.

WHO was it spake of hoary Time? who called him graybeard Time?
Who pictured him with trembling limbs and eyelids filled with rime?
Why, who that ever knew the sprite could say so false a thing,
Could call the lusty fellow old, who is so swift of wing?

So young and swift, that ere we mark his presence he is gone;
He comes, and steals each infant hour, the instant it is born;
He runs away with laden years, with treasures rich and rare,
And with a touch he palsies limbs, and whitens ravens hair.

He travels hand-in-hand with Death, with steps that know no rest,
And brings his comrade to our homes, a gaunt, unwelcome guest.
He takes, oh! tearful mothers, from your arms your darling child,
And lovers, many a maiden fair the youngster hath beguiled.
He comes with life, and death, and woe, with joy and carking care;
He fills the hovel full with wealth, and strips
the palace bare!
He brings us hope or sad despair, a doubt, a laugh, a tear,
Whatever else his burden is, be sure he brings New Year!

Then here's a health to lusty Time, whatever be his fault,
So long as in his onward march the youngster does not halt!
With what he brings us, joy or grief, or praise, or jibe or jeer,
We'll take it all as part of life, and spend a glad New Year.
"A Happy New Year!" so the song runs ever to its close,
"A Happy New Year!" murmurs by, on every wind that blows!
So shall our song be not the past, but of the
glad New Year,
Not hours agone, but of those which will speedily be here!

HAPPY NEW YEAR!

Stop, little one, and talk awhile,
There's time enough for you.
Your face has got a sunny smile,
E'en though your lips be blue!
Your teeth are chattering with the cold,
Your peeping toes appear;
Come tell me, thou of ten years old,
Why sing the glad New Year?

My mother says that God is good,
That he will not forget,
And though we sometimes want for food,
There's sadder wanting yet.
My father starves in Southern lands,
Beneath a jailor stern,
And morn and eve, with clasped hands,
We pray for his return.

My mother says the coming year
Will bring him home again,
And then we'll know no doubt or fear,
No sickness, want or pain.
She says this fearful war will end,
And Time will dry each tear,
And that is why my voice I lend
To sing the glad New Year!

HAPPY NEW YEAR!

Wait but a moment, lady fair!
Why singest thou this strain?
Your smile scarce hides the mark of care
You seek to crush in vain.
Your hands, though shaped in dainty form,
Are not from labor clear,
Your clothing is not over warm,
Why sing the glad New Year?

The New Year, sir, brings always joy,
The world woos not life's pain,
Old age has years, the child its toy,
To count as worthy gain!
I have my pleasures to pursue,
In spite of laboring hours,
And Time, who brings us all things new,
Brings sometimes blooming flowers.

This year I am to wed with one
Well worthy for my mate,
His life-work is so truly done,
He should be truly great.
We've waited through life's golden prime,
With wavering hope and fear.
But now we wed, oh! happy time,
To sing the glad New Year!

HAPPY NEW YEAR!

Hail! tottering age, whose dimming eyes
Can scarce perceive the sun,
Across the grave thy shadow lies,
Thy course is nearly run!
Speak, pilgrim on life's farther shore,
Why dost thou linger here
To count thy coming hours o'er
And sing the glad New Year?

I tarry or linger—to enjoy the years
That come from God above.
His hand has blotted all the tears,
And left me only love.
The New Year scatters life and bloom
Before my loitering feet,
My eyes too dim to pierce the gloom
And weep the woes I meet!

The coming year brings life anew;
My grandson comes of age,
God teach the boy, so good and true,
To read aright life's page.
My son, this year, comes home from sea,
I feel his presence near,
And so, while sings the heart in me,
I sing the glad New Year!

The Two Thanksgivings:

A Story for the Season.

By Amanda M. Hale.

THE train was coming in; a great red eye shone out of the distant gloom and steadily grew nearer and nearer. Robert Russel thought of the fabled Cyclops and of that scene in Dombey where crafty Carker meets his terrible doom.

In a moment more the huge iron creature glided by him and stopped.

"Russel, my dear fellow, how are you?"

The heartsome tone rang sweet and clear through the small Babel of sounds, and the familiar fascination speedily wound its thrall about him.

"So, you've come, St. John!" and Robert stood holding his friend's hand in quite a glow of emotion, but outwardly very quiet and still. He had no words for his gladness.

With a little puff and a premonitory whis the train passed out of the station.

"Now, then, for home!" said Russel, and both glanced at the road, shining white in the moonlight, just across the railway, and winding past the trees that hung over the brook, and by the half-ruined mill, and up the hill between the orchards and hayfields, till it lost itself in the pleasant evening dimness.

Hugh declares His Love to May.

St. John looked about him. There were the sparkling waters of the brook, the shining foam at the foot of the dam, the brown turf by the roadside, the lights of the village on the hill coming out one by one, like stars that slowly loiter into sight, and the clear November heaven.

But St. John was looking upon a far different picture—summer greenery and a warm, starlight sky, sunset tints dying in the west and May's sweet face.

"Well, Hugh!" said Russel.

The picture vanished instantly, and quick smiles swept away Hugh's gravity. He buttoned his coat and settled his muffler.

"It is pleasant to be here again; but this is not summer. How are they all at home, Robert?"

And arm-in-arm the two walked rapidly up the hill.

"All well, and expecting to see you."

"A great deal of company?"

"No; only yourself and a cousin or two."

"Only a cousin or two! Mary's or Johns?" asked Hugh, gaily.

"Mary and Lizzy Guy. Do you think I'd countenance a rival to you?" said Robert, laughingly.

"Selfish fellow! Pretending to look after my interest when you are catering to your own pleasure. How's May?"

Here was the question at last, under cover of a joke.

"May! As sweet as ever; a daily blessing, an angel in the household. Hugh, I grudge her to any man living."

They were just at the top of the hill.

"See Robbie! There's the house. A curtain is up in the parlor," said St. John.

"Yes; that is May's doing. She would make a paradise of that parlor if she had only a wooden bench and a vase of flowers. She goes about in her dainty way, and smooths down the rug, and folds up the scattered newspapers, and gives the fire a little poke and then slips out into the kitchen to mother, who is deep in pastry and puddings and all sorts of delicious mysteries. Presently you shall see the door open and May's head peep in, just to see how things look. I wouldn't exchange my sister May for the universe!"

"Not even for a cousin or two?" queried St. John.

"Nonsense, Hugh! Lizzy Guy is engaged."

"And Mary?"

"In a mere child."

"Ah! here we are now. Was that May's shadow which crossed the window? How cheerful it all looks, Robbie! May I slip in at the front door—first, you know?" exclaimed Hugh, eagerly.

The Deathbed in the Hospital.

"Yes; do so. I'll create a diversion at the other entrance."

Hugh pushed open the heavy, old-fashioned door and stepped in.

"The other door, May."

"No, pipe."

"Yes, May," said Lizzie Guy.

But May ran into the front entry, forgetting a light.

"That you, Robbie, dear?"

"No, not Robbie."

"Oh, Mr. St. John; how do you do?"

And now he held her hand and looked into her soft, bright eyes, and heard her voice in pleasant, genial talk. He sat by the open fire with old Rover at his feet, and was folded around by the thousand charms of this genial New England home, and everything was just as he had told himself it would be all those fifty miles in the railway-car. Just as he all those fifty miles in the railway-car. Just as he had dreamed it would be for a month past, while he sat in his office waiting for clients that did not come, and saw May's face in the coals; telling himself all the time that he had no right to think of her or of any of the dear things that he associated with her. Home and the tenderness and joy of love were not for him—at least not yet. A briefless lawyer! And Hugh St. John asked himself of his prospects, and talked of what he would do when he sat on the bench, and made his friends merry; but he secretly copied manuscript at so much a page, and pondered gloomily on the ill-fortune that separated him from happiness and May.

A friendless man—mother and sisters long ago dead—the tears would come to his eyes as, going his solitary way in the street, he peeped into pleasant rooms, where the red light shone out into the early night, and little children were playing. Homeless, too. You would not call a bedroom in a hotel and a seat at a dreary dining-table by any name so dear.

A certain fastidiousness of taste—he did not claim any merit for it—kept him away from certain and the common places of amusement; only dropping into the theatre when there was an occasional glimpse of real art to be had; shut out from concerts and oratorios by the want of money, spending an hour or two sometimes in a picture-store, and going home to his lodgings to calculate how many pages of paper he could cover before midnight. He was standing, when—standing on the Common, one evening, watching the crowds of the laboring people who were there, come from squalid homes to breathe enough but happy for the time at least—some one tapped him on the shoulder, and Robert Russell's frank eyes smiled his pleasure. Out of that had grown summer visits to Milford, a fast friendship with Robert, his love for May and this happy Thanksgiving time.

He looked out of the window just before retiring. Mr. Russell had said there would be snow before morning. Then of course there would be a sleighride, perhaps he should drive May, across the sky dial on the moon. That was because he was not versed in the weather signs. What was that gradual withdrawing of the stars, that steel gray mist which covered the moon's face, that shrill wind that whistled in the elms? What were these but foretokens of crystalline flakes that ere many hours came down in jostling eager crowds, and by morning hid the earth from sight, transformed the fenceposts into marble pillars and made the trees like gigantic forests of coral, such as appear in the translucent recesses of tropical seas, only a thousand times magnified.

Hugh St. John was already in the breakfast-room when May entered, playing with the pet of the household, and making futile attempts at conversation with her shy cousin, Mary Guy. He looked so bright and happy that May found herself thinking he must like to be there. Her brother Robbie had told her how lonely St. John lived, had shown her glimpses of poverty such as she, in her sheltered and affluent home, knew nothing of. Partly Robbie had told her, and partly she had guessed, how bravely trials had been met and turned into help.

Such women as May are most easily won by fine heroism, especially if it be that sort that does not court applause. Perhaps St. John did not know this; I am sure that, if he did, he would have been far from claiming the title of hero for himself.

Just now he was thinking only of the enjoyment that came to him from May's presence and the society of the gay, pleasant people around him. Over the musical clatter of silver and china rose the cheerful mingling of voices. Into the light interchange of wit and sentiment scraps of graver thought strayed unawares; political matters were discussed, and May found herself listening for a reply to her father's question:

"In such a war, who would fight?"

"I, for one!"

May looked at St. John. The genial face could be stern and grave. It was so now. May noted the kind blue eyes, the sensitive lips, and remembered the tenderness that forbade him to shoot the wild rabbit which he said Robbie had started from its cover; and, somehow, it seemed so impossible a thing that St. John should ever take part in any strife that was shifted.

"You fight, Mr. St. John! We know you better."

His color deepened. Was it anger May was frightened?

"I don't mean that you haven't courage. Of course, every one—at least, every man has that, but I don't believe you have any of the fighting blood."

"I don't know how to defend myself, Miss May," said St. John.

Then, turning to Mr. Russell:

"I think you are in error, sir. If what I anticipate does ever occur, we shall see such an uprising of the people as no nation ever before witnessed."

Mr. Russell pished and fumed and depreciated so much ado about a few negroes, and wished the abolitionists were at the bottom of the Red Sea; and said he had always prophesied that they would ruin the nation, and finished by declaring that the editor of the Tribune ought to be hanged. Mr. Russell was a representative of his class. He had a strong mind, but not a broad one. He could follow a subject along a straight course of reasoning, but reject along a straight course of reasoning, but was quite incapable of appreciating the higher intuitions.

He stood firmly upon his own rights, and demanded alike forbearance from other people. He was opposed to innovation because it was innovation.

If he had been born at the South he would have held slaves, and defended his right to do so by Scripture and reason. Having been born at the North, he was a country squire, and a little indolent, rust, but kind in the main, considering himself with his doing all in his power to block the wheels of the car of progress, a labor which must eventually be to his own detriment.

"You foolish child," said Robbie, meeting May in the entry and detaining her by catching at one of her curls. "What do you know about Mr. St. John's fighting blood? He is no carpet knight, May."

"I didn't mean he was a coward, but he is too tenderhearted to fight, Robbie. I should as soon think of you, and what a brave soldier you'd make!!!

"Should I, May? Don't laugh at me. Wait till Achilles hears that you consider me a coward, Hugh. You ought to have seen him face the whole class when they undertook to have an unlucky French. I tell you he has pluck, and I believe he'd be a war he will, if he thought it the first to go into it."

"What nonsense, Robbie! A war! You're dreaming. Isn't Christmas coming, and peace on earth and good will to men? I'm sure you would think of what that means they would not indulge in foolish talk of war. As for Mr. St. John, I shall believe him when he tells me he's changed his mind."

"You're not a good physiognomist, May. The blue-eyed men are the warriors, and the gray eyes are the philanthropists."

"And a philanthropist is a man who feeds his neighbors' children and lets his own starve."

"Cant, Miss May!"

"Are you eavesdropping, Mr. St. John? What is cant, pray?"

"A lie which rascals have told until they've induced respectable people to use it. A bit of senseless folly which, by being repeated, has grown to sound like wisdom. The language which hypocrisy chooses to mask in."

"You shall set up for a new Noah Webster at once, Mr. St. John. Now, can you define a sleighride?"

And the trio began to lay plans for the day's amusement.

First, there were the services in the church—already would-be worshipers were there—there were walks, and calls, and games, and the ride. At one time it seemed as though the ride would be crowded out, but it kept its place. Mr. Russell, St. John the elements which make it enjoyable were the exhilaration of the rapid drive home in the short, golden twilight, and May's presence all the time. How it fell out that he was placed next to May at the dinner-table Hugh St. John did not know, but that felicity came to him unexpectedly, and it was not at all impaired by the fact that it was opposite to them, and testifying his admiration for May by scarcely removing his eyes from her during the repast, sat the shadow of the gentle, blameless young bachelor of mild and inoffensive manners; Hugh Russell had gratified his kind feeling and satisfied his conscience by asking Mr. Osgood. Mr. Russell had resented the imputation of being an irreligious man, therefore it seemed to him a very proper and desirable thing that a minister should be present at the dinner-table to say grace. Mr. Russell himself would not have thought of taking such a liberty. Here there was the fact. Mr. Osgood was present for the express purpose of vicarious piety.

Hugh did not in the least mind the admiring looks that he bent upon May.

He did her justice, and believe that she would be insensible to Mr. Osgood's attractions, and, since he had a little bit of the Bohemian in his nature, he lived for the time in the sunshine of her sweet presence and dismissed the future.

The moon rose broad and golden that night, making the new-fallen snow glitter like silver dust, and bringing out the clump of evergreens at the foot of the garden in bold distinctiveness.

Missing May a moment from the parlor, Hugh thought he saw a figure in the garden. He threw on his coat quietly. May stood at the head of the walk leading down to the fire, a large shawl thrown over her, only a few shreds of shining hair escaping from the folds.

"What freak is this, May?"

The tone was affectedly stern, but he had never called her by her name before, and May looked up, the color flashing all over her face. In a moment, by an uncontrollable impulse, Hugh had bent his head and kissed the warm red to his lips, and he knew that she loved him, saw it in the downcast eyes and knew it by the broken words that failed to speak themselves into wisely sentences. When they went in, and Hugh whispered a word to Robbie, that called out a joyful exclamation, when an hour later he heard Mr. Russell timidly tell him good night, it was borne in almost overwhelmingly to Hugh's heart that all this was happiness beyond his deserts.

"Yes, this has been a very happy Thanksgiving," said Mr. Russell, in a tone as if it was to have been expected. Persons of his stamp seem to imagine that they have a sort of claim upon Providence, and rely upon justice being done to them with an implicit confidence that would be beautiful if it were real faith.

The well-meaning conservative squire had indeed a good deal to be thankful for. He might, it is true, have looked for a richer match for May, but he was not greedy of money, and St. John would be sure to win fame, which was better than gold. And Robbie! Ah, here was where his parental pride pleased itself most. Honest, brave, noble-hearted Robbie! Winning the prizes of high scholarship and coming out of college spotless as when he went from home an innocent boy. In a year more he would be fit to enter upon a profession. Then would it not be wise plan for Robbie and St. John to consolidate their talents. Mr. Russell, with his usual sagacity, saw at once the advantages of such an arrangement, and he retired to dream about it.

As for Hugh and May, into the first delicious dream of love no practical considerations intruded.

"One thing you must promise me, Hugh," said May; "whatever you do, you must love me most. I have set my heart upon that, and it would kill me if you did not." Hugh was surprised at the passionate tone. It was a new revelation.

"Why, May, I didn't think you would be so exacting. But what could come between you and me?"

"Oh, I don't know," and May shook her head solemnly, throwing the golden curls into sweet disarray.

"Various things might. But one thing—you mustn't expect sacrifices of me. I am not equal to them. I couldn't bear to be wretched. You know I've told you I'm sunshine."

"And you always shall, dear May; but even I cannot ward off all trials. The inevitable discipline of life must come."

"Don't speak it; we will not have it. Why cannot we be good without it? God has always been very good to me—best of all now."

Was it wrong to accept the graceful heap and pray that it might never be bowed with sorrow. And so on, into the still moonless hours, faded this happy Thanksgiving.

The snow lay in white stillness, the hurrying brook sang under the ice, the grim firs stood in quiet majesty—the earth ticked away the hours and the sleepers dreamed.

Hugh St. John sat in his office. The last hours of April were passing. Summer April's he had been in Boston—the sweet country air and sights and sounds; now the late drops of a shower fell upon the window, a border of green hurt in the courtyard below, and the sun and the dull brick walk, a troop of doves cooed in placid content upon the opposite eaves, and he did not heed any of them. He was struggling grimly upon the table—it had grown from a spray that May had given him—was coming into blossom unnoticed. Business came now in good earnest. Little fees were dropping in now; there was not so much calculating and close economy, yet with work lying all about him, Hugh St. John sat idle. Care-worn, stern, too, was the cloud that smiles that once in a while played over his face were sober lights.

A hand was held quickly upon the door. Hugh turned. "Ah, Robbie! I'm glad to see you. I've been awaiting you."

"And I you, Hugh. Do you know what has happened?" Robbie's bright face looked years older than it had a week ago.

"Yes; I know that troops are called out, and that we're to have a terrible war."

"You believe that will be real fighting?"

"Robbie, the country will need every man." Hugh walked about the room a moment, and then back and laid his hand on Robert's shoulder. He spoke low and as if the words were hard to say:

"I must go, Robbie; what will May say?"

"God knows. The child has never had any trouble."

"She told me once I must not expect sacrifices of her," said Hugh.

"She will rise to the level of the hour," exclaimed Hugh, his own heroic spirit waking. "The women of our country are ready to prove unequal to the time. I tell you, Robbie, it is sublime to be living now. A year of life, with the feelings that crowd it now, is worth a lifetime of dreary, lifeless ease. May will think so. She will bid me go."

"Don't count upon that, Hugh!" There was a silence. Hugh's face grew darker and sterner.

"I will go," he said. "I knew there would be war. I have known it for months, and known too that if there was I must take part. If I did not I should be false to all the opinions I have professed in the past. I could never hold up my head among men. I must be true to my convictions. I should be unworthy of May if I faltered."

There was a long, thoughtful pause.

Hugh had put into words the thought that had been troubling him. He had taken the first step, and had gained an advantage. He could smile and speak more easily.

"Well, Robbie?"

"Nearly three days had undergone a half dozen changes in the last five minutes.

"I'm glad you've spoken, Hugh. It gives me courage to say that I too will go—if it does not seem foolish, dear Hugh, to say so. I haven't the look of a soldier, I know. I shouldn't make any great figure as a general, but I shall fill one place, and my life will be as good a sacrifice as another's."

Robert spoke rapidly but cheerfully. The tears started to St. John's eyes.

"Why, Robbie!" looking at the slight, delicate figure and the sensitive, boyish face.

"I don't know that you ought to go. Such strong fellows as I am have no right to stay at home, but—"

Robert broke in impatiently, "I have never had a day's sickness in my life. Do you think I have no patriotism?"

Hugh thought bitterly of the chance that some miserable rebel bullet might extinguish that young, ardent life, and felt that he couldn't bear it.

"Your father never will consent to it," he burst forth impetuously.

"I am afraid he won't," and Robert sat down drearily.

"What are they doing down at Milford?" asked Hugh presently.

"I don't know. I am just from New York. This is Saturday. Go home with me to-night and see."

Hugh assented, dispatched his business, locked up his office and went.

Around the station there was the usual familiar, pleasant quiet. The April air was soft and warm. The brook sang a richer song. The sunshine fell brightly on the old mill and the road wound between green banks. As Hugh reached the hill Hugh suddenly uttered a quick exclamation. Robbie started, pulled off his cap, and shouted, for there, against the still sky, catching the glow of heaven and the rose of sunset upon its folds, so high that only the birds could touch it, inspiring and for ever glorious, the flag raised its stars and stripes to the wind. A little farther on a handbill placarded upon a fence caught the attention of our friends:

"Meeting to-night in the Town Hall! Young men to the rescue! The Hon. Mr. Russell and other distinguished speakers will be present."

"Why, Robbie, the town's alive!"

It was indeed.

A stolid old farmer, ploughing in a field by the way, called to them to ask the news.

People read the Journal and the Tribune on their way home from the Post-office. The boys had become infected with the martial spirit, and were beating the reveille upon a superannuated drum.

They overtook Mr. Russel just in front of his own house. He faced about and welcomed them warmly, saying, "I was just on the right time. Hugh, we shall make use of your talents. Robbie, half the young men are eager to enlist."

The stiff had reached the parlor and unfolded. Even there it presented a little ruffled. She had been thinking that Robbie might want to go.

May came to meet them, and Hugh's heart almost faltered for a moment. She was looking a little pale, quieter and sweeter than ever, a little restless too, and going often out of the room. Mr. Russell had not believed May would take no part. But she was working on a coarse gray woollen fabric, whose destiny Hugh quickly guessed.

"I am thinking of going to the country, May," said Mr. Russel, "our men should have you captain."

"Nothing would suit me better," exclaimed Hugh, with enthusiasm, but then seeing the turned to May—and saw the deadly pallor overspread her face, and the work fall from her trembling fingers.

"I'm glad you like it. It can be done, I am sure," she said, and her lip and her will shed some tears, but we shall get over that in thinking how proud we shall be of our hero. Robbie will comfort me, meanwhile."

But May had fled.

Hugh sat a little longer marvelling at the change in Mr. Russell, at the impulse which had made a conservative blood in motion, and then went to find May.

"Father," said Robbie as soon as Hugh had left them, "haven't you thought I want to go?"

"Nonsense, boy. There are plenty who can be spared, great strong, lusty fellows like Hugh. If he was needed last there'll be time enough for you to go yet."

It would break my heart, Robbie," said his mother, with falling tears. "Wait a little, my son."

And Robbie waited gloomily and half ashamed of himself.

Hugh St. John found May in a corner of the parlor, crouching over her work and trying to sew with tear-blind eyes.

"May is changed into April," said Hugh tenderly.

"Hugh, this is cruel."

"It is not, May. I did not know how bitter it would be till now. You will strengthen me if I waver, May."

"I cannot let you go. Out of all the world I only asked for you. You do not think I can give you up."

It was hard to resist the tender words, the soft touch of the clinging hands, the sweet eyes.

"May, don't tempt me," he whispered. "Other men have loves as true as mine. They will go. What am I that I should be spared?"

"You think me selfish, Hugh. I cannot help it. I told you I could not make a heroine."

"And May, what if this should be God's way to lead you to higher good?"

May shook her head. "It's of no use to talk in that way, Hugh. I cannot look at it as you. There is nothing heroic in me. If you go, I must bear it, but I would rather die now," said May, in a dreary tone quite at variance with her eyes.

St. John touched the feverish cheeks, smoothed out the golden curls all disheveled.

"Yes, you will and God speed you," he pleaded.

"I will pray that he will keep you at home," May said in sobs.

And Hugh, loving her better in her weakness than in her ordeal, put it out of his mind, and forced himself away from May.

They all went to the meeting in the evening.

Mr. Russel harangued the audience, talked of the glory of dying for the Union, and dwelt upon the immortal honor that would attend the soldier's name. It fell coldly upon Hugh's heart, but seemed to move the crowd immensely. A full company volunteered at once.

"If I looked at the war as your father does I am not sure that I should go," said Hugh to May.

Mr. Russel's enthusiasm was born of national pride and military ambition, and Hugh had, or believed he had, a higher aim. This was God's war, the fiery sea through which all the American people must pass on their way to the eternal heights of immutable, impartial justice. It was discipline.

it was correction, and must be submitted to as every chastening from the same great Hand, not with resignation only, but with joyful fortitude. The days were winged. Capt. St. John had a world of work upon his hands. Only a few weeks were left him, and the last hour came too quickly. In all these busy weeks it had tried him to feel that May had no heart in it, and he looked forward to the parting with inexpressible dread. It came as all inexorable fate comes at last, not to be shirked or put by or softened. He held her in his arms, and a rain of tears and kisses fell upon her face, while he said:

"Pray to God to hold us both in his heart, May, and if I never come back don't forget that I was glad to go, and yet it is so bitter."

And then he broke away from the caresses that held him, said hoarsely to Mrs. Russel:

"Go to May," and strode out of the house, and down to the station.

The full glory of summer was abroad; it but mocked his misery. What was he among the myriads of men? What were God's purposes to him? What was a mere doing of his duty? What was anything compared with that which he left? Why might he not have stayed at home, as thousands did, making all life a holiday? Where were May's sweet presence and the home he had longed for? Gone—a mere dream—a thing of the past. What would it profit him that he had done his duty when a rebel bullet should have laid him low? The foundations of his faith were tottering under him. In this miserable mood he stepped into the cars, and was whirled away. Afterwards, lying awake in the long night or sitting in his tent in the field, peace came to him, and he could have given up life and all its dear things with as royal a spirit as the saints and martyrs of old.

The cardinal flowers by the brook were dropping their scarlet petals upon its lucent tide, and along the edge of the meadow the blue of the fringed gentians was beginning to burst its enveloping sheath.

It was a time when, floating dreamily along with the summer hours, one wakes with a sudden pain to find that it is autumn. All things have suddenly grown old.

There was another gathering in the Town Hall to stimulate the drowsy patriotism of the village. It is very easy to say and do heroic things in a fervid burst of enthusiasm—it is not so easy to keep the heroic flame burning through all vicissitudes.

Mr. Russel was not upon the platform.

His zeal had flagged of late.

The purpose of the war had been perverted, he said. He was for the Constitution and the Union.

There was a persistent call for him, and at last he rose, but his words had strangely lost their power. Yet he urged his fellow-citizens to volunteer for the defence of their country. He was still willing to shed the blood of his neighbors and friends in defence of the Constitution and the Union.

His speech fell flat upon the audience. There were even a few hisses. One adopted citizen cried out, very indiscreetly,

"Why don't the ould aristocrat send his own son? The likes of him ain't too good to go."

Great confusion followed this sarcastic thrust and when order was restored the chairman remarked that the enlistment papers were upon the table, and he trusted that the patriotism of the audience would eagerly respond to this new call.

It must be admitted that the audience manifested very little eagerness. A blank silence followed, and just as it was becoming awkward and painful Robert Russel walked up the aisle and quietly put his name upon the paper. There was a momentary pause of astonishment, and then cheer rose upon cheer, and one man after another came up till the quota was full.

Mr. Russel was taken unawares. He had never meant Robbie should go. It was very well for others—for St. John, even—and patriotism was a good thing, and he was in favor of the war, if it could be carried on according to his ideas, but that Robbie should go—he had never meant to allow it. He was seriously angry, and anger, in the Russel nature, signified a resentment not easily appeased.

So he parted coldly from his son, let him think that his father believed him disobedient and foolish, and thus added another pang to the grief that wrung Robbie's heart.

After he was gone a certain silence and habit of watching fell upon the household—such as so many circles have learnt to know. There was the eagerness for the daily paper mixed with shrinking dread—the half-averted face and breathing heart when the postmaster looked over the letters. And so the months passed. May was slowly growing into the knowledge of life's real meaning.

Once Robbie wrote: "Dear May, to think that you should be missing the sublime lessons of this war!" May was just beginning to apprehend some of them.

The poor Irish girl in the kitchen, overwhelmed with sorrow because her lover, who went so bravely to the wars, could never come back, became very near to her.

One day some one sent her a photographic copy of the Freedman. May, who had never cared about any great moral question, hated politics and knew as little of suffering as a princess, cried over it, and by a sudden illumination divined the sorrows of the whole race. The words of the old hymn known in childhood, and sung a hundred times mechanically, flashed upon her with a new significance:

> Shall I be carried to the skies
> On flowery beds of ease,
> While others fight to win the prize
> And sail through bloody seas?

Why, in comparison with one of those brave souls who every day freely offered the rich sacrifices of life, she was unworthy of God's care. Going down into the valley of humiliation she found herself upon spiritual heights, where airs from Heaven blew fresh and strong, and outlooks were obtained of the holy land.

One morning, when the shrill November wind was piling the dead leaves high in the paths, the journal came as usual. There had been a cavalry skirmish—a small affair, in which few troops were engaged and the loss trifling—only one man killed. A thousand eyes had idly glanced over the paragraph, none followed on to the name of the soldier in such agonizing terror as May.

"Mortally wounded, First Lieut. Robert Russel."

Ah me! as if it would not break any heart, as if it were a common thing, a slight piece of news!

"God has stricken me heavily, my child."

That was all Mr. Russel could say, and this was what he said all that black day. He was quite incapable of action, and when May said she must go to Robbie, assented as if it were quite natural that she alone should go.

And May left her mother, striving to hide her own grief, and set out on her journey. Everybody was very kind to her, and she found all her difficulties smoothed, she scarcely knew how.

Waiting, after three days, in the station-house at Washington, she was not at all surprised to see Hugh come in.

"Dear May, Robbie is looking for you."

He led her to him, past the long lines of white beds each with its pale sufferer, awestruck and trembling, but sustained by an unseen hand.

Was that Robbie? Helpless, shattered, parched with fever, and with the gray shadow of death upon his face. He brightened up at the sight of her and kissed her as she bent over him, caressing her curls in his old tender way. "Darling May, I knew you would come. Tell father; he will forgive me now for coming. God wanted me more that he did. And, May, if you could think a little differently for Hugh's sake, dear fellow." He wandered a little—then cried, half rising:

"May, you should have seen my men charge. What was it, May? Into the jaws of death—May! May! I'm not sorry I came."

He lay quietly, breathing softly—then, opening his eyes and waving his hand with all his own boyish grace, he cried:

"Forward!"

And so, in a moment, was immeasurably distant.

"How long will it be before we can start, Hugh?" asked May an hour afterward.

"A few hours—we will go at noon."

"Then I shall be busy among the soldiers. The doctor told me help was urgently needed."

And May flitted from bed to bed, a wonder and a blessing, with her soft voice, her pitying touch, her golden hair, and meek, sorrowful eyes.

Mr. Russel sat in his parlor at home. Everything spoke of Robbie. Even the dog at his feet showed, in his half-human way, his knowledge that something was gone wrong. But it was not of these things Mr. Russel was thinking—scarcely even of Robbie.

Doubtless no less a shock would have shown him his own heart. Passages of Scripture came thronging to his mind—words he had listened to all his lifetime, comfortably applying them to the miserable sinners that lived before the flood. Now they came home to him saying, unmistakably:

"Thou art the man!"

It was all just the same to Hugh as it was a year agone—the crisp November air, the brook singing under the thin ice, the white line of road winding past the mill and by the elms, and up the hill and on into the far night—only May was by his side. But where was Robbie?

"What day is this?" asked Mr. Russel, after they had sat in silence a long time.

"This is Thanksgiving Day, papa," said May, softly.

"And Robbie is lying dead in the other room."

"Oh, papa!"

"Don't cry, May. Last year he was mine, and I gloried in him, and was proud of him. Now God has taken him, and if I would not lose Robbie I must go along the same path he went."

Mr. Russel rose and left the room. He came back after a little, softened and calm.

They all drew near each other. The night grew old. A few flakes of snow waned slowly downward, and the stars went out in the gloom.

In a thousand homes sorrow was forgotten in sleep—around a thousand lives perpetual night had closed—but in heaven the unsleeping angels sang continually, and mortal woe and weakness was become immortal joy and strength.

Oh, my country! By such red baptism must thou be consecrated—through such sacrifices sealed with the sign of the cross.

So must we bear the sins of the past, that the future may be absolved from sorrow—that out of the ashes of our desolation may spring again the undying flame of national honor—a new phœnix, a bird of Jove, majestic and beautiful, and spotless as the unstained heavens!

A GAMBLING SCENE AT PIKE'S PEAK.

ONE of our most meritorious rising painters gives us, in this elaborate sketch, a scene often witnessed at the goldfields in this country and Australia. Money lightly got is freely spent, and though the toils of the miner to reach the land where the sands or primeval quartz are mingled with the precious metal cannot be accounted light, yet the fact that he actually gathers in a golden harvest makes it so, and none more freely part with their store than these men. Hence gambling abounds; and the strange scene appears of men unshorn, unkempt, shoeless and ragged, gambling away, madly and constantly, gold needed for their own comfort. The picture shows every phase of the game: the wily, unconcerned keeper of the hell, the anxious gambler, another besotted by liquor, the coarse and vulgar, the drawn knife and revolver, with some whose countenances are redeemed by higher civilization. The principal figure in attire of a sailor, drawn away by one of a nobler mien, is a portrait of the despair, stupefaction and self-reproach of the ruined gambler. The picture will well repay study and examination.

THE SILENT HALL.

BY WILLIAM WIRT SIKES.

SEEST thou yonder vacant hall?
  Seest thou its dark shadowed space?
Closed the windows, shuttered tall,
  Stillness fills the lonely place.

Once her merry echoes fell
  Where yon walls in silence stand—
Once yon hall was lovèd well;
  There, years gone, I held her hand.

There I felt her kisses warm
  Throbbing on my restless lips,
There we heeded never storm
  Tossing treasure-hoarders' ships.

She my jewel, I her crown;
  King and queen, right royal we;
Cared we for no mortal frown—
  Wanted we none argosie.

Yonder vacant hall has seen
  Blisses none could sweeter be;
All is past! where she has been,
  Nevermore she waits for me!

BROWN VS. BROWNE.

MY name is John Achilles Brown. I have borne it for forty-seven years, and I flatter myself that it is a pure American name; there are no false pretences about it; it stands for what it represents, nothing more, nothing less. I live in Twenty-fourth street west, New York, write my income with five figures, pay my taxes regularly, and vote for the Government, from which I generally get two or three small contracts a year; add to this that I have a charming wife—she belongs to the Van Rinkles of the Fifth avenue—an obedient family, a good cellar and a first-rate cook, and you will acknowledge that I possess in me and around me all the necessary elements to make me, if not a happy man, at least a contented one.

Well, sir, it is far from being so, and here I stand one of the most unfortunate beings on this planet; my sleep is haunted, my cup is embittered; I shudder when somebody pronounces the name of Brown behind me, and it is with a feeling of apprehension that I scan my morning paper and look at the police reports.

I have not even the consolation left to me to go to law for redress, for the cause of all my misfortune, the nightmare which haunts me, the poisoner who pours bitters and gall in my nectar, the sword hanging over me every second of my life is—must I confess it?—my neighbor Jack Alva Browne with an "e."

To record the numberless annoyances to which that neighborhood has subjected me would fill a volume. I will pass under silence the letters delivered wrongly at my place, and vice versa; the sundry orders from the pastrycook paid by me Brown, and eaten and never accounted for by my homonym with an "e;" the repeated visits of the tax collector claiming from me an amount due by that sempiternal neighbor; but I must tell you of what happened to me not later than yesterday. I forbore to complain till then, but it was the roseleaf—roses indeed!—thrown in the full cup, and here it overflows. We were at breakfast; I had just gone through one column of the Herald, while my wife and my daughter held a most lively discussion about Miss Chase's bridal parure, and I was in the act of buttering my third muffin, when the servant put into my hands a card, of which I forward a fac-simile:

CAPTAIN BLUNDERBUSS,
ASTOR HOUSE.

He mentioned also that the gentleman who delivered it requested to see me immediately on urgent business. I grumbled at the annoyance of being bored at mealtimes, especially by strangers, and relinquishing my robe de chambre and slippers, I prepared to receive the unwelcome visitor.

"My dear," said my wife, "above all, do not get excited."

Now, if there be anything in the world which tends to ruffle my temper and to roughen the habitual smoothness of my nature it is to be told not to get excited. So I launched at once in a passion, and it was with anything but feelings of goodfellowship that I entered my study, where Captain Blunderbuss was waiting.

The captain was a man of about forty, with a very military air and an immense black moustache, which he was stroking most fiercely.

"Mr. Brown, I suppose," said he, in a very stern voice.

I nodded assent.

"You can hardly be surprised at my visit," added he, "after what happened last night," and he looked at me knowingly. "Count Papageno has related to me the whole of the occurrence, and I beg you will favor me with the name of your friend, to arrange preliminaries."

Rather taken aback by this introduction, I assured the captain that I knew nothing about the occurrence he alluded to, and that Count Papageno was a complete stranger to me.

"I am sorry to see," replied he, articulating every word most energetically, "that a gentleman of your standing requires to have his memory refreshed under such circumstances. However, as it is so," and his lip curled, "here are the bare facts: You were last night at Wallack's. Coming out of it, you entered the Lafarge House; a political discussion was entered into, and after having hurled all your arguments at my friend, you tried to force your own ideas upon him by breaking your stick on his shoulders. Now, sir," and he rose from his seat, "what have you got to answer?"

By this time indignation fairly choked me.

"Sir-r-r-r!" said I, "if this is a joke, it is of a very questionable nature. I have already told you that the whole of your statement is Hebrew to me, and I must decline hearing any more of it. I wish you very good-morning," and I reached the bell-handle.

"Stop," said the captain. "Stop, sir; I will very soon convince you," and he fumbled in his pocket, muttering something about white feather. Having produced a small thin package, he placed it in my hand. "Look at this, Mr. Brown—look at this, and I dare say you will soon recover your memory."

I opened the parcel. It contained a fragment of a goldmounted cane.

"Well, sir?" said the captain.

"Well, sir," replied I, as fairly puzzled as before.

"Does this satisfy you?" and his finger pointed to the golden top.

I looked. There it stood—"J. A. BROWNE, New York!" All was evident to me from that instant. It was another shaft from my neighbor's quiver.

I explained the "e" to the captain. He apologised, repapered the fragment of the cane and five minutes later I had the satisfaction to see him ringing most ferociously at the door of my neighbor.

"My dear," said my wife, "all this is in consequence of a low neighborhood. Why not have a brown stone front in Madison or Fifth avenues, like the Jenkinses, the Beadles, the——"

Here I picked up my hat and ran off.

A NEW HAIR-OIL.

DAVID and Robert, two young men noted for their careful toilets, lodged at a house where the servant girls take their share of hair-oils, tooth-powders, and use the hairbrushes and cologne water regardless of expense. The young men, dwelling together, were in the habit of getting a pint of hair-oil made up by the druggist at a time; and, finally, they were in the habit of finding that a pint of this costly hair-oil wouldn't last a week, and that all the servant girls in the house emitted the same perfume that they did. It was not long before they came to a conclusion in the matter. So one evening, when the hair-oil bottle was empty, they took the bottle which contained it and straight they went to the chemists. They got a mixture of various articles in a bottle, and the following was marked on the prescription-book as the contents:

"Of lac assafœtida (which, for the information of our readers, we will state is a highly concentrated extract of that delicious drug), one ounce.

"Of liquor potassa (a fluid celebrated for its corrosive quality, having the power of taking the hair off a dog in ten seconds), half an ounce.

"Of balsam fir (the stickiest and gummiest article known), one ounce.

"Of honey, one ounce.

"Of alchohol, to make the ingredients fluid, half a pint."

This was well shook and deposited in the usual place occupied by the hair-oil. The next day (Sunday) Dave and Bob dressed themselves for church and travelled downstairs. But they came up again in a few minutes and secreted themselves in a room adjoining theirs, where they could see everything that went on. After the people of the house had gone, two or three servant girls came into the next room.

"Whist, Molly," said a large red-haired one; "Misther Dave has more of the ile, and my hair is as dhry as powdher; let's have a regular go wid the folks all away."

This was acceded to, and they all went to oiling their locks, being very lavish of the fluid, which was quite thin, in consequence of the alcohol.

In a few minutes redhead says:

"Whirra, what smills so?" with her nose turned skyward.

"Sure it's the parfume," interrupted a short and dumpsey specimen, with her hair down her back.

"Parfume, indeed!" says the redhead, "that's not parfume—it's the rale bad smell."

"Eh," says the dumpsey, "it's a parfume used by the quality."

This satisfied redhead, and after a thorough "ileing" they left the room. In about two hours the lodgers came home from church.

"Good gracious! what is it? Bless my soul, Mr. G., I shall faint! Oh, my dear, there must be an unclean animal in the room!" and a thousand other expressions were heard, as the lodgers got a sniff at the perfumery when they entered the house. The master and mistress of the house were puzzled, confounded, indignant, and in vain endeavored to discover the locality of the smell. At dinner-time there were not half a dozen boarders at the table, and those that were there were rapidly thinking of backing out, as the three girls who were "iled" were waiting on them.

Finally, dinner was given up, and with doors and windows opened the inmates alternately froze and suffocated. The day was a dire one to them, but soon it wore away.

At night the three girls attempted to comb their hair. The alcohol had evaporated, leaving the balsam of fir and honey, and they might as well have attempted to comb a bunch of shingles. At the first dash that redhead made her comb caught, and by the influence of the potassa at the roots the whole mass of the front came off redhead's cranium, which she discovered with a yell that would have made a cannibal envious. The same result attended the rest of the hair, with the exception of enough to do up as a scalp lock to ornament with feathers, in the Indian style. The two other girls met the same fate, and about ten o'clock that night they might have been seen wrapping up their lost locks in pieces of paper. The next morning they were informed by their mistress that she did not desire to employ baldheaded servant-girls, and with their "chists" they departed in almost a scalped condition.

The discovery of Dave and Bob's connection with the transaction was not known until lately, but their toilet articles since then have been sacred from touch.

A BACHELOR says: "A woman will cling to the chosen object of her heart like a 'possum to a gum tree, and you can't separate her without snapping strings no art can mend, and leaving a portion of her soul on the upperleather of your affections. She will sometimes see something to love where others see nothing to admire; and when fondness is once fastened on a fellow, it sticks like glue and molasses in a bushy head of hair."

AN American editor closes his leader in this unhappy strain: "The sheriff's officer is waiting for us in the other room, so we have no opportunity to be pathetic; we are wanted, and must go. Delinquent subscribers—you have much to answer for! Heaven may forgive you, but we never can."

"WHY don't you wheel that barrow of coals, Ned?" said a miner to one of his sons; "it is not a very hard job. There is an inclined plane to relieve you."

"Ah," said Ned, "the plane may be inclined, but hang me if I am."

THERE are no other creatures in nature that can charm like women and snakes.

A GAMBLING SCENE AT PIKE'S PEAK.—FROM AN ORIGINAL SKETCH.

THE WAR IN SOUTH CAROLINA—BATTERY ON SULLIVAN'S ISLAND.—FROM A REBEL PHOTOGRAPH.

THE WAR IN VIRGINIA—SOLDIERS LOOKING AT A SHOW NEAR CULPEPER.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, R. FORDES.

THE FUTURE'S RAINBOW.

From the dim enchanted Future leans a picture
strangely sweet,
Like the bow that spans the Heavens when the rain and sunshine meet;
Through the rain of sorrow, falling o'er a waste of blighted bloom,
Beams the sunlight of the Future, lighting up the dreary gloom.
Oh! that picture rare and radiant! Oh! that picture strangely sweet,
Like the bow that spans the Heavens when the rain and sunshine meet.

In a cottage, sunshine, embowered—singing birds about the door,
Sunshine streaming through the window on the dainty cottage floor.
Roses climbing round the porches like some merry
elfs at play,
Rare vines drooping graceful tendrils, in a fond,
enduring way.
O'er the floors that open softly to the pleasant rooms within—
Is it strange the sweet home-picture from the Now my heart has win?
Is it strange the Present's shadows o'er my heart
can cast no gloom,
When the Future's beareth for me such as "a freight of tropic bloom?"

Is it strange my armies are shining through the folding of my tent,
When my Life hath so much gladness waiting in the hastening years?
Like some gentle night-stars leaning o'er a darkened sea below,
So the Future's sunlight streameth on the Present's bitter woe!
Oh! there stealeth in the Future, nestled in its roses
sweet,
Shining like the bow of promise when the rain and sunshine meet.
Woos my heart like gentle music of a mother's favorite song,
Borne by summer's gentlest breezes on the breast
of bloom along.
In that cottage, best beloved, shines thy tender,
worshipped face,
Making bright, with smiles of loving, all the distant sweet home place.
"Home, sweet home"—I've heard them sing it as I roamed adrift o'er tears,
Gushing for the home I cherished in the glad evanished years.
"Home, sweet home!" My heart runs gladly in an eager beat;
Smiles and tears make gorgeous tinting as when rain and sunshine meet.
"Home, sweet home!" O Father, make it fit me for the home above,
Make my homes on earth, in Heaven. O my Father, homes of love.

LADY LORNE'S STRATAGEM.

By Annie Thomas,

Author of "The Cross of Honor," "The House in Piccadilly," etc.

CHAPTER VII.—IN WHICH SIR ROBERT LOOKS SOLEMN, AND THE ANCESTRAL EYESHAMS SAD.

Audrey Lorne would have laughed and considered it the best of a semi-astounding, semi-amusing contretemps a month ago, had her trousseau been appropriated by another and her countenance-ship delayed awhile. She would have been vexed in her taste, because she herself had made her selections of robes and bonnets and bijouterie with the care and thought a pretty woman will lavish on the adornments which are destined to enhance her beauty by the richest bloom of life—her young married days. But her heart would not have been affected by the occurrence at all, and she would have been the first to soothe Evesham's impatience and side with Robert's view of things, that it would be unbecoming for a widow like Sir Robert Lorne's house while aught that could be considered proper for his sister to leave remained unsupplied.

But now the case was different. Clearly there was something preposterous in the air. She could not account to herself for the fierce pang that shot through her heart when she caught the interrogatory glance of grief in her husband's face at his wife, and read the answer shot back by the gloriously lovely and only too eloquent gray eyes.

She saw that that answer counselled delay. Had she acted on the indignation at such interference she would have been happier; but she could not take comfort to her heart with the thought that it was only indignation which she felt. It was a sudden, hot pang of sickening fear that the deferred marriage was a blow at the chain which bound the man she loved and herself together. She looked at her brother, and saw a weak expression of waiting on his wife's award; she looked at her lover, and saw in his face an expression of profound discomfort and a pallid excitement; and then she remembered that though, had the wretched trifle which conventionality was making a thing of magnitude not occurred, she would have been in a week home of his home, flesh of his flesh, one with him in sickness and health, in sorrow and joy, till death parted them; she remembered, I say, that now it was his to speak and hers to be silent, even though a word from her might settle all those wavering scruples, and bid the happy end come on speedily. And remembering this—her love and her pride up in arms against each other—sorely distrustful of something she knew not what, Audrey Lorne left the room in a sorrowful rage.

When one has been laboring for a couple of hours under the delusion that the organ, yclept a heart, has sunk to the lowest ebb of despair, it is astonishing what a shock it administers to the whole system when something unexpected occurs, and the heart goes down with rapidity to even more hopeless depths.

Audrey, during her hour's cogitation over her dressing-room fire, had declared to herself that she was profoundly miserable, under the influence of some intangible possible evil which she dreaded, she did not know why. That hour over, she roused herself sufficiently to dress and descend in her daintily becoming organisation of her fair luxuriant hair being achieved, still at intervals repeating to herself the declaration that it was of course unpleasant that she almost wished she was not going to see Eveshams until she felt in better spirits and better temper." Nevertheless, when she went down into the drawing-room and found her brother and his wife there alone, and heard from the latter, in a tone of much sympathy, that "Lord Eveshams had not felt very well, so he had gone home and left a little note for Audrey," the latter felt even more than heretofore that grief was gathering in the clouds, and that she would be drenched in the waters completely before—what?

The note was common-place and matter-of-fact enough. Audrey, reading it in the light of her indignation at his shrug of departure, could feel quite what an effort it had cost him to pen those words. His soul was tossed in a whirlwind of passion as he wrote; a less than half could be guilty, and to be liable to lead on to even greater guilt if not checked —thrown out with scorn for ever—was crushing his heart. A terrible fear of something terrible was that night, that surely would come on, seized him even before Lady Lorne had left him, and it reigned tyrannically when he was alone. He could not sit through an evening with the silent reproach of Audrey's pure, noble beauty, and Audrey's loyal, frank, open heart before him, and beating in anguisary response to his, and he had gone home and left as acknowledged it false one. He invoked a curse on the syren, whom still, with all the fierce, unreversible heat of his love he hurt, he could never to love again. And this was the frame of mind in which he had to write the few following lines, all propriety, kind and cold:

"Dear Audrey—Why have you kept away all the afternoon? leaving me to do battle alone against my old enemy, neuralgia, which has reached the maddening stage in my head. I am useless, morally, when an attack comes on; so I am off to Eveshams, hoping that the change of air, and good—it often does in such cases. Of course I shall see you in a day or two."

And then, with the customary termination, he signed himself, "Your affectionate husband," and the lie as he wrote it did not wither him up.

The pleasures of domesticity are very great, and a quiet evening at home with one's nearest and dearest friends, i.e., relations, is the truest bliss this world can offer, say the storybooks of that good old fading-out class to which all the virtues, goodnesses of life were carefully but prosily inculcated. Many people have found out that the pleasures have been rather overrated and the bliss overstated; but no one deemed them grievous to endure than did Lady and Miss Lorne on the evening in question.

Sir Robert was not quite happy either. Leonie's loveliness was something mystic, but the flush on Leonie's cheek bespoke a mind ill at ease, and Robert thought that Audrey might have noticed it and attempted to allay it by showing herself less cowrapt and displeased about something. Considering how carefully Leonie was keeping her susceptibilities as to the cause of the appropriation of Audrey's effects a profound secret, he thought that Audrey a foolish little feminine pang of jealousy at a thing no woman can ever be brought to understand; considering that she was made of all those magnanimous things, even though Audrey didn't know it, Audrey ought to be good, and grateful, and cheerful, and not to sit there looking paradise boring and tedious to my lady. Sir Robert could not did not say all this, but he looked it; and Audrey, being far from opaque, understood perfectly well what was going on in her husband's mind, and what this pang superadded to the other, viz., that her brother, whom she most dearly loved, was learning to be indifferent to her hopes and fears, pleasures and disappointments.

My lady was hot and restless, and her heart, though full of pity, was full of will schemes and wilder passions; the latter upon her own behalf not being as great and as grand as she might have been had she only been gifted with patience, was prouder than many people. Besides, now that she was bound legally and Eveshams bound honorably to another, she felt that the strongest love of which human nature was capable—it was capable of no a trifle—was given to this man to whom, in the order of things, her husband's sister would be shortly married. No wonder her cheeks were flushed and her eyes bright, and her gestures fraught with a more impassioned pantherlike grace than ever.

Is it well that we do not know the thoughts of those who are around us always; or should we gain much safety through the loss of a little peace of mind? Surely the latter; for though we have knowledge that we had the hearty contempt of the friend we loved would cause would more than counterbalance the sorrow of the loss, by the by an anxious course, we might escape being socially gnarotted by the friend we hate. The Palace of Truth would be a hideous dwelling-place for the majority of mankind.

So, on the whole, I am inclined to think it well that when Sir Robert stood with his hands resting on the velvet-covered shoulders of his most lovely wife, the while she was playing him the melodies he loved, he did not know that the active brain contained in the bright head before him was planning how she could leave him, win a higher rank, and yet save her fame, for the sake of the place she wanted in the world.

"I wish he'd clasp me to his heart!" the little fury thought, as she turned from him with impatience," and bruise my arm in doing it; I would have him up at the Divorce Court for cruelty, and swear my way to freedom and Eveshams."

At least, if these were not the identical words in which her sentiments were framed, these were the very ideas that passed through her mind as she rose to go—so, she had few redeeming points, if anymost freed herself from, but responded to, her husband's embrace.

Who does not know, who has not experienced at some time or other or another in his or her existence, an aching sense of despondency at being undervalued, and unquestionably not wanted in the society which one may be endeavoring to adorn at the time? Sometimes this feeling is born of an overweening sense of one's own importance; sometimes of a long course of self-denial, during that makes one see a foe behind every bush and a steel-blade ready to fall and cut in every look. In both of these two cases there is little or more blamewhile than deserving of sympathy; it should be fought and battled against—conquered if possible; but it is when the feeling results upon us in connection with those who have hitherto loved, and valued, and cherished us, that the sting once felt cannot be uprooted; that no struggling against, no explaining away will avail, for we know that the object of them could not have arisen had they loved us as fondly as heretofore.

By which prosing route I come gradually round to the statement of the following plain unvarnished fact. Audrey learnt, with a bitter pang, that night that she was less dear to her brother than she had been—learnt that he could be harsh and unsympathetic in his judgment of her, when he viewed her through the glamour his wife had thrown over him.

The evening passed drearily after the pretence of a meal had been gone through. Woolworkis a delightful institution, but a dreary one for three animated conversationalists round the frame, or one drearier and absorbing holder of skeins to prevent its pulling upon one's wrist, or a needle stitch after stitch in the crimson rose which she had begun upon Eveshams's sanpiece a few evenings before, she felt that woolwork could no great comfort to a heart all at ease. Lady Lorne missed her to a sort of pitying goodnature and Sir Robert with a sort of angry forbearance, and neither of these modes of treatment agreed with Audrey Lorne.

"This is the last evening I spend in this way," she thought. "Robert's intention of sacrificing me alone his own interests is mine at the feet of the wife who rules him with a magic that is not love, becomes more painfully apparent every hour that we live together. I'll have a heartbreak before whether you have done anything to deserve it or not." Audrey Lorne had not the great art of being affable soon after being angry. He deemed Audrey unreasonable—that was the way he framed it in his mind, though what poor Audrey had done to deserve such a reproach it would be hard to say. And deeming Audrey unreasonable, he thought it would be only right to let Audrey know that "them as annoy in the morning" in love here—he had hoped happily—for so many years. He wound up by saying that it would have shown better taste and temper if Audrey had not been so palpably put out by the postponement of her marriage.

"That speech was never dictated by your own heart," said Audrey, her eyes ring, scanning the workframe from her with quick, proud gesture of scornful impatiences; "it is meanly unkind, and, more than that, it is unworthy of you."

"Do you think that I prompted him, Audrey? Oh! how can you be so unjust? But no—I will not repeat what you say now. I pity you too much."

"What for?" asked Audrey; "really, Lady Lorne, one requires the patience of Job, or a donkey, to live with you two-to-night. I know of nothing connected with myself individually that can claim your pity. Is it the loss of the trousseau that you sympathise with? or is it Lord Eveshan's neuralgia? or were you so nervous when your own matrimonial prospects were on the tapis that you think, of course, mine must be defective?"

"No, I had no fear, for Robert loved me; but by your asking me that question, poor unhappy girl, you evidently fear it yourself. Don't doubt him yet, Audrey dearest; you hate me—I know that; but let me plead for your happiness against yourself. Wait; don't distrust him yet, Audrey, and all may be well."

She said it in all her sweetest tones: there was nothing in lip, or eye, or manner, or tone that could be found fault with, it sounded like an outburst of nervous affection and anxiety for Audrey; and yet if the woman had been practising for ten years instead of ten minutes she could not have put words together more deftly that would surely go well home to the heart and wound. To be told by one you hate not to "doubt and distrust" one you most dearly love is the very refinement of feminine cruelty. The gauntlet was thrown down now, and Lady Lorne and Audrey knew that they were enemies—to the death.

"I love Lord Eveshams," thought my lady, as she sat by the fire, one hand clasped in her husband's and the other shielding her cheek from the blaze. "I love him for her own sake, and only incensed her? If she cares for him as much as I do, and before my plans are matured, I am ruined as far as obtaining freedom (and a palace) is concerned."

And while she thought two women, one lofty souled, good, trustful, and pure—the other madly ambitious, passionate, and recklessly unscrupulous, were both acting at heart for him, what was the young lord lover doing to pass away the hours of that long December night?

He had ridden Cock Robin home at a terrible pace, but black care was behind him, and at Eveshams ready to receive him when he entered. He—it may seem an undignified thing to mention in connection with a man who is meant to be a hero, but these minor things are very important in the great drama of life—then his dinner was hurriedly served, and he had been supposed that he would dine at Combhurst, and the cook was disgusted at the interruption his servants made to a pate, but black care was entertained and the pate badly cooked. The room he elected to take his wine in was cold, for the fire had been suffered to go out, and the waiters it was lighted hastily it burnt under protest. The Cornhill was given up to him smelling of patchouli from the handkerchief of the housekeeper, who had been deep reading the "Roundabout Papers" and wondering what each meant, and when the serial was demanded from her aggrieved tones it was hasty for her impatient master by a sympathetic flunkey, who opened the wrong page gauge that it was a wrong thing of any one to come there and make a bother when it was reasonably anticipated that he would stop away and leave folks to enjoy themselves. All these things multiplied considerably against Lord Eveshan particularly as the comfortable evening as far as externals were concerned.

The room in which he was sitting, before the fire was not wouldn't burn well, was the library. Every library has its specialty, and theirs in generally better than any other room in a house may you gain an insight into its owner's mind. Here were books into into which Eveshams had huge, gorgeously emblazoned tomes. Some go in for ponderosity, others again for prettiness, while the majority have for what is handsome, and get properly supplied with the right kind of books wholesale. The specialty of the Eveshan library was in its books strangely enough, but in its pictures. The bookshelves ran from a few feet up the walls, and the space between the tops of them and the roof was filled entirely with fine but sombre and dyblown ancestors of the dark, gloomy man who sat by the fire and glanced round on them occasionally, with a look half scornful, half mournful.

There were relined Vandyke beauties and cavaliers; there were voluptuous dames, whose charms had been celebrated by Lely, and birds and dove carrying shepherdesses of a later date. They were all handsome, those Eveshams, men and women alike, but they hung about them which attracted most—which struck their observer most painfully to-night—was the deep shade of melancholy which lay in the steady dark eyes and on the broad resolute brows of all.

"They all—all came to bad or sad ends," he muttered; "we are doomed, we Eveshams, to be wicked or unhappy."

CHAPTER VIII.—THE PARSIMONIOUS EARL.

Perhaps the next worst thing to a beggarly mother-in-law is parsimonious one; I should be inclined myself to give precedence to badness to the mean man, but I know the way of the world in regard to the moneyless one as the greater sinner, therefore I will only claim for the Earl of Corbyn second-rate honors in the contempt of my readers.

Mention has been already made of his wife in these pages, and the lady who had tied her noble hand at "putting down" Lady Lorne, when she estimable woman first came into the neighborhood. She was the first, but by no means the last woman attempt was duly chronicled.

When she, the second daughter of the Duke of Oldstone, married the Earl of Corbyn, she knew that though, from a financial point of view she was not doing a very brilliant thing, still it was the best thing she could do. Her father had nothing to give her beyond her beauty, and that, taking into consideration what a character he had borne from the time he could speak plain, was not much to have having. However, as it was all he had to give, his daughters took it when they married, and between them made up an income for him, and pensioned him off at a London hotel while he lived; his son declined the honor of contributing to the filial purse; he regarded his father with the warm feelings sons of expensive habits are apt to have towards the fathers who have ruined them. Lady Corbyn's early married career was one struggle between the promise she had made to her sisters, and the difficulties she experienced in getting possession of a pound. The earl's income was not disclosed—his care of it was; the result was a style of living that was imposing when seen from a distance, but very uncomfortable to those within its circle.

The blood of the Corbyns was as blue as it is possible to conceive anything short of indigo could be, and the Oldmaynhams were blessed with a fluid circulating in their veins of an equally cerulean dox hue. Nevertheless the daughters of the house of Corbyn, Lady Julia, Lady Grace, and Lady Margaret, showed more boldness than blood, and were consequently spoken of even by the warmest admirers of their rank as "fine girls, but not pretty."

This last fact not even their father's being second and their grandfather a duke could alter. They were tall, they had meaty faces, rather fine blue eyes, and more than rather sandy hair; their figures were not good, and they were not graceful; but for all that they were not cast in the mould of beauty, they were plentifully gifted with feelings of profound admiration for themselves, and of the loftiest matrimonial aspirations. The youngest—Lady Margaret—had been destined by her fond parents from her cradle to be Lady Evesham; she had accepted the fate they proposed to her with a readiness that spoke as well for her taste as it did for her dutifulness, for Evesham was unexceptionable, and those little peculiarities of his which got noised abroad she paid no manner of attention to—not because, like Audrey Lorme, she loved, on the contrary, because she didn't love, and hoped that the more "strange," as she called it, that he got into the less likely he would be to marry any one else before he came in the way of her net. It had been a hard and a horrible thing to endure, when at the grand ball they (the Corbyns) gave in his honor on his return from the Continent, after coming to the title, to see him palpably fall at once a willing victim to Audrey Lorme. It had been woefully painful to endure that internal of burnishing and masterly before the match was proclaimed as a thing that really was to come off. But when the match was settled, with the beautiful bravery that comes of "blood" they made the best of it, pressed the thorn of envy closely home in secret to their right honorable bosoms, kissed Audrey in the course of a morning call of congratulation, and determined that as Margaret was not to reign at Evesham, it would be only wise to make an ally instead of a foe of the lady who was.

I have hinted that the earl was parsimonious; the countess, I may as well state here, was worse—she was a perfect screw. She had given her daughters cheap French, Italian and German governesses, and these had not imparted the best of either accents, knowledge or manners to their aristocratic charges—but with that my story has nothing to do. She would give them splendid silks—thousands of yards of ethereal tulle to hang about their gaunt persons—and the most elegant and becoming bonnets that Madame Thoumal's taste and ingenuity could devise when they were going out; but she begrudged them flannel enough to keep them warm, and was severe upon their appetites down at Corbyn, and that tradesman was unlucky who chanced to say "ma'amsant" on his counter when the countess sailed into his shop, for she was sure to have it for next to nothing.

The match of the postponed marriage was soon carried to them by that wonderful little bird who is perpetually going about with its venomous whisper. They talked of it, the mother and her three daughters, in the dressing-room of the former, before they went down to their early luncheon, which was the best meal at which they found it convenient to make their appearance, for "any old robe de chambre did for upstairs and saved dressing till it was time to go out." So now in their dingily draped, dirty-muslin, unadorned nudeness they sat and discussed the affair, and naturally enough—for were they not of the softer sex?—accused Audrey in no measured terms of every crime and folly in the calendar of feminine crimes and follies.

The extraordinary thing about a broken engagement is, that no matter what the circumstances, the woman always gets blamed as well as pitied. Those of her own sex heave huge sighs of compassion over her blighted prospects, but at the same time their pities so deprecate her claims to their compassion by elevating their eyebrows and screwing up their lips.

The Ladies Corbyn did not come to their matutinal meal in good spirits or good tempers, any more than they had in distress. They dropped in one after the other, with their sandy hair pushed away unbecomingly under nets, their cheeks leadenhued from over-sleep, and eyes dull from lack of excitement. The tea "was overdrawn," Lady Julia declared pettishly as she poured out a cup and prepared to drink it; the remark roused the countess from the perusal of a letter she had just received, and her speech when she was aroused infused new life into the whole party.

"Put the eggs in," she exclaimed, "they'll be be boiled by the time we've had prayers" (she was a very pious woman, and never omitted heating up prayers and thanksgivings every morning). "I have news, girls; there's a scandal of some sort come out at Combhurst, and Lord Evesham has started off to the Continent."

"I always thought Audrey Lorme a detestable girl," said Lady Margaret, energetically. "I am glad, though, whatever it is, that it has come out before poor Evesham was indissolubly tied up with her."

"It may not be Audrey, after all," said Lady Julia, who had not quite such good grounds for hating Audrey as her sisters had: "most probably something has been discovered about that horrid woman Sir Robert picked up in London. I always thought she had some adventuress—I always said so. Too bad of him to thrust her upon society in the way he has done, contaminating other people."

Lady Grace said not one time thought of marrying the baronet herself; therefore her virtuous indignation against the possible past of his wife was a genuine thing.

"Do let us have prayers; the eggs will be too hard," said Lady Grace.

"What a bore it is that Buckle always will carry my soft hassock away to her own room," remarked the countess, picking up the volume of "Family Devotions" in a casual kind of way. "Suppose I sit in the easy chair, and read them. I can't kneel down—it makes me sick."

"Suppose we have breakfast first," said Lady Grace. "You have not given me the food for my mind that you have Julia and Margaret; you see, I never wanted to marry either Evesham or Lorme."

"And I never heard that either of them wanted to marry you, my dear," snapped Lady Margaret.

"Precisely the remark that I was about to append to my former sentence respecting your self, my dear," replied Lady Grace. "Let us give Audrey Lorme the benefit of a doubt, and hope that it's not so bad as mamma's letter has led her imagine; you know how these things always get exaggerated."

"My correspondent is reliable," said the countess, buttering a hot roll coolly. "I tell you what we will do—send out invitations for a dinner-party today, and call on the Lormes to-morrow; we owe them a dinner and a call, and we may get at the truth that way a little."

"That nasty little wretch, his wife, is capable of writing anything out of her own head," said Lady Julia. "Who had better go with you, mamma, to-morrow?"

"Margaret and yourself, I think. Tiresome it is that the Royal Propagation subscription is due, for we must have new lace and buttons on the liveries before a dinner. I think I shall write and say I disapprove of the principles on which it is conducted; your father, as a politician, considers christianizing the heathen a mistake. I am very glad you have spoken to me, Julia, my first duty is to consult my husband's scruples."

"Well, you needn't waste your reasons for doing that in connection on mine," said Lady Grace, shaking her head. "I shan't wait for prayers now, for if the invitations are to go out to-day, they ought to be filled up and sent. I will give O'Brien one, girls, mamma; I suppose the usual people are to be asked?"

Lady Grace rose as she asked her question, and left with something like feminine coquetry, her red on more becomingly.

"Yes, the usual people," said the countess; and then she added, in a confidential way, "Your father insists that his secretary, librarian, whatever he may be, is always to be invited properly, and treated like a guest at our formal entertainments. For my part, I don't see why he should be; he chooses to sit by himself and nurse his fallen grandeur in his own study at other times, when he can have his meals in the hall of the servants, but your father is so full of whims about the wretched Irishman, that you must invite him, Grace."

"I have myself to thank that I once will object to that part of the mission at all," said her eldest sister, as Lady Grace left the room. "It's a fortunate thing for us that Lord Corbyn is lazy, otherwise I am very much mistaken if we should not have to bewail a mésalliance."

"Oh, nonsense!" said the countess. "No one with the slightest idea of appearances in their eyes would think for a moment of marrying a servant."

And then they finished their eggs, and being now quite warm and comfortable, said their prayers with much unction.

The late Earl of Corbyn had been a great bibliomaniac, with more money than he knew how to spend; he had collected together, from every quarter of the globe, books and manuscripts, pamphlets and parchments, bindings and broadsides, and, in fact, he had been rather imposed upon in many of his transactions; and as his son and heir was possessed of even less knowledge of books than his father, the whole house of the Corbyn library (to which was usually prefixed the epithet of "great") was chaos.

That it was so had been pointed out to him during the last twenty years of the year of my story by a devoted but indiscreet friend; and it was to remedy all its defects, and get it in the order which the possession of the great Corbyn library to be in, that the services of Dillon O'Brien, Esq., had been secured.

Now, all kinds of persons may be expected to answer when a "nobleman of literary taste" advertises for "a librarian and amanuensis. Broken-spirited, conscientious English scholars, full of learning and full of zeal and hobbies in their grips, are sure to appear; so are mournful-eyed Italians, who call themselves counts, and have been couriers before now; so are dapper Frenchmen, wearing a professional aspect and large boots, assist to swell the list—Frenchmen who ship and gesticulate, and talk English with a shocking confession of their ignorance of all matters in heaven and earth, and under the latter, offer their animated services. But it is not often that a lord finds in their grips, or round ready to enter into the ranks of drudgery of the great army of learned-dom.

Lord Corbyn knew that through, heaven knows, but he did happen to have that much knowledge of the law of chances, viz: that if the handsome, refined young Irishman, who presented himself with a neat and without an air of self-introduction, was worth anything, he would be worth much as librarian and literary slave to himself.

The interview was unsatisfactory so far to both parties, that Lord Corbyn agreed to take, and Mr. O'Brien to give his services. "What they were worth," O'Brien said, "could be better determined at the end of the year." It was a very loose and unpractical kind of arrangement, but Lord Corbyn was just gentleman enough to resolve upon one thing—that noblesse oblige should not be the cause of the proud, chivalrous young Irishman losing anything.

That is one of the cries of this practical age that noblesse oblige "does not pay." I hope it is not true; I hope that it is fashionable cynicism alone which utters and endorses such sentiments. I lack faith in many an old tradition; I have learnt to laugh and deride at things which I once held to be true and great; but I have not learnt, and I trust I never shall learn, to doubt the gentle feeling that springs from gentle blood. At any rate, even if I doubted it, Dillon O'Brien did not; he resolved to trust for his treatment to Lord Corbyn's honor, and Lord Corbyn knew this, and resolved that his honor should not fail him.

On the morning when the countess and her daughters discussed the broken troth—as they hoped it might prove—between Lord Evesham and Audrey, Mr. O'Brien, my lord's secretary, sat alone in his study, smoking—I am sorry to say it—a pipe of Turkish tobacco.

Had he been standing instead of sitting, you would have seen, if you had entered that room, reader, that the sword had more to do with his early days than learned nose or pinioned page. He was a middle-sized man of his height, with a fine, upright figure, a graceful, lithe gait and bearing; a face that was not strictly handsome when taken piece by piece, but had a marvellous charm in its mobility. Eyes that would flash one moment with ungovernable temper, glitter the next with the wildest fun, and soften the next with an indescribable pathos that is never seen save in Irish eyes; bright, curling, dark-brown hair; a complexion soothing to the dark warm palter, and the finest cut mouth out of which the matchless accents of Erin have ever fallen. A handsome man altogether you will admit it, and fit to be so by the Lady Grace Corbyn.

"I am tired of this life," said the gentleman, starting up and going to the window; "old Corbyn's books are dull, and his daughters are worse. After all, though I have been kicked out of the service for no fault of my own, it is a mean thing of me to be here and pretend to catalogue these books with anything like understanding." Then he paused and whistled the first few bars of a pathetically sweet melody, his eyes the while taking that steadfastly absent look eyes will have when their owners are looking back into the past; and then he softly sang, in a rarely sweet, full, young voice:

"Give a sigh to those times,
And a blessing for me to that alley of limes."

"Give a sigh to those times," he repeated bitterly. "Why should I waste a sigh for the time when that bleak, cold Chesterfield walk on dull Blackheath was fraught with golden fancies, as full of love's perfume as Araby the blest, the frank, unsullied schoolgirl—I, the not less frank cadet as ever that 'alley of limes' was to Moore in Bermuda. Those times are gone, and I was a fool to come into the neighborhood for the sake of trying to resuscitate it. I can't even catch sight of her."

It was at this moment that Lady Grace entered with the invitation list.

"Oh, Mr. O'Brien," she said, "we have a dinner-party on Thursday, and you will be kind enough to help me with the invitations."

Mr. O'Brien's answer was all that a polite Irishman's is apt to be, I thought, and was:

"Why couldn't she have left me the list and rid me of her company, the saucy-haired old coquette?" but he did not express it in his mother tongue.

"You will be sure to give us your company on that evening, I hope, Mr. O'Brien; it will be very unkind and unfriendly of you if you will not do so."

He was quite sure he was and plead a previous engagement with an imaginary old regimental friend who would be in the neighborhood; but before he could scan his eye caught the next names on the list, and he saw they were those of "Sir Robert, Lady and Miss Lorme."

"Thank you, Miss Grace; since you are kind enough to wish it, I will be sure to do myself the honor," he said.

And then the fair one's cheek flushed to a corresponding hue to the one which overspread his face as he bent down and continued his task.

(To be continued.)

LOUISIANA SCENERY.

THE Achahilla, made known to all readers of classic lore by the sedgy Evangeline of Longfellow, has, like many another scene of quiet beauty, been visited by the storm of war, and an officer, who while on picket pencil with as much spirit as he does the sword, sends us a view of Simmsport and the encampment on the banks of the bayou. Simmsport is a post village in Avoyelles parish, 227 miles north-west of New Orleans, in the midst of a rich and picturesque region.

THE WAR IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

THE strange position of affairs in South Carolina, the long siege of Charleston, and the apparent impossibility of a surrender by Gen. Beauregard, will form one of the most interesting features in this war. The Confederates have been utterly unable to dislodge the Union troops that are lofty proud of the rich seacoast of the leading State of the South; and each party seems to be the prisoner of the Union arms. Rival forts bitch steadily at each other. Of the Union forts we have given several sketches, and shall in this issue show some at a distance. Some photographs from rebel sources enable us to show the interior of one of their batteries.

SCENE AT CULPEPER.

THE army of the Potomac, as the many generalled army continues to be styled, has since the reconnoissance of Mile run gone into winter quarters, and we present on this page several views of the stirring action, incidents of a heroic character. A passing sketch of the hill shows a group of soldiers and young contrabands, near Culpeper; a travelling showman is packing up his small profits by a wonderful show.

THE CRAIG MICROSCOPE.—A modern writer has said that the greatest proof of a "divinity that shapes our ends" in the animalcule. Certainly nothing is more astonishing than the fact that air and water are peopled with innumerable myriads invisible to the common eye. No one knows what undeveloped wonders lie around him till he buys one of Craig's microscopes, which are the best and cheapest instruments ever made. Craig's office is 333 Broadway.

LAMENTED.

THEY are singing a hymn in the choir,
A sorrowful dirge for the dead,
A spark of ethereal fire
Has sprung from earth's bondage and fled.

Her face is serene as she lies,
For virtue has there set its seal,
To show that it owned as a prize
Her soul, that had naught to conceal.

A spirit of grace from her birth,
In heart, soul, beauty and mind,
She was all that was precious on earth,
That now to the grave is consigned.

She died in the springtime of life,
As a blossom crushed flower will die,
When exposed to the storm and the strife
That follow from a pitiless sky.

The tablet that speaks of her worth
May fritter with time, and decay—
But the sorrows that crushed her to earth
Will be read at the last judgment day!

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

IT may be a question whether an army is or is not brave, when on being attacked at its morning meal, it receives at all hazards its breakfast.

THE Indies may not go much upon the highways, but they are complained of by their husbands as terrible roads at all times to buy-ways.

IT is difficult to keep one's temper in a hot day, but getting under a shady tree is the best way of taking umbrage.

A RESPECTABLE gentleman doesn't like to have a heavy charge levelled against him—especially if it be a light one.

"DO you know, sir, that, when I left home, my relations honored me with a musical escort?"

"No, I understand you were dismissed con re."

HOWEVER high house rents may be, you can always have at least one room at your command—the room you're standing in.

IT is impossible to look at the sleepers in a church without being reminded that Sunday is a day of woe.

WHEN the government is afflicted the political influence usually apply leeches.

A LOVER sees his sweetheart in everything he looks at, just as a man, bitten by a mad dog, sees his dog in his meat, dogs in his drink, dogs all around him.

CHILDREN are generally very noisy, but we must except the children of the deaf, which do not often make so much noise in the world as their fond parents could wish.

A DUCKING in cold water destroys the temper of hot steel, but increases that of a fiery woman.

THE man who makes a boast of extraordinary shrewdness hasn't got a particle.

MANY a man who is proud to be quartermaster has a sergeant in his mother tongue.

A FARMER, a lawyer, or a doctor may be a very respectable individual, but a hotel keeper is a very different sort.

HARRY and Tom are carpenters. It was in their shop not long ago and found that they had a quarrel. Harry made many explanations, and said he:

"There, Tom, I hope we are friends again."

"No we aren't," said Tom.

"Slow so?"

"Why, you insulted me."

"Oh, well, I apologize for that," said Harry; "and I hope there is nothing left between you and me now."

And the two again planed a large desk board between him and them.

"Look there is," said Tom; "yours was a and offence, and there's a great deal between us yet!"

MODERN "JOHN GILPIN."

OH, we walked and talked together
In the happy summer time,
In the warm, delightful weather,
When the year was at its prime;
And I loved him—oh I loved him
From the spring till autumn's fall,
But when he wished me engaging,
We didn't speak at all!

'Twas a night in warm September,
When my plighted first saw roses;
But no one heard their murmur,
Save some whispering breezes;
And 'twas just as well they didn't,
For, though we were sitting there,
Ere the middle of November
They were broken quite in two!

But you mustn't think me heartless,
For I loved him, I confess,
He'd such lovely qualities,
And such lovely, curly hair.
Yes, I must own on our bow-wow
Was very soon arranged,
For then he married Harriet,
And I—well, I'm engaged!

A DISAPPOINTED lover down East lately hanged himself with a string of onions.

"COME, Bill, it's 10 o'clock; I think we had better be going, for it's time honest folks were in bed."

"Well, yes," was the reply; "I must be off, but you needn't go on that account."

SOME writer exclaims, "What is beauty without soap?" Sometimes fashionable beauty is nothing else. We have seen many a cheek from which the beautiful red rose hue would vanish before the material article, at the first application.

IT is no misfortune for a nice young lady to lose her good name if a nice young gentleman gives her a better.

MANY persons who have a raging warfever before going into battle are apt to get the ague after coming.

IT is well for a man to get the start in a race, but bad for a ship's plunk to start in a storm.

SOME people think the devil, not by speaking the truth, but by outlying him.

WAR is a lottery, in which every customer may expect a blank or a shell.

THE difference between a goose's back and a soldier's is, that one sheds the water and the other blood.

A BARNDOOR fowl and a lawyer who talks for ray pick up their living with their bills.

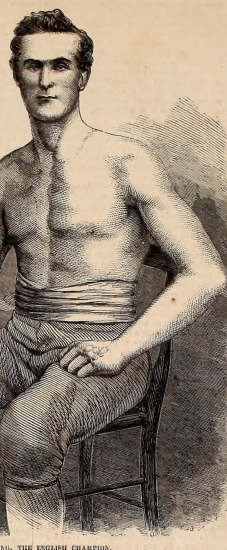
A GENTLEMEN'S nose, genteelly blown, is a musical snuff-box.

THE PRIZEFIGHT IN ENGLAND.

ONE of our dailies lately offered a jesting reward for a sensation. The war and its news had palled on the public mind; the President's message, which in more peaceful days was always extraordinary, came almost unnoticed; that of the insurgent chief elicited no curiosity. But a sensation came for England and America. The Russian question was forgotten in the British Isles; cotton and intervention subsided to hear the result of the great prize fight; and here, where the Titanic civil war is straining every nerve and sinew on the body politic to its utmost tension, men indifferent to the great events of the day, the present crisis and future state of the country, rushed in crowds to secure the extra with the account of the great struggle between King and Heenan. There was a sensation at last.

We give as part of the Illustrated history of the day a portrait of King, the victor in the late prizefight, that hereafter men may know what was the great topic of the week.

The great fight came off on Dec. 10, at Tunbridge, on one of the hills of Sussex that could be seen for 20 miles around.



The sun shone beautifully the whole day, the company was exceedingly select, and there was not the slightest appearance of interruption from the moment of landing to that of departure. Gentle and simple, and noble and plain, were present in large numbers—over 1,000.

The fight began at ten o'clock, and for a time Heenan seemed to have the advantage, throwing King repeatedly. The latter, however, rolled on his feet, and continued to give his opponent telling blows in the face with such effect that after the 26th round Heenan was unable to continue, and his backers admitted his defeat.

The London Times devotes a leader to the affair and also publishes a graphic special account. It editorially says:

"Heenan was game throughout, from the beginning to the close of the fight, and he put the 'hug' on so as to crush his antagonist by dashing him to the ground. King's tactics were different and more creditable to a professor of pugilism. They consisted simply in striking a series of sledge-hammer blows on the most prominent and sensitive parts of Heenan's physiognomy until the latter collapsed from exhaustion.

"The affair was over in 24 rounds and 35 minutes. There appears to have been little science on either side, but it was, nevertheless, a fair stand-up fight, without a check, and ended in a decisive victory for King."

THOMAS KING, THE ENGLISH CHAMPION.

FIRST U. S. HUSSARS.

THE present war has led to organizations of every kind known in European armies, and to some quite novel in their character, but most effective in their operations. Hitherto no Hussar regiments have been raised, and we present to-day sketches of the uniform of the 1st Hussar regiment raised for real service in this country. It is now organized in Trenton, N. J., under command of Col. A. J. Morrison, formerly of the New York cavalry, and subsequently of the 30th New Jersey volunteers.

Those who join the regiment receive the same bounties from the county, State and general Government as those enlisting in the old regiments.

The uniform, made by a Newark firm, is a showy and attractive one, being based on that of the Austrian hussars. The pantaloon is the usual cavalry one, with a yellow stripe; and the jacket is trimmed with yellow cord. The baldrick and agrette are worn over the shoulder, across the breast. Instead of an agrette they wear a talma, with tassel over the left shoulder. The cap is very neat and comfortable. The hussars carry a very fine carbine, superior to any now in use, sabre and pistol. The ranks are rapidly filling, and the regiment will soon take the field.

Col. Morrison is an experienced officer. The correspondent of the Newark Journal thus describes his part in the battle of Fredericksburg:

"Early in the morning Col. Morrison made a reconnoissance of a rebel battery on our left, and asked permission of Gen. Howe to charge it through a ravine which led to its rear, but the General pointed to the height, the capture of which would have a decisive effect upon the future movements of the enemy. The General promised to give the 36th a chance to distinguish itself, and our gallant Colonel departed satisfied. The distance between the road in which we lay and the bottom of the hills on which the rebel batteries were situated was probably three-fourths of a mile, and these forts were scamed with three ditches beside the railroad cut, which was quite deep. Another deep ditch was situated at the foot of the rebel ridge, in which were concealed the enemy's riflemen. To the 2d Vermont, 26th New Jersey and a regiment from the light brigade was assigned the arduous task of storming the enemy's position. The 36th was on the left, the 2d Vermont in the centre, and a Pennsylvania regiment on the right. I never could believe it possible that we could storm those heights, fortified as they were, when the veterans of many a hard-fought field had twice been repulsed from them while in their crude state. A splendid brick house lay on the side of the hill, directly in our front, and behind it a battery of bright brass pieces was belching shell and solid shot toward us continually. We were ordered to charge a battery situated on the hill, to the right of a natural indentation on the hillside, running parallel to the side of the house.

"At ten o'clock A.M. the signal for the charge was given. Our batteries were already piling the positions of the enemy with shell. 'Forward, 36th!' shouted the Colonel, and over the high bank we went at double quick. Hardly had we descended upon the plain before the enemy's guns opened upon us, and the shot and shell were screeching above our heads. With a yell, however, the boys pressed forward in fine style, clearing the first ditch and still preserving a good line. Already the shrieks and heartrending groans of the wounded were heard, but the cheers overpowered the groans. The shells howled above us with a more fearful energy, and we could hardly hear the commands of our Colonel, but could see him in front, almost standing in his stirrups, and bravely waving us onward. The railroad was passed.

"Once more the word was 'Forward!' and once more the regiment raised a shout and again broke forward at double quick. Another ditch was crossed—half the plain was behind us—the men were out of breath and becoming exhausted. The rebels had obtained our range and were doing fearful execution in our ranks. The men began to scatter and drop upon the turf; the wounded shrieked pitifully, and dead men rolled upon the ground like logs of wood. The moment was an exciting one. 'Forward, boys!' shouted the Colonel, and the command was repeated by the Major. The incessant roar of artillery and the ruthless explosion of shells rendered it impossible for the orders to be clearly heard, and the men scattered, but still each one pressed individually towards the heights. 'Your brother is shot!' shouted one of the boys to me, and at the same moment a shell exploded so near that I absolutely thought my head was off. I had no time to think. We were going at a right-oblique past an old barn and house.

"Three-quarters of the distance was passed. The regiment was much scattered, despite the gallant efforts of its field officers. Shells were exploding every second above them; the rebel riflemen had opened upon us from the ditch at the foot of the hill and a tempest of grape and canister were raised upon us from above. It was too much. The column of brave heroes was rested like a ship in a storm, and the officer of the picket line implored our Colonel to fall back as it was too late, as the attempt to storm the batteries must prove futile. Faster and faster fell the iron tempest, and symptoms of a break became discernable. But no; the 2d Vermont had reached the ditch on our right and were gallantly cheering us on. With one last yell of determined energy the men pressed forward, drove the sharpshooters from the ditch, and mounted the hill, carrying everything before them. The rebels were flying in dismay and throwing away everything. Knapsacks, blankets and equipments were strewn through the woods. The heights of Fredericksburg were ours! We chased the enemy for nearly a mile.

(Continued on page 254.)

THE FIRST UNITED STATES HUSSARS, NOW RAISING AT TRENTON, N. J.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY FREDRICKS.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS!

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewelry at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for the $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
226 Broadway, New York.

PURE FRENCH

WINES AND BRANDIES.

Paul De Coninck, Monod & Guiraud.
BORDEAUX, FRANCE.

J. MARCHMARTIN,
SOLE AGENT FOR THE UNITED STATES
No. 39 Pearl Street, N. Y.

C. O. D.

Agents and Dealers, read the following list of our rapidly selling articles:

"Lincoln Smoking Pipe." The Union Filter, Vegetable Pocket Inhaler. Patented Milk Pocket, Patent Match Safe, Magic Tobacco Box.

40 cents each and useful inventions. Send Stamp for Circular. S.W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N.Y., 434 Chestnut St., Phila., Pa.

Genuine American Lever Watch in 3oz. Coin Silver, Heavy Hunting Case, W. reated for $15. They will retail for $30. Genuine Gold Jewelled American Lever Watch, in 5 oz. Coin Silver, Heavy Hunting Case, Gold Dial, Hands, &c., they will retail for $45. Any of the above Watches will be sent on receipt of price. All orders from the army will be promptly attended to. All orders from the army must be prepaid, as the Express companies will not take bills for collection on delivery. (Drawer and Box.)

(Drawer 111.) C. L. BRIGGS. Importer, Milwaukee, Wis.

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD!

20,000 Watches, Chains, &c.

WORTH $100,000!

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 30 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list of articles and particulars, also terms to those who act as Agents.

Address C. SHULTS,
431-32 No. 285 River St., Troy, N. Y.

Swords, Sashes, Belts.

Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords; 431-36 H. RITTRIDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

Secret Art of Manufacturing the Celebrated Western Cider without Apples or other fruit in 12 hours. Send free for 15 cents and a stamp. Address J. H. B., Hawley, Pa.

Lord Lyndhurst,

His Portrait, Character and Biography; Maj-r-Gen. Banks; Wells, Fargo, Hon. Rudolf Tombo, Hy MAN LEE, Savage and Civilized, contrasted. GIVING VALUABLE, By Bishop Ferry, Rev. H. W. Beecher, E. H. Chapin, Dr. Tyng, Dr. Thompson—Revs. Isaacs, Silver, Burgess, Ridgeway, Alger and A. R. Thompson, in January Double Number FREE-HOLDERS JOURNAL, price 15 cents or $1 60 a year. FOWLER & WELLS, N.Y.

$75 to $150 per Month.

THE LITTLE GIANT SEWING MACHINE COMPANY want an Agent in each County, to solicit orders for their Celebrated Machine, with proper screwdriver and extra needles. We will pay a liberal salary and commence at once. No commission. For particulars, terms, etc., enclose a stamp, and address S. S. PAGE, Toledo, O.
427-32 General Agent for the United States.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY,
Merchants, Bankers, Teachers & Amateurs, etc., etc.,
And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular
J. G. COOLEY,
Spencer Street, N. Y.

WEDDING CARDS.

Fresco Note Papers, Seals and Presses, Silver Plate, &c., at J. Bradley, 339 Broadway, cor. Duane St. Send stamp for mild, 364 St. cards.

AMERICAN NEEDLE CO.

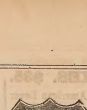
J. W. BARTLETT, 443 Broadway, N. Y.

☞The only BURNISHED NEEDLES for Hose, Shaper, W. W. G. & B. Needles, Florence, Finkle, Stout, Gibbs, Wood, I. & J. Webster, Bartholf, Bowdoin, and all standard SEWING MACHINES.

☞Sharps, Betts., Gd., Dorrance, Millholm, Glovers, Harness, Sail, Pack, Mattress, etc., etc., HAND NEEDLES.

☞Finer HANDLED, LONG STEEL and Common CROCHET Needles

☞HACKLE, GILL, COMB AND CARD PINS.



"We are happy to recommend BARTLETT'S BURNISHED Needles, having found them a WELL-DRESSED, IMPROVEMENT over others for SEWING MACHINES or HANDSEWING. Try sample, Dollar's worth, by mail, post-paid. Also, by mail,—Mme. Demorest.

☞Or a Beautiful Needle Book and 200 Needles, $1.

S. M. WARD. Co. B 43d N. Y. Vols.

C. E. PACE Co. I 29 N.J.Vol.

MAJ. JOHN S. TYLER 2d Regt Vt. Vols.

A. L. CRANT. Co. B. 92 Regt. ILL VOL.

Headquarters for Officers' and Soldiers' Pins of Every Description!

We will send either Army Corps, Division or Company Pin, in Solid Silver, with your Name, Regiment and Co. handsomely Engraved upon it, on the receipt of $1. Also, a Kearney Cross in Fine Gold Plate for $1, or a New Style Solid Silver Cavalry Pin, Engraved as above, for $1 50.

☞Agents sending for 10 or more at one time will be allowed 15 cents on each.

ALSO, THE EMPORIUM FOR WATCHES AND JEWELRY.

75,000 Watches, Gold Pens and Pencils,

Vest, Guard and Neck Chains, Chatelaine Chains and Pins, Engraved Bracelets, Engraved Spring Lockets, Seal Stone Rings California Rings, Chased Rings, Masonic Rings and Pins, Gents' California Diamond Pins, California Diamond Ear Drops, Beautiful Sets of Jewelry, New Styles Studs and Buttons, etc., etc., etc.,

WORTH $400,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

Certificates naming each article are put into Envelopes, Sealed and Mixed, and sent without regard to choice.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for doing the business 25 cents each, which must be enclosed when the request is made to know what you can have After knowing what you can have, then it will be at your option to send One Dollar, take the article or not.

Five Certificates can be ordered for $1—sixty for $10—sixty-five for $10—and one hundred for $15.

With the information of what you can have will be sent a Circular giving full instructions to Agents and a full Catalogue of articles.

Box 4876, N. Y. S. M. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway, New York.

Elegant Holiday Present
FOR A LADY,
A Beautiful GOLD Composite, Hunting-Cased WATCH, Jewelled,
An excellent Timekeeper, $15,
For a Gentleman,
THE MAGIC RAILWAY WATCH,
With Patent Time Indicator,
Showing the hour without opening case, very handsome and reliable, $15.
The Gold Composite for sale in Size of a Gentleman's size.
☞Watches sent for inspection before payment.
CHAINS in great variety; Gentlemen's $1 and upwards, Ladies $2 and upwards. Send for Circular.
ARRANDALE & CO.,
Importers of Watches, 212 Broadway, N.Y.

A Beautiful, Useful and Perpetual Present. THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL AND LIFE-ILLUSTRATED, for 1864. Now is the first of each month, at $1 50 a year. This year's volume contained more than 500 engravings. Hundreds said it cost to the most entertaining works now published. Order it a year, for your mother, sister and need, school friend. Sent regularly, to any address, by FOWLER & WELLS, Publishers, N. Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental experiment all can possess, securing certain success in love or marriage, etc. Fee by mail, 50 cts. together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes in both sexes in matrimony, etc. Married, Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Marry whoever you wish to!
How to woo and be sure to win!
Full instructions in the Art of Psychologic Fascination," with Explanatory Charts, enabling any person of either sex to fascinate and win the undying love of any person they choose, thus rendering success in courtship certain. Sent by mail for 50 cents and two red stamps. Address E. D. LOCKE & CO.,
429-32 No. 1326, Portland, Me.

Beauty.—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID EXHALE, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Complexion Purifier, will render the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a fresh-ness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is the secret used to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of $1. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 193 South-Seventh Street, and 41 South-Eighth Street, Phil-delphia.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser. BAILEY & CO., 209 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cents. Address 18 White Street, New York. 431-4

The Great Money-Making Article.
Everybody wants it. Sells on sight. Profits enormous. $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address
429 E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

Traveling Salesmen Wanted.
419-31 Apply to A. W. HARRISON, Philadelphia.

DYSPEPSIA CAN BE CURED!
DYSPEPSIA, no matter how long standing, yields at once to UPHAM'S DYSPEPTIC CURE. The effects of this Remedy are truly magical. Try it and be convinced. Sold by all Druggists, and sent by mail or any address, by S. C. UPHAM, 211 South Fourth St., Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 431-4

IVORY SLEEVE BUTTONS OR STUDS,
RED, WHITE OR BLACK, in Solids, for Ladies and Gentlemen, 75 cents per pair. Also Pearl, 18 per cent. extra. Sent by mail on receipt of price.
For sale by WM. M. WELLING, manufacturer of Ivory Goods, 307 Centre Street, N. Y., sign of the Golden Elephant. 9-60

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?
MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of 1 order.
R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

Send 10 Cents to Box 1801, St. Louis, Mo., and receive the Angler's Secret, Hunter's Secret, and a host of others.

Whiskers Produced in Three Weeks by the use of my prescription. Sent by mail for 25 cents. Address WM. POTTER, Box 1067, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Prettiest Present for a Lady
Is a Gold Composite Heart Shaped Lever Watch, Jewelled in 7 settings, beautifully engraved Hunting Case, by Rastell, of Liverpool, $25.
For a GENTLEMAN,
THE OFFICER'S WATCH,
Detached Lever Movement, 13 Jewels, in Sterling fine Silver Hunting Cases, with New Patent Time Indicator, just invented for the army. The handsomest and most useful Watch ever offered—$25.
The Gold Composite can also be had in Gent. size.
☞Watches sent for inspection before payment.
Every Novelty can be seen by sending for our Catalogue, containing a History of Regiment and every County on unusually liberal terms.
ARRANDALE & CO.,
Importers of Watches, 212 Broadway, N.Y.

EMPLOYMENT!
$75 A MONTH.—Agents wanted to sell Sewing Machines.—We will give a commission on all Machines sold, or employ Agents who will work for the above wages at all places and times. Call at our Agencies or address C. RUGGLES & CO., Detroit, Mich.

$300.—A new and beautiful Art, by which persons can make from $5 to $10 per day at home, at the cost of a few cents. This Art is worth hundreds of dollars to persons of leisure evenings. Full instructions sent on the receipt of 25 cents.
Address Box 2336, Boston, Mass.

A Scalping Dance,
Illustrated, exhibiting a group of Sioux Indians dressed in their war-dresses and ornaments. Egyptian Mummies, with engravings, How Preserved, Embalming, Modern Egyptians, Phrenology, FERCOGNOS CHILDREN—Marriage in Romance—Do Rose Companies, in January Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. Read it. Only 15 cents; or $1 50 a year.

It penetrates to the very seat of this terrible disease, and entirely destroys it, root and branch, for ever. DR. GOODALE is the first and only person who ever took the word with which reality was—there find commenced—and what would cure it. Price $1. Send stamp for a Pamphlet. Depot, 412 Broadway, N. Y. NORTON & CO., Sole Agents.

Travelling Salesmen Wanted.
$75 a month, expenses paid, or a commission on sales. Apply to ISAAC HALL, Jr., & CO.,
423-35 Newburyport, Mass.

$50 FOR $20.
SOLDIERS IN THE ARMY,
For $20 we will forward by mail or express, prepaid, the following lot of the Gold Plated Jewellery: 1 Vest Chain; 12 Studs; 1 Set Sleeve Buttons; 1 Gold Pens and Extension Holders; 6 Vest Hooks; 4 Fancy Watch Keys; 12 Rose Buttons; 1 pair Sleeve Buttons; 1 Boxand Glass Pin for Miniature; 1 Double Glass Locket; and 5 Ornamental Vest Buttons.
THOMAS CAFFERTEY & CO.,
429-32 Providence, R. I.

$75 A MONTH.—I want to hire Agents in every County at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address
423-35 S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

"Rip Top II"
THE JANUARY PICTORIAL DOUBLE NUMBER, PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL is the best ever issued. Contains 80 Portraits and Other Engravings, including Major-Gen. BANKS, Lord LYNDHURST, and many Beautiful Women. Only 15 cents; or $1 50 a year. Now Volume.

"Moustaches and Whiskers in 42 Days."
Dont be humbugged with UNGUENTS. The GREAT Secret fully explained in the BOOK of WONDERS. 25,000 sold. Only 20 cents; by mail.
Address C. E. HUNTER & Co., Hinsdale, N. H.

Advantage Cards, &c.—For samples and Circulars inclose 10 cts. and address G. BALLY, Forestville, Conn. 422-7

WANTED! WANTED!

Do You Want Splendid Whiskers or Moustaches?
HUNTER'S ONGUENT will for e them to grow heavily in four weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Also, on Bald Heads in six weeks. Ten Boxes for $1. Postage free. Address C. HUNTER & Co., Box 674, Milwaukee, Wis.

SPLENDID HOLIDAY PRESENTS!

☞Particularly valuable for officers in the army and travellers. Scientific American, Feb. 21.

☞Powerful, best and cheapest glasses ever offered. N. Y. Herald Great Eyes, Jan. 10.

"Splendidly finished Watches, the beauty of which in every case is equalled by their cheapness."—N. Y. Weekly, July 25.

MAGIC TIME OBSERVERS!
THE PERFECTION OF MECHANISM!
BEING A HUNTING OR OPEN FACE OR LADY'S OR GENTLEMAN'S WATCH COMBINED, WITH PATENT STOP-WORKING IMPROVEMENT.

A MOST PLEASING NOVELTY.
One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it, and connected with its machinery, its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The case of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being fine 16-carat gold. It has the improved ruby-action lever movement, and is warranted an accurate timepiece. Price, superior engraved, case of half dozen, $36. Sample Watches, in neat morocco boxes, $36. By mail the postage is 36 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!
FIRST-CLASS HUNTING TIMEPIECE
FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL AND, ABOVE ALL, DURABILITY. THESE WATCHES HAVE NEVER BEEN SURPASSED.

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!
An imitation so faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. Price, per single watch, $15; per half dozen, $80; postage, $2 32; registering, 20 cents. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

☞TERMS, CASH! INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE! No Agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. If money is sent us by express or mail in a registered letter, it is at our risk. Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., SOLE IMPORTERS,
428 269 Broadway and 3 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

Royal Havana Lottery.
30 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest prices paid for Government and all kinds of Gold and Silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N.

$35. WATCHES. $35.

Genuine Full-Jewelled American Lever Watches, in 4 Ounce Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Gold Joints, for $35.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be prepaid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

o

Watches Given to All our Agents!

A GREAT CHANGE.

READERS, shall we not one moment, until you send for our large PRIZE STATIONERY PACKAGE Circular, whether you want it or not. It contains circular, whether you want it or not. It contains information for everybody. Great inducement effect to Agents.

WEIR & CO., 34 South Third St., Phila.

000

A NEW SHIRTS

TO ORDER.

Manufacture Unsurpassed—Fitting Inimitable,

AT

CHAS. L. LOCKWOOD'S,

No. 675 Broadway, N. Y.

P.S.—Self-Measurement sent on application.

THAT'S IT

D. BEAUDIN,

FRENCH HATTER,

NOW WITH

CHARLES L. LOCKWOOD,

No. 675 Broadway, N. Y.

P. S.—Hats made to Order and sent per Express. Directions for Self-Measurement sent on application.

000o

FINE DRESS SHIRTS TO ORDER. UNRIVALLED IN MANUFACTURE, Fitting and Material, AT UNION ADAMS, 637 BROADWAY.

Desire for Tobacco!

CHEWING, SMOKING and SNUFFING CURED and PREVENTED by Dr. Byrn's ANTIDOTE.

Agents wanted. Druggists, Merchants, Peddlers, Ft. M'ls and Soldiers send for Circulars. Sample package sent to any address, postpaid, on receipt of 50 cents, by CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

422-346

IF YOU WANT TO KNOW

Men and Women inside and out, what the sexes are made of, and how drawn together; the causes of disease and of matrimonial and social wretchedness, read revised and enlarged edition of

"MEDICAL COMMON SENSE,"

A curious book for curious people, and a good book for every one. Contents table of sealed free to every applicant. Address

429-310 DR. E. B. FOOTE, 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

Shults' Unguent.—Warranted to prepare a full set of Artificial Teeth in six weeks or money refunded. Sent, prepaid, for 30 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS Troy, N. Y.

To Consumptives!

The Advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection and that dread disease, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, &c. His only object in thus advertising is sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information he considers to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address REV. EDWARD A. WILSON, 000o Williamsburg, Kings Co., N. Y.

ARMS AND LEGS!

St. John's Patent (established 24 years)

These celebrated Substitutes for lost limbs can be had only of

o WM. SELPHO & SON, 561 Broadway, N. Y.

A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts., MAGNIFYING 500times, mailed on receipt of price. Five of different powers, $1. Address F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

o

Prepare for the Holidays!

Bonnard's Fancy Goods Depot, and the largest variety of fine ornamental goods to be found in one store, is now open at No. 5 Astor House, opposite the Post Office. MOUNTED OBJECTS, being a exclusive source of amusement and instruction. Over 200 dozen Microscopes and 700 dozen objects have been sold within a year by the Boston Agent alone. This Microscope, in brass, is mailed, postage paid, for $2 25; or with six beautiful mounted objects for $3; or with 24 objects for $5. In bar rubber, for 50 cents. A reduction to the trade. A liberal discount to the trade. A dress 000o JENNY CRAIG, 33 Broadway, N. Y.

A GREAT MILITARY IDEA.

CIVILIAN—"Why, Tibbs, what a queer uniform!"

SOLDIER—"My dear fellow, it's equally effective against the bullets and the cold—rather expensive—all cotton—but it will sell when my term is out."

$15 Per Day Easy $15

AND A WATCH FREE!

100,000 men and women wanted to act as Agents in every Town, village and Camp, to sell our immensely popular, unequalled and valuable EXTRA LARGE SIZE PRIZE PACKAGES, containing large quantities of VALUABLE RECIPES, YANKEE NOTIONS, etc. Sells wonderfully. Largest, best and Cheapest ever manufactured. Each Package contains fine Writing Materials, such as Paper, Envelopes, Pens, Pencils, Blotters, Emblems, Letter Paste Fashion Plates, Dotted Sets for Needlework, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Hints for Housekeepers, Camp Companions (for Soldiers), Parlor Companions, Camp Companions (for Soldiers), Parlor Amusements, Guide for Letter Writers, Many Ways to Get Rich, Likeness of Generals, Comic Pocket to Get Rich, Likeness of Generals, Comic Pocket Calendar for the Year, Union Designs, YANKEE NOTIONS of all kinds, Recipes, Games, Army Laws and Advice, Rich and Costly Presents of Jewelry, &c., &c., &c., the whole worth MANY DOLLARS, if bought separately. Price each Package ONLY 25 cents retail. Wholesale rates to Agents ONLY 100 to 200 PER CENT. PROFIT ALLOWED. Packages of all descriptions put up for Sutlers, Pedlers, Wholesale Dealers, etc. GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE ARMY SAFE. All Soldiers are desired to Become and Sell our Goods. A Splendid Gold or Silver Watch, English Movements, and did "Solid Silver Watch," English Movements, and Correct Timepiece, presented "Free" to all who act as Agents. Send for our New Circulars with Extra Premium Inducements, free, and

S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., New York. The Great Original Gift and Object Prize Package House in the World. Beware of imposters of similar names.

o

MUNN & COMPANY,

Solicitors of American & Foreign Patents,

AND PUBLISHERS OF THE ILLUSTRATED "SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN," 37 Park Row, New York.

Pamphlets of information about patents FREE. Specimen copies of the paper FREE. 420-326

COLD FEET!

USE THE ELECTRO METALLIC INSOLES.

They keep the feet warm in the coldest weather.

METCAM & CO., Proprietors, 409 Broadway, New York.

Price $1; prepaid, by mail, $1 30. Send for Circular.

$1 for 25 Cents.—$1's worth of Rare and Valuable Secrets sent free to any one for 25 cents. 451-3o Address J. H. B., Hawley, Pa.

IMPORTANT!

The public are respectfully informed that I have just received per steamer Celia a fresh shipment of the Duke Mumm & Co.'s

Verzenay Cabinet,

AND

Dry Verzenay

Champagne

of a new vintage, surpassing in richness, fineness and delicacy of quality any Wines of the same grade ever before sent to this country, and at the same time convince the most fastidious.

The following houses have a supply of this shipment on hand:

PURDY & NICHOLAS,
W. J. CORWIN & CO.,
H. D. FISH & CO.,
MACY & CO.,
W. H. JACKSON & CO.,
CHAS. BELLOWS,
J. P. VAN NOSTRAND,
JAMES MEYER, Jr.,
No. 5 Astor House Street,

Sole Agent in the U. S. for Jules Mumm & Co.'s Champagne. 432-5o

$8 Watch and Chain. $8

$11 Watch and Chain. $11

A Beautiful Engraved GOLD PLATED WATCH AND CHAIN, fine Swiss Movement, handsome dial and hands, warranted a perfect timekeeper, $8.

Engraved SILVER, same as above, chain included, $8.

A very heavy HUNTING CASED SOLID SILVER WATCH, full jewelled and fine English Movement Silver Capped, warranted a perfect timekeeper, and a handsome GOLD PLATED CHAIN included, for $11.

We will send, on receipt of the money, one of our Watches and a Chain by express, C. O. D., to any address. These Watches are especially adapted to the Army, being heavily reset and perfect timekeepers, and in running order.

GEORGE DALY & CO.,
308 Broadway, N. Y.

The Soldier's Gift

TO THE LOVED ONE AT HOME

We will deliver free of freight charge at any Express office east of St. Joseph, Mo., any of our beautiful Albums of the value of $5 or more that may be ordered by members of the Army or Navy of the United States as presents to their friends at home. We manufacture elegant styles of all prices to $50 and higher.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,
Manufacturers and Importers,
436-37o 591 Broadway, N. Y.

A GOLD OR SILVER WATCH AND GOLD CHAIN

Presented free to all who act as Agents for our splendid Stationery Prize Packets, containing fine writing materials, such as Paper, Envelopes, Rich Jewellery, Novelties for the Holidays, etc., etc., retail for only 25 cents, worth five times as much. These Packets contain more Stationery, and of a better quality, than any others ever put up. The demand for them is great, sales rapid, and the profits immense; and in addition receive, as a present from us, a Splendid Gold or Solid Silver Watch, warranted perfect timekeepers. Please call or send for our New Circular.

G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
30 Beekman Street, N. Y.

o

Friends, send a Stamp for my Circulars.—Address L. M. HARRIS, Boston, Mass. 451-3o

NATIONAL BATTLE PINS.

McClellan, Grant, Rosecrans, Banks, Meade, Gillmore, Burnside, Hooker, Sigel and Foster. All are the same pattern as the cut, only differing in battlegrounds and dates. Perfect photographic likeness in each pin plated with fine gold. By enclosing One Dollar a sample will be sent by mail.

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE AND OUT THE ARMY. The undersigned has the exclusive right of manufacture, and the inventor of this beautiful keepsake can receive orders of quantities only.

Cavalry and Artillery PINS!

The above cuts represent perfectly the Cavalry and Artillery Pins we have been getting up in Silver to answer the urgent demand from day to day, from that important branch of the service so long neglected in appropriate badges. The Cavalry and Artillery Pins are intended for the Divisions in

Red, White and Blue,

The outer rim highly polished as Silver can be for the Name, Regiment. These Pins are Heavy, and cost the Dollar and Twenty-Five Cents, only the Name, Co. and Regiment engraved upon them, or One Dollar (without engraving). Many engraving is desired, expend the Name, Co. and Regiment. Three Letters to a Line.

Figures will be charged.

AGENTS will be furnished at Six Dollars per dozen. The Emblems are raised, and the Pin about the thickness of a two shilling piece.

o LOUIS PHILIP & CO., 600 Broadway.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility arising from Secret Habits, may be cured by a safe and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in a sealed letter envelope, free of charge. Address DR J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

o

$7. WATCHES. $7

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED

Gold-Plated Watch,

LEVER CAP,

(Small size, ENGLISH MOVEMENTS,

PERFECT TIMEKEEPER.

Sent free by mail, in neat case, for only $7.

A SOLID SILVER

Same as above, $7.

Specially adapted to the army.

CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., 38 & 40 Ann St., N. Y.

ROMAN SCARFS SENT BY MAIL EVERYWHERE

3,000 DOZ. PURE ROMAN SCARFS, just Made from the Purest and Softest Silk.

These are the most fashionable, elegant and economical Scarfs ever imported, as they are reversible; one Scarf is as good as two.

They are much worn in Europe by both ladies and gentlemen. Can be worn with either pin or ring.

The whole lot will be retailed at

WHOLESALE PRICES!

$1 50 and 3/ EACH.

A single Scarf sent by mail on receipt of the above amount—6 cents for postage.

Very fine Gold-Plated Scarf Rings or Pins At $1 00 each.

S. W. H. WARD, 337 Broadway, N. Y.

STEEL COLLARS

KNUMBERED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To military men and Travellers they are invaluable.

Price $1 each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of $1 10.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD, 337 Broadway, N. Y.

Or S. W. H. WARD, 337 Broadway, N. Y.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVER SHIRTS

The largest assortment in New York, $2 75, $3, $3 75 each; all cut one yard long.

Sent by express or mail on receipt of the cost. The cost of postage must be inclosed—53 cents for one shirt.

Send the size of your neck.

English Merino Undershirts and Drawers, $2, $2 25 and $2 50.

Scotch Lambswool Undershirts and Drawers, $3.

FINE WHITE SHIRTS

MADE TO MEASURE AT $18, $20, $36 and $42 PER DOZEN.

SELF-MEASUREMENT FOR SHIRTS.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

The cash can be paid to express company on receipt of goods.

S. W. H. WARD,

No. 337 Broadway, New York.

AMERICAN METALLIC COLLARS

"The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in the world. Send $1 50 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a Choker," to Box 5179, and receive it by return mail.

AMERICAN ENAMELLED METALLIC COLLAR CO., 94 Pine Street, N. Y.

250 Rare Receipts!

TELLS WHAT TO DO AND HOW TO DO IT!

The Book, with 17 Engravings, sent by mail for 25 cts

HUTCHINSON & CO., Publishers,

4250 442 Broadway, N. Y.

A Secret Worth Knowing.—How to make CELEBRATED WELSH RABBIT. Cheese without apples or cider fruit, in 12 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address

F. B. SOWER, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

To Nervous Sufferers.

Nervous Sufferers of both sexes will receive a valuable Prescription, free of charge, for Nervous Debility, Premature Decay and all kindred diseases. Address (charge) by sending their address to the undersigned.

Respectfully, JOHN R. ODELL,

451-3o 60 Nassau street, New York.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

For Rock, Outside Work, Decks of Steamers, Iron Work, Railroad Bridges, etc.

E. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

GREAT TRIUMPH.

STEINWAY & SONS, Nos. 82 and 84 Walker Street, N. Y., have received a FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late Great International Exhibition, London, for their Pianos, which competed with nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.

The Jurors, in their report, say of the New York pianos they say:

"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker." 000o

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

ALL Articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Annapolis, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry Newberne, Port Royal, or all other places, forwarded, sent or hall free, by HARRDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway, Sutlers charged low rates. 000o

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 18 4, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 433—VOL. XVII.] NEW YORK, JANUARY 16, 1864. [PRICE 6 CENTS.

MRS. STEPHENS'S PRIZE NOVEL

The Gulf Between Them.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens,

AUTHOR OF "FASHION AND FAMINE," "THE DESERTED WIFE," ETC., ETC.

The $5.000 Prize Tale.

The Gulf Between Them

received the prize offered by the Proprietor of this Paper, among more than 200 competitors. It is by no means inferior to Mrs. Stephens's successful novel, "Fashion and Famine," and will be as widely read here and in Europe, and take rank at once as the great literary feature of the day.

The publication of this remarkable work of the great American novelist will begin in No. 435 of the paper, and be beautifully illustrated.

Every preparation has been made to print an edition sufficiently large to meet the immense demand, but the orders already given for the number make us fear that many will be disappointed. Do not, therefore, omit to secure the number early, as our immense edition will not meet all calls.

The Gulf Between Them

is a story of American life, instinct with national feeling, real power, sustained action, vigor and beauty.

THE WRECK OF THE AQUILA, AT SAN FRANCISCO, WITH THE IRON-CLAD CAMANCHE ON BOARD.—FROM A SKETCH BY G. H. BIGELOW.

Barnum's American Museum.

MONSIEUR JOSEPH, THE GREAT FRENCH GIANT, 8 feet 1 inch; ANNA SWAN, the GIANT GIRL, 8 feet 1 inch; GIANT BOY, 8 feet; LILLIPUTIAN KING, 31 years old, only 22 inches high; Automaton Musical Troupe, Moving Wax Figures, Enormous Serpent, &c., &c. Tom Taylor's great drama, the TICKET-OF-LEAVE MAN, every AFTERNOON and EVENING. Admission to all, only 25 cents; Children under 10, 15 cents.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 16, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, &c., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 22 Duane Street, between Broadway and Elm, New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, AND FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR OF 1861, by THE AMERICAN NEWS CO., Proprietors of the London American, 30 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER:

One copy one year	$3 00
Two copies	5 00
Four	9 00
Magazine at Paper one year	2 50

Notice to Advertisers.

The value of our paper as an advertising medium has become so generally known, that we are compelled every week to refuse columns of advertisements. The vast increase of our circulation, penetrating as it does into the most profitable channels, renders our space doubly valuable, and justifies us in the course we have determined upon—that of increasing our rates of advertising in the following ratio:

75 cents a line on the outside or last page
90 " on the 16th and 19th pages.

Notice to Contributors.—Superior original

Tales will be always received, and if accepted remunerated according to their merits. All unsuitable will be promptly returned. They should be plainly written on one side only, and the address of the writer given distinctly.

Summary of the Week.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

On the 25th Dec. Gen. Gillmore began to shell Charleston from our gunboats. Several buildings were fired and persons killed. At the same time our gunboats had a brisk contest with the rebel batteries on Stono river.

VIRGINIA.

Our cavalry have destroyed 2 part of the town of Luray, in Page county, and Gen. Gregg pursued the rebel Gen. Rosser so sharply that he burnt the bridge over Pope's Head run.

Col. Wells, sent to support Averill, returned to Harper's Ferry after proceeding as far as Harrisonburg, where he came up to Rosser.

Gen. Butler sent 500 rebel prisoners to City Point. The rebels gave up as many of our men, but refuse all further intercourse with Butler.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Many citizens of this State are coming in and taking the oath of allegiance, and the newspapers openly avow their desire for submission.

TENNESSEE.

The rebel Gen. Wheeler on Dec. 26, captured one of Gen. Thomas's trains at Charleston, on the Hiawassee, but Col. Long pursued the enemy, defeated him and took 130 prisoners.

TEXAS.

Our army occupied the entrance to Lavaca bay on the 30th of Nov.

A new district called the District of the Frontier has been established on the Rio Grande, Gen. Herron in command, with his headquarters at Brownsville.

LOUISIANA.

On the 22d of Dec. Gen. Ullman left Port Hudson with four regiments and a battery of artillery, to operate apparently on Red river.

NAVAL.

Rebel reports talk of 23 blockade runners getting into Wilmington in one night, but the English papers tell us that the blockade runners are unable to get in, and state that not a single vessel has got in for some time past.

THE IDLER ABOUT TOWN.

IDLING up and down town in such weather as this is very fine in theory, but is excessively cold in practice. Wrapping up warm is a pleasant fiction, while a gale is blowing at a temperature of least twenty degrees below zero, which rushes up your pantaloons and bolts down your collar, nips your nose and ears, stiffens your cheeks and freezes your hair till it stands out in sharp points like quills upon the fretful porcupine. We envied the beasts of burden some shabby-genteel spot, which a pew in their mouths, pel themselves up in their own furs—not bought at Gunther's—and take a quiet snooze for five months, when the early spring sun and the bears walk out together.

There are a good many pleasant things to be seen in a stroll up and down Broadway, which cost nothing to look at, but which are worth as much as though you paid a fee at the door. The looking-glass and frame stores for instance, which constantly put on fine glasses and frames, are also galleries of painting and engraving, in which some of the choicest specimens of art are to be seen, and for nothing. We strolled into T. A. Wilmurt's last week and found enough to amuse us for two or three hours. There was Bouvier's fine picture, "The Sea of Galilee," which can full of interest, it being a literal transcript of this favorite Scriptural locality, of Lessing's engraving the buildings, for which Bauvard, with a painter's license, has drawn from his imagination. We think it would have been better to have kept to the real scene upon canvas, literally as it is, and not as it might have been. However, the picture is a fine picture, and its study will repay a very long walk indeed. Not only is the original picture there, but reproductions of some many transcripts of it, which have been reproduced by the Chromo process, and which are as admirable a manner that they may be regarded as triumphs of art, and not unworthy of the highest judgment of their producer, Mr. Sarony. Except in size the engraving has all the effect of the original, and has wonderfully preserved its magnificent perspective, exquisite blending of bright light and soft, subdued atmospheric effects. The "Orison" is a picture that appeals directly to the sympathies and cultivated taste; there is an air of such perfect repose conveyed by the whole picture, as it covers over the distant Alps, the moonlight streaming across the tessellated pavement and shadowy arches, the rich contrast of the deserted corridors dimly illuminated by the vesper lamp, that one feels as though he and every other sound save the murmuring of a maiden's prayer to the fitful shine of the moon, and the still deeper hush the harmony of the scene. In another part of the room is a group of plaster statuettes, "The Last Long Sigh" of Burns, sculptured in Nova Scotia stone by Hall Kirkpatrick, of Boston. The figures are effective in proportion, there is much to admire in them. The legend of the poet's death is told with delicate skill and with sentiment, and his success in simulating the textures of the different fabrics is remarkable. There is also a most elaborate cavalier picture in needlework, which would delight our Lady Baroness Rothschild with her sewing pictures, which have the merit of facility to nature, but are merely nursery productions. But we must get out of Wilmurt's, lest we attempt to particularize a tithe of the treasures which he has collected in a column or two.

We found some charming things in the way of new music, songs especially. At William Hall's we found some very pretty ones by Mr. Wallace, which are equal to his former happiest efforts, together with some good dance music, "Lancers," and "Caprice." Gotts-halk has produced several charming songs, among them "Lullaby" which is full of tender tenderest pathos, and will make its mark everywhere. His "Mountaineer's Song" and the ballad "Love Remembered," sung by Brignoli, should be on every piano. We found at Beer & Schirmer's a new song by Abt, the pen of Ground, the composer of the celebrated "Last Rose." It is called "Sweet Dreams, Baby, Slumber," and is certainly one of the most delicious serenades we ever heard. If you have skilful hand on the guitar, we should be tempted to try its influence upon a romantic lover. Music is the food for the metamancier at 6.

That wonderful child pianist, the beautiful little Teresa Carreno, will shortly give some concerts in this city. During her engagement at Niblo's Garden for concerts, she appeared in Boston and attracted a brilliant audience. A second concert was announced, but an abominable "fellow" attacked her thumb and utterly prevented her from performing. Consequently the concert was abandoned, although 600 tickets had been bought up at the moment of the accident. The manager was then obliged to give up her concerts announced for the following week in other cities. Poor little Teresa! the child after an absence of six months, and were received with delight and wonder by the public and press. Her touch has become more firm and assured, her power of the instrument more extended, and her genius in executive ability is something to marvel at. She is now young to attain what she would undoubtedly so great in her maturity in the sentiment of art. It is noticeable that she plays with the most delicate appreciation of such masters as Beethoven, Chopin, Liszt, Thalberg, Arditi, and Gottschalk, and that she has a perfect instinct in her intuitive perception of their scope and meaning. Such a subtle comprehension is a rare possession, their delicacy of imagination, and their breadth of grandeur are not always appreciated by an act of wonder and a subject of unusual interest and unqualified admiration. We do not propose to be guilty of criticism, we do not wish to raise up a false interest in the public mind. We state these facts in order to encourage, and leave it to the public to judge of their correctness. Her concerts will be given in Irving Hall is understood, so Niblo's will not be open to her, engaged every night during the month.

Mrs. Scott Siddons has been engaged for the Olympic Theatre a new and clever drama of the sentimental school, called "Camille," in which she is expected to have a long run. All those who have seen and admired Mrs. John Wood in her delineations of peculiar characters should see her in this piece, and wonder at the versatility which can take the part of a noble lady, and to-morrow rise to high art in the delineation of the humor and character of a pert minx. We are equally surprised and delighted at witnessing this well-trained admirable piece of acting. It is a simple and most compliment and congratulate her upon her success.

The celebrated drama "The Ticket-of-Leave Man" has attained a great run at the Winter Garden, and is attracting crowded and delighted audiences. The other novelties at this establishment, the Fiji Islanders and Dowris and the Musical Automatons are still on exhibition, together with the performances of the animal trained by Mr. Carter. We have seen this troupe of animals which the Museum abounds. It is the cheapest and most varied place of entertainment in the city.

Our lyric artistes—Anna, Mlle. Adelina Patti, whom we are invited up to art in the New World, to delight and astonish the old World, Carlotta Patti, Brignoli, Ferri, Amodio, Bellini, and Susini—are all triumph, each new conquest exceeding the last in the brilliancy of its results. She has conquered the critics and the publics of England, France and Germany, and has now fairly taken Madrid, the last field of study, by storm. Her fame had preceded her, and it is justly earned by the most untiring study and practice, and assisted by her skilful manager, Maurice Strakosch, she has made a fortune. Success to Mr. Strakosch, so that he can afford to go to the Court of Queen Victoria, and to the Court was anxious to do her honor. As the night of her first appearance approached, the rush for admission was so great that the price for seats rose at once to 300 francs, or $60! This is a larger average sum than was ever paid even in the brilliant days of our Fanny Elsler or Jenny Lind excitements.

The musical world of Paris has been on the tiptoe of excitement every season for several years past, to expect the immediate production of the long delayed and often promised opera "Africaine," for the first and yet unheard week of November. But fastidious composer is noted, we think, for the pains he takes with his productions, as they tend to excite public curiosity. These constant put off are sometimes annoying to the public, but a part of the system to work upon the public mind to give a settled conviction that the long delayed "L'Africaine" is now promised positively in the autumn of 1864. Meanwhile, M. Meyerbeer is enjoying the imperial hospitalities of the Emperor Napoleon at Compiegne.

The veteran composer, M. Auber, who is verging towards his ninety-first year, is full of life and musical inspiration. He has passed over the period of second childhood, and has entered upon that epoch at which when most men would be in their dotage or their graves, begins with a new career. He is a remarkable fact, and we doubt if it can be paralleled in musical history. M. Auber was born in 1782, and since he has now opened for the purpose of supplying managers of theatres with musical compositions of a light form a crowd outside the doors, whose duty it is to announce long before the curtain rises that the overpushing and vociferations naturally attract the attention of passers-by, and create such a display of excitement that there must be something well worth witnessing within. Such is the system of puffing in vogue in the capital of the civilized world. Such is the system of the spectators. It is expected that hundreds will be attracted to the opening night. The "office" will furnish mobs of every grade of respectability. Some will pay their money at the doors, others will be "gentlemen in "full dress," and so downwards to reach the lowest grade of the scum of common theatres. There is no end to man's ingenuity, especially when the goal is the money market.

Paris is apt to look through magnifying glasses at everything, and to look at the opera-glass at all that goes on in the big end of the opera-glass at all that occurs at home. Paris is the centre of the world, including Sunday nights. Indeed, were we to adopt the Parisian system, we should have every establishment alone often excited that sum, omitting the establishments of the Rue de la Paix and Broadway.

Dresden has got, like New York, its Teresa Carreno. That is, it possesses a wonderful little pianist named Mademoiselle Ahlbe. She is only 11 years old, plays with the mature skill of a master, and is a great favorite. They should hear our Teresa Carreno.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The number of emigrants landing in New York from Jan. 1st to Dec. 31st was 176,939, of whom from Ireland, 38,326 from Germany, 18,932 from England and Wales, 1,000 from Scotland, and 1,000 from Switzerland. This increase this year, 78,917, or more than 50 per cent.

—The Bridalia, that splendid specimen of naval architecture, went on a trial trip down the bay and outside the bar on the 26th ult. She struck on the sands for 30 hours, she was lightened and towed off with little damage. Owing to some unexplained mistake in placing the wood in the valve, one of the engines was rendered useless. She is expected to make 14 knots an hour nearly double what Mr. Isherwood has been able to accomplish for her.

—The charter of the Albany City Bank, Erastus Corning, president, expires on the 31st Dec., and the bank has been organized under the general banking law, with the same officers. Its capital is $500,000, divided into 5,000 shares, dividing regularly 8 per cent. semi-annually, and closes on the 1st of January.

—In the case of the Bank of North America against the New York Commissioners of Taxes, the Court of Appeals has decided that the property of so much of the capital as is invested in United States securities is not liable to taxation, under the act of Congress and the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court.

—On the evening of the 30th Dec. some rowdies assaulted a negro-woman in Broadway, near the Bowery, because she refused them to leave; they refused and pounded her with fists for daring to make the request. A policeman hurried to the scene of the disturbance, arrested him and on the following morning he was held to bail to await a criminal charge of defending his own life!

Western.—Gen. Rosecrans's troops exiect under the late orders to be formed into one division and, led to the field by Gen. Thomas.

—Citizens residing in the eastern part of Idaho Territory are making an effort to have the territorial capital removed to Bannock, on account of the difficulty of communication between the two parts of it. Some of the members of the Legislature have to travel a thousand miles to reach the territorial capital.

—A Jewess in Chicago sues for the consumption of coffee. In 1862 the quantity imported amounted to 5,791,103 lbs., and in 1863 to 6,015,509 pounds, and her child in the State. In the six months from January 1st to June 30th, 1863, the quantity imported was 2,633,466 lbs., in spite of the increased rate of duty.

Foreign.—There was a grand wedding at Richmond the other day, the happy parties being Gen. Davis's sister, and Commodore Farragut's son. Jefferson Davis was present, and Mrs. Davis attended the bride. The bride was dressed in a common stuff gown.

—A correspondent of the Herald, writing to his friends in Baltimore, says that the gallotine of society is not the only instrument that can be called "executioner parties," at which people meet in each other's houses, and hear singing, but nothing of drinks. The fair writer attends these parties twice a week, and avers that they are a great deal of fun, but no supper.

—One of the escaped prisoners says that there are now three men in Richmond, one Lovell, another Greenbank, and the other Confederate navy. Gold is worth $2.50, and greenbacks somewhere $10.

—The North Carolina Times says: "A few dollar gold pieces are now worth over $100 in Confederate notes at Danville, a few days since." The same paper heartily endorses President Lincoln's recent proclamation, and advises the people of the State to accept the terms offered by it. It also copies and endorses a remarkable article from the Richmond Whig, which contains the following significant paragraph: "Slavery has stabbed to death. It has sinned against the light, committed the unpardonable sin, and must die."

—The speeches made by Foote and others in the Rebel Congress have evidently had considerable effect on the public mind, as they plainly expressed the prevailing sentiment, for unmistakable signs of softened feeling to the Union is very common in the Southern States. These indications of repentance are, doubtless, owing to the hard times, which are really pressing the rebels very hard. Luxuries have now gone disappeared, and now necessaries are become luxuries.

Military.—Gen. Robert C. Tyler has been appointed to succeed the late Gen. Corcoran in the command of his brigade.

—The Washington Republican gives the particulars of a case where a young soldier was ordered to be shot for desertion when he was found to be a promoted for gallantry. The President was just in time to prevent the shooting poor mans execution. Meade is very active in shooting his own men, and, it would appear, rather carelessly.

—Seven bodies of the soldiers of the 160th N. Y. S. volunteers, slain in the recent battle of Mine Run, Virginia, and which had been buried at Syracuse, were accompanied by Col. Burnam and Major Hodges, accompanied by Col. Burnam and Major Hodges, Birdseye, and Hamilton, and escorted by the present the last rites captured in those battles to the War Department at Washington.

—The remnants of the gallant 96th Pennsylvania regiment have arrived at Harrisburg, and will soon return home to recruit. Two of the Colonels of this regiment, Gen. Cochrane and Col. Gustavus Wynkoop, have been killed in battle, and the regiment has passed through the severest conflicts of the war of the Potomac.

—The veterans of the 2d Pennsylvania arrived at the 20th Dec. at Harrisburg. When the regiment left the State about three years ago it had over 1,200 men in the army, now it numbers but 300. Only two of the original captains have returned with it, and one of these has lost his arm. The regiment was in all the battles fought by the army participating in the Peninsula campaign. It originally mustered also 16 pitched encounters, and having participated in the fight at Antietam under Gen. McClellan. The regimental flag exhibits the danger through which it has passed, it being completely shot to pieces and torn with bullets. Four sets of color-bearers were killed, the fourth having fallen at Gettysburg.

Naval.—Seabound vessels are informed that the Light-House Board has ordered that "the fixed lights During the day she has the guarding after her foreyard starboard, and the after yard, white flag, red cross diagonally. At night she has a white flag at the foremast head, and a red light at the after. The vessel proceeding to sea will pass close to her they will be boarded without any color to them.

Personal.—The person, who stole Mr. Geo. Curtis's lecture is said to have become illotic from perpetual remorse.

—Gen. Wetsel is resting from his labors in Cincinnati.

—Lucy Lind has lost her voice. This was so painfully evident to herself in her singing lately in Stockholm, that she has retired from the concert pursuaded her to complete her programme.

—George G. Prentice has become a common drunkard. The Louisville Journal long since passed from his control, both mentally and financially. Prentice is a man of genius, but of a most cruel, and personal friends have purchased the Journal, out of pure charity to the wife and former industry.

—Says the Nashville Union, the young treachon, Edward Porter Alexander, compliment him Richmond night, such as has been rendered to but few men. The Hall was filled by very elegant ladies, in his representation of "Hamlet," the noble Grant at the head of them.

—Archduke Louis Victor, youngest brother of the Austrian Emperor, Francis Joseph, will probably be the future husband of the consort of the future Emperor of Brazil, for negotiations to this effect have been opened with the Regents of Rio de Janeiro and Vienna for some time. The Brazilian Princess and the Archduke are first cousins.

—The Worcester (Mass.) Transcript notices the marriage of the grandson of the first Chief Justice Shaw, Miss Nellie Lorrider, of that city, and Mr. Shaw is also the gallant soldier who had both arms at Fredericksburg while bearing the flag of his regiment, and who was also severely wounded at Gettysburg.

—The rebel convoy to France, Mr. Superville, reached the City of Mexico. This is excellent evidence of the strictness of our blockade.

—Miss Dix, says the Tribune, who had during the past year devoted herself to the welfare of the sick soldiers in the hospitals at Washington, left on the 1st December, from over fatigue in her benevolent labors Her health has been failing during those months to alleviate the sufferings of our brave soldiers. She was in every respect a model nurse.

—The Rev. Dr. Tappan, long known as one of the ablest congressional preachers of the day, died at his home in Bangor, Maine, on Saturday, 19th December.

—Dr. Samuel Chew, one of the most eminent physicians of Baltimore, died on Friday, 25th Dec., of pleurisy. He was one of the most prominent men in that city for thirty years past, and at the time of his death was one of the Professors of the Medical University, and Professor of Principles and Practice. He was born in 1770, and was a native of Maryland.

—New Orleans papers announce the death of Colonel Maunsell White, at the advanced age of 85 years. He was a native of that city, and during where he had temporarily resided, about the year 1810. At the time of the British invasion he was a volunteer by the invader, he volunteered in its defence, and as aide-de-camp to General Jackson rendered such signal degree to the glorious success with which that defence was crowned.

—Edward A. Reeder, Esq., one of the most prominent citizens of Perth Amboy, New Jersey, N. J., died suddenly on the 30th Dec. He was on a visit to Washington, and was looking in a hotel, pickpocket, Newton, and, on being found, he fell heavily to the ground. A number of persons came to his aid, but before he could recover from open cage for breath, and shortly after gave his last gasp. Coroner Gedney was called, and Dr. Hammond, of ex Governor Reeder of that place, At the time of his decease Mr. Reeder was Secretary of Internal Improvements for Sussex county.

Accidents and Offences.—Mr. S. Barber, a Welsh miner, living in Brookville, C. W., was killed by his son, a lad 16 years of age, a few days ago. The father was sick, and the boy, infatuated with watching, had laid down on the floor on a quilt, and fallen asleep. The father awoke in the night from under him, the son sprang up and struck his head against the bed-post, fractured the skull, and when he died; he denies all knowledge of the occurrence, and is still in custody awaiting trial.

—A horrible tragedy lately occurred at Marysborne road, near Liverpool. For several years Mrs. Chappel, a lady in her nurse and child, had occupied lodgings at this locality, and was occasionally visited by a gentleman who said was her husband. After a while they quarrelled and parted. This visits were discontinued. Some time ago, Mrs. Chappel sent the nurse to market, when, on her return, she found the door locked. On communicating with a physician she broke in the door, and found Mrs. Chappel in the front parlor, stretched on the floor, dead, and the child on the bed, covered with a pillow. The nurse removed the pillow, and the child was found to have stabbed the child in the breast with a poniard, and cut her throat in three places with a razor. Both the instruments she had bought for the purpose. The child died in two days; the woman was still living.

—Surgeon C. D. White, of the navy, while at Wilmington last week, on his way to Baltimore, dropped his revolver, the ball in which being discharged, struck him in the leg, and he died from lockjawing to the bone. He coolly made two incisions in the flesh, and with his penknife extracted the ball, and then bandaged the wound and took the next train for Baltimore.

Foreign.—The Paris papers publish advices from Egypt, announcing the victory of the Emperor Theodore of Abyssinia over the Egyptian expedition of Gojam. The Emperor is reported to have ordered the massacre of 15,000 prisoners, men, women and children. He is also stated to have had the English Consul at Massowah strangled, and to have set the French Consul at liberty.

The notorious Duke of Brunswick, who was driven from his dominions by his own kinsfolk in 1848, and whose lawsuit with his cousin Queen Victoria caused so much talk, has had a narrow escape of losing the greater part of his diamonds. He has for years lived in Paris, and kept his jewels, the most valuable collection in Europe, in an iron safe, near his bed. Extraordinary to say, he rated what he was going out one evening, the man abstracted them and absconded. The fact got out in the next week, and was arrested with his ill gotten spoils. The duke is the supposed murderer of Alice Grimwood, a courtesan, whose mysterious death caused as much sensation 30 years ago as Mr. Smith's disappearance from sight does in New York.

The Marquis de Boissy who married the Countess Gonsalvi, mistress to Lord Byron, has made a violent speech against Napoleon, for refusing to attend Count Napoleon's bogus Congress.

Another incubi has been launched in England, and several more are nearly ready.

Queen Victoria is having a theatre built for her at Windsor. It will be under the supervision of Mr. and Mrs. Keen, and will be ready to open against their return from Australia.

At the moment of his death, the King of Denmark was surrounded by the Countess Danner, the Lord Chamberlain, several aid-de-camps and his medical attayers. According to his earnest wish, his body was not opened until it was placid. In the dress he died in, in a coffin, lined with lead.

Ladies are getting their bonbonnieres as well as in London ones. The other day a woman, who was sitting at a table next to a gentleman smoking a cigar, passed, missed her guess. Her neighbor instantly offered one of his cigars, which she took, to the policeman; but the conductor thought it would be a saver not to charge the money by depositing it by herself, which was done. On examination she was found to possess a number of stolen purses, but one of the sweetest little instruments for cutting through dresses and pockets that was ever seen—a ring, which, on the touch of a spring, shot out a small, very sharp piece of steel.

Signor Patti, the American cantatrice, appeared for the first time in Madrid, the price paid for seats all round the house was 500 francs.

Art, Science and Literature.—The human body, for a thousand a stage of decomposition as to be entirely resolved into earth, can be so restored by chemic means as to present an almost completely natural appearance. The process was lately practised with success in London, in the case of a body found in the Thames, and was suggested to the mind of an escaped murderer, who had committed suicide. The body had been identified by the man's wife, and even the witnesses were able to swear that he was not the supposed murderer.

It is a curious and unexpected fact that solar light is deleterious as to the showing of colors. Those shown by it only in the solidest form are invisible in daylight. This is a providential effect, otherwise the sun would be confounded by a perpetual display of colors in the air.

Mr. Anthony Trollope, many of whose best poems we have introduced to the public, is about collecting many of his stories of society into a volume. This will soon be issued by one of our popular publishers. They will be illustrated by his brother George, an artist of considerable merit.

Mr. Richardson, the publisher, is about to issue a monthly, under the military magazine, called the United States Service Monthly, under the experienced management of Mr. Simpson. A better public, perhaps, not have been chosen.

Chief-Justice Bowler and Wells have lately published a biography of Lord Lyndhurst in which they say: "It is not known whether the highthough of Irish descent himself, who has always denounced the Irish Catholics 'aliens in blood, religion and principle,' and whose entire conduct through the public career of Lord Lyndhurst was a devoted but unfortunate hereditary devotion either a recreant to the creed of his ancestors, or himself a Hibernio-Anglo-Saxon-Englishman."

The Herald devotes still attention to this advertisement taken from the Herald:

"TO LADIES—A GENTLEMAN wishes to make a collection of curls de visite. The lady who will favor him with the prettiest (she being the original), shall be the recipient of an elegant present worth fifty dollars.

The impostor! No lady will respond to such a worthless scamp. His wicked motives may be easily understood.

—Lieut. Fleury, son of Marshal Fleury, has recently been tried for murdering a Madame Petit, with whom he was on terms of criminal intimacy. The evidence was such a remark. It appears by French philosophy that Pitcosian is a severe code of morals compared to it. He failed her because she took a walk with a third.

"Arrah, Mickey," said an Irish lad of seven summers, who was tried by a dog, "if you don't take that dog away I'll eat up all your apples."

A monster log was exhibited in Brooklyn the other day was stopped by an impudent little Irish boy, who exclaimed, in a voice of woe, "Boots blacked, sir? shall I shine 'em up, sir?"

Captain Gordon has accepted £50 sterling as damages for being imprisoned in the Bourbonist affair. He is now performing with Fechter and John Brougham, in the new play of "Bel Demonio."

—A writer in the Home Journal has lately come to the conclusion that Shakspeare, whom he declares to have been a paragon of virtue, despite what history says, was a person dramatists have written about her. The worst thing he chronicles about her is that she had a husband, which is certainly more than her share, and excuses greediness.

Mr. Bennett, in Cohoes, Mass., there has been no regular preaching for more than 200 years although there is a church edifice there. Very few of the people have attended church anywhere in that time.

The Commercial Advertiser, now in its 50th year, has changed hands on the 1st Jan., Messrs. Hall and Dick having assigned it for 60 years, having sold it to other parties. The Copperhead proclivities have, however, not changed it.

The Herald says that Gen. Grant, when he was in Chicago, had explained the rebellion to his many practical Jokes by his associates, that at parade one day, when Grant was in command, upon him, he stripped off his coat, challenged the Captain of the company, who, accepting it, was severely thrashed then the First Lieutenant, who shared the same, and then the second Lieutenant, who was also well licked. Grant then offered to fight the entire company, one by one, and would have done it, had not his more practical jokes were played upon the hero of Shiloh.

The dramatic critic of the Round Table makes a fierce onslaught upon the most profitable class of our dramatic entertainments, and calls the heroes of these dramas Irish ruffians and Yankee fools. This is certainly not a shilly shally but a shillegh style of criticism.

TAKE away my first letter—take away my second letter—take away all my letters, and I am still the same—The postman.

THE FALLING SNOW.

BY CHARLES G. AMES.

I SEE a straggling, dim procession pass
Of strugg-ing, shadowy shapes that come and go;
I sit and watch through clouded panes of glass,
Through gauzy curtains of the falling snow.

The fairy phantoms of the peopled air
Come softly gliding to the earth below;
I sit and list, and list in vain to hear
The rustling sound of the falling snow.

No sound, save now and then a muffled hoof
And muffled wheel. And in the silence, lo!
I sit and worship 'neath my whitening roof;
The world keeps sabbath for the falling snow.

White wings are fluttering all around to-day;
Unseen, unheard—the loved of long ago!
Alas! my wish and dream, a mere mock play,
The forms that rest beneath the falling snow?

JACK DAYTON.

An Episode of Lee's Raid in Pennsylvania.

ONE day there was a great stir and bustle in our village—Jack Dayton had come home; Jack Dayton, who had left years ago to join our volunteers in Mexico, and of whom so many tales of gallantry and hairbreadth escapes had come to us.

Being on a footing of great intimacy with his family, I was one of the few privileged ones who were invited to a soiree given by his father to celebrate his return.

I had never seen Jack Dayton before, and without being quite conscious of it, had formed in my mind a most violent antipathy. When introduced to him, his free, open features and his frank manner took much of my feeling away; but, by his constant attentions to Lucy Markham, he contrived, before the end of the evening, to increase, if possible, my hostility towards him. Not being able to vent my spleen in words and Jack's Humor, he soon became aware of its origin; and when, after the last waltz, I handed Lucy Markham to her carriage, his haughty lip curled, and there was a sneer in his last salutation.

From that day he became a frequent visitor at the Markhams, and his attentions to his wife increased in number mine became scarcer. Having some business to transact with Mr. Markham, I called on him one morning, and was going to enter his study, when I perceived a corner of white ball a walkingstick, which I knew to belong to Jack Dayton.

A pang of jealousy shot through my heart, and retracing my steps, I entered the drawing-room. It was empty. I passed into the garden, and was not long before I met Lucy and her lover, slowly walking together. Some inward feeling which I could not control prompted me to watch them, and shaking a thicket which concealed me, I came to the one in which they were walking, and separated from it only by a laurel bush. At first I could not hear their conversation, although Lucy's voice was louder than usual, but all at once these words fell on my ear:

"For shame, Mr. Dayton! Let me go or I call!"

One bound and I was beside them. Jack Dayton had hold of Lucy, who vainly struggled to get free. I stepped between them, and my hand met his face as was lying prostrate on the ground. He soon rose to his feet, his face all covered with blood, and striking his hand across mine, said,

"You are marked now," said he. "When I shall want you we shall meet, and then you will have to account for this blood." He pointed to his face and disappeared through the wood.

The scene had been too much for Lucy, who, sitting on a large stone, was crying hysterically. As soon as I could speak I begged her to be calm.

"Oh, Henry," cried she, "how can I thank you!"

This moment decided my fate. I took courage, and pouring in her ears all my tale of love, I told her of my sufferings, of my jealousies, my hopes, and ended by asking her to become my wife. She bent her head fell gently on my shoulder; we were betrothed. The next day Jack Dayton left the village, and I was engaged to Lucy Markham.

A whole year passed away, and the ominous news of the capture of Sumter burst upon us; a succession of victories and defeats followed, and a few months later I had joined the Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry.

Lucy approved of my resolution, and when we parted her last words were, "Beware of Jack Dayton!"

* * * * *

It was after Gettysburg. Lee was in full retreat and we were pursuing hotly in his rear. At every step we found proofs of his distress—broken caissons, jaded horses, abandoned wagons, and on every road, arms of every description—everything told of his anxiety to reach the river and of the dreadful state he had sustained.

We crossed the Potomac at Harper's Ferry, and after we had gone for several miles in a forward direction we struck again for the river and rode along its bank. When nearing Sheppardstown we diverged from the road, and, to obtain a shorter path, entered the skirts of a dark pine wood, emerging out of which we fell in with a party of the enemy drawn up in line of battle. They were 1,000 strong, and belonged to Fitzhugh Lee's and Jenkins's commands. Our brigade numbered but 1,200 cavaliers, and the whole of our artillery consisted of four guns.

Nothing daunted, however, our brave commander dismounted some of his men and threw them out as skirmishers, while the artillery began to shell the rebels with splendid accuracy, doing a great deal of execution. A ledge of rocks stretched on our left, and it was a matter of great importance for both parties to get possession of it, as it would serve as a natural breastwork.

Jenkins having exposed his flank in his anxiety to reach it first, our gallant leader rode up at our right and called out to us to charge. It was a magnificent spectacle. Onward we rode, a thousand of us, with flashing eyes, deepset teeth, and hands knitted on our swords; at every stride our pace increased and our cheers grew louder. When at a distance of a hundred yards from the enemy, they poured a withering volley into us. Many of our brave fellows were laid down; but the rest still rode on.

A yelpish yell from the rebels, answered by our loyal hurrahs, and we were in the midst of them through their ranks. Every man emptied his revolver, and then began the more deadly work of the sword and the sabre. Three times three times the rebels tried to rally their scattered ranks; three times we rode them down, cutting them up dreadfully.

I remember no more; the din, the smoke, the agonizing shrieks of the wounded, mingled with the shout of victory, are all commingled in my mind.

But at once I perceived a sharp pain through my right hand and my left cheek, and I fell. When I came to myself I was lying in an ambulance, with a throbbing head, and the sounds of the enemy. We reached Sheppardstown that night and were thrown pellmell into a church.

I remember one more night! Lying helplessly on the bare floor, with two badly-dressed wounds, and suffering intensely from cold and fever, I perceived a dark figure amongst the wounded, arrived, the blue and gray uniforms mixed together. What was not my horror when, among the latter, I recognized Jack Dayton. He had been shot through the lung, and was left in a dying condition by four of his comrades. When entering the building he threw his eyes around, and they fell on me. A dark smile curled his lip, and a fiendish mirth stole over his dark features. I remembered then the last words of Lucy, "Beware of Jack Dayton!" and I felt that he was my foe. He turned his head opposite me, and I felt that his eyes were riveted on me. I tried to turn round but my strength failed me, and at last, overpowered by fatigue, I fell in a restless slumber.

How long I slept I do not know. When I awoke the moon was high, and its rays, finding their way through the large windows of the church, fell on the ghastly faces of my companions. I looked in vain for Jack Dayton. He was not there! I felt relieved, and began to muse on my past life when a kind of groan on my left induced me to look that way. What I saw froze what I had left of blood in my veins. Jack Dayton, with his teeth, crawling on his maimed limbs and leaving a bloody trail behind him, was making straight for me! Every now and then, he was obliged to stop, and a shudder would convulse his frame; his wounds would literally swamped the floor. Twice he staunched the blood with his handkerchief and resumed his way. Twice he made a desperate effort to regain his with strength; a few strides more and he would be on me. I attempted to scream; no sound escaped my parched lips. I tried to raise myself up, the blood gushed from my wound, and I fell back quite at the mercy of my foe. He kneeled over me, and lifting his hand from which there flowed a stream of blood—

"Blood! blood!" chuckled he, "and just where I marked you! I knew it—I knew I would find you out. I kill you—no, you are going to die, Henry Bolton," and he grasped my throat with one of his hands. "Die! yes, die here—far from your friends —by my hand—and you will never see Lucy any more—never! Ha, ha, ha! recover and go to her —and I will tell her that I took care of you—that I nursed you—and she will love me——" and he sank into a swoon from sheer weakness.

What I felt may be imagined but not defined. I would have given all the years I had still to live for the power to call for some strength. I made a violent effort to stir, his grasp tightened on my throat, he raised his hand to strike the fatal blow, and I lost all consciousness.

When in the morning our guardians entered the church they found me bathed in blood, the body of Jack Dayton lying at my side, his knife buried in the floor. A surgeon declared Jack Dayton's knife as a memento of Lee's raid in Pennsylvania.

MIDNIGHT CHARGE OF THE MULE BRIGADE.

A CORRESPONDENT with the Army of the Cumberland writes:

"During the advance of Hooker's command upon the enemy near Lookout mountain an incident happened which is worth recording, and one which I believe has never been made public, notwithstanding the fact that it was at the time of its occurrence a subject of much merriment among the ranks of the rebels. You will remember that Hooker moved on Lookout mountain by the extreme left of the army. While engaged in the movement up the valley, owing to the darkness of the night, a stampede among the mules took place. It was in the night, when both armies were resting on the edges of the previous day, and the sentinel's tread was the only sound that disturbed the silence of midnight. Rushing from the wagons, to the number of about thirty, the mules dashed down the valley in the direction of the enemy. The drivers were awakened by the noise, just in time to witness the disappearance of the animals through our advanced pickets. The enemy's pickets were not caught napping. Hearing the mule brigade tearing across the valley, they mistook them for the Yankee cavalry, discharged their muskets at the supposed Yanks and fell back upon a battalion stationed a little in the rear of them, with the cry that the enemy were upon them. The battalion partaking of the alarm began to open a rapid fire to bear the sound of the frightened mules, whose race was not checked by the volley from the pickets. They retreated into a short distance to a point where the whole brigade lay stacked their arms, and were calmly dreaming of home and their mothers. In reaching this point the mules spread their three fronts for flight, with the exclamation of "Hooker has surprised us, his cavalry is upon us!" The various sons of Mars did not wait to gather up their blankets or guns, (utensils the fastest pedestrians time on record back to the main force, leaving upon the field for the mule brigade one thousand stand of arms, among which were three hundred new Enfield rifles, blankets, accoutrements, knapsacks, &c. Morning our teamsters had given the alarm and a force of over 10,000 men started to the mules, and in a few hours returned to our lines with the valuable spoils."

THE INGENUITY OF THE JAPANESE.

THEY are bold, courageous, proud and eager after every kind of knowledge. A gentleman writes we noticed in Denmark to the effect that it was not discovered until some time afterward, and only then by the absence of the name, that the book had been inhabited. Japanese, when printed, the original kept as a pattern. There is a steamer (Medili), which used to ness between Yokohama and Nagasaki and Jedido, 600 miles, whose engines and boilers, and every part of the machinery, were made of copper. She was built by a doctor in Jedido, who first guide was a Dutch description of a steam engine, translated into Japanese. An Japanese gentleman whom we met over in 1859, in the Powhatan, to teach them gunnery. He was courteously received, and then taken over the arsenal at Seddo. He remarked to the Dutch "gunnery" he knew, that "Japan instead of having to learn manufactures they could us; their beautiful castings in bronze would puzzle the most experienced European workmen. Specimens have been shown to clever workmen who have confessed their inability to imitate them. They also do not know how to blow glass, there are some in the world who can do it without a blowing machine. The French minister had a large bell, so clear, and of such perfect tone, that it was purchased by the Japanese, and bought it for a good round sum. Their paper imitations of leather are perfect. Their paper waterproof coats are bought by the captains of ships for their protection in bad weather. Their paper is good, and they have imitated our watches; they would speak well if they had not attached the hands, and they are not backward in copperplate engraving and lithography. Their china is far superior to the Chinese.

The country abounds with coal, though they only use that found close to the surface; but even that, a piece of information we gained from the Dutch, is of great value to coal-fired vessels. Mexico and Australia; iron, copper and tin are found in profusion. The Japanese man at Yokohama gave a Japanese a piece of Anglia cotton stocking to copy. He did so, and returned the two pieces, and the former had much difficulty in saying which was which, so closely had he imitated it. In fact, they are a people who want for nothing but teachers.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

A LADY, now travelling in Europe, mentions the following instance of severe sickness which she witnessed on board the vessel which took her out to Egypt:

"One morning I heard the steward inquiring kindly as to the health of one of the ladies who was for ever complaining of a seventeen year headache. She answered faintly from her berth:

"Oh, yes' bad. All he might I was more sick yesterday. I had a fit—but I don't know as I can make you tell?"

"Would you like some breakfast, madam?"

"Don't know—ver' sick wiz se sea-mal. Vot'll you have?"

"Can get you anything nice, madam?"

"Don't know—vot'll you?"

"Yes, madam?"

"I leave it to you. Ayes you se mouton-chop—se potate—or tomato—wiz se coffee and not oake?"

"Well, you anything else you would like to have, madam?"

"Ah, dear! I cannot tell; I'm ver' indisposee. Stop, garson! after leetle bit, bring se lobstair, oeuuf-ner and se oil."

THERE has seldom been a finer burlesque on any work than Thackeray's verses on the Sorrows of Werther:

"Werther had a love for Charlotte,
Such as words could never utter,
Would you know how first he met her?
She was cutting bread and butter.

"Charlotte was a married lady,
And a most delightful mother,
And for all the wealth of Indies
Would have nothing to do but her.

"So he sighed, and pined, and sighed,
And his passion boiled and bubbled,
Till he blew out his silly brains,
And no more was by them troubled.

"Charlotte having seen his body
Borne to his long home in a shutter,
Like a well-conducted person,
Went on cutting bread and butter."

A WISE man, as well as witty, was Theodore Hook, when he told the alderman who had already contributed to any given charity, to be afraid of still another course.

"I think you ought to, if it's the same to you, I'll take the rest in money."

INVENTIVE SIMPLICITY.—"Spell cat," said a little girl of five years of age, the other day, to a smaller one of three.

"I can't," was the reply.

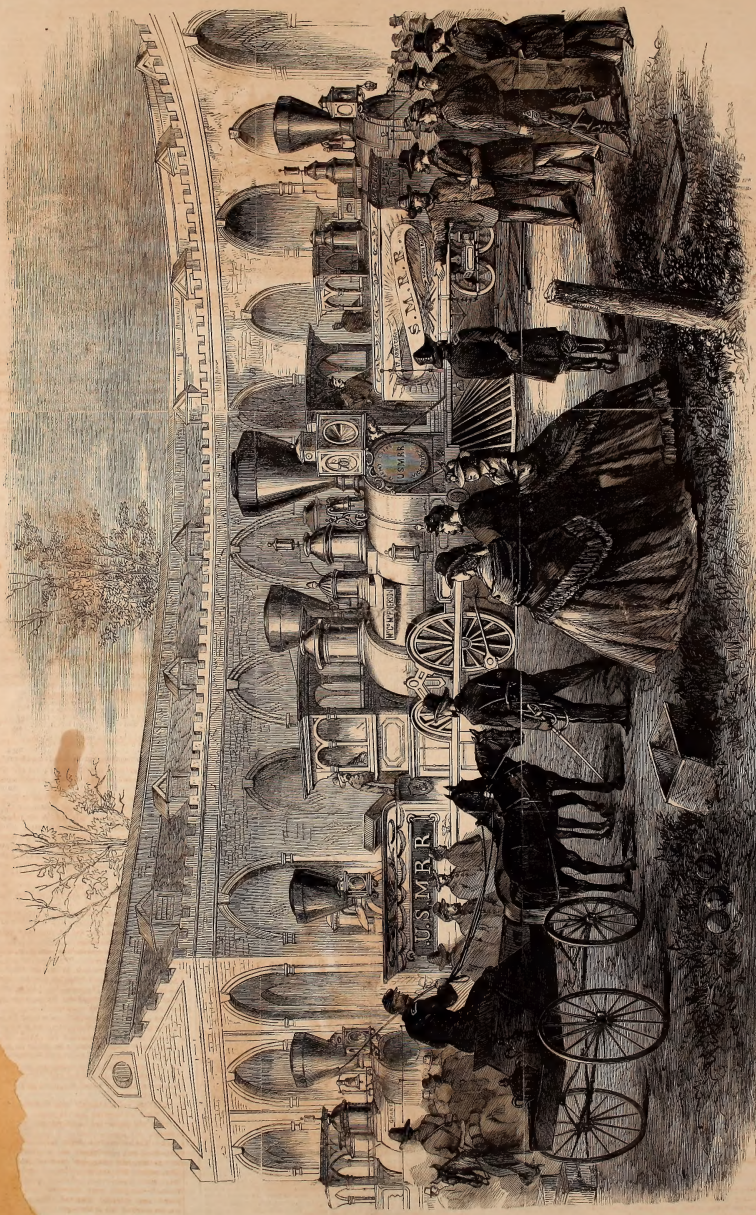
"Well, then, continued the youthful mistress, "if you can't spell cat, spell kitten and mittens."

THERE is a girl at the Troy seminary with such clear eyes that she can see the price mark on her coffee-cups. Of her eyes, blue and oval, like plums, we shall—no we shan't, we feel that we can't.

A lady—JENNINGS said a few days since to her girl, with a pompous and bare feet, "mother says you will oblige her by washing her a few potatoes and filling that crust with vinegar—putting a little soft soap in this pan—and please not let your turkey gobblers roost on our fence."

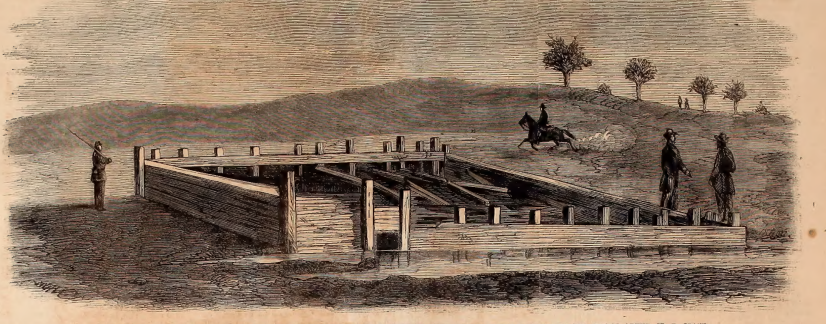
"BIDDY," said the landlady of a boarding-house to a new girl, "you must always be sure to take the bread we had for dinner, or boil it?" (The bread had been stolen.)

"Faix," replied Biddy, anxious to appear au fait in the subtle art of cookery, "I'm sure, mistress, I did both."



HOW TO MAKE THINGS PLEASANT IN AN OMNIBUS.—Take a bulldog in with you; or a company of babies; or produce a pistol, and quietly cock it; or pull out a Police Gazette out of your pocket, and as you read it look most intently at the features of every person in the omnibus.

DID you ever hear of the Yankees, who, boasting of a visit to George III., and his families with them, said his Majesty would have asked them to dine if it had not been washing day?

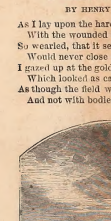


"CAN you tell me, Billy, how it is that the chanticleer always keeps his feathers so sleek and smooth?"

"Well, I'll tell you. He always carries his wife with him."

THE human race, like an antic gods, are always going—going—gone.

FIVE LOCOMOTIVES BUILT AT VICKSBURG BY THE SOLDIERS UNDER THE SUPERINTENDENCE OF COL. COLLIAUGH, OF GEN. McPHERSON'S STAFF.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, EDWD. B SCHELL.



THE WAR IN SOUTH CAROLINA—REBEL FLOATING BATTERY DRIVEN BY A STORM ON FOLLY ISLAND.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE.

A VISION IN THE NIGHT.

BY HENRY C. WATSON.

As I lay upon the hard, cold ground,
With the wounded and the slain,
So wearied, that it seemed my eyes
Would never close again,
I gazed up at the golden stars,
Which looked as calmly down
As though the field was crowned with corn,
And not with bodies strown.

Between me and the golden stars
A fleecy cloud passed by:
And, lo! a shadowy form appeared
Against the midnight sky.
It was no dream—I could not sleep,
My wounds forbade all rest—
I saw the form of my true wife,
With a baby on her breast.

I saw her looking down on me,
I felt her blessed smile,
And the night-wind swept upon my ear
An infant's cry the while.
I raised my helpless hands to her,
As I would bid her stay;
But the shadowy form, more shadowy grown
Passed silently away.

Passed upward, upward till 'twas lost
In the vast depths of space,
And darkness folded in the form
That shrank from my embrace.
A longing, wild, intense, came on,
That deadened every pain,
And, sick at heart, I hoped 'gainst hope,
That it would come again.

The hours sped on, the stars grew pale,
The dawn of day had come;
And then—I think I fell asleep,
Dreaming sweet dreams of home.
They came not—never more to me!
I saw them on their way—
My dead wife and her newborn babe—
To the bleat realms of day.

LINDA,

The Dancing Girl of the Cafe St. Nicol.

By Mrs. M. A. Denison.

IT was past the hour of midnight. Paris was in a haze of cloud; the thin, fine mist almost shrouded the lights of the great city. Here and there, in the wide streets, notes of music might be heard—here and there one looked in on bright saloons temptingly filled. Ladies smiled over their brimming glasses, and gay-looking gentlemen pledged them.

In one of these cafés there was a little stage at the extreme end, covered by a brilliant curtain. Many an expectant glance was directed that way. Sometimes there were murmurs of appreciation.

"We are expected to go into raptures over this new talent, I suppose!"

"Oh! yes, as usual, at so much a head. Always supposing that each new comer is so lovely as a flower."

The speakers were two men. One of them seemed new to society. He was a stranger in Paris, having come from some little town in the outskirts to write for the newspapers. He had a small fortune—very small—which he had decided to husband with the strictest economy. His eyes and brow were remarkably fine—the former possessing an almost supernatural brilliancy. For years he had longed to try his luck in the great capital. He had decided genius. His articles had been accepted by some of the leading journals which did not know him. They were published solely on account of their merit. Now he had seen the city of his desire; he was a novice in gaiety, and therefore fair game for the speculators. Would his hitherto stainless life still be continued amidst these dangers? Would the memory of his mother—the gentle sister he had left behind—the grave of his father—would the remembrance of all these keep him from vice?

Eugene, that was his name, was present in the café, to write down the raptures he had spoken about for the Journal sans Esprit. His companion was an older man by twelve years. Eugene was yet but twenty-three. Louis l'Eturele, shrewd and vicious, had yet the reputation of honesty. He was naturally handsome, but thus early had recourse to cosmetics. His moustache and hair were dyed, but so artfully one could never notice the deception. He was a man of brilliant parts—had run through a fortune and now lived by his wits. It was unfortunate that Eugene had fallen into such society.

"These dancers are not always young," observed Louis. "It's amusing to see their grimaces when they pretend to be. There's Madame Fullerton, come fifty, and yet she pretends to agility."

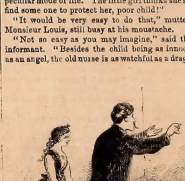
"But I assure you," said some one who sat near, "this Mademoiselle Linda is very young and very lovely. I have seen her in broad daylight—that is test enough. She is scarcely seventeen, and she seems not fourteen. Hark! was that the bell?"

"It wants five minutes," said Eugene, consulting his watch.

"I suppose you have heard her story," continued the last speaker.

"I have heard that she had a story," said Eugene, sipping his coffee.

"Oh! yes, there's an old woman with her continually—so old! but I'm told very bright and agile for one of her age. She guards the lamb with vigilance, I assure you. No one can speak to her, not even in this old Margrave's presence—that is her name. She was nurse in the family twenty years ago—no, thirty; and there are some strange mysteries connected with it, as I have heard. The existence of this child is supposed to be unknown—and the brother is immensely rich—the son of a great wine merchant who was said to have committed suicide, years ago, on account of some crime. Very well—it's a somewhat mixed-up matter, to be sure, and I can only get at what there are here and there; but this brother, who changed his name, previously travelling through Germany and Russia. Now, as this old nurse has learned, he is in Paris, and would you believe it, the two—child and nurse—are looking for this brother as one would look for a needle in hay. Of course they don't want to advertise—that would necessitate bringing to the mind of the wealthy man some disagreeable reminiscences which he had rather would be kept in the dark—for it is said his father committed a murder. So on the strength of a memory nearly twenty years old, these two poor creatures are going round the country."



Upon Eugene this story made a strong impression. Louis twisted his moustache and smiled to himself.

"They are very poor, then," said Eugene.

"Of course; they must toil for their daily bread, and this is the reason why they have chosen this peculiar mode of life. The little girl thinks she may find some one to protect her, poor child!"

"It would be very easy to do that," muttered Monsieur Louis, still busy at his moustache.

"Not so easy as you may imagine," said their informant. "Besides the child being as innocent as an angel, the old nurse is as watchful as a dragon.

The Manager returning the Ring.

Indeed, the whole mind and will of both are bent upon finding this lost relation, who will protect the poor child and keep her from possible degradation."

The eyes of Louis flashed. He had an idea, and left his moustache for his opera glass, for the bell was just beginning to tinkle and the few musicians had just struck up a lively air.

Another moment and the bright curtain went up. Behind it was a floral scene, very charming, representing a garden of roses, with groups of statuary here and there. Presently, emerging from one of the side scenes, a fairy little figure came forth. The dark skirts of a woman were just visible. Probably the nurse was still jealously watching her darling. It was indeed a lovely, childish figure, that of the danseuse. She came forward naturally, a soft crimson just lighting up the paleness of her cheeks, her eyes moist and shining, and her lips parted in a beautiful smile.

"Lovely creature—charmante—most beautiful!" resounded on all sides.

"I never saw such hair in all my life," said Louis, critically, after holding his breath a moment in astonishment. "It gleams like pale gold—and what a lustrous complexion. That girl is going to be the most beautiful woman in Paris."

"She looks so innocent!" murmured Eugene; "poor little creature! she ought not to be there."

"No, by Jove!" exclaimed the other, with an accent that made Eugene turn to look at him. "No," he continued, seeing the kind of impression he had made, "truly she ought not to be there. She should find her brother and the shelter of a home—or else," he added, "a place on the boards of the royal theatre."

"Oh! no, no, not there!" said Eugene, shuddering; "she is too young and too pure."

"She will not always be so young," said Louis quietly.

The child had made a strong impression at the Café St. Nicol. Everybody was in raptures with her beauty, her grace, her seeming intelligence. The curtain fell amidst prolonged applause. It was raised again—the beautiful creature came forward—bouquets were showered upon the stage—and one splendid diamond ring, attached to a moss rosebud, fell at her feet. The girl picked it up, looking smiling and surprised, bowed again and retired. Again the curtain went down, but the excited crowd seemed not yet satisfied. Once more the glittering fabric was slowly raised. A man stood there, attired in black velvet. He held Mademoiselle Linda by the hand. After a moment there was silence, caused by seeing something glittering between his thumb and finger. It was the manager of the popular café, and he held the diamond bauble.

The Dancing Girl receiving her first Wages.

"I thank my friends," he said, in a humble voice, "for their tokens of interest. The little lady, Mademoiselle Linda, thanks them too. But I am requested to say, by the respectable lady who has charge of the young mademoiselle, that she cannot, on any account, permit the acceptance of the ring which has been thrown on the stage. She begs me to inform the donor that such gifts are entirely unsuited to the young lady's position at present, and the owner can have the same by applying to me at my usual stand, any time this evening. I have the happiness and honor to assure you that Miss Linda will continue to dance at this place for the remainder of the week."

This speech was received in profound silence. Was ever such a thing heard before? A gift of such costliness refused—equal to gold, for it might, in the hands of a mercenary person, have been turned into that magic metal. Who ever before was known to do all this metropolis so three back upon the giver a fortune like that? There were many surmises as to who the donor might be, but he kept his secret, for the time was not claimed till the next day, and in such a manner that nobody was any the wiser.

Monsieur Louis pulled his moustache harder than ever.

"That person is a fool!" he said, in a quick, spiteful voice.

"I think she shows wisdom. It is as much as to say: Gentlemen, you cannot buy the good graces of this child, no, not for unounted treasure," spoke up Victorine. "I can fancy that my mother would have done the same thing."

"Pshaw! why, a few gifts like that would enable the woman to take the child out of the way of temptation—she could withdraw from the world and bring her charge up lamblike to the end. I don't know what to make of her. At any rate, the girl is an angel."

"That she is," echoed Eugene; "the purest and most beautiful face I have ever seen. Much more beautiful than my sister, and I did not think there were any like her."

"What! you have a pretty sister, then?" said Monsieur Louis, tossing off his glass.

"You would say so," returned the youth, boastfully, "if you could see her picture. Sometime I will show it to you. It will be a great favor, for there are very few to whom I would venture. But you have been so kind, showing me round and extending favors, that I shall be only too happy."

"Thank you, a thousand times," replied the other, concealing a smile as he applied a napkin to his mouth.

CHAPTER II.

To return to the little danseuse. The proprietor of the café met Mrs. Margrave, the nurse, after his neat little speech, in a private room.

"I have executed your commands, madame," he said.

"And did any one come for the ring?" asked the nurse, eagerly.

"Oh! no, madame—that we could scarcely expect. Such a thing is not often given in these places."

"I would on no account accept it," said the old woman, taking the child by the hand. "Well, darling, do you feel any fatigue?"

"No; not at all," replied the girl; "but oh! Margrave, why did you not allow me to keep it? It was so beautiful! I never had anything like it in my life."

"What do you think would be said, Linda, of a young lady in your situation? No, child, not till you come to your rights shall stones of such value sparkle upon you."

"Well, I suppose you are right, nurse," said the girl. "Of course you are. But still it was a gift."

"You do not know the danger that sometimes lurks in gifts, child; no, no, they shall not buy my darling, the 'Rose of Provence Parisians,'" murmured the woman, tenderly.

"Here is your pay," said the proprietor, "and I am ready to make you a larger offer if you will still continue at my café. Name your terms and they shall be complied with."

"I hardly know as yet whether Linda can undergo the fatigue of another engagement," said the nurse, looking at her anxiously.

"Oh! yes, I can," cried the girl; "I am not so very tired, and I can rest all day, you know."

Madame Margrave smiled at her eagerness, and made her bargain with the manager. At the conclusion she left the café by a back door, where a person out of back stood in waiting, and the two were driven to a tall, somber-looking house in the Rue St. Grange. Opening the door with her own private key, the old lady went wearily up three pair of stairs and entered a small but, when the candles were lighted, cheerful room.

"Margrave, ain't you getting tired of this sort of life?" asked Linda, eyeing her old nurse curiously.

"Why do you ask?"

"Because I have heard that dancers in the great theatres get, oh! a mint of money, and do not dance every night either. And it seems to me we should stand a better chance of finding him!"

"Oh! child," cried the nurse, in accents of horror, "I would not have you go upon the boards of those places for thousands upon thousands. It is bad enough as it is. Besides, there is no place like these cafés for bringing a variety of nations together."

"But then, if we should never find my poor brother, I might make you rich, you know. Then we should no longer be obliged to seek him in this way, but could travel at our ease."

"Do you think me afraid of ease?" queried the nurse, almost sternly. "Has, indeed, the sight of the diamond ring nearly turned your brain, silly child?"

"Oh! no, nurse—you know me better; but I do not like to see you looking so pale and anxious—and so I should like to make a fortune for you."

"Never fear for me, child," said the nurse. "If I can only restore you to your rights and to a protector before I die, it is all I ask."

Oh! don't talk of dying," said Linda, impetuously. "You must live a great many years yet, to exult in my good fortune, and yours, too; for when my brother finds me, of course he will be so thankful to you. For he must be very lonely, poor man."

"You forget he may have a wife."

"So I do; a wife and children—and they would be my little nieces and nephews—dear little children! why think of it. And I love children so—how delighted I should be!"

"Well, well, child, we'll wait till we find them—so eat your supper now."

"But, Margrave, I wonder if my brother was handsome enough to marry a pretty wife? Was he handsome?"

"He was, when I last saw him, a beautiful young man," was the reply. "His skin was rather brown, but then he had a bright color in the cheeks, and dark eyes, and handsome curly hair—and such a bright, winning smile."

"Oh! didn't I see him to-night, then ?" cried the girl, with glittering eyes.

"See him to-night, child?"

"Yes, yes—I know I must have seen him. Dark eyes and curly hair, such hair, and such a smile, and a bright red color in his cheeks."

"What are you talking about, Linda ?" queried the nurse, sternly.

"You may see what you please, Margrave, but I do believe I have seen my brother. I noticed his smile in particular, for he often looked at me—indeed all the time," said the artless girl.

"Child, are you gone crazy ?" cried the nurse, with a look of extreme concern. "How old did he seem—this man ?"

"Oh! young, very young—about twenty, perhaps."

"Do you know, Linda, that it is twenty years since I have seen him, and he must be now past thirty."

"Is thirty old, then ?" asked the danseuse.

"Of course—that is, when past thirty would not be likely to look like twenty. You can think for yourself that it would not be the case. It is very unwise to conclude from appearances. Have you always been so particularly ?"

Linda felt her cheeks flush.

"One cannot keep one's eyes shut in such a place," she said, almost petulantly.

"To be sure not, nor do I want you to. But as I have so often cautioned you before, I say now, be careful how you fix your regards on strangers. Young girls in your position are not respected unless they are extremely careful, and that is why I always accompany you, and insist upon such stringent rules. You have no mother, and I am bound not to see you come to grief."

"Dear old Margrave, please don't mind my fault-finding," cried the girl, suddenly grateful. "I promise you I will be just as careful as you wish."

CHAPTER III.

It was the interior of a splendid saloon. Monsieur had at last entered the young and thoughtless stranger to enter one of those Paris haunts from which, sometimes, the breathless forms of the ruined are carried to the Morgue. Eugene did not play deep, however—he was wary, and after gaining a little he refused further venture.

"I am thinking of the Lords," said the elder companion, with a slightly curling lip.

"To tell you the truth, I am afraid I think of her a great deal too much. I wish my sister was here, I would certainly manage to become acquainted with her."

"Oh! that can be done easily," said Louis.

"Pray tell me how ?"

"Merely by your representing that you think you have found her brother."

"And who shall have the honor of representing that brother ?"

"I shall," was the short reply.

Eugene, inasmuch as he thought, looked curiously at his friend, but he saw there only a merry smile.

"What is your meaning?" he asked.

"Merely that you should wish to confer with them about this brother, and the best way to do that is to send up an abrupt message when you find them. This will take them by surprise, and they will admit you."

"Perhaps."

"It is almost certain to. Such very prudent people are easily thrown off their guard."

"But then you are not her brother."

"How do you know ?"

"Sure enough," said Eugene, starting, "how do I know? If you are——"

"Well, if I am, what then ?"

"Then I shall certainly have an opportunity of becoming acquainted with her."

"Perhaps not. I might in that case act the tyrant, and demand riches for my sister."

"Oh! well, undoubtedly I shall be rich."

"What, on the proceeds of your pen ?" queried Louis, with an unpleasant laugh.

Eugene colored. He had not assuredly received much encouragement for his literary arrangement, as yet, and his money was largely encroached upon.

"Ah! I am sure you would give me a chance," he said, with a manner that made him at the moment a special pleader. "But suppose you are not her brother, and I am inclined to that belief myself, what then ?"

"Why, then, it will be a good frolic."

"Nothing more? How will you get out of the scrape if you have no proof ?"

"Leave that to me; I was always peculiarly fertile in expedients. It can all be easily accounted for. I have a sister somewhere whom I am trying to see, and in seeking her I thought I had found her. If not, adieu, and pardon for the trouble."

"You are a queer fellow, to be sure!" said Eugene, thoughtfully. "I am sure my sister will not approve."

"You should not have left your sister, young man, or you should have tied yourself to her apron-string, and so come to the great capital defiant of danger or temptation."

"I see you are making sport of me," returned Eugene, a little ashamed of his honest impulses, in the presence of this wily man of the world. "I assure you I am no more tied than other young men to the will of another."

"Bah! but you must prove that."

"How?"

"By making this experiment—that is, if you are not afraid of the consequences."

"I have no fear of anything," said Eugene, who was in reality afraid of the opinion of this very man.

"Then you consent."

"It will be a good joke—I don't care if I do."

"With your artistic imagination, there is no fear but you can get up a plausible story," returned Monsieur Louis. "But now let us to the cafe. This is the last night of the Linda, and we will at all events see her."

There, in the café, was the same brilliancy of light and display of dress, the showy curtain hanging at the end as usual. The poor nurse was longing for this engagement to close. She, too, had seen the young man, of whom now Linda scarcely spoke, seat himself night after night at the same table. She had watched the varying countenance of her charge, and trembled at the intensity of the admiration Linda was thus engaged in that one short week. While dancing she did not look bravely and childishly over the audience as before, but cast down her eyes, as we saw now and then, as they were lifted, a sudden scarlet overspread her cheeks.

Anon, on looking up, she met the ardent gaze of the young man whose face she had so much admired. At home she also seemed changed, and nurse Margrave noticed it with a sensation of pain. She was afraid this was her work—her glances seemed to look a great way off; she said nothing about her brother, and sighed as she remembered that the engagement was at an end.

As for the frequenters of the café, they were many of them wondering what other novelty would be introduced when this petite danseuse should be gone.

Louis sipped his coffee calmly. Eugene could only look on in silence—his coffee and delicate tarts stood untasted before him.

"If I have heard," said Louis, "that she is to dance in one of the theatres, which one is a secret as yet. Most managers would pay a heavy sum for that golden hair!"

"I hope not," exclaimed "Eugene, starting. "Your child! what a life may be before her!"

"Not unless somebody outwits that old duenna. Upon my word, she does look uncommonly pretty to-night!"

This was called forth by the sudden applause that was almost deafening. The proprietor stood bowing, the little dancer at his side. At that moment a very tiny bouquet, tied with a blue ribbon, was thrown upon the small stage. The proprietor lifted it with a smile and presented it to the little lady, who lit up with such an acknowledgment that sent the crowd off into raptures.

"To-morrow," whispered Louis to Eugene.

CHAPTER IV.

It required not a little ingenuity to find the residence of nurse Margrave, but Eugene, determined not to be foiled, at last announced that he had been successful.

One morning the nurse was compelled to leave her charge earlier than usual, to attend to some money matters. Linda should have been very happy, for she was to the creation of two weeks, to do as she pleased, and to buy her a new wardrobe for the coming winter. Should have been, but she was not. The absence of the young stranger continually filled her mind. That she should never see him again she feared, and the thought caused her intense suffering. She sat alone, brooding over her new and strange emotions, till a knock at the door startled her. It opened, and an elfish-looking girl, with wild, tangled locks, entered after bidding. Linda seldom did this. She had no occasion to call upon either the nurse or her charge, consequently Linda had never seen her so near. The uncouth apparition almost frightened her. She regarded her with an uneasy look.

"What do you want?" she asked.

The strange girl eyed her for some moments in silent wonder. She had heard of the beautiful young danseuse, but was not prepared for so much loveliness.

"Please, there's a gentleman downstairs," said the object.

Linda's heart beat high for a moment.

"Well ?" she interrogatrd.

"He told me to give this to you," and casting one final glance, the girl pushed a note into her hand and stood back, folding her arms behind her. Linda opened the note and read rapidly :

"May I see you for a few moments? I think I can give you intelligence of your brother."

Her eyes grew bright—she clasped her hands together like one in a rapture.

"Oh! tell him to come up, instantly," she said, with an eagerness she did not try to dissemble.

What was her astonishment when the girl ushered into her room the elegant young stranger—Eugene—our visitor at the café. For a moment she was speechless—the next, recovering a small part of her equanimity, she offered him a dainty chair, her own, and the only article of luxury in the apartment. Eugene, on his side, was also covered with confusion, and did not remember his rôle. He sat down—took one hasty glance at the poor room with its bare walls and pine wardrobe, three little fire of coals in the grate, the dingy mantelpiece, the table on which the tea-tray, though quite clean, were still left standing, ready for the next meal.

"I trust you will pardon this unceremonious introduction," he said at last. "I am Eugene Atelle; I have seen you at the Café St. Nicol, and have been enchanted with your dancing."

Her vivid blush helped him to remember that this was neither the time nor the place for compliments. But Linda's exceeding loveliness as she stood there before him, her luxuriant hair wound in heavy coils round her head, her complexion looking almost warm in its delicacy, her grave way of acknowledgment made him nervous. Besides, he knew that his errand was not exactly an honorable one, that it involved the sacrifice of the truth, and it was the first time in his life he had squarely acted a lie. These things troubled him, nevertheless for the time he could only go right on, the little unexpected force without flinching, whatever might be the consequences.

"I came, also, in behalf of a friend, who thinks, and who I think may be perhaps the brother you have so long been in search of."

"Oh! how do you know this? I mean, what leads you to think this?" Oh! it is only the final my dear brother I should be so happy! Tell me what he looks like—is he handsome ?"

"He is called handsome."

"And is he married? and has he any darling little children ?"

Eugene with difficulty repressed a smile, so eager, artless, childish she was.

"I think, Miss Linda, he is not married. Pardon me for using your given name, but I have become familiar with it on the bills, and I do not know the other."

"Of course you do not, and I am not to tell you my surname at present. At any rate, I go by my good nurse's name, which is Margrave. But I had rather all who like me call me Linda. My name is Linda."

"It's a beautiful name, and something like my sister's," he said; "my dear sister Lily."

"Ah! that is a sweet name. So you have a sister," Linda began, quickly approaching confidence. "Oh! how I wish I knew her. I do so long to know some young girl near my own age. Nurse would die if I were to attempt to associate with any one of my own calling—oh! dear, what would she do? Is your sister in Paris?"

He shook his head. Every moment he was becoming more and more unwilling to go on with his acting. How could he impose upon this innocent, pure creature? He almost hated Louis, for having had brought the stranger; he quite hated himself.

"Oh! no, she is not in Paris—I hope she never may be," he said, hurriedly.

"Why, don't you like Paris? I think it is beautiful. If I ever get my rights, and of course you know I still have some time, I will take such pleasure in going round, not to amuse people, but to be amused. But do you know I love dancing greatly, and I mean to make the profession ! Nurse had the rheumatic fever terribly three years ago, and that has rendered her incapable of working, you see. If it was not for that, she'd never hear of her doing anything for a living, for it was her hope to support me."

"I hear you are going into one of the theatres," said Eugene.

"What! to cance ? I don't know where my next engagement will be, though I do know nurse has had several offers. It seems odd to me that I should be in demand."

"I don't think so," said Eugene, betraying the admiration he felt.

"I don't know if I should listen to compliments, nevertheless I thank you for your kind appreciation. I used to wonder if you—if you"—blushing violently as she found she had betrayed herself, she could not for confusion finish the sentence.

"Was satisfied that my coffee was palatable?" said Eugene, laughing. "That was what you meant. To tell you the truth, at the Café St. Nicol I was satisfied with everything, more than satisfied, but it has lost all charms for me now," and he sighed involuntarily.

Linda looked down, feeling that she dared not meet his glances, though she was a young lady, for she could not disguise to herself that never in her whole life had she been so happy as in these few precious moments.

"You will, of course, dance somewhere," he said.

"You forget that if this gentleman you speak of is my brother, I shall probably have no need to dance in public."

Again he colored violently. What a mean wretch he felt himself, no pen could tell.

"Of course," he stammered. "I had forgotten that; indeed, in your society one cannot help forgetting all things else."

"Ah! that is flattery," said Linda.

"No, no! I am sincere. Heaven knows I would not flatter you; I speak the truth—I—I trust I always do."

How could he do else but stammer there, conscious that his presence was part of an acted lie?

Linda knew not how to interpret his confusion. To turn it into another emotion, she lifted the beautiful bouquet that had been thrown to her the previous night.

"That is exquisite!" cried Eugene, like one catching at my straw. "Those are the choicest flowers that can be had for love or money. What delicious roses? You have had many bouquets, I suppose?"

"None so perfect as that. Do you know who I honed had thrown it?" she queried, archly.

He blushed and smiled as he answered:

"I wish it had been me."

"Oh! it was not you, then," she said a little disquisitionist in her look.

"No, unfortunately—it never seemed to me to convey anything more than the merest friendship, and that was so much less than I would profess, if I dared. But allow me to take it."

She gave it to him. He turned it round and round, admiring its perfection.

"It feels strangely here—why, upon my word, here is gold. See—see—a splendid ring! diamonds as I live!"

He had removed the ribbon a little, and there, enclosing the stems, was, as he said, a diamond ring of great value. She came nearer, her eyes sparkling.

"Shall I take it off?" he asked.

"Certainly."

"It is the very same ring!" she exclaimed, as she received it from him. "I should know it anywhere, for that night I had it on my finger."

"You mean the one that your guardian, the woman who goes with you, refused to let you keep."

"The very same—oh! I wonder if she will take it from me now? Yet, she might if she does. I don't want to think too much of such things. Nurse says many people have come to ruin by the love of such beautiful things, and I am sure I should rather be good and never have a ring."

Eugene looked at the beautiful face with new and deeper admiration.

"But isn't it lovely? Oh! how the stones sparkle!"

"It is a ring of very peculiar construction," said Eugene, again examining the ornament. "I should judge too, that it was old; the setting is somewhat antique, but as you say, the stones are not only beautiful but extremely valuable. There can be no deception in that."

At this moment the clock struck seven. It startled him. Time had never flown over him such light and swift wings to either of them before. Linda had slipped the ring on her finger, and was carelessly turning it now this way, now that, to admire the effect of its brilliant tints.

"What can make Margrave stay so long?"

"I forget you are expecting your nurse, and I know not what apology I could possibly make to her."

Your errand is, I think, apology enough," said Linda, gravely.

"To be sure it is, but in the charming—pardon me, I will not compliment. I was merely going to say"—and again perplexed. Should he tell the truth, and confess himself a villain? Should he tell this guileless creature that she was the victim of a plot, a conspiracy, and bid her beware of all who should seek her confidence, or try to impose upon her credulity? He stammered and turned red; in fact, he was at the point of confessing, when suddenly the front door below slammed to with a peculiar sound.

"It is my nurse," said Linda, in inexplicable feeling during her unconscious. "Now she has come you must tell her more about this man whom you suppose to be my brother than you have me."

It is the action to say that Eugene trembled from head to foot. His heart had misgiven him more than once; now his confidence deserted him. He seemed to go, feeling instantly that he might brush past her on the stairs, and get out before she could see him.

CHAPTER V.

IN vain he summoned up his resolution, her hand was already on the doorlatch. He did not cower, but he instinctively retreated against the wall. The door went open against him; the old lady entered.

"Oh! darling!" she cried, "darling! I've such news to tell you. What is the matter—how you pale! Ah!" for turning she had confronted Eugene. Her face grew gray with anger. She darted fiery glances at the one then at the other.

"It may be, nurse, that he has been beforehand with the good news," said Linda, trembling, she knew not why.

"What do you mean, child?" the woman asked in quick but grieved tones. "Oh! Linda, what am I to think? Has this young man ever been here before?"

"Never!" answered Linda and Eugene, in the same breath.

"And, nurse, he would not have come here to-day, only he thinks he has found my brother."

"Your proofs, young man," said the nurse, sternly.

"Pardon me, it is late, and I have already encroached upon mademoiselle's time. I prefer to reduce the proofs to writing."

The nurse smiled grimly.

"You see, confiding girl, he dare not or cannot answer me. Sir, you are at liberty to go."

"Oh! nurse, at least hear him," said Linda, quite overcome with her friend's rudeness, as she thought it.

"No, I prefer to read what he shall see fit to write me. My child, you do not know the world as well as I do. Pray heaven you never may. Young man, I bid you once you were at liberty to go."

"I trust you will not do me dishonour in your thoughts, either of you;" he said, humbly casting an appealing look towards the dancer that almost brought the tears to her eyes.

"The quicker you disappear the less reason I shall have," said the inexorable nurse. She held the door open. Eugene bowed, and overwhelmed, not so much with confusion for being found there, as regret at the dissimulation he had used, and which he had not the art or the vileness to continue, moved slowly out, and down the stairs.

"Now," said the nurse, standing with her back against the door, as if to bar it from all future intruders, "now Linda, what have you to say for yourself? How often have I told you never to admit any one in my absence?"

"Oh! nurse, but he came with such a message—a message about my brother," sobbed Linda.

"Well, what did he tell you about your brother?"

Linda started and trembled. For the first time she thought he had absolutely told her nothing about him—not one word in the long hour he had staid there. She could not answer.

"How long has he been here?"

"Since ten," was the reply.

"And has not, I dare to say, mentioned the errand that brought him here. Linda, he is a bad man, or he never would have dared to gain admittance here on any such pretext. I tell you he is false and bad."

"He is neither, nurse," cried the young girl, with energy; "I am sure he is good, and you have no right to speak so. I have done no harm, and if we got talking about other things it is my fault as well as his."

At that moment the nurse caught sight of the glittering ring. From pallor her face changed to the crimson of anger.

"Great heaven!" she cried, "what is that on your finger?"

Linda looked down terrified.

"Wicked, foolish, misguided girl, to accept such a gift from a man you know nothing of."

"I did not," gasped Linda; "he never gave it to me."

"Then where did you get it?"

"It was in that bouquet."

"What bouquet, child; are you delirious?"

"Did I ever deceive you?" cried Linda, impetuously. "You shall not be cross to me. I am no longer a little child to be scolded. I say it was in this bouquet," and she took it up; "it was round the stem, under the ribbon."

"How in the world came you to find it, then?"

"I did not; he found it," sobbed the girl.

"Linda, are you mad or simply idiotic? How would he know of the ring's being there if he did not place it there? Of course it was he who gave you the bouquet."

"It never was," returned the girl, with vehemence.

"And how do you know?"

"He told me so."

"Then he told an untruth."

"No, I will not think that—I never will think that. It is not possible that he told a lie. I am sure that he never placed the ring there—never gave me the bouquet."

"Let me see the ring."

The girl took it from her finger.

The woman surveyed it with great interest for some moments, murmuring as she did so, "It is the second time."

"I shall return it again," she added aloud, resolutely.

"But to whom?"

"To the proprietor of the Café St. Nicol."

"And he will perhaps keep it. Since the person is determined I shall have it, I would not return it only by advertisement. Mr. Atolle, the young man, whoever he was, said it was of great value."

The nurse was still intent on her examination. She turned the ring round and round, and the scrutinised the innocent child-face of her charge.

"Maybe I'm a little hasty, Linda," she said, after a few moments' silence; "but if I am, remember it is my love for you that makes me so cautious. As for this young man, I see that you will have interest in him. I could desire, for he may prove to be good and true. I hope he will, for your sake. He did wrong, however, to come here on any such pretext. He should have let me know nothing, and never meant to tell you anything about your brother. I shall keep the ring, for there may come a time when we shall need its value to help us. You can tell what may happen. Come, come, darling, cheer up, it's always the darkest before day, and perhaps your day is going to break soon; only you must be more careful after this, and don't admit young gentlemen at unreasonable hours. It's my opinion that the police watched till he saw the young gentleman had gone out, this morning. And now for the good news. You and I are to travel with a lady all over the Continent. Think what a chance to find your brother!"

Linda's countenance fell.

"I don't want to travel," she said; "I want to stay in Paris. It is in Paris we shall find him if anywhere. Besides, if I go, I must go as a servant."

"No, indeed, child, you go to exhibit, as before," said the old nurse, eagerly. "This woman is establishing a company of some kind, dancers and singers, and she wants to make your fortune. Besides it will be romantic, for we shall travel through picturesque villages and pretty towns, and drive out all the time. And she will give you some new costumes and treat you like an angel. It will be much better than taking the engagement at the theatre."

"What! is there an engagement offered me?" cried Linda, with sparkling eyes, "and at one of the Parisian theatres? Oh! Margrave, take that, do."

"Child," said her nurse, sternly, "I did not know that you loved this foolish life so well. To put you upon those boards might prove your ruin. They would not let me be with you as I am elsewhere, and you, so young and inexperienced, would be surrounded with the worst of characters. Oh! would that I could work for you, if we had but bread and water to live on. Oh! would that I could find your brother again."

"Don't cry, Margrave," said Linda, softened at her tears: "you may do what you please with me. But you are mistaken if you think I love this life very dearly. I don't think I do. I believe I should be very happy in a little cottage, or a single room in a cottage, if I could make flowers or tend birds, or have a little money that I might not have to work very hard. There now, you are smiling as much as to say you see I do not love work very well. But I could work, and I will, for you, Margrave—only," and her countenance fell again, "it is so hard to leave Paris, where I have been so happy. We could I not dance all summer at the Café St. Nicol?"

"For good and sufficient reasons," said the nurse, gravely.

"Well, then, I suppose I must be content;" and Linda sighed and was silent.

CHAPTER VI.

"There! what did I tell you?" cried the nurse, triumphantly, on that same day. She entered the room where Linda was preparing for her day's sewing, half-an-hour after Eugene had left. "Didn't I say that a young man was an impostor? And yet he has not behaved so very bad. Now listen—" Linda did listen, with flushed cheeks and a beating heart.

The letter ran as follows:

"Most respected Madame Margrave—

"That's very nicely put," said the nurse, looking up for a moment while she adjusted her spectacles, and then went on with her reading:

"I am a young man from the city of Rouen. I am by profession a writer. You may have seen my articles in the Sentinel and the ——Review, always signed with a double X. But pardon me for speaking so much about myself. It is only a month ago I first saw mademoiselle—and—"

"I believe I will not read this aloud."

"Oh! yes, you will," cried Linda, cunningly. "All yes, you will," and curiously now; but still though I do so, it is under protest of my own conscience:

"It is only a month ago I first saw Mademoiselle Linda Rochelle at the Café St. Nicol. I was then in company with a gentleman whom I had learned to respect highly, and who proved to be the soul of honor. He had done me many good favors, though I have reason to believe it was for selfish purposes. This gentleman, Mr. Atolle, looked on the fair mademoiselle with more than a passing interest. But I have reason to think that while I was actuated by the noblest of motives (for I think God that even in Paris I have done nothing that would permanently dishonor me), he was not so innocent. I never than admired mademoiselle. I loved her, and not only that, but even it, though my poverty will probably bar me for many years from an alliance with her, I hope to win her heart, nurse—lessly suggested that, as we had heard the story connected with the danseuse, I should gain admittance to mademoiselle, and represent that I believed I had found her brother. After that introduction I could easily bring the matter to a proof. How far he would have gone in this matter I do not know. He might even have intended upon you, madame, for he is a powerful man whenever he is interested. I entered into it as young and inexperienced, never thinking of the consequences, only wishing to see mademoiselle myself, and thinking that I could send innocently. But I am punished thoroughly for my presumption. I cannot say nothing could be keener than the mortification of the failure of my interview. I had but constructed me to confess the deception, and then I should have every reason for leaving the intruding upon your privacy. As for the mademoiselle, I should trust to her contrition. I know not what Monsieur Louis will say when he learns that I have played false with his falseness, but I trust he will not punish me for my friendship, since I learn that there may be too much confidence placed even in one's friends. To this much I owe at least to the good mother who brought me up to despise meanness and abhor treachery. I cannot help feeling sorry for those whom I have had the misfortune to behold only too often. May all good blessings attend her. Perhaps I shall never meet her again; if I do not, may she be the happiest of the happy, and the husband worthy of her exalted virtues and pre-eminent beauty. I thank you also for your fearless rebuke. I deserved it, more than you imagine. Should this meet you, I know what to do with him. Let me appear as the humble penitent and confessed discovery, as he may be as relentless an enemy as he has been a generous friend. With every wish for your prosperity, and the welfare of the innocent Linda-moiselle Linda, I remain,

"Ever yours devotedly.

"EUGENE ATOILE."

"Oh! nurse, what an ingenuous young man!" exclaimed Linda, whose eyes were full of tears.

"I give him the credit of being perfectly disinterested," said the nurse, thoughtfully. "It is a pity he has not a fortune. But if he had it might be the worse for him. But hark! the bell is ringing; there comes the first pupil. Remember, I will deal with him. Go you upstairs, child, into the garret. I will teach him to dare to trifle with a child under my charge. I dare to say he has no money and influence, but neither shall avail with me."

So Linda went sorrowfully up the stairs, to think of Eugene.

It might have been fifteen or twenty minutes after that Monsieur Louis emerged from the room of the Margraves, with a face as black as the cloud that deepens with thunder. All the bad passions that had been repressed in the presence of Eugene now avoided him. Neither had he received a note sent by the latter, warning him not to go to the house of the Margraves. His heart was filled with the darkest thoughts. He was a desperate man, and not accustomed to find his plans foiled after he had laid them. It was not long before he began to seek for Eugene. That young man, stricken with sudden conviction, had decided within himself that the idle life he had been leading, if persisted in, would destroy him. It was useless trying to banish the image of the dancing girl of the Café St. Nicol, but he could at least have the pleasure of sometimes feeling that he might be worthy of her. This it was that led him to give up his rather expensive ways, and to furnish a pleasant garret in one of the by-streets, lay in a great store of books, pens, ink, and set himself diligently to work. He had also come to the conclusion that the companionship of Monsieur St. Leon was dangerous to his morals, especially since he had received a beautiful letter from his sister, full of warning and sweet advice.

Oh! the talisman of mother and sister to a young man far away from home!

He had then taken a new room, where he worked diligently from the early morning until nightfall. He had changed his café from St. Nicol to another rather down town, not caring to associate longer with the young Russian. Besides, he did not like to look again on that brilliant curtain, to see it rise on worn and worldly artistes, who cared for nothing but the francs they might earn. Since Linda's bouquet fate was grown all things seemed stale, flat, unprofitable. But he was not long to enjoy this state of quietude; fate was weaving better things for him—or rather worse, out of which better might evolve. He was on the eve of a greater excitement than that which turned him away from the dancing-girl forever, from the charming face of Mademoiselle Linda.

(To be continued.)

MY LOVE AND I.

My love reposes on a rosewood frame—
A sunk' nave I;
A couch of feathery down fills up the same—
Mine's straw, but dry;
She sinks to sleep at night with scarce a sigh—
With waking eye I watch the stars creep by.

My love her daily dinner takes in state—
And so do I (!);
The richest viands flank her silver plate—
Course grub have I;
Pure wines and rare she quaffs, her thirst to slake—
I pump my drink from Erie's limpid lake!

My love has all the world at will to roam—
Three acres I;
She goes abroad or quiet sits at home—
Both suit me, I;
Bright angels watch around her couch at night—
A Yank, with loaded gun, keeps me in sight.

A thousand weary miles now stretch between
My love and I;
To her, that world is cold, calm, serene—
I waft a sigh,
And hope, with all my earnestness of soul,
To-morrow's mail may bring me my parole!

There's hope ahead! We'll one day meet again,
My love and I;
We'll wipe away all tears of sorrow then;
Her lovelit eye
Will all my many troubles beguile
And keep this wayward rein from Johnson's isle!

BIVOUAC OF REBEL PRISONERS.

AMONG the episodes of the great struggle in Tennessee was the bringing of the rebel prisoners from Missionary Ridge to the island near Bridgeport. Here by the fire at night—by day also from every quarter of the rebel States, to discuss the merits of generals and battles, and to tell stories of victory and defeat. These prisoners have now accumulated in great numbers on the island, and the refusal of the rebels to continue an exchange, and the refusal of the Government to send supplies to the rebel prisoners, keep our own soldiers or those from Kansas, whom their agents have sent to Richmond, from not a small regard made by which these rebel prisoners would regain their liberty, but the means by which to regain their imprisonment. A Northern army pocket is thus compared to army life in the Confederate service.

A WOMAN SHOW IN RUSSIA;
Or, the Wife Fair.

ON Whit-Sunday afternoon, the Summer Garden, a place of popular resort in St. Petersburg, was thronged with bachelors and maidens, looking out for wives or husbands. Parents conducted their girls out on their best adornments, and these were sometimes so costly than would seem to be suitable for persons in humble life, were not the Russian trait of pride is much cherished among the peasantry in many countries.

Bunches of silver teaspoons, a large silver ladle, or some other household luxury were in many instances held in the hand to denote that the maiden could bring something valuable to her husband.

The young gallants, on their part, did full to look their best. The maidens were accompanied by their parents, or by some elder member of their family, in order that every suitor might be conducted in a becoming manner. The bachelors, strolling and sauntering to and fro, would notice the maidens as they passed, and the maidens would blushingly try to look their best also.

Supposing a young man was favorably impressed with a lady, he did not immediately address her on the object of his admiration, but had a little quiet talk with one of the elder persons, and by degrees got to hold her his name, residence and occupation; he gave a brief history of his worldly prospects, and the number of roubles (if any) which he had been able to save. On the other hand, the parents of the young lady was sure to relate to the amount of dowry promised by the maiden.

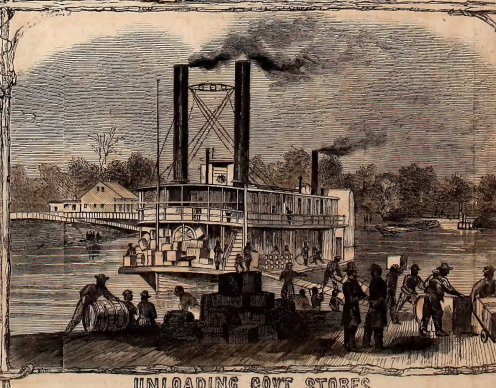
The woman with whom this conversation was held was almost sure to say, that she would give a set of marriage broker or sales woman, who conducted these delicate negotiations either in friendliness or for a fee. If the references on either side were satisfactory, the next step was to make any bargain being struck; and, even if favorable, often was immediately broken.

Many matters for the same girl might probably come forward in this way. In the evening a family conclave was held concerning the chances of each maiden, at which the offers of each bachelor was calmly considered, chiefly in relation to the question of rouhles. The best was very little other than that "the highest bidder shall be the purchaser." A suitor was sent to the young man who's offer was deemed most eligible, and if he was very wealthy that the girl made no objection to the spouse thus selected for her.

THE young woman who marries an unworthy man takes her lord's name in vain.

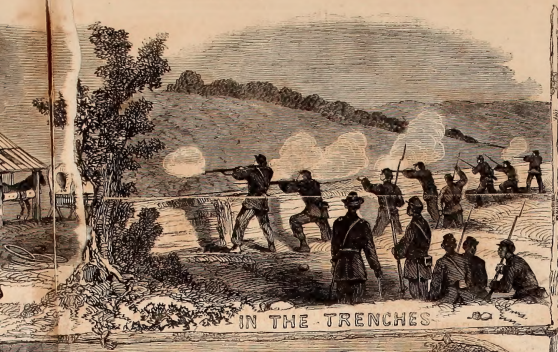
BUILDING ROADS

GOVRNT. BLACKSMITHS' SHOP



ON PICKET

BATTLE OF MILLIKEN'S



COOKING IN CAMP

UNLOADING GOVT. STORES

THE NEGRO IN THE WAR—SKETCHES OF THE VARIOUS EMPLOYMENTS OF THE COLORED MEN IN TH

IN THE TRENCHES

SCOUTS

BATTLE OF MILLIKEN'S BEND

TEAMSTER OF THE ARMY

DRIVING GOVT. CATTLE

WASHING IN CAMP

THE COLORED MEN IN THE UNITED STATES ARMIES.—FROM SKETCHES BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. F. F. HILLEN.

FARMER BROWN.

BY J. W. WATSON.

OLD farmer Brown, with roddy face,
Sat stretched before the chimney-place.
He sat and watched the crackling logs
The purring cat, the dreaming dogs,
That, like himself, were stretched at ease,
Safe sheltered from the chill night breeze,
And with the freedom comfort brings.
The farmer thought these selfish things:

"Let foolish people grieve and sigh
At care that does not come anigh:
I'm not so weak, to wail at what,
However sad, concerns me not.
My barns are full with golden grain,
My limbs are sound and free from pain,
And out, as far as eye can see,
The well-kept fields belong to me.

"My appetite is always sound
Whene'er the dinner hour comes round;
And faith, betwixt the wife and me
There's scarce much difference, as I see.
She's hearty, merry, stout and fair,
No touch of silver in her hair;
She grows, as years past swift away,
Much better-looking every day.

"I read of cities lost and won,
Of deeds of bloody valor done,
Of fearful battles, fought in vain,
With scores of thousands left to slain;
Of ravaged homes, insulted wives,
And children fleeing for their lives.
But why should I repine at this?
When they do not disturb mine ease!

"The blood shed in these fearful fights
Does not disturb my sleep of nights;
The thousands that they choose to slay
Take not my appetite away.
This mug of cider by my side
Does not across my palate glide
Less smoothly when the clash of war
Comes faint and harmless from afar.

"Then why should I repine, who ne'er
Am troubled with a single care?
Stop—let me think! Ah, yes, with one—
My wandering Will, my truant son,
He whom we loved, our darling child,
So handsome, kind and yet so wild!
A word, regretted ere its birth,
Send Will a wanderer o'er the earth.

"If Will were but at home again,
The world might war for me in vain.
A knock! Who's that? Come in! Ah, Jones!"
The farmer cried, in cheery tones.
"Walk in. Sit down! Here, wife, a light!
What brought you out this stormy night?
Why, man, your face is stretched as long
As any tramping beggar's song."

"Ah, neighbor Brown, it grieves me sore
To enter thus your welcome door.
The news I bear is very sad!
Your son—"
"Your son was killed at Shiloh fight;
He died, while battling for the right.
So neighbor Brown, bow to God's will,
He knows best when to save or kill."

Poor farmer Brown, with starting eyes,
Stood now erect. With mournful cries,
"O Lord!" he said, "what have I done,
That Thou shouldst take my only son?"
And then something whispered loud,
"Thou selfish man, whom God endowed,
Take to thy heart this lifelong blow,
And learn to share thy fellow's woe!"

LADY LORNE'S STRATAGEM.

By Annie Thomas,

AUTHOR OF "THE CROSS OF HONOR," "THE HOUSE IN PICCADILLY," &C.

CHAPTER IX.—A CHANGE FOR THE BETTER.

WHEN the Corbyns called the following day at Combhurst, they were more surprised than pleased to find neither Lady nor Miss Lorne in sackcloth and ashes. Their own invitation lay upon the table in Lady Lorne's little sewing-room, and Audrey laughed and pointed it out to them, and said they were going to send "a satisfactory answer to it," for they were all three fair and honest to each other, these ladies of Corbyn and Combhurst.

"And Lord Evesham," said Lady Julia, with an air of solemn confidential frankness, "we have sent him an invitation too—though mamma said it was nonsense, because she has heard that he is going on the Continent in a few days, under existing circumstances, we knew that such a report must be false—utterly absurd."

Now Lord Evesham had not been over to Combhurst since that day when neuralgia drove him off so suddenly; he had written to Audrey—written with most affectionate regularity—but he had not come; and as Audrey was aggrieved thereat, and very properly indignant with him for his shortcomings, and with any one else for reflecting them.

But now Lady Julia Corbyn fired her little shot, indignation dropped suddenly, and something like a regretful qualm made her heart collapse. Was this little devil dead that had arisen so ignominiously going to overshadow her whole life?

She murmured in reply some common-place words of explanation, but even as she murmured them she felt that they were failing of the impression she had hoped they might make on her guests, or herself having feelings of reliance and security all being right. And then she could hardly tell either it was gratitude for the championship, or vivance at the audacity, which staggered her completely, when Lady Lorne cut into the conversation with her perfectly modulated tones, and said:

"You were right to call such a report 'false and utterly absurd,' believe me, Lord Evesham has neither the intention nor the inclination to go on the Continent until he can take his bride with him."

In speaking of it afterwards, Audrey said that "My lady could have given her neither kindlier nor more effectual aid, but at the same time, even while she was acknowledging it and trying to feel grateful, she knew that it was offered by her deadliest foe."

"We thought of getting up a charade for the evening," said Julia Corbyn, after a time; "would you take a part, Audrey? It is Grace's idea, or rather an idea that has been put into her head by a wonderful little comic paper—a literary or something—a Mr. O'Brien, an Irishman."

"I knew an O'Brien a long time ago," said Audrey, laughing, "who, singularly enough, had a great passion for charades—indeed, for acting of all sorts. I would not mind taking a part, if a part is offered me that I could go through creditably. What word do you think of taking?"

"Oh, we should have more than one. I have determined on 'Blue Beard.' Margaret thinks that a good deal might be done with 'Parsimony.' (Audrey had a smile in her heart, though not on her cheek, as she thought that undoubtedly at her charade Corbyn's good deal would be done with "Parsimony.") And Mr. O'Brien—for in a case of amusement we don't mind taking him into our confidence—recommends 'Bachelor's' to our notice. He says it's an excellent word."

A flush like a sunburst passed over Audrey's face; it was such a striking, glowing blush.

"Why," she exclaimed, with animation, "if I could think it possible that the gayest soldier I have ever met could turn scrupulous and bookish, I should think it would be the same O'Brien I once knew, for I acted in that very word with Dillon O'Brien when I was a schoolgirl at Blackheath, and he an ensign at Woolwich."

"His name is Dillon," said Lady Julia, "actually Dillon; we didn't think much of him, but papa always declared he was a gentleman, and so it seems he is by your account."

"That bit of retrospective sentimentality shall be duly reported to Mr. O'Brien, I bought my boy's heart with her rather loftier than the angels, though he has no love for her. I wonder what he will think of stagey flirtations with Woolwich cadets and blackthorn up when she hears the name of one mentioned?"

"At any rate," she said aloud, "you may tell Mr. Dillon O'Brien that I have not forgotten Miss Audrey Lorne. Perhaps—who knows? for young people will be young people (as is sapiently observed by modicity when it has nothing better to say in defence of folly)—he came here misled by a false woman's vow; he had better make the best of it, and stay to drink health, as I do to the Baroness, to the Countess of Evesham."

"Lady Lorne is pleased to make a joke out of nothing, you will perceive," said Audrey, rather scornfully; "and Corbyn, who hates her, has got an nothing, took their leave, and drove home gravely in a cornetted carriage drawn by two screwed horses.

The third-party at Corbyn was to come off on the 20th of the month, and as day after day passed and brought it nearer, Audrey began to realise that it would be unpleasant to meet Evesham there, unless his neuralgia, which, according to his diplomat notes to her, had rather increased than decreased, allowed of his being moved to Combhurst first. There was a wretchedly despondent tone about his letters, short as they were, which shook the girl's soul both with anger and sorrow. She felt that a man on the brink of marriage could not indulge in it with an occasional flirtation, and take out such epistolary communications as were in it.

There was one small, narrow missive, in a handwriting she knew well, which was addressed to "Lady Lorne," and when Lady Lorne came out of her room impatiently, watch in hand, Audrey gave her the note without a word. She watched her read it, and for a few minute or two they stood facing each other steadfastly and silently, looking into the depths of each other's eyes, striving to read the heart's work to fathom each other's souls. Gradually into Lady Lorne's eyes there came a mocking, laughing devil of defiance.

"Have you anything to say to me, Audrey, that you stand and stare at me so?" she asked.

"Only this," replied Audrey, "God knows, I have no desire to pry into your affairs, but do you mean to show that letter to my brother?"

"I don't know yet," said my lady; and then Audrey turned away to get somewhere by herself and think, leaving Lady Lorne with the Earl of Evesham's letter in her hand.

That they were living in an atmosphere of mystery, and deceit, and, she feared, sin, Audrey felt strongly. That until it was all cleared up and Fred could show her a standing, surface ground there could be no meeting between them, she immediately resolved. That her heart would be tried and sorely wrung should the separation be for ever, she frankly admitted; but the thing about which she could come to no conclusion was, would she be justified in concealing or communicating her still vague suspicions of the wife he idolized to her brother: "I must tell him what I have seen and thought," she at last said, "out of no revenge to her for having blighted me, but out of my deep love for my brother and his honor."

The fate of one who interferes between man and wife is proverbial. When Audrey, with the tenderest delicacy, and with a repression of her own strong anger that showed the stout-hearted breed from whence she came, told her brother the incident of the note, and asked him what could a private correspondence between Lord Evesham and Lady Lorne mean, Sir Robert elected to be highminded and lofty, and to pity and forgive Audrey for her capricious unkindness and suspicions of his wife. Nevertheless, when Audrey left him, he rushed up rather hastily into my lady's room, and found her in tears.

"She had burnt the letter, the letter from Evesham," she said, "burnt it, as a pet, for it was so very unkind. He told her plainly that he considered she wanted to make mischief between Robert and himself; that he was the reason why he had stayed away; and that he begged to know how such an unfounded dislike had arisen against a man who had never willingly offended her. But cruel Sir Robert," she continued, "tell him first that I have told you all this, and then say that I am quite sorry for having let my tongue run away from me to other than you?"

"Yes," said Sir Robert slowly, "but I am sorry you burnt the letter; I should like Audrey to have seen it."

"It is a pity," said my lady, hastily; "but now I'll make all the amends in my power. I'll ride the Leprechaun over with you and induce him to come back."

And so she did, and a hollow peace reigned between the betrothed that evening, for Audrey was touched by her generous and proud suffering. And my lady smiled and was gayer and lovelier than ever, and her heart beat hotly the while against the letter she had burnt in the hall. It might have been in truth if a woman's warmth of guilty love and the passionate outpourings of her guilty lover could have been there, for never wilder words of passion have been penned than those which lay over and rose and fell on the white bosom of Lady Lorne, and they had come from the heart of Lord Evesham.

The Propagation of the Gospel subscription had been stopped and the liveries forbidden up effectively. The butler announced the names of Sir Robert, Lady and Miss Lorne, in magnificent sonorous accents, was brilliant as to buttons and lace. Having duly been ushered into the room than he had been wont to do of late, and his person thus intercepted the view Mr. O'Brien would otherwise have had immediately of the advancing party.

"Bah! She won't remember me," he thought, impatiently. "Why the deuce should I wait on her looks? My prospects ain't so remarkably bright that I need consult her looks before her."

But the next minute his face was illumined from within in a way that made Lady Grace feel yellow and sick, for Audrey Lorne stood before him tenderly, and with all the old cordiality and far more than the old grace.

"It is a long time since we used to meet at the Brahmin's, on long enough for us to have forgotten how to meet as friends, Mr. O'Brien."

I will not assert that the handsome Irishman had kept her image—idolised "early love" as she had been—spotless in his heart of hearts—I should not be believed if I did so; but he had kept it there brightly, and the chords of passion were swept strongly at the tones of her voice.

"A long time ago I thought it, till I saw you, Miss Lorne, and then it seemed but yesterday. But things are altered, though you are not."

"You are altered since those days," she said. And she looked at him half-reproachfully.

Ah, well, we all of us have our "alley of limes," down which we wander, and, I hope, breathe a blessing on the one who used to wander through it with us—and God help us if the heart that has not beaten warmly in response to some other heart in the days gone by, in the golden hours of vanished time, and kept the heart that does not beat more quickly when the memories of those days—perhaps the only heritage they have left us—at times. Memories once does not with cannot be all had now simply because time, circumstances and change have exerted their powers of severance. There is nothing sadder in the whole range of sorrowful experience than hearing that one is dead whom you once loved—especially if you have grown to regard that one with but a light interest. The death might have wrung your heart with more mournful selfish grief if the love had still flowed freshly; but we would not have in that case crushed and subdued it with remorse, with the thought that it had been so lightly withdrawn. We acknowledge the wrong; but how we love the love that is poured out freely to a memory is little worth. So in avoidance of a possible pang—which is, after all, but selfishness—Audrey Lorne and cheerful kindly feelings towards one Lady Lorne.

The charades went off brilliantly, so at least the whole company said; the assertion that they did so was made with particular force, though, by two or three of the elderly portion of the audience who had been taken in the act of going to sleep. But people invariably go to sleep if they are planted as audience to charades in which their own daughters are not acting with eligible men after a heavy dinner. They were forgiven their somnific tendencies, therefore, and their criticisms were allowed to have some weight.

O'Brien had been indefatigable in getting things well organised after he had seen the invitation list; he had shown himself an adept in the art of situation and stage-management generally. Audrey, too, had entered with great spirit into the things, and she had always been reputed a good actress. But the honors of the evening were not with the versatile Irishman and the recognised "leading hand at charades," but with Lady Lorne and the Earl of Evesham. They chose—or rather she did, and he was prompt to follow—to alter the authorised conception of their respective characters in the word "forgotten." They turned wit into pathos, and pure, high-toned love into farce, and the charade did, as the audience declared, go off "brilliantly."

"My own Leonie! you are exerting yourself too much," Sir Robert said, when his wife, the charade over, sank down by his side; "you look pale and tired."

But no one could say that of my lady ten minutes after, when the conversation turned upon the great topic of the day, the scandalous desertion of a husband by his wife for a man of higher rank.

All the women were particularly keen upon the divorced wife, whom her seducer had just married —that was one of those matter-of-course things to which my lady paid no attention. Some one mentioned that "the Queen would not receive her." And then Lady Lorne pricked her ears up more keenly, and asked of a handsome, wellborn guardsman,

"What sort of place she would take in society —fashionable society, you know?"

"None at all," the gentleman told her, with a stare at the simplicity of the question. "That is to say," he continued, "she'll have the best house in town, as far as amusements go, but as for a lady a woman and a lady. Men will go there—the best men will go there."

"But she has been quite a queen in society," Lady Lorne said, flushing vividly; "and now with higher rank than she had before."

"Oh, she won't be in society, you see," the guardsman interrupted; "women won't clash with her at all, because they won't have her."

"Then," thought Lady Lorne, "there is no help for me; I can't forfeit my place—and I can't give up Evesham."

CHAPTER X.—IN WHICH SIR ROBERT GETS INTO COLD WATER AND MY LADY INTO WORSE.

THAT dinner party and charade-acting evening at Castle Corbyn was not a thing to conduce greatly to Miss Lorne's peace of mind, or to in any way restore her to the lighthearted mood of the flirtatious chevalier people with grown-up daughters—wagged their heads and remarked that Lord Evesham was clearly tired of the engagement, and ready enough to "break" it, and then to whom he was engaged would give him the opportunity. It was always so. Just when a girl's heart is sorest, her friends and acquaintances, who themselves ready, are ready to kick the beam in her disfavor, and to send her down, down to any depths of unsympathised despair.

But it was not only people whom she did not care for seeing things that caused disquietude to Audrey; she read—just as much written in legible characters enough for any one to read during the last scene in the last charade, when the word "forgotten" was fully portrayed—she read there, in the look of passion, and that no light one, lived in the hearts of Lady Lorne and Lord Evesham for one another.

Strong-minded women can take refuge in scorn when their affections desert them or when themselves false and fouly fickle; but the woman whose love has been worth anything cannot do this so readily, she will continue to fondly love—long, long after she doubts.

For several months all Audrey's thoughts, plans and feelings had been interwoven with Fred's; he was her protector, her future, her all, her everything. It was very hard to awake suddenly to the knowledge that he could be this no longer, very hard indeed, and inevitably that it was inevitable did not make it at all the easier.

Long after the pangs of the affair were past and over, when peace was restored to her mind, and health to her cheek, and happiness to her heart, she could still, with the very slightest mental effort, recall every incident connected with that month's agony. She could remember how the lights had danced and the faces of the guests had swam before her when she first caught the glance of Lord Evesham's eyes lighting from the lovely gray velvet eyes of Lady Lorne—the glance that was reciprocated immediately from the eyes of Lord Evesham. She could distely from the eyes of Lord Evesham. She could remember how bitterly she had fulfilled her own part after seeing it, and how grateful she had felt—for grateful though annoyed—to Dillon O'Brien for exerting himself immediately and diverting the attention of others from her shortcomings. She could remember the sort of nervous thrill that ran through her when during this same O'Brien performed the cloaking operation for her on their departure; she could remember how gratitude and annoyance had struggled in her mind for precedence, as he palpably showed her, by his earnest and successful endeavors to prevent other people from witnessing Lord Evesham's neglect, that he was her friend. Everything, in fact, she could remember—the very flavor of the meagerly-flavored jelly she ate and the sort of definite warmth and glow that which Dillon handed to her infused into her heart—the idle words of conventional parting friendship, the light laugh over the light joke given her by Lord Evesham, every one in the room as she looked round on leaving it and saw them all —and the last of Lord Evesham.

There was, there could be, no real friendship between these sisters-in-law now; a hollow truce reigned, and that was all. For it had come to this, that Audrey allowed my lady to perceive how heartily she despised her; and my lady was not at all backward in allowing Audrey to perceive that she cordially hated Miss Lorne.

Lady Lorme could find no rest on her downy couch that night; she was suffering from a nervous headache, she said, and nothing but her dressing-room to herself and a book could assuage her agony. Sir Robert betrayed much fussy anxiety, but he was, to his surprise, snubbed and sent off to such chambers as he might be blessed with, in a most extraordinary, vehement and peremptory manner.

And then Lady Lorme dispatched her maid, and had, what she desired, the room to herself.

A passionate, a obstinate woman, balked at the outset in a plan in which she has set her heart and soul—or rather, her mind and hopes—is not a pleasant spectacle. At any rate, Lady Lorme would not have been even to the very proverbial and established-to mouse in the wall. The way she took to improve her nervous headache when she was alone, quite alone, was, to say the least of it, extraordinary. She raised down torrents of tears in a cataract, until her beautiful face was all swollen and distorted, blistered and crimson; she gnashed her little teeth in a way that strongly tested and effectually proved their reality; she gave vent to expletives that her husband could have sworn but lovely ears had never heard or her lovely lips brought themselves to utter—to expressions of vile hatred and disappointment, and passionate loathing and fierce revolve. And then she left off and calmed down with deceitful rapidity, and presently rose and first bathed her head with eau-de-cologne and then drank a quantity of it. And when she had had her rage and taken her recipe, she sat down on the crimson couch by the brightly leaping fire, and began to think and plan afresh.

Bathed in tears the only thing she could look her to her guilty end without involving the commission of a double crime!

"The world must have to it," she said, the unscrupulous traitress; "the world, which makes a woman lose caste if she leaves one legal lord to gain even a higher legally and of higher rank. I can't be a nothing, save for Eversham."

She rose up and looked at herself steadily in the glass.

"Suppose he should die," she said to herself—"die of a fall from his horse, say, and they brought me the news, and told me while they could see my face? I should be free, I would be a coward and betray me? I'll try it. 'Lady Lorme, your husband is dead!' Bah! They wouldn't tell me in that way, and even if they did, I could look through everything. I'm a free-look my way to respectability and freedom, a new life and love."

She huddled the folds of her dressing-gown closer round her and took a short turn, and laid down on the couch and covered herself with it. A very strange as it may appear to those who deem that the wicked can know no rest, she was buried in the sleep that was essentially to all-she happy and unhappy, the sinful and the sinless alike. And in that deep and apparently guileless sleep she was found in the morning by her husband, whose rest, poor fellow, had been sadly disturbed by that aforesaid rebuff.

Perhaps Lady Lorme would have paused in her path and "held her degrees" if she could only have seen the few lines Lady Lorme indited and dispatched to Eversham on the morning of the 21st. Audrey had also passed a feverish and unhappy night; she had plenty of pride and plenty of the courage that comes from noble birth, high-breeding and high-hearted honor, and these qualities would not suffer her longer to allow the least link to remain between the man who was evidently ceasing to love her and herself. She released him, not coldly, not callously, but with a proud, mournful firmness, against which, even had he been so inclined, there could be no appeal. But neither her pride, her courage, nor her high-heartedness, made the pangs of that parting easier, the past pleasanter to look back on, the future a more endurable prospect. She sent off the little slender missive to Eversham by her own groom; it was delivered soon and safely. Lord Eversham, after reading it, ordered his portmanteau and valet to follow him, and at once himself started off for London.

But Lady Lorme did not know any of these things, therefore she did not cause in her path.

Her appetite was more daintily capricious at luncheon this day than had ever been observable of that daintily-capricious appetite before. In vain did sedulous love offer its most tempting morsels; she could not touch them, but she drank wine, not "more than a lady ought to drink"—vide Thomas Ingoldsby—according to restring her nerves a little and get some of her quailing determination back again.

"That wretched, murky December weather tells upon me strangely," at last she exclaimed, languidly, rising up as she spoke and going to the window, and being followed by close carriage-has made me nervous from my infancy."

"You are welcome to my pony-carriage, Lady Lorme," said Audrey, who looked upon the speech as a broad hint for the offer to be made.

"Thank you; you are very kind," said Lady Lorme, with dulcet peevishness; "but your pony-carriage is not sufficient to be discovered by-embodied. If you sit upright in it you tumble against the dashboard; and if you lean back properly, you appear to be dropping out behind."

"As you please," said Audrey, haughtily. "I thought you wanted it, or I should not have offered it to you."

"Will you go for a ride, Lorme, dear?" asked Sir Robert, eagerly. "The Leprechaun will be rather fresh, I fear, but I'll have him exercised for half an hour, while you are getting ready; and you have such a splendid hand that he'll carry you magnificently, I don't doubt."

"Yes, if you wish me to do so, Robert; certainly, as I don't feel well, staying in the whole of this long, dreary afternoon would be bad for me. So, though I shall not go up to the Leprechaun, I will go and put on my habit. Please don't have the horse harassed into dejection before we start, though; I would rather have him 'fresh,' as you said it."

And then she left the room, flashing them a brilliant parting smile, and saying "Au revoir!" in her sweetest accents.

The Leprechaun was full of corn and spirits and devilry evidently when his mistress came out and stood on the top of the steps, waiting for her husband's inspection of saddle and bridle arrangements to be completed before he allowed it a mount. How careful he was! How he tightened the curb and regulated the stirrups, and looked to the girths, and how tenderly and well he finally gave her a hand-up and adjusted her flowing habit! It was a pretty picture, even heartsore Audrey thought, as she watched the scene from afar—the devoted husband and brilliantly-beautiful and accomplished Amazon.

My lady had always deprecated unnecessary leather about a horse's equipments; so to-day, when she prettily insisted upon the Leprechaun's martingale being taken off, no one but the groom wondered at it. Sir Robert mildly protested that as they were simply going along the high road, and as the Leprechaun's trick of throwing his head back when pulled was rather increased than diminished, that it would be just as well to retain the slight check. But Lady Lorme hated a martingale, she said, and would have it off, and accordingly off it came.

Lady Lorme's spirits had risen to an exuberant giddy height when they cantered off, and whenever they matched the Leprechaun's, in fact, and were bounding, unchecked, starting. The strong, well-built, powerful hunter Sir Robert could catch the infection, and cavetted and pranced too, and was only with difficulty reduced to a proper roadster's order again by the sharp application of a spur, and the still sharper, infinitely sharper, voice.

"Why, how lighthearted Pantaloon is!" said my lady. "Isn't he a favorite, Robert, that you so seldom ride him?"

Sir Robert explained that Pantaloon was a famously good horse for straightforward heavy work: that though bought for a hunter, he was "better on the road;" that he seemed to be had a habit of blundering at his hedges and bearing awkwardly on his bit, but that, altogether, he was a fine animal.

"A very nice horse," said my lady; "then he doesn't leap at all?"

"Oh, yes! Moderate places could be well managed by Pantaloon," Sir Robert said.

Providence, fate, chance—different people call the same things different names, and fight with each other to the destruction of all—the unnerving nomenclatures—led them along the road to Evesham. They could see its grand old woods and jolly towers; a little to the right, and, on their sides; its park wall bounded their path, and looking over it, they could see troops of deer rushing madly about or browsing quietly.

"A fine place, Robert," Robert, thoughtfully. "I wish with all my heart Audrey was married and settled here."

"A very fine place," said my lady; and if Sir Robert had not given the reins to his thoughts and followed them to wander off to his estate a great, he would have observed by the steadier, harder tones that issued from the lovely acquaintance of his wife.

"Let us ride back another way, Robert," she exclaimed, aloud; "I hate the straight monotonous road; let us go home round by the pine-tree wood, it will lengthen the ride a little and make it pleasanter."

As she spoke the Leprechaun bounded, and tried to shake her in her saddle by a series of spasmodic leaps, but my lady was firm, and sat them pretty serenely with her steady hand and genttling voice.

"What made him do that, I wonder?" said Sir Robert; "you didn't touch him with the spur, did you, Lorme? I saw you had one on to-day; he wont stand the spur."

"No; Lady Lorme declared she had not given him a taste of her sharpness, and he did, and the spirited Irish colt was ready now to jump out of his skin, his mettle was so magnificently up.

In the middle of the rough, dark pine-tree wood, through which they passed in single file, for the pass of this story, a break occurred in the regular growth of the trees. There was to the right of the road leading to the mansion, a space of open, sheltered, cheerless grove it looked, and down this alley, when they came to it, my lady suddenly turned her horse.

"Don't go that way, Leonie," said Sir Robert, hurriedly; "it's a horrid road as far as it goes, and there is a quagmire at the bottom of it; it leads down to the Devil's Dyke."

"I wish to go, dear," said Lady Lorme, fawningly, and as spoke she leaned down and patted her husband's hand, "and I wish to go this way. It is a great desire to go down and see this famous leap that I hear baffled a whole field last year when a stag chose to run that way. Stand still, Prince Wuckshire turned out that day, to be sure!"

"There were plenty of good riders out," said Sir Robert, "and the whole field wasn't baffled; several nice cleared it, but of course those whose horses must have infallibly jumped short would have been in the ditch."

"Ah! indeed; but it sounds as if they were very cowardly, doesn't it?" said my lady. And then she was over to the bottom of the alley, and looked at the famed Devil's Dyke.

It was an ugly leap, and no mistake, especially when viewed from the side on which they were. A dark, wide, deep chasm, with a low rolling road sounding up from the waters which rushed along at the bottom of it, welling up to add to its horrors. Immediately below where they stood, chasm and waters alike buried themselves under a hill, and the course the water took was down—down to that dark, deep pool, over which its secrets would be safely buried for ever.

Suddenly Lady Lorme slackened her curb, and settled herself still more firmly to the saddle.

"We can take that leap easily, Robert," she said, "and shame all Warwickshire for ever. Come on."

She saw in the one moment she had to see anything, could and distrust, and agony at feeling it, flash from her husband's eyes, and flush her husband's face. And then the remorseless beautiful woman, who looked like an angel and was cruel as a fiend, dug the spur into her own horse's side, lifted him to the leap, and at the same moment struck Pantaloon on his shoulder. She was whirled through the air—for the Leprechaun came of a gallant stock that never refused anything, and when at a slighted touch came on the opposite side, she looked round and saw Pantaloon leaping short and falling!

A strong, indomitable courage rose in her heart and prevented its quailing or shrinking, even when the dull heavy fall into the dark waters smote her ears. She lifted her hat off her hot head, and wiped the clammy sweat of intense excitement off her brow, and then shook the reins and laid the whip furiously across the shoulder of the horse who had served her ends so well. In a moment she was flying off home like the wind, but fast as she rode, her mind travelled faster, and she saw herself—a few months at most—in complete seclusion pastqueening it in society, an unsuspected woman, as Countess of Eversham.

"Home!" she exclaimed, with frightful exultation; "home! to play the dieconsolate widow, and to send for Eversham at once as the sympathising friend!"

The mastiff's heads on the massive iron gates seemed to grin and gnash their teeth at her ominously as she drew up her panting steed and cried out for admittance.

"Lord love us! there's something wrong," the old woman who kept the gate said to her cat and children, as she hurried into her cottage after admitting her mistress. And well she might say so, for my lady's face had gleamed like a star through the raging darkness, by reason of its death-like pallor and intensity of her eyes.

Miss Lorme was in the hall when the sound of horses' hoofs coming up the avenue at a reckless pace alarmed her.

"Something has run away with somebody," she said, and she called the porter to open the door quickly, and herself followed out on to the step. The sight that met her was her sister-in-law alone, and overwhelmed with grief and horror.

"Why, Leonie," she cried, in her anxiety, quite forgetting that they had not been letter days to call her Lady Lorme, "what have you done—where is Robert?"

"Dead! dead! in the Devil's Dyke!" said my lady, with wild energy, and then she was off from further questioning, for Audrey Lorme fainted.

"Send for Lord Eversham instantly—instantly," said my lady; and then she rushed to her own room to nurse her woe in solitude. She remained there but till she had the evening dress on, and unbolted the door, and called to one of the maid-servants.

"What time is Lord Eversham?"

"The earl is gone to town, my lady, and they don't know his address.

"She's right," she found out of her life, poor lamb," the aforesaid domestic observed afterwards. "When I was speaking to her she cried out, 'Oh, my God! I shall go mad!' and down like a stone."

All the neighborhood joined in the search for the body of the kind landlord, the generous gentleman, the esteemed friend and good master, before nightfall, but the result was even more miserable than had been anticipated. The body of poor Pantaloon was found bruised and waterlaffated, but that of his late master could be seen anywhere. Clearly he had been detached from his horse by the force of the current, and had sunk immediately.

So the last of the Lormes died, and had not even a Christian burial.

(To be continued.)

THE NEGRO IN THE WAR.

THE negro will ever figure as a prominent feature in the present civil war. They have been employed in every capacity, and have fully tested in others; but the gallantry of the men who fought at Millikin's Bend, who rushed to the assault of Port Hudson and Fort Wagner, will stand as proudly in American history as the defence of the fort on the Mississippi by the Spartans of Greece. Small, in the capture of the Planter, did one of the cleverest feats of the war. We give our double page this week to a graphic representation of the employment of negroes by the army, which will be of interest to all. We do not refer to the more unanimous of political bearing, but simply to portray living history. The sketches here given are all, with the exception of the flag and Fort Wagner, drawn from incidents made in the army of the Cumberland.

Here women are seen in washing, and both sexes in cooking. The men and soldiers seldom drive cattle, mules, &c., but find instances in the centre and do much of the blacks with work. As soldiers we see them in the dangerous work of mining, holding the enemy's works amid a storm of shot and shell.

REBEL FLOATING BATTERY

Washed Ashore on Folly Island.

ABOUT the middle of December a structure was driven up on the beach of Folly Island of which we give our readers a sketch, as one of the prominent obstructions in the harbor on which the rebels depend. It is a mass of wood and iron, measuring some 60 feet by 40. It had been remodelled at Charleston, by Capt. Cross, of the Quartermaster Department, at once to transform it into an object which the rebels might deem a floating battery, and it is plain that so much good wood and iron should be so finely put together without doing some service.

DREAMS OF THE DEAD.

BY ERNEST TREVOR.

THE faces of the dead are fair,
Though pale and fixed as sculptured stone,
Their eyes have that appalling stare
Which speaks of death, and death alone.
In dreams, that half immortal state,
In shadowy throngs they all appear,
Who lived in my love, who had my hate,
Who gave me pain or present here.

Serene, secure, they meet my gaze,
Their stern or loving looks I see,
The same that in our mortal days
Made all my joy or misery.
Death has no power to break the chain
With which the prouder passions bind
Immortal souls to pour in pain—
'Tis part of the immortal Mind.

LOCOMOTIVES MADE BY THE ARMY.

OUR Special Artist transmitting the sketch says: "I herein enclose a sketch of a fine locomotive just completed here, being the result of the mechanical ingenuity displayed by the men in this department. Considering that all the reports during the siege, remarked, that there was no department of mechanical labor required to be performed but that men were always on hand, well skilled in the business; the completion of these fine specimens of workmanship affords ample proof of the truth of his remark. A short time ago I told you I had found the debris of a machine shop and some scattered fragments of machinery. Out of these materials we have created a good workshop, with all the necessary machinery for carrying on the whole, and have already stands forth in the engines, of which our Rogers & Baldwin stand as proud. These are named respectively the Gen. Grant, Gen. Sherman, and McPherson. A fourth one is to be named after W. T. Clark. These are but a part of the great improvements made here since the Federal occupation of the city. Gen. Taylor (rebel) told me, that in the Mexican war he had a locomotive and a little rather than a trip over the Vicksburg and Jackson road. When I told you that not any accident has happened since our management, you will perceive the difference. The road is now and has been since the occupation under the management of Gen. Godfrey, Col. Wheelhouse's staff, and late of the liberal army in Mexico, have labored with the enthusiasm of the rebellion, to take up arms in defence of the Union."

THE WRECK OF THE AQUILA

At San Francisco.

THE protection of San Francisco, the great harbor of the Pacific, has but lately received by our Government, and a monitor, the Camanche, has been sent there. She has also shipped in the ship Aquila, and reached San Francisco safely, running the gauntlet of piratical craft, storms, accidents, &c. The Aquila was anchored among the fleet of Hatteras's wharf, when the wind then blowing fresh down the bay. Rudderwas increased, and what was then a breeze, blew over such a large body of water, kicked up a heavy sea, and to this the broadside of the ill-fated vessel was exposed. Under it was a hard bottom, and against this the ship beat until the water forced itself an entrance into the hold. About 11 o'clock she began to sink, the winds and waves meantime increasing, until 4 o'clock when she sank. At high tide there is about 32 or 36 feet of water over her deck.

The whole tale the journals of San Francisco, abound with, and is told in terms of the most unqualified tone of sorrow, regret and indignation. The commander, Captain Hamilton, is called the hero of the hour, as precious a coup would go down as ingloriously as the Aquila, if it were not a steady throw of the business thoroughfare.

Arrangements are already in progress to raise the Aquila and her valuable cargo, and as far as we can gather are regarded with deep interest in San Francisco.

We are indebted for the sketch to Mr. G. H. Bigelow of that city.

PETER ESSIG & Co. have supplied that desideratum of all housekeepers—a Chimney Burner that is not liable to break. The glass globe with the glasses fly this loose doubling the expense of oil burning. The Essig Chimney Burner is patented and manufactured by Essig, 2 Platt street, has, however, advanced in price still more since the burning and handled freely, without being extinguished. In short, it is the most ornamental chimney burner out.

THE RIDGEWOOD COMPANY, 429 Broadway, whose Patent Smoking Cases is now so popular with military men, have also opened a Smoking Saloon of super quality and flavor in packages to fill the case, and of tobacco prepared in the finest manner for the weed on very moderate terms. The tobacco is in every respect superb, quite, and is really as pleasant as a segegar.

WE are indebted to Capt. Hussey, of the S. S. Granite City, for a copy of the Fort Smith Caroline paper of the Col. J. Grant Wilson, of Gen. Bissell's staff, on the Brandreth, a Spanish-English journal of Brownsville.

A MAN down in Lynn, it is said, made so many pairs of shoes in one day, that it took two days to count them. He was a smart one, but not equal to one in New Orleans, who built a large dwelling of stone well in one day, and it took him all night and the best of the next day.

SUPER CHITERION.—A countryman visited Barnley, and was complaining of the trouble a dentist was giving him.

"How do you know he was drunk?" said a by stander.

"The countryman diguanily replied, "What could he be expected to do? He was in a dentist's shop and put his hat on with it."

AN Irishman who had blistered his fingers by unskeerung to draw on a pair of boots, exclaimed, "I will never get them on at all until I wear them a day or two."

IT is not always a mark of frankness to assume an open countenance. An eclipse is a candid creature, and yet he presents an open countenance when he is a fact of that kind.

"WHAT is the reason of a blow leaving a blue mark after it?" asked an inquiring young gentleman.

"It's easily accounted for," answered a medical student, "for you know that blow is the perfect rashes blow."

WE have artificial teeth, artificial hair, eyes, calves, hips, noses, and artificial morality. We believe that some young ladies wear artificial heads, and we know a young lady whose "head ose" turned by a young man.

HOPELESS old maidenhood or bachelorhood is matchless misery.

BRIG.-GEN. EDWARD FERRERO, U. S. A.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.

BRIG.-GEN. J. T. SPRAGUE, U. S. A., ADJUTANT-GENERAL OF NEW YORK.—PHOTOGRAPH BY ANTHONY.

THE WAR IN TENNESSEE—BIVOUAC OF REBEL PRISONERS ON AN ISLAND NEAR BRIDGEPORT, TENN.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. HILLEN.

THE LATE ARCHBISHOP HUGHES.

No Bishop of the Catholic Church in the United States has ever attracted so much attention or been so widely known as Archbishop Hughes, who died in New York city, on the 3d of January, 1864. Of rare discernment of character, a thorough knowledge of the public mind, great natural eloquence, keen logic, and biting sarcasm when roused, his articles had a ring about them that caused them to be copied and read from Maine to Mexico. He was considered as the representative man of his church, not only by the public generally, but also by the successive Administrations at Washington.

He was born in Ireland in 1798, and came with his father to this country in 1817. After pursuing divinity studies at Emmetsburg, Md., he was ordained priest in 1825, and stationed in Philadelphia. A polemical discussion, of the fashion of the day, in 1830 gave evidence of his peculiar talents, and made him widely known. Upon the declining health of Dr. Dubois, Bishop of New York, required a coadjutor in the diocese, the Rev. Mr. Hughes was selected and consecrated Jan. 9, 1838. Almost immediately the administration of the diocese, then embracing New York and part of New Jersey, devolved upon him; and for 26 years he directed the affairs of the diocese. He founded a theological seminary and a college at Fordham, and contributed greatly to our present system of schools by a debate before the Common Council on the previous school system. In his own church he broke up the trustee system in the churches, which had proved ruinous, but which the Legislature for a time restored by a confirming law. He established many religious institutions in his diocese, and at his death it contained three colleges incorporated by the State, a number of academies for both sexes, directed by the Christian Brothers, Ladies of the Sacred Heart, Sisters of Charity, Ursulines, and other religious communities; a large hospital, several orphan asylums, a house of protection for servants, a refuge for the erring, a juvenile reformatory.

He was created an Archbishop in 1850, and presided at two provincial councils.

At the time of the Mexican war it was proposed to send him as a minister to that Republic, and during the present war he showed the folly of the South in an able letter to Bishop Lynch, of Charleston, and subsequently visited Europe, to counteract the influence exercised there by agents of the rebellion.

His writings consist of his discussions with Rev. Mr. Breckenridge, with Rev. N. Murray, and Hon. Erastus Brooks, a number of lectures, and minor pamphlets on temporary topics, but they give little idea of his ability or the place which he so long filled in public estimation.

He died at his residence in Madison Avenue, on Sunday evening, about seven o'clock, attended by his two sisters and several members of his clergy.

THE LATE MOST REVEREND JOHN HUGHES, ROMAN CATHOLIC ARCHBISHOP OF NEW YORK.

BRIG.-GEN. JOHN T. SPRAGUE, U. S. A.

GEN. SPRAGUE, now Adjutant-General of the State of New York, is an officer of the regular army, and one of the victims of the treachery of Gen. Twiggs, in Texas, a circumstance which prevented his early entrance into the active operations of the war, and deprived the country of his courage, ability and administrative talents. He was born at Newburyport, Mass., the son of L. Sprague, Esq., a surgeon in the United States Army. Accompanying his father to Detroit, he became, as a boy, a favorite with Gen. Cass, whom he accompanied to Washington, when the latter was raised to the War Department by Gen. Jackson. Young Sprague was attached to that department till 1824, when he was appointed a Lieutenant in the Marine Corps. He served in the Creek and Florida wars, and was appointed Quartermaster and Commissary of the troops in the field. When active operations began Gen. Jesup made him one of his Aides-de-Camp. At the close of hostilities, Lieut. Sprague led 2,000 of the Indians to Fort Gibson, Arkansas.

When the 8th infantry, Col. Worth, was organized he was made First Lieutenant. He made the Florida campaign against Wild Cat in 1839, under Gen. Macomb, and when his regiment arrived in Florida he became Adjutant to Gen. Worth. For his gallantry in the battle of Pine Hillaba, in which Halleck was defeated, he received the brevet of Captain.

When his regiment was sent to Texas, in 1846, he was assigned to the command of the department of Florida. His history of the war there is one of the great military histories of the country.

In 1848 he was made Brevet Major, and sent to Texas. He then led an expedition to New Mexico, and was for four years actively engaged in reducing Navajoes, Apaches and Camanches.

When the Secession movement began he was on furlough, but at once announced himself as ready for duty. Not being recalled to other duty, as he hoped, he asked explicitly not to be ordered to his command in Texas, as his capture was inevitable, but was directed to go. He accordingly proceeded in March, 1861, to New Orleans, and thence to San Antonio. Here he was arrested by the Committee of Public Safety, as included in Gen. Twiggs's capitulation. He was subsequently paroled, and on reaching Washington placed on duty at Albany, as mustering and disbursing officer. When 1200 New York volunteers soon selected him as their Colonel, but the Government would not allow him to accept the post. On the cessation of War, Sept. 1865, he was appointed Adjutant-General of the State and Brigadier-General.

THE SIEGE OF CHARLESTON.

Filling the Sandbags for the Spar Deck of the Ironsides—Paying off Negro Recruits.

OUR Artist, in the present lull of active operations, gives us a sketch of the paying off of a loyal South Carolina regiment: a scene that gives vivid reality to the changes effected by the war. What a gulf between the crouching plantation slave, that these men were so recently, and what they are! Did it enter into the dream of those who voted for the secession of South Carolina, that the slaves around them would, in less than two years, be the paid, uniformed, equipped soldiers of the United States?

Our Artist presents, too, an interesting operation suggestive of warm naval work. Riding along the beach of Morris island, he came upon a party of sailors filling bags with sand and loading an India rubber raft. This he found would be hoisted off with the rising tide and taken to the frigate Ironsides to protect her spar deck. This was indicative of preparations for action, and we shall have in a few days details of the last movement.

THE SIEGE OF CHARLESTON—SAILORS ON MORRIS ISLAND FILLING SANDBAGS FOR THE SPAR DECK OF THE STEAM FRIGATE IRONSIDES.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE.

BRIG.-GEN. EDWARD FERRERO, U. S. A.

GEN. FERRERO was born at Madrid, in Spain, in 1832; but as his father came to America two years after, bringing his son with him, the latter knows no country as his own except that in whose service he has now won such a proud distinction.

A military turn inherent in the family early led him to enter the militia of the State, and he was for a equal battle time a field officer of the 11th New York National Guard.

In the summer of 1861 he raised the 51st regiment New York State volunteers, called also the Shepard Rifles. This regiment, which by some accident to promise little, early won distinction. Col. Ferrero shared its fortunes and glory; he led at the battle of Roanoke Island and also at the battle of Newbern.

After the engagement at the latter place he was put in command of a brigade and with a Burnside was called to operate in Kentucky. Brigade distinguished itself at the fight of Macassas (the 30), and in covering the retreat of Gen. Cox at Camp Gauley. After the fight of Reno, at South Mountain, he took command of his brigade, and on the day succeeding of Antietam he received his appointment of Brigadier-General.

In the recent march of Burnside's army, and out of 1,700 men that he took into the fight, he lost 370 in killed and wounded.

The 9th corps, to which his brigade was attached, was called to the West, but had hardly got into Kentucky when the order came to reinforce Grant. The corps did not take a very active part, being on the extreme right of Vicksburg, and were engaged only in doing picket duty and helping to cut up earthworks. After the surrender of Vicksburg they were sent in pursuit of Johnston, who engaged him at Jackson, and compelled him to retreat. The General had the satisfaction of seeing his brigade enter Jackson just as the enemy of the rear quitted.

He followed the corps again into Kentucky, under Burnside, and was at the siege of Knoxville, where he defended Fort Sanders against the assaults of Longstreet's veterans, driving them back with fearful slaughter, and for ever associating his name with the glorious defence of the capital of Tennessee.

WHEN a poor fellow is about to be burned by the savages his very existence is at stake.

If a man sitting on a chest is shot at, he would not sit at all, to hit him is his chest.

If a man is murdered by his hired men, should the coroner render a verdict of killed by his own hands?

A DULL and plausible man, like an unrifled gun, is a smooth bore.

EVEN the sun hasn't an unspotted character.

SUSPENSION bridges are said to answer a good purpose; suspension hooks don't.

DR. FELIX GOURAUD'S

Italian Medicated Soap

The smoats of Modern Science are blazoned with no prouder record than the world-renowned discoveries with which DR. FELIX GOURAUD has enriched their pages; foremost among which stand the delicious fragrance which he has given the name of ITALIAN MEDICATED SOAP! Language is powerless to set forth one tithe of its wonderful properties. But the high meed of public approbation has so generally and unstintingly awarded the sanctorrity of this remarkable Soap, that to doubt its efficacy in the cure of Skin, Pimples, Freckles, Blotches, Eruptions, Chaps, Chafes, Cracks, Tetter, Scald Heads, Moth, Ringworm, Scald Head, Barber's Itch, Worms in the Skin, Erysipelas, Pustules, Scrofula, Scurvy, Obstinate Old Sores, and other cutaneous disfigurements, is to imply a doubt of the existence of truth itself. And it is a fact alone the power it possesses in restoring to an eruptive and darkened skin its pristine health and beauty, to which we now advert: it has other and still more delightful qualities. It, for instance, as a preservative before all, that, let the hands be ever so thoroughly begrimed with dirt, or incrusted with stains, the Soap with the potency of magic, searches the minutest pores of the skin, and insidiously leaves every particle of filth and discoloration, together, to the coup-est and barefoot stable scrapers. Smoothness and softness as voluptuous and enviable as that which graces Fair Young Child." It is confidently asserted by all an uncommon thing now adays for mechanics, by the use of GOURAUD'S SOAP, to display a delicate, soft white hand in the presence of their "ladye loves!"

That Gouraud's Italian Medicated Soap

will perform all this is as certain as that there is a sun in the heavens! It is moreover the best shaving compound ever used.

PRICE 50 CENTS.

Poudre Subtile!

Infallible Success during a period of 12 Years has fully established the existence of DR. FELIX GOURAUD'S POUDRE SUBTILE, for eradicating disagreeable hair, and will positively remove hair from low foreheads, backs of necks, the arms, moles, &c., or the scattering of one, or all, this safe, speedy and sure remedy has been in general use for upward of twelve years, without a single instance of its having failed to eradicate the most stubborn hair. Besides, it can be seen and felt the moment it is passing, pulling its efficacy and safety past all kind of doubt. $1.

I have had an opportunity of observing the operation of Dr. Felix Gouraud's preparation for the removal of superfluous hair, and am perfectly satisfied of its unfailing efficacy. After a careful study of the composition of these Powders, I can, without any hesitation, pronounce them perfectly harmless, and in every way infinitely superior to any preparation of the kind ever offered to the public. Editor N. Y. Lancet.

New York, Feb. 1, 1853.

Found at GOURAUD'S NEW AND SPLENDID ESTABLISHMENT, 1,458 BROADWAY, below Grand Street, removed from the old stand, 67 Walker Street.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1852, by Felix Gouraud, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

To be had Wholesale at Weller & Co., N. Y.; Barnes & Co., N. Y.; Schiefelin & Co., N. Y., and Druggists generally.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward in any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS PROFILE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.,

20 cents each, $1.50 per doz. Free by mail. Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 168, New York city. Send for circular.

Genuine American Lever Watch in 3 oz. Coin Silver, Heavy Hunting Case, Warranted for $15. They will retail for $20. Genuine Full Jewelled American Lever Watch, in 4 oz. Coin Silver, Heavy Hunting Case, Gold Joints, for $18. They will retail for $25. Any of the above Watches will be sent on receipt of price. All orders from the army will be promptly attended to. All orders from the army must be prepaid, as the Express companies will not take bills for collections on Soldiers. (Circulars sent free.)

CHARLES BRIGGS, Agent,
Milwaukee, Wis.

Cavalry.	Artillery.	Co. Pins.	Corps Badges.
Solid Silver, $3. do Gold Relief, $5 50	Solid Silver (without battles) $1 50. do Gold Relief, $2. Battles, 20 cents each, extra.	Solid Silver, $1. do Gold Relief, $1 50	Solid Silver, $1. do Enamelled, $1 50.

Solid Gold, $8.	Solid Gold (without battles), $5.	Solid Gold, $3 50.	Solid Gold, $6.

Every Co., from A to M, and every Corp Badge worn by the army constantly on hand, Engraved to order and sent free on receipt of price. Terms Cash, in advance. Premiums offered to Clubs. Send for a Catalogue.
Address C. L. HALCH & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.
(Formerly Packard & Co.)

FURS! FURS!!

FURS!!!

Ladies and Misses Fine Furs, in Sable, Mink, Ermine, Squirrel, etc.
Gents' Fur Caps, Mufflers and Gauntlets, in Seal Otter, Beaver, etc.
Sleigh Robes in variety. Retailed at Wholesale Prices.

BURKE (successor to WATKINS),
210 Broadway, corner Fulton street.

STILLMAN ADAMS & CO.,

Dealers in Fine Fancy Goods & Jewelry,

Have just received a fine assortment of Goods suitable for the Holidays, consisting of

Writing Desks, Work Boxes, Dressing Cases, Jewelry Boxes, Ladies' Companions, Portfolios, Photograph Albums, Opera Fans, Rich Dress Combs (in Shell, Amber, Gold, etc.), Jet Beads, Necklaces, Belts, Bracelets,

Large assortment of Violins, Pocket Books, Purses, Ladies' Shopping Bags, Card Cases, Jet and Gold Jewelry, and a large assortment of
FANCY ARTICLES SUITABLE FOR PRESENTS.
ALL GOODS IN GREAT VARIETY.
A large assortment of TOYS in China and Papier Mache.

STILLMAN ADAMS & CO.,
595 Broadway, Metropolitan Hotel.
(Show Cases in front.)

Hawkes's Diamond Pointed Gold Pens.

Medium Pen	$0 50	Commercial Pen	$1 25
Large "	0 63	Mammoth "	1 50
Engraving "	0 75	Leviathan "	2 00

Also, Fountain Pens—one filling will write eight to fifteen hours. Send stamp for Circular.
GEO. F. HAWKES, Manufacturer,
437-6 68 Nassau Street, N. Y.

500 More Agents Wanted.—Business New —pays $10 a day clear and requires no capital. For particulars, address with stamp,
432-3 J. W. STEPHENS, Morristown, N. J.

A HANDSOME HOLIDAY GIFT.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT

SMOKING CASE!

Most ingenious in its combination of the Meerschaum Cone, and Bowl, Amber Mouth and Stem, Matches and Pipe Cleaner, with a handsome Tobacco Pouch attached, filling the Pipe by a valve, without soil to the fingers or waste of tobacco, the whole securing freedom from all odor, and portable as a Cigar Case. It is made for service, of various and handsome styles, at $1 50, $2, $2 25, $2 50, $3, $3 50, $4, $5, $6, $8, $10, and is tastefully Plated and Engraved. Nothing can excel its Comfort, Utility and Economy for all Smokers, and A PRESENT TO FRIENDS nothing could be more acceptable.

FOR THE SOLDIER IT IS INVALUABLE.

The Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco!
Of superior quality and flavor, in packages to fill the case, and put up expressly for the general Trade. A liberal discount to Dealers. Single Cases sent by mail, paid, on receipt of price and 25 cents.
RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,
Office 420 Broadway, cor. Howard St., N. Y.

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,
Agents for the United States for the celebrated

ADERITNE

EXTENSION HOLDERS & GOLD PENS

Of the most handsome and durable construction, put up in new fancy cases of one dozen each, and not sold in any other manner. They will retail for $3 each.

Price, per dozen $18 00
" per gross 135 00
Sent by mail or express, prepaid. Address
SALISBURY, BRO. & CO., Providence, R. I.

AMERICAN NEEDLE CO.
J. W. BARTLETT, 462 Broadway, N. Y.

☞ The only BURNISHED NEEDLES for Howe, Singer, Wheeler & Wilson, Grover Baker, Florence, Bliss, Gibbs, Weed, L. & Webster, Bartholf, Boudoir, and all standard S. M. MACHINES.

☞ Sharps, Revers, Gd., Down, Milliners, Glovers, Harness, Sail, Tow, Mattress, etc., etc., HAND NEEDLES.

☞ HOSETTER'S Hooked, Long STEEL and Common CROCHET Needles.

☞ HACKLE, GILL, COMB AND CARD PINS.

☞ Sharps HANDLED, LONG STEEL and Common CROCHET Needles.

☞ "We are happy to recommend BARTLETT'S BURNISHED NEEDLES as being found them a WONDERFUL IMPROVEMENT over others for SEWING MACHINES."—NEWTON'S Rep. Try enough Dollar's worth, or 250 for 50c., any size, by mail.—Mass. Ploughman.

☞ Or a Beautiful Needle Book and 200 Needles, $1.

Hands Of Sewing Machines!
The New Automatic Self-Sewer

HEMS, PUCKS, GATHERS AND WORK WITH OUT the HAND on the FINEST, STRAIGHTEST STITCHING; sent free, by mail, with full directions, on receipt of CASH or POSTAGE, addressed to J. W. BARTLETT'S Needle and Sewing Machine Furnishing House, 462 Broadway, N. Y.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
PIERRE BIBON, 35 Ann St., N. Y.
433-36

$800 to $4,500 a Year

Is being made, and can be made by any one in a new profession. Full particulars sent on receipt of 25 cents. Address to
A. CURTIS, K., Box 134, Harrisburg, Pa.

No Jewelry Humbug.

Ritter's Patent Portable Desk contains 20 articles, weighs 14 ounces, mailed to any address for $1 25. Expressed, as far as Washington, for $1 50; Baltimore, $1 75; Philadelphia, $2; New York, $2 25; Boston, $2 50. A. J. RITTER, Manufacturer, Rahway, N. J.

W. FORSYTH & CO.,

42 and 44 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office), offer for sale the following Magnificent List of

WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.

Valued at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

	EACH
150 Gold and Silver Watches	$15 to $100
300 Ladies' Gold Watches	10 " 50
600 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	5 " 15
2500 Vest and Neck Chains	1 " 5
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	3 " 10
3000 Gold Band Pins	2 " 10
3000 Cameo Breast Pins	1 " 5
3000 Garnet and Jet Bracelets	2 " 5
3000 Lava and Florentine Bracelets	1 " 5
3000 Cameo Ear Drops	1 " 5
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	1 " 5
3000 Coral Pins	1 " 5
3000 Gents' Breast Pins	1 " 5
3000 Watch Keys	1 " 5
2000 Fob and Ribbon Slides	1 " 5
2000 Gold Lockets	2 " 10
2500 Sleeve Buttons	1 " 5
5000 Gold Rings	2 " 10
5000 Stone Set Rings	1 " 5
5000 Lockets	1 " 5
10000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry	1 " 5
3000 Gold Band, Silver Mixed Bracelets	3 " 5
4000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	4 " 10

The article in this assortment are the most elegant and most fashionable styles. Certificates of all the various articles are put up in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, thus giving all a fair chance, and sent by mail for 25 cents each; and on receipt of the Certificate, it is at your option to send ONE DOLLAR and take the article named in it, or not. Five certificates, $1; eleven, $2; thirty, $5; sixty-five, $10; one hundred, $15; Certificates may be had by enclosing stamp. Correspondence promptly answered.

AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow them ten cents on every Certificate, provided their remittance amounts to $1, and more liberal inducements to those who buy largely. Send for Circular. Address

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

ANOTHER VOICE

FROM THE POTOMAC!

Fathers and Mothers,

Sisters and Brothers

HEAR THIS:

SOLDIERS,

ATTENTION!

A Voice from the Potomac!

Read the following letter lately received by Fred. HOLLOWAY, No. 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.:

CAMP NEAR CULPEPER, VA., Nov. 23, 1863.

Thomas Holloway, Esq:

Dear Sir—Please send me some of your valuable Pills, for which you will find money enclosed. Soldiers who have used them say they are just the thing for us.

I have been in the service now over fifteen months and have had no sickness, except diarrhœa, and I want to have your medicine by me, in case of need.

Yours, with respect,

ANTHONY OGDEN,

Company D, 70th Michigan Regiment, 1st Brigade 1st Division, 2d Army Corps, Army of the Potomac

Let the reader go to the nearest Drug Store and purchase a box of

Holloway's Pills

OR

OINTMENT!

And send it to their relatives in the army.

Hasten! Delays are Dangerous!

To insure getting genuine, go to the Depot,

431-34 No. 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Economy, Durability & Convenience

The Star No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil Lamps. Patented Aug. 11, 1863. Saves a brilliant light, free from smoke, or smell. It can be carried and handled freely without being extinguished. The latest and most complete of the invention of the kind. Warranted as represented. Sample of Burner, by mail, for 35 cents. Agents wanted.

PETER ESSIG & CO., Manufacturers, No. 2 Platt St., N. Y.

J. G. SCHULL,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

33 Ann Street, New York,

Has on hand a splendid assortment of French, English and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings which he is prepared to make in the most fashionable style and on the most reasonable terms for cash.

Union Playing Cards!

National American Amusement Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack, 52 Cards complete to the Pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars and Flags are the suits, and the ace of Spades has the Coat of Arms of the United Free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for Circular. Address

AMERICAN CARD CO.,
000 453 Broadway, or 102 William St., N. Y.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of AMERICAN PEOPLE,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by DR. TROUSDELL, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subjects, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes for Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

☞ Full set to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute,
Troy, N. Y., Consulting Physician of the Throat and Lungs, No. 63 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 430-2

HOLIDAY PRESENTS!

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Attention, Soldiers!

In solid 18 k. gold, $3 50.

Every soldier should have A BADGE WITH HIS NAME MARKED DISTINCTLY upon it. The Subscribers will forward to any soldier in the army a solid Silver Badge with his Name, Company and Regiment engraved upon it, on receipt of One Dollar. The above cut represents size and style of Badge furnished. It can be fastened to any garment. Address

DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewellers, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

All kinds of Army Corps, Co. and Division Pins to order. 423

PURE FRENCH

WINES AND BRANDIES.

Paul De Coninck, Monod & Guiraud,
BORDEAUX, FRANCE.

J. MARC MARTIN.
SOLE AGENT FOR THE UNITED STATES
No. 203 Pearl Street, N. Y

C. O. D.

Agents and Dealers, read the following list of our rapidly selling articles:

"Lincoln Smoking Pipe," The Union Filter,
Vegetable Parer and Slicer, Patent Milk Tester,
Patent Match Safe, Magic Tobacco Box.

40 more novel and useful inventions. Send Stamp for Circular. S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N.Y., 434 Chestnut St., Phila., Pa

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY,

Merchants, Bankers, Teachers Amateurs, etc., etc.,

And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular

J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce Street, N. Y.

WEDDING CARDS.

French Note Papers, Seals and Presses, Silver Plates, etc., at J. Everdell's, 302 Broadway, cor. Duane St. For Specimens by mail, send 25 cents.

Elegant Holiday Present

FOR A LADY,

A Beautiful GOLD Composite, Hunting-Cased WATCH, Jewelled,

An excellent Timekeeper, $15.

For a Gentleman,
THE MAGIC RAILWAY WATCH,
With Patent Time Indicator,

Showing the hour without opening case, very handsome and reliable, $15.

The Gold Composite can also be had in Gentleman's size.

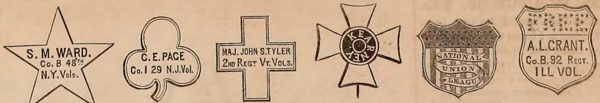
☞ Watches sent for inspection before payment.

CHAINS in great variety, Gentlemen's $1 and upwards, Ladies $2 and upwards. Send for Circular.

ARRANDALE & CO.,
Importers of Watches, 212 Broadway, N. Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cts., together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest; Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Marry whoever you wish to!
How to woo and be sure to win!



Full instructions in the art of "Psychologic Fascination," with Explanatory Charts, enabling any person of either sex to fascinate and win the undying love of any person they choose, thus rendering success in courtship certain. Sent by mail for 50 cents and two red stamps. Address E. D. LOCKE & CO.,
429-33 Box 1525, Portland, Me.

Beauty.—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enameler. It whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 30 cents. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 133 South-Seventh Street, and 41 South-Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

☞ WANTED! WANTED! ☜

Do You Want Splendid Whiskers or Moustaches?

HUNTER'S ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Also, on Bald Heads, in ten weeks. Two Boxes for $1. Postage free. Address C. L. BRIGGS, Milwaukee, Wis.

Headquarters for Officers' and Soldiers' Pins of Every Description!

We will send either Army Corps, Division or Company Pin, in Solid Silver, with your Name, Regiment and Co. handsomely Engraved upon it, on the receipt of $1. Also, a Kearney Cross in Fine Gold Plate for $1, or a New Style Solid Silver Cavalry Pin, Engraved as above, for $1 50.

☞ Agents sending for 10 or more at one time will be allowed 15 cents on each.

ALSO, THE EMPORIUM FOR WATCHES AND JEWELRY.

75,000 Watches, Gold Pens and Pencils,

Vest, Guard and Neck Chains, Chatelaine Chains and Pins, Engraved Bracelets, Engraved Spring Lockets, Seal Stone Rings California Rings, Chased Rings, Masonic Rings and Pins, Gents' California Diamond Pins, California Diamond Ear Drops, Beautiful Sets of Jewelry, New Styles Studs and Buttons, etc., etc., etc.,

WORTH $400,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

Certificates naming each article are put into Envelopes, Sealed and Mixed, and sent without regard to choice.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for doing the business 25 cents each, which must be enclosed when the request is made to know what you can have

After knowing what you can have, then it will be at your option to send One Dollar, take the article or not.

Five Certificates can be ordered for $1—eleven for $2—thirty for $5—sixty five for $10—and one hundred for $15.

With the information of what you can have will be sent a Circular giving full instructions to Agents and a full Catalogue of articles.

Box 4876, N. Y. S. M. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway, New York.

NEW YORK WEEKLY NEWS.

A FIRST-CLASS FAMILY JOURNAL.

DEVOTED TO THE ADVOCACY OF PEACE!

BENJAMIN WOOD....EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

THE NEW YORK WEEKLY NEWS, Enlarged and Reorganized. A handsomely printed sheet of Eight Pages and Forty-eight columns, containing fuller COMMERCIAL and MARKET REPORTS than any other journal. Also, attractive Miscellaneous and Literary Matter for Ladies and Families.

The TELEGRAPHIC and NEWS Departments are in keeping with the demands of the highest order of journalism.

In its political tone, THE WEEKLY NEWS will continue to be the constant, consistent and fearless advocate of Sound Government, the Rights of the People, Conservatism, and the Policy of Peace.

TERMS:

One Copy, one year	$1 50
Five Copies, one year	7 00
Ten Copies, one year	13 00
Twenty Copies, one year	25 00

For every Club of Twenty, an extra copy will be added for the getter-up of the Club.

Payments invariably in advance.

Address THE NEW YORK NEWS, No. 19 CITY HALL SQUARE, Daily News Building, New York.

THE NEW YORK DAILY NEWS, a First-Class Metropolitan Daily Journal devoted to the Advocacy of Peace, also issued from this office. Yearly subscription, per mail, $8.

Swords, Sashes, Belts.

Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords
431-56 B. KITTRIDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. EARL, M. D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cents. Address 58 White Street, New York. 431-34

We have furnished our Wesson's Rifles as follows:

State of Kentucky	1,366
State of Indiana	760
General Ripley	150
Colonel Collins	220
Capt. Buck's Co.,	Chillicothe, O.
Col. Grant's "	Kansas.
Capt. Child's "	Athens, Ill.
Capt. Whyback's Co.,	Rolla, Mo.
Capt. McGee's "	Lexington, Mo.
Capt. Hunter's "	Sedalia, Mo.
Capt. Olds' "	Perrysville, Ind.

LEAVENWORTH, Oct. 12, 1852.

DEAR SIR—The Rifles (33) were put to a severe test on the 7th, at the State Fair, AND WON A STAND OF COLORS, in a contest against THREE INFANTRY COMPANIES. They were to fire in squads of ten, each man having three shots, and to shoot at the command "Fire." We were OUTNUMBERED TWO HUNDRED shots by the infantry. Distance 300 yards. We hit the target 45 times out of 100 shots. The greatest number of hits by any infantry company was 13. Thus establishing the superiority of the KITTREDGE (Wesson) Gun.

M. S. GRANT,
Col. 1st Kansas Cav.

To MAJOR SHAW, St. Louis, Mo.

B. KITTREDGE & CO.,
433-44 Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Great Money-Making Article.

Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address
000 E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

DYSPEPSIA CAN BE CURED!

DYSPEPSIA, no matter how long standing, yields at once to "UPHAM'S DYSPEPSIA CURE." The effects of this Remedy are truly magical. Try it and be convinced. Price $1 a box. Sent, postpaid, to any address, by S. C. UPHAM, 211 South Fourth St., Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 431-4

IVORY SLEEVE BUTTONS OR STUDS,

RED, WHITE OR BLACK, with initials, for Ladies and Gentlemen, 75 cents per pair. Also Pearl, 18 per set each; sent free on receipt of the price.

For sale by WM. M. WELLING, manufacturer of Ivory Goods, 207 Centre Street, N. Y., sign of the Golden Elephant. 000e

The Prettiest Present for a Lady

Is the Gold Composite Patent Detached Lever Watch, Jewelled in 13 actions, beautifully engraved Hunting Cases, by Raskell, of Liverpool, $25.

FOR A GENTLEMAN,

THE OFFICER'S WATCH,

Detached Lever Movement, 13 Jewels, in Sterling fine Silver Hunting Cases, with New Patent Time Indicator, just invented for the army. The handsomest and most useful Watch ever offered—$25.

The Gold Composite can also be had in Gent. size.

☞ Watches sent for inspection before payment.

Every Novelty can be seen by sending for our Catalogue. Agents wanted in every Regiment and every County on unusually liberal terms.

ARRANDALE & CO.,
Importers of Watches, 212 Broadway, N. Y.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.
R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

Travelling Salesmen Wanted.

419-31 Apply to A. W. HARRISON, Philadelphia.

DR. R. GOODALE'S CATARRH REMEDY.

It penetrates to the very seat of this terrible disease, and exterminates it, root and branch, for ever. DR. GOODALE is the first and only person who ever told the world what Catarrh really was—where it commenced—and what would cure it. Price $1. Send stamp for a Pamphlet. Depot, 612 Broadway, N. Y. NORTON & CO., Sole Agents.

Travelling Salesmen Wanted.

$75 a month, expenses paid, or a commisson on sales. Apply to ISAAC HALE, JR., & CO.,
432 35 Newburyport, Mass.

$50 FOR $20.

SOLDIERS IN THE ARMY,

For $20 we will forward by mail or express, prepaid, the following lot of fine Gold Plated Jewellery: 4 Vest Chains; 12 Gents' Scale and Seal Rings; 3 Gold Pens and Extension Holders; 6 Vest Hooks; 4 Fancy Watch Keys; 12 Bosom or Scarf Pins; 4 pair Sleeve Buttons; 4 Box and Glass Pins for Miniature; 3 Double Glass Lockets; and 3 Cluster Stone Pins. Address

THOMAS CAFFERTEY & CO.,
429-32 Providence, R. I.

$75 A MONTH!—I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address
423-35 S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

"Moustaches and Whiskers in 42 Days." Dont be humbugged with ONGUENTS. The GREAT SECRET fully explained in the BOOK of WONDERS, 12,000 sold, 13th Ed. Only 20 cts; 8 for $1. Address C. E. HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

Advantage Cards, &c.—For samples and Circulars inclose 50 cts. and address G. BALEY, Nashville, Tenn. 432-3

EUREKA. 10,000 Agents Wanted for the NEW PRIZE COMBINATION STATIONERY AND NEEDLE PACKAGE. Warranted of the best quality and sells to everybody. Circulars free, Address J. L. G. PIERPONT, 422½ Broadway, New York, care of Miller's Post Office Box, 90.

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.—Superior to every other preparation for the hair in power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to overcome effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.

HOYT'S MINNEHAHA HAIR GLOSS, unexcelled in keeping the hair in curl

HOYT'S IMPERIAL COLORING CREAM oils and colors the hair at the same time; changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.

HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and preserves youthfulness of appearance. Sold everywhere.

JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place.

$60 A MONTH! We want Agents at $60 a month expenses paid, to sell our Everlasting Pencils, Oriental Burners, and 13 other articles. 15 Circulars free. SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Me.
431-32

Watches

FOR THE

ARMY.

"Particularly valuable for officers in the army and travellers."—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 21.

"Prettiest, best and cheapest timepieces ever offered."—N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 10.

"Splendidly finished Watches, the beauty of which is only equalled by their cheapness."—N. Y. Weekly, July 23.

MAGIC TIME OBSERVERS!

THE PERFECTION OF MECHANISM!

BEING A HUNTING OR OPEN FACE OR LADY'S OR GENTLEMAN'S WATCH COMBINED, WITH PATENT SELF-WINDING IMPROVEMENT.

A MOST PLEASING NOVELTY.

One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it, and connected with its machinery, its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being fine 16-carat gold. It has the improved ruby-action lever movement, and is warranted an accurate timepiece. Price, superbly engraved, per case of half dozen, $204. Sample Watches, in neat morocco boxes, $35. By mail the postage is 36 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!

FIRST-CLASS HUNTING TIMEPIECE

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES MUST INSURE

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of two metals, the outer one first quality Sterling Silver, while the inner one is German Silver, it cannot be recognized by cutting or heavy engraving, making it not only in appearance, but in durability, the best resemblance of SOLID STERLING SILVER in existence.

The sale of these Watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $25 and upwards. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single pay-day by any one of ordinary business tact.

☞ AT WHOLESALE ONLY! In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, white enamel dial, and fancy cut hands, in good running order, by the half-dozen, $66; postage, $2 38; registering, 20 cents. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

☞ TERMS, CASH! INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE! No Agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. If money is sent us by express or mail in a registered letter, it is at our risk! Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., SOLE IMPORTERS,
428 169 Broadway and 2 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

Royal Havana Lottery.

30 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

$35. WATCHES. $35.

Genuine Full-Jewelled American Lever Watches, in 4 Ounce Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Gold Joints, for $35.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be prepaid as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on goods.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
o 308 Broadway, N. Y.

Watches Given to All our Agents!
A GREAT CHANCE.

READER, solve no one moment, until you send for our new PRIZE STATIONERY PACKAGE Circular, whether you want it or not. It contains important information for everybody. Great inducement to live Agents.
600e WELLS & CO., 24 Beekman-Street, N.Y.

A FINE SHIRTS

TO ORDER.

Manufacture Unsurpassed—Fitting Inimitable,
AT
CHAS. L. LOCKWOOD'S,
No. 675 Broadway, N. Y.

F. S.—Self-Measurement sent on application.

HATS

D. BEAUDIN,
FRENCH HATTER,
NOW WITH
CHARLES L. LOCKWOOD,
No. 675 Broadway, N. Y.

F. S.—Hats made to Order and sent per Express. Directions for Self-Measurement sent on application.
000e

Desire for Tobacco!

CHEWING, SMOKING and SNUFFING CURED and PREVENTED by Dr. PEIRCE'S ANTIDOTE.

Agents wanted. Druggists, Merchants, Pedlers, P. M.'s and Soldiers send for Circulars. Sample package sent to any address, prepaid, on receipt of 50 cents, by CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.
622-36e

IF YOU WANT TO KNOW

Men and Women inside and out, what the sexes are made of, and how drawn together; the causes of disease and of unhappy and social wretchedness, read revised and enlarged edition of

"MEDICAL COMMON SENSE."

A correct book for common people, and a good book for every one. Contents tables mailed free to every applicant.
436 300 DR. E. B. FOOTE, 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

Shults' Unguent.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks or money refunded. Sent, prepaid, for 30 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

To Consumptives!

The Advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks from a very severe lung affection, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection and that dreadful scourge, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, etc. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address
REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
Williamsburg, Kings Co., N. Y.
000e

A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts., MAGNIFYING 300 times, mailed on receipt of price. Five of different powers, $1. Address E. BOWEN, Box 320, Boston, Mass. o

Prepare for the Holidays!

Booksellers, Fancy Goods Dealers, and the Public, will please remember that there is no other Gift which compares with the CRAIG MICROSCOPE as a source of amusement and instruction. Over 500 dozen Microscopes and 700 dozen objects have been sold within a year by the Boston Agent alone. This Microscope, in brass, is mailed, postpaid, for $2 25; or with six beautiful mounted objects for $3; or with 24 objects for $5. In box with case for 50 cents, in addition to the above prices. A liberal discount to the trade.
000o HENRY CRAIG, 253 Broadway, N. Y.

Dyspepsia Tablets.

For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by Druggists generally. 50 cents per box. Depot, 207 Centre Street, second floor. o d

"Greenbacks" made easy by selling TAY. LOR'S PATENT Agent for each county wanted. Address, with stamp, A. C. TAYLOR, New Britain, Conn.
o

MUNN & COMPANY,
Solicitors of American & Foreign Patents,
AND PUBLISHERS OF THE ILLUSTRATED "SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN," 37 Park Row, New York.
Pamphlets of information about patents free. Specimen copies of the paper free. 432-39e

COLD FEET!
USE THE ELECTRO METALLIC INSOLES.
They keep the feet warm in the coldest weather.
METTAM & CO., Proprietors,
629 Broadway, New York.
Price $1; prepaid, by mail, $1 20. Send for Circular.

$1 for 25 Cents.—$1's worth of Rare and Valuable Secrets sent free to any one for 25 cents. $31-3o Address J. M. R., Hawley, Pa.

FRIGHTFUL JOCULARITY.

STOUT OLD PERSON—" Here's a shirtmaker advertises and says, 'Send the size of your neck.' Ha! ha! ha! I should like to see her get the size of my neck, ha! ha! he!"

$15 Per Day Easy $15
AND A WATCH FREE!

100,000 men and women wanted to act as Agents in every Town, village and Camp, to sell our commonly popular, unparalleled and valuable EXTRA LARGE SIZE PRIZE PACKAGES, containing large quantities of SENTIMENT, RECIPES, YANKEE NOTIONS, etc. Sells wonderfully. Largest, Best and Cheapest ever manufactured. Each Package contains fine Writing Materials, such as Paper, Envelopes, Pens, Pencils, Blotters, Emblems, Ladies' Parts Fashion Plates, Designs for Needlework, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Companion, Money Computer for Soldiers, Parlor Amusements, Guide for Letter Writers, Many Ways to Get Rich, Lukewarm on Generals, Gents' Pocket Calendars for the Year, Union Designs, YANKEE NOTIONS of all kinds, Recipes, Games, Army Laws and Advice, Rich and Costly Presents of fashionable Jewellery, etc., etc., the whole worth MANY DOLLARS if bought separately. Price each Package ONLY 25 cents retail. Wholesale rates to Agents very low. 100 TO 200 PER CENT. PROFIT ALLOWED. Package of all descriptions put up for Sutlers, Pedlers, Wholesale Dealers, etc. GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE ARMY SAFE. All soldiers are allowed to procure and Sell our Goods. A Splendid "Gold Silver Watch," English, Movement and Correct Timepiece, presented "free" to all wholesale Agents. Send for our New Circulars with Extra Premium Inducements, free.
S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., New York, the Great Original, Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World. Beware of imposters of similar names.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS!

Our Catalogue now embraces considerably over
FOUR THOUSAND
different subjects (which are constantly being made) of Portraits of Eminent Americans, etc., viz.:

72 Major-Generals,	525 Statesmen,
190 Brigadier-Generals,	127 Divines,
230 Admirals,	30 Authors,
84 Lieut.-Colonels,	30 Artists,
200 Other Officers,	110 Stage,
60 Officers of the Navy,	40 Prominent Women.

147 Prominent Foreign Portraits.
2,500 COPIES OF WORKS OF ART,
Including reproductions of the celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statues, etc.

☞ Catalogues sent on receipt of stamp.

An order for One Dozen PICTURES from our Catalogue will be filled on receipt of $1 80, and sent by return mail.

Photographic Albums!

Of these we manufacture a great variety, ranging in price from 50 cents to $50 each.
Our ALBUMS have the reputation of being superior in beauty and durability to any others.
The smaller kinds are sent safely by mail at a postage of six cents per ounce.
The more expensive can be sent by express.

We also keep a large assortment of
Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views.
Our Catalogues of these will be sent to any address on receipt of stamp.
E. & H. T. ANTHONY,
Manufacturers of Photograph Materials,
501 Broadway, New York.
☞ Friends or relatives in the rebel military service will confer a favor by sending us their addresses to copy. They will be kept carefully, and returned unsigned.

THE ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER for Congressmen to present to their Pastor, or for other purposes, with suitable inscriptions, etc.
o

"The only cannulled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a Choker," to Box 5173, and receive it by return mail.
AMERICAN EMBELLISHED METALLIC COLLAR CO., 94 Pine Street, N. Y.

Friends, send a Stamp for my Circulars.
451-3o Address L. M. HARRIS, Boston, Mass.

A Story Causing the Wildest Excitement.

Irwin P. Beadle's Ten Cent Novel.

THE PATRIOT HIGHWAYMAN,

A dashing and fascinating tale of our grandfathers' days, relating deeds of the most daring character. It is a LIVE story, full of thrilling interest for old and young. Price 10 cents. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price.

IRWIN P. BEADLE & CO.,
137 William Street, N. Y.

The Soldier's Gift

TO THE LOVED ONE AT HOME

We will deliver free of freight charges at any Express office east of St. Joseph, Mo., any of our beautiful Albums of the value of $5 or more that may be ordered by members of the Army or Navy of the United States as presents to their friends at home. Our magnificent elegant styles at all prices to $25 and higher.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,
Manufacturers and Importers,
430-37o 501 Broadway, N. Y.

A GOLD OR SILVER WATCH AND GOLD CHAIN

Presented free to all who act as Agents for our splendid Stationery Prize Packets, containing fine writing materials, such as Paper, Envelopes, Rich Jewellery, Novelties for the Holidays, etc., etc., retail for only 25 cents, worth five times as much. These Packets contain more Stationery, and of a better quality, than any others ever put up. The demand for them is great, sales rapid, and the profits immense; and in addition receive, as a present from us, a Splendid Gold or Solid Silver Watch, warranted perfect timekeepers. Please call or send for our New Circular.

G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
o 30 Beekman Street, N. Y.

IMPORTANT!

The public are respectfully informed that I have just received per steamer Colla a fresh shipment of the Jules Mumm & Co's

Verzenay Cabinet,
AND
Dry Verzenay
Champagne

of a new vintage, surpassing in richness, finesse and delicacy of quality any Wines of the same grade ever before sent by this house. A trial of the same will convince the most fastidious.
The following houses have a supply of this shipment on hand:

PURDY & NICHOLAS,
W. J. CORWIN & CO.,
H. D. FELTER,
MACY & CO.,
W. H. JACKSON & CO.,
CHAS. HOLLOWS,
J. F. VAN ROSSUM.

JAMES MEYER, Jr.,
12 Dover Street,
Sole Agent in the U. S. for Jules Mumm & Co.'s Champagne. 433-5o

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility arising from Special causes, or both Sexes, are radically treated in Records of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION, and in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South-Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
o

VINELAND. LANDS. TO ALL WANTING FARMS!

Large and thriving Settlement; mild and healthful climate; 30 miles south of Philadelphia, by railroad. Rich Soil—produces Large Crops, which can now be seen growing: 20 and 30 Acre Tracts at from $15 to $20 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings—churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The bounty with which the fallen to land and is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Pamphlets and information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland P. O., Cumberland Co., New Jersey.

From Report of Solon Robinson, Ag. Ed. Tribune:

"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position, and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."
436-50e

$7. WATCHES. $7

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED
Gold-Plated Watch,
LEVER CAP,
[Small size, ENGLISH MOVEMENTS,
PERFECT TIMEKEEPER.
Sent free by mail, in neat case, for only $7.

A SOLID SILVER

Specially adapted to the army.
CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., 33 & 40 Ann St., N. Y.

GOLD PENS AND CASES
Retailed at Wholesale Prices.

Ladies'	Pens	75 Engraving	Pens 2 00
Med.	"	75 Union	" 2 00
Large	"	1 25 Mammoth	" 3 00
Commercial	"	1 50 Com. Eureka	" 3 00
Large "Hurdle's" do		1 50 Mam.	" 4 50

The above Pens are 14 carats fine and warranted perfect in every respect for one year. A written warrantee accompanies each pen. These pens are well known in the mercantile community for the last (10) ten years, and the subscriber believes, from the number of unsolicited testimonials given him, that they are the best pen now in use, or he would not be able to give them the guarantee he does. Send for a Circular before purchasing elsewhere, giving the exact sizes and prices of the various styles of pens and cases. Pens made to order to suit every hand or style of writing.
Beware of the imitation Johnson pens, and of the purchaser as the manufactory secure the genuine article.
E. S. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office,
425o 15 Maiden Lane, New York City.
Pens reprointed on the receipt of 38 cents. o

250 Rare Receipts!

TELLS WHAT TO DO AND HOW TO DO IT! The Book, with 17 Engravings, sent free by mail for 25 cts.
HUTCHINSON & CO., Publishers,
432o 442 Broadway, N. Y.

A Secret Worth Knowing.—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER without orchard or cider fruit, in 12 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
F. B. BOWER, Box 320, Boston, Mass.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

For Roofs, Outside Work, Decks of Steamers, Iron Work, Railroad Bridges, etc.
R. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

ALL Articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry Newbern, Port Royal, and all other points, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDENS EXPRESS 60, 74 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates. 000e

FRENCH FLANNEL ARMY SHIRTS

JAMES PARRISH, 128 Canal Street, New York
422

Dress Shirts
TO MEASURE,
SIX SHIRTS
$13, $15 & $18.

Dress Shirts,
TO ORDER,
are made with Perfect Fit, Superior Work, and Unequalled in Quality for the Price.
An extensive assortment of Imported SCARFS, TIES, HALF-HOSE, GLOVES and PARASOLS.

$8 WATCH AND CHAIN. $8.
$11 Watch and Chain. $11

A Beautiful Engraved GOLD PLATED WATCH AND CHAIN, warranted Movement, handsome dial and hands, warranted a perfect timekeeper, $8.

Engraved SILVER, same as above, chain included, $8.

A very heavy HUNTING CASED SOLID SILVER WATCH, full jewelled and fine English Movement. Silver Capped, warranted a perfect timekeeper, and a handsome Chain, all complete, fully worth $30, for $11.

We will send, on receipt of the money, one of our Watches and a Chain by mail, postage paid, to any address. Agents wanted in every Regiment in the Army, being heavily cased and perfect timekeepers, and in running order.
GEORGE A. ELY & CO.,
o 308 Broadway, N. Y.

BROWNE'S METALLIC WEATHER STRIPS AND WINDOW BANDS.

Totally Excludes Wind, Rain, Snow and Dust from the crevices of the sash, and whistling without interfering with the free use of the same for ventilating purposes. They save one half the fuel, stop the rattling of the sashes, and are deadeners of sound from the street or other noises. Over 10,000 have been put on to thousands of our most respectable citizens, address of whom will be given. The Metallic Weather Strip Co. 264 BROADWAY, corner of Bleecker Street, over the Manhattan Savings Bank." Local Agents wanted everywhere.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

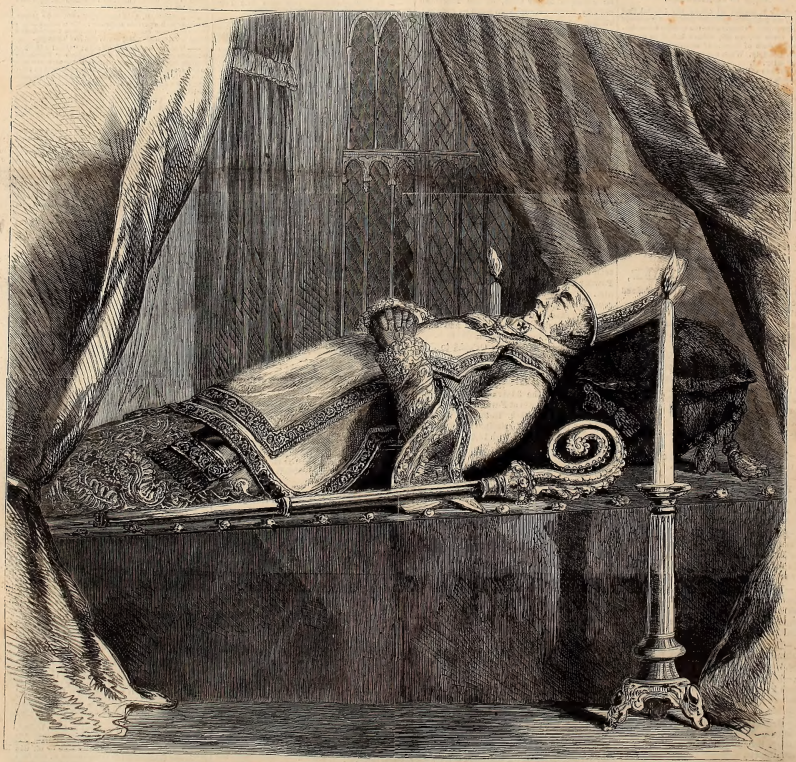
Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 434—VOL. XVII.] NEW YORK, JANUARY 23, 1864. [PRICE 8 CENTS.

Mrs. Stephens's $5,000 Prize Tale.

THE GULF BETWEEN THEM.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens,



a Novel fully equal to "Fashion and Famine," the most successful work of fiction ever issued in this country, and which has made the name of Mrs. Stephens familiar by every fireside throughout the world where the English language is spoken, will the next number of this paper, highly illustrated.

Begin in No. 435

The great prize of $5,000, offered by FRANK LESLIE for the best Novel for his ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, was awarded by the umpires from among 200 competitors to this exciting work, which, by its extraordinary interest, wonderful insight into human character, striking portraiture and carefully woven plot will keep the reader absorbed in its pages to the very close. It is a story of our own land and times, and touches every chord of sympathy.

This Novel alone will show the great value of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER; but its pages constantly mirror the events of the day, life as it passes around us, in its fine and unsurpassed engravings, so acknowledgedly superior to all others that they are alone copied by the illustrated papers in Europe. Its columns are constantly filled with interesting Tales, Poems, Sketches, Anecdotes and a full and accurate Summary of the Civil and Military News of the week.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE ARCHBISHOP HUGHES AT ST. PATRICK'S CATHEDRAL, NEW-YORK, JAN 6—THE BODY LYING IN STATE.

Barnum's American Museum.

MONSIEUR JOSEPH, THE GREAT FRENCH GIANT, 8 feet 4 inches; ANNA SWAN, the GIANT GIRL, 8 feet 1 inch; GIANT BOY, 8 feet; LILLIPUTIAN KING, 14 years old, only 22 inches high; Automaton Musical Troupe; Moving Wax Figures, Enormous Serpent, &c., &c. Tom Taylor's great drama, the TICKET-OF-LEAVE MAN, every AFTERNOON AND EVENING. Admission to all, only 25 cents; Children under 10, 15 cents.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 23, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 23 Nassau street, between Broadway and Elm, New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, also FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR OF 1861, by GEORGE P. BEMIS & CO., Proprietors of the London agency for Merit. 12 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One copy one year.....$3 50
Two copies " to one address..... 5 00
Four " " " 10 00
Magazine and paper one year..... 5 00

Notice to Advertisers.

The value of our paper as an advertising medium has become so generally known, that we are compelled every week to refuse columns of advertisements. The vast increase of our circulation, penetrating as it does into the most profitable channels, renders our space doubly valuable, and justifies us in the course we have determined upon—that of increasing our rates of advertising in the following ratio:

75 cents a line on the outside and last page.
40 " " on the 14th and 18th pages.

Notice to Contributors.

Our paper is beyond all others the journal that offers to the public the greatest number of American tales and poems. Great as are the numbers that constantly reach us, we are always happy to receive tales and poems of merit. If accepted they will be remunerated duly. When declined they are returned without delay.

Contributors will be good enough to write legibly, on one side only of the paper, and give their address distinctly. Comic sketches for engraving, or hints for such illustrations, are also acceptable.

DECLINED.—The Night Alarm—Jones's Inheritance—How He Proposed—Day Dreams.

Miss Braddon's New Novel.

UNPARALLELED ATTRACTIONS ! !

EVERY lady should secure an early number of

FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE

FOR FEBRUARY 1864,

Containing the opening of MISS BRADDON'S new and exciting Romance,

THE DOCTOR'S WIFE,

with the advanced sheets of which were obtained at a cost of $5,000.

This will be esteemed beyond all doubt her greatest and ablest work, having been secured by TEMPLE BAR at an enormous cost.

Our February number will contain a splendid double page colored Fashion plate, showing eight full dresses, a four page Fashion plate; new styles of Bonnets, Caps and Headdresses, and twelve pages of miscellaneous patterns, a number of interesting Tales, Sketches and Illustrations.

Every lady should take it for these reasons, and

1st.—Because it is the earliest chronicler of the latest Parisian Fashions.

2d.—Because it has established Agents in Paris, London and Berlin, who forward by every Steamer the latest novelties, in advance of their publication in those cities, exclusively for this Magazine.

3d.—Because, having the Largest Engraving Establishment in this country, the Publisher possesses unequalled facilities for early reproducing Fashion Plates for this Magazine.

4th.—Because the Colored Steel Fashion Plate is double the size of the largest plate published in any other Magazine. It consequently contains twice the number of Models for Dresses.

5th.—Because it contains a full-sized Cut Pattern of some new garment for Lady's use, imported expressly for this Magazine.

6th.—Because it also contains a Mammoth Four Page Engraving of the latest Modes—the largest Fashion Plate ever published in any Magazine.

7th.—Because, in addition to the Fashions, a large space is devoted to choice Literary Matter, including Illustrated Tales, Biographies, etc.

8th.—Because One Hundred Dollars expended in procuring Foreign Fashion Books would give less available information than can be had in Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine for $3 per annum.

9th.—Because each number contains over 100 Engravings of the latest style for Morning, Walking, Dinner and Evening Costume for Ladies and Children.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

Gregg's cavalry division, Col. Smith and others, have made cavalry reconnoissances to Front Royal. Considerable skill in capturing a number of rebels in various parts. Guerillas continue their raids.

The rebel Gen. Jones, with 4,000 men, attacked a body of 800 at Jonesville, but was able to take it only after eight hours' desperate fighting, in which he lost 60 killed and wounded.

On the 8th the Union garrison at Petersburg was surrounded, and our troops driven out of Burlington. Cumberland in Maryland is threatened.

On the 7th the rebels captured a train of 36 wagons.

Imboden had, however, been attacked, and driven back from Winchester.

A picket skirmish took place at Fairfax Court House.

The recent movements in Western Virginia were an attempt of Gen. Early to cut the Baltimore and Ohio railroad at Martinsburg, but afraid of a swell he sent Lee to Petersburg, and Rosser against Cumberland. Both failed, however.

In Loudon county Mosby has won his spurs by, we believe, the first fight in which he has been engaged. At 4 A. M. on the 10th he attacked Major Cole, of the Maryland cavalry, but is evidently no hand at fighting, valiant as he may be in thievery. He retreated, leaving on the field his dead and wounded, among them four commissioned officers dead. Coles's loss was two killed, 11 wounded.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Col. McPherson, with the 1st North Carolina (negroes) volunteers, marched from Newberde, Dec. 30th, for Greenville, but met the enemy at Washington, and routed them.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

On Christmas Day the Marblehead was attacked at a distance in Stono inlet, but replied vigorously, and held her ground, though struck 20 times. The Pawnee and Williams came up, and the rebels fled, leaving their guns, which were taken.

MISSISSIPPI.

Gen. Grierson is rapidly pursuing Forrest, who is gathering all he can to oppose him.

TEXAS.

Magruder is very unpopular, and his attempt to destroy Galveston with fire and Powder Horn, has united the citizens against him. The crime-dyed scoundrel, who has caused the hanging of hundreds of Union men in Texas, had the effrontery to send a flag of truce to Gen. Banks to ask if he had hung two Texans as reported to him.

Magruder, by news from Orleans to Jan. 3d, is concentrating all his troops to drive the national army out of Texas.

ARKANSAS.

An officer of the 3d Arkansas rebel regiment recently came in at Fort Smith, with part of his command. Gen. Holmes is in command of the Trans-Mississippi Department. Price being in the field with 13,000 men.

FLORIDA.

The Bloomer and Restless on an expedition to St. Andrew's bay destroyed St. Andrew's, and salt works belonging to the rebel government and others, to the value of $3,000,000.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Quantrell has at last been defeated. On the 18th Dec. he was utterly routed, near Gen Gibson, by Col. Phillips, of the Indian brigade. The rebels scattered in flight, leaving 50 killed and wounded on the field.

NAVAL.

The Judge of the Admiralty Court at Halifax decided that the seizure of the Chesapeake was piratical, and ordered her restitution.

The Morning Star, which left New York, Dec. 26th, was pursued off Cape Hatteras by a British pirate.

CONGRESS.

BOTH Houses re-assembled after their Christmas holidays, on the 4th of Jan., and proceeded to business. In the Senate a message was received from the President, recommending that the payment of bounties to recruits be continued till the 1st February. In the House a resolution was made to reduce the duty on coal from 34 to 1½ per cent. A bill was also referred to the Committee of Ways and Means abolishing the duties on oats and paper altogether.

On the 6th the Senate received a resolution of the House extending the payment of bounties to the 31th of March.

In the House there was nothing of public interest.

On the 7th, in the Senate, Mr. Howe (Wis.) moved that the President be authorized to call out 1,000,000 of men for 90 days, to release the Union prisoners now starving at rebel prison pens. Gen. Grant to lead them—referred to the Military Committee.

Nothing of public interest in the House.

On the 8th Jan., a joint resolution to give Great Britain notice of the suspension of the Reciprocity Treaty was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. Wilson's bill to promote enlistments was introduced. It provides that enlistments hereafter shall be for three years; that colored soldiers shall form separate regiments; that no white man; that 10 months' pay shall be given in advance; that the wives and children of colored recruits shall be forever free; that discharges for reason of wounds shall have full pay, and half pay, with rations, when absent from their cause; that each battalion of engineers shall be allowed an Adjutant, a Quartermaster, and Surgeon, to be selected from their Lieutenants. Bill referred to Military Committee.

Mr. Grimes moved that the pay in the navy be as follows: Major-General, $4,000, with commutation for rations, $5,000; Brigadier-General, same with commutation, $4,000; Rear-Admiral, $4,000; Commodore, $3,000; Captain of a department or on other duty in the field; $2,500 when on leave or waiting orders. Colonels same as two when on full duty; $2,800 when not in the field; $2,500 when on leave or waiting orders. Majors, $2,000 in the field, $2,250; on leave, $1,680. Majors, $1,800; $1,700 on duty; $1,500 in the field; $1,000 on leave or waiting for orders. Captains, $1,600 and $1,200. Lieutenants, $1,200 and $1,000. The bill was sent to the Military Committee.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The failures in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Northern States and British provinces during the week ending January 9th were 226, $8,006,000. In 1863 the gross amount was only 70 000,000. Considering the increase of business, this fact alone shows a wonderful state of prosperity, which will make the revulsion less terrific. The failure list does not include dealers in gold and silver, stocks or real estate.

The number of emigrants to New York for the year 1863 was 185,000, being 50,000 more than ever came in any previous year. Germany, 70,000; Ireland, 60,000; Germany, 38,000; England, 18,000; and Scotland, 2,000.

In Philadelphia, during the year, there were 2,300 houses, 15 factories and nine churches built.

The annual rowing news in Plymouth Church the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher's took place on the 4th Jan. There was a large attendance, and the collection was $2,000. The yearly premium paid was $200, by Mr. Horace Claflin, the next highest was $150, by Mr. Henry Ward Beecher, sold. The premium on about 70 pews ranged from $200 to $100, being higher than last year. Few pews which paid last year brought $10, now sold for from $40 to $50. The premium on 100 pews was $3,000. In 1862 the premium in 1863 was $10,034. This year the premium will reach $12,000 or $13,000. Nearly all the pews were disposed of.

The increased rate of discount at the Bank of England has had its usual effect here, and gold has been at 51 during the past week.

Two persons were found frozen to death in the streets of New York, on the 3d Jan.

Some disturbances among the negroes have been made lately involving the character of some of the officials connected with the Freedmen's Bureau, both male and female. A searching inquiry is to be made.

—The Police Commissioners, whose removal by Gov. Seymour was announced in our last, have resolved to contest the legality of the proceeding. Brady and Dean have been appointed their counsel. They ground their refusal upon not having had the trial promised them by the Governor in a letter.

—The new Board of Aldermen was inaugurated on the 4th Jan., Fernando Wood, President. The evergreen David Valentine was re-elected Clerk, in accordance with the custom of a period of over 20 years, and with the usual honors.

Messrs. Bosworth, McMurray and Lewis, named by Governor Seymour as Police Commissioners, held a meeting on the 5th of Jan., at 61 William street, and organized. Mr. Bosworth, one of Mr. McMurray as President, Judge Bosworth declining the honor. They elected Mr. Lewis Commissioner of the Courts upon the question of their appointment, and commissioned him. He entered with or inquire the efficiency of the present Police organization.

—The Board of Supervisors of Memphis have enlisted upward of 3 000 men under the last call. They allow each person who enlists now by the $300 County bounty to soldiers now in the United States Army whose term expires before Nov. 31, 1864, and who re-enlist for three years or the war, provided he is not discharged as part of the quota of the County of New York.

—The Annual Report of the Comptroller of the State of New York, which completes an account of the General Fund Revenue for the past fiscal year ends Sept. 30, 1863, shows the receipts to be $3,-83; delivery $1,102,787 77. Three millions have been paid into the general fund; $1,000,000 for harbor and frontier defence; $200 000 for the purchase of arms, $200 000 for the relief of volunteers' families, &c. The entire debt of the State is Canal Debt, $23,274,707 07; Loans, $3,000,000; War Debt, $1,000,000; total, $29,284,134 62. The interest on the debt is about 4½ per cent.

In consequence of the railroad companies having raised the price of milk 33⅓ per cent, the milk dealers have raised the price of milk to 8 cents a quart.

—Governor Seymour's message is an able but ultra-critical document, severely questioning the war measures of the Lincoln Administration. The Legislature, however, is strongly in favor of the Administration, and elected Gen. Dix Senator in place of the Police Commissioners.

Foreign.—The Ohio Legislature organised on the 6th inst. J. R. Hubbell was elected Speaker of the House, and A. Lee Clerk of the Senate. Gov. Todd's Message says that the financial affairs of the State were never in a better condition; that the public debt has been reduced $670,050, and that the State credit abroad and at home has proved a success. He recommends that the banking corporations now existing under the general law be made responsible facilities for closing their business. He calls attention to the bravery and gallantry of our soldiers in the field, and says that although this wicked rebellion still continues with unabated fury there is no full performance of duty in the effort to crush it. He says the change of Administration by the State since the beginning of the war is 200,671.

—The cold in the south-western parts has been excessive. On the 7th Jan. 50 rebel soldiers were frozen to death; also, several at Cairo. The snow storms have been very severe. The Mississippi river is closed, and the Ohio very much incommoded with ice.

—A delegation of prominent citizens from Arkansas is on the way to Washington, to negotiate for the return of that State to the Union. During their stay in Cincinnati, on the 9th, they frankly regretted they had ever been so ill-advised as to engage in the present unholy war.

—A collision happened near Dayton, Ohio, between two trains. One killed and 20 wounded.

Military.—Col. Alex. Cummings, of the Philadelphia Bulletin and New York World fame, has been sent to Arkansas, to raise some regiments of negro troops.

—Only 67 of the 66th New York regiment have returned, and all of these have re-enlisted for the war.

—Of the 67th New York, 300 out of the 329 re-enlisted. This shows how far better persuasion is than conscription.

—The London papers state that Sir Wm. Armstrong's 600-pounder, if properly elevated, could carry a shell a distance of 10,000 yards, or about 5 yards short of six miles.

—Gen. Curtis has been assigned to the command of a new Military Department, embracing Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Idaho and the Indian country.

Naval.—On the 8th of Jan. Rear-Admiral Farragut sailed from Brooklyn Navy Yard in the flagship Hartford, to assume command of the Gulf Squadron. The Hartford has been completely overhauled in every respect. Dayton, late Inspector of Ordnance at this port, and commander of the Passaic during Dupont's attack on Charleston, sailed also in the Hurford, to assume position as Fleet-Captain. The following is a list of the officers of the Admiral's staff: Rear-Admiral, David Glasgow Farragut; Fleet-Captain, Percival Drayton; Fleet-Lieutenant, James C. Watson; Admiral's Secretary, Edward C. Gabunia.

—It is stated that three of the highest engineers in the navy have reported in favor of the steel experiment in the place of coal, for the generation of steam in the navy. It is said that a steamer can be kept at sea, under steam, three times as long, with an equal amount of coal, as compared with coal.

Personal.—Robert Small, who carried off the rebel steamer Planter, is acting as pilot to our fleet at Charleston.

—G. A. Sala, who is acting here as correspondent for the London News of the World, has a very severe attack on the Irish. We call one flower: "The lower class of Irish make it a point to spend every Friday evening who does not exhibit symptoms of knocking them down to begin with. They are very fair fun into a row by being sorry. It is Nemesis—nothing more. If the butt's pocket-handkerchief and little purse of Boston would have been civil; but for our having ordered Celtic subscription, that 'Paddy' would have answered the butt; we banged him because he was Irish, and because Irish boots won't bring us any hot water to shave with."

—Capt. Aaron Jones, of the rebel army, who has just been tried and convicted of piracy, is a well-known pugilist, who secured Heenan in his fight with Morrissey. When the present rebellion broke out he and Heenan were engaged in business in New Orleans; Heenan left for the North, and Jones accepted a commission in the rebel army. He was captured while performing suspicious circumstances, which we do to his trial.

—Jefferson B. Auld has been appointed by Mayor Gunther as his private secretary. He is a most courteous and accomplished and has occupied the position twice before, under Mayors Wood and Tieman.

—The Boston Transcript says: "Charles Mackay is to return to this country in the course of Feby., to resume his letters in the interest of the secessionists in the London Times. For the sake of the latter we are glad to learn that the Americans among his fellow-passengers in the steamer will not be from the ranks of 'among the voyage.'"

—Miss Victoria Balfe, whose divorce from Sir John Crampton has just been announced, is on the point of marriage with the Duke de Frias, a Spanish grandee of great wealth.

—The Hon. Edmund Ruffin, the "distinguished Virginian," as he is called, and who is the hero about against Fort Sumter, is not an American, after all, having been born in Scotland, his father's name being Ruthven, and he emigrated with his parents when he was very young.

Obituary.—Mr. Andrew Lohmann, for many years peculiarly prominent as a member and leading pantomimist of the Ravel troupe, died at St. Hugo, Celia, on the 25th Dec., after but a few days' illness, in the 30th year of his age. He leaves a wife and little children.

—The widow of Lysander Thompson, the eminent actor, died on the 23d Dec., at Halifax.

—Gen. Thomas J. Green died at his residence, in Warren county, N. C., on the 12th ult., aged 66. He served as a Colonel in the Texan war of independence, a member of the Texas Congress, the leader of the Mier expedition, one of the heads of Murgrave's, and subsequently historian of that transaction. He was afterwards a State Senator in California and Major-General of the militia of that State. He was a most gallant officer.

—Mr. C. Kelsey died on the 1st Jan., at his son-in-law's house, Brooklyn. He was one of the officers in the war of 1812, and was subsequently register in and a complaint under which he labored prevented him having any of the present struggle in the Union.

—W. M. Thackeray, the well known author, was found dead in his bed on the 24th Dec.; the cause of his death is supposed to be apoplexy. He was in Calcutta in 1811, of English parents. He was educated at Cambridge, and abandoned the law for literature. His principal works are Esmond, Pendennis Vanity Fair, The Virginians, Four Georges, &c. But he will be chiefly remembered for his Such Papers, his humorous sketches, and satirical essays, which are singularly beautiful. Some of his poems are also admirable in their way, but ultimate. He leaves two daughters, both of them possessing considerable literary ability. He had been ailing for some time, and his death was what he was about to marry Miss Braddon.

Accidents and Offences.—Nearly 200 persons have been reported as missing from Binghampton, New York, since the 1st of January. The list of 1st of January was very heavy, and in some respects irreparable, as the libraries saved there were not replaced, and the loss is irreparable. No lives were lost.

—The latest news from Japan is dated Dec. 1. At that time the Japanese were actively engaged in fortifying Kanawaga, expecting two regiments from Hongkong. Also that the English were establishing a large force in the harbor, and everything threatened a hostilities. It was also said that the Dutch were contemplating a war upon the Tycoon. The Tycoon was willing to pay an indemnity for the attack on our Legation.

—Procyn de Lhuys has sent a circular to all the French Ministers abroad, regretting that the distinct refusal of England to participate in the Congress proposed by Napoleon, renders it a very great disappointment. It is evident that England is no longer willing to play second fiddle to that clever chevalier d'industrie, as he is called in contradistinction to the chevalier d'industrie, his brother kings.

—An Arsenic lately appeared in Cork, Ireland, and struck in a field in which a valuable mare was feeding. The animal was next morning missed, and sought for, when a large circular hole or pit was found in the field, and at the bottom of this hole the mare was found standing erect, stiff and dead. The belief entertained by those who have seen the spot is that the aerolite struck the earth from beneath the mare, forming the hole, and burying itself deep in the ground, while the mare fell from the receding earth, and was struck dead by fright.

—— The London Lancet states that, after the recent fight, Heenan experienced "considerable stiffness, which was ascertained to exist chiefly in the tendinous attachments of the trapezius muscle to the occipital bone, ligamentum nuchæ, dorsal vetebra, and spine of the scapula!"

—— The Europe, of Frankfort, publishes an account of a strange case of poisoning at Wiesbaden, after a wedding dinner, at which about 20 persons were present. In the evening a dance was organised, when during the quadrille the bride, Mdlle. Von Puyenbrock, was taken suddenly ill. Medical assistance was obtained, but unmistakable symptoms of poisoning declared themselves, and the young lady expired a few hours later. Either from the grief occasioned by this unexpected calamity or from the effects of some unwholesome food, the bridegroom died two days after in great agony. With the exception of a few slight cases of indisposition the other persons present escaped.

—— Among the straws of the day may be remarked an article in the last number of Punch, in which Capt. Semmes, of the Alabama, is denounced as a pirate and given over to the hangman.

—— Lord Palmerston has indicted O'Kane and the solicitor who conducted the much-talked-of divorce suit, for a conspiracy to extort money. If found guilty they will most probably be transported.

Art, Science and Literature.—Capt. Wm. Flowers, of Bangor, has invented an automatic boat lowerer. By its agency a boat can be lowered almost instantly and with perfect safety, even in a heavy sea. For the disembarkation of troops it will be most valuable.

—— Mr. Wilkie Collins has so much recovered from his illness that he is now able to put the finishing touches to his new serial story, which will appear in the January number of the Cornhill Magazine.

—— Charles Dickens will commence his new novel in numbers in May. It will be illustrated by Phiz, and will run through 20 numbers.

—— Mr Anthony Trollope has announced a new serial under the title of "Can you Forgive her?"

—— The author of "Mary Powell," and other representative biographies (some of which have been reprinted in America), has just broken new ground in "The Interrupted Wedding," a little novel, the scene of which is laid in Hungary before and during the war of 1848. It is pleasantly spoken of by the admirers of her tender, womanly genius.

—— The literary remains of the late Archbishop of Dublin (to whose chair Dean Trench has just been promoted) will shortly appear in the shape of a volume of miscellanies from his Commonplace Book, which will probably be followed by a selection from his unpublished Sermons. His family have undertaken the preparation of a Memoir of his Life, which will consist mainly of letters and other memoranda from his own pen.

Chit-Chat.—West, the painter's father, on emigrating to America, left his wife in England. She died shortly after giving birth to a son, whom his father first saw on his return to his native land 50 years afterwards. The painter was one of the second wife's family, born in America.

—— Lieut.-Col. Lord Abinger, of the Scots Fusilier Guards, was lately married at Montreal to a daughter of Commodore Magruder, late of the U. S. Navy, and niece of the notorious rebel Gen. Magruder.

—— The Prince of Prussia is by trade a printer. According to an ancient usage in Prussia, all the Princes of the royal family must learn a trade.

—— Mr. Bailey, who was arrested at the suggestion of the person known as Count Joannes, on suspicion of murdering young Converse, of the Malden Bank, has been honorably discharged from custody.

—— Prof. Agassiz, in a late lecture in Springfield, Mass., said: "Boys and girls, men and women should be less cloistered. They should be associated in the school, on the farm and in the shop. Their influence should be pure and healthful, and thus would the race attain more perfect development. Society will then be put on a higher foundation."

—— The Insurance Record observes that several offices in London are receiving proposals for an insurance to a large amount on the life of the Empress of the French—those already done amount to $1,000,000. The reason given is that it is for her son, in the event of anything going wrong.

—— We don't wish to alarm people, but one of those everlasting searchers for spots upon the sun has discovered that the face of that luminary is as thickly covered with spots as though it were marked with smallpox, sufficient to impair its business capacity for lighting and warming about one per cent.

—— The N. Y. Times has the following excellent remarks upon a subject which has not sufficiently drawn public attention to it: "A portion of the convict's earnings ought to be applied to the support of his family. As the matter now stands, his helpless wife and children are far more severely punished for his crime than the convict himself. Bad as he may have been, he stood between them and starvation. When he is taken away from them by the State and shut up in prison, they suffer all the pains and all the evils of destitution. He earns money, but the State takes it. Why should not a part of it, at least, go to the support of those who have not shared his guilt, but must bear the heaviest part of his punishment? The effect of such a provision upon the convict himself could not fail to be highly beneficial. It would habituate him to think of his family as still connected with him, as still dependent on him, as still profiting by his industry and good behavior; and except upon the very hardest and worst natures, this could not fail to have a reforming and softening influence. The experiment has been tried with good results in other States; why should it not also be tried here?"

—— A quantity of rebel correspondence was recently captured in the Ceres; among the letters was the following rich billet. Old Mason is evidently a brute not to assist such an interesting lady:

No. 13 TEMPEST HEY,
LIVERPOOL, Oct. 22, 1863.

Dear Lamar: That interesting friend of mine is now in London, at the Coburg Hotel, No. 14 Charles street, Grosvenor square.

She writes in great distress and humiliation, as usual, asking for money to go home with. She called upon old Mason, and he told her he was unable to give assistance. Take a look at her.

Yours truly, J. N. MAFFIT.

Expect to be off in an hour.

—— The U. S. War Steamer Wyoming lately arrived at Hong Kong from Japan, and although it had brought the English mails and the British Consul from Kanawaga, she was not allowed to remain in port, on the stale pretence of the Queen's proclamation of neutrality. This is very different from the reception given to the Alabama at Cape Town.

—— The following gorgeous specimen of the conglomeration style forms part of a critique on Renan's Life of Jesus in the Daily News: "As literary critics and scholars we admire it; as Christians we must emphatically condemn it. Still, as the advocate of the freedom of thought and freedom of speech, we justify its publication. It will do harm; it will also do great good. Its sophistries will all be one by one exposed. Error will always in the long run aid truth. It provokes to thought, and thought will ever lead to faith. Spite of all the talent and learning of this book, it is founded on a false theory, and cannot stand."

—— Liszt, the pianist, has been lately honored, at the convent where he is staying, by a visit from the Pope, before whom he played the piano for an hour. When he was done, Pius IX. embraced the pianist, and said: "You have made me hear celestial harmonies; thanks to you, I can now form an idea of what angel choruses ought to be." Liszt is now busy in setting to music the life of Saint Francis, of Assisi. The Pope must have had the epitaph on Purcell in his mind, "He has gone where only his own melody can be excelled," which induced a friend of a departed firework maker to put on the tomb, "He has gone to a place where only his own fireworks can be excelled."

—— The mystery of the lost prince is at last solved —Eleazar Williams was the missing Monongahela or Bourbon—another prince, whose initials are Wm. R., most likely William Rex, says, in a letter to Morris and Willis, Home Journal: "Most fortunately, we now possess the power of settling this question beyond the possibility of doubt, by the free and lucid communications we daily receive from our spirit friends."

—— An English writer, who has lately had his hair brushed by machinery, thus describes it: "In a moment I felt a silent fanning, as if some monstrous butterfly were hovering over me; this was the air of the twirling brush, which caught my hair up and laid it down, and travelled all over my head with incessant gentle penetration. It crept down my whiskers and reached my beard with the same tender and decided effect. There was no scratching, not even of the neck and ears, but the skin of cheeks and chin was reached and swept. It was a new sensation. I felt as if I should like to be brushed continuously for a month." We should think this machinery must be very pleasant for bald-headed gentleman.

—— Mr. Stanton has assured the darkeys that they have the privilege of being rogues or contractors as much as though they were white.

THOUGHTS TO REMEMBER.

BY B. C. LEECH.

WHO can revoke the broken word?
Or who recall the arrow sped?
Can we bring back the life that's past?
Restore neglected moments fled?

Think wisely, then, before you speak;
Reflect ere flies the fatal dart;
'Tis better far to send a balm
Than poison to a troubled heart

Live so that no regrets shall rise,
To gather round your future years;
Let no neglected moments pass,
To check thy flight to yonder spheres.

Speak softly, kindness is a power
That comes from yon bright heaven above;
Deal gently, and the world shall know
The healing balm—the power of love.

THE STORY OF A JUG.

IT is a true tale of one whose name is "as familiar in our mouths as household words," but who shall be known here as Bernard Barton.

Bernard was born in one of those home-like, cleanly and honest-looking villages of Massachusetts, of which there are so many, and which we shall call by way of distinguishment Middletown. Bernard was an only child, and his father, there's no denying the fact, was a harsh, a very harsh man, and apt to regard the faults of the boy much more harshly than they deserved. Bernard was without a mother, she having died when he was but three years of age, since which time he had been under the charge of a grandmother, who had become domiciled at the Barton homestead, and who made up by petting for the rough usage he received from his father. The only other member of the family was Marion, an orphan, whom Bernard had always called "cousin," and who was of that relation some score of times removed. Between Marion and Bernard there was six years difference, and the little blue-eyed child looked up to the boy of sixteen as to some superior being, whose wisdom surpassed all comprehension; for Bernard though born and educated upon a farm, and to do farm work, was both a reader and a thinker, and by some means, even with his very limited opportunity, had managed to pick up a vast deal of knowledge unusual for a lad of his age. This picking up, however, was something not in accordance with the taste of Mr. Barton, who could see nothing in books, and was no believer in learning beyond what was necessary to enable him to read the daily chapter, and keep his farm accounts. He believed in work, and in having the best kept farm in the county; and believing this, and this only, it was not strange that he was severe upon the bookish, dreaming habits of Bernard, and classed them only as laziness. The boy writhed under his father's treatment, and labored, and mourned over the tasks set him to perform, but never to his father uttered a word of complaint; all this was poured into the grandmother's ears, and from her lips came all the consolation that Bernard received, save such as could be given by little Marion, who, though too young to fairly understand the matter in its proper bearings, could always, when she saw the cloud upon Bernard's face, kiss away some of it.

"I don't believe he cares any more for me than a stranger," Bernard would say.

"Oh! you're wrong, Bernard. Your father does not want to praise you before your face, but I know that he loves you, and wishes to make you happy. He thinks his own way is right," was the grandmother's response.

"Happy! if he wants me to be happy, why doesn't he send me to school. No! no! he wants me to be a farmer and gardener. I never will be a farmer in the world."

"There! there, now! come dry your eyes Barney, and go fetch me a cool drink. You know I never care a cent for a drink if you don't draw it for me out of the north corner of the well."

The boy knew that the appearance of the stone pitcher was like a peace offering, and that with it grandmother generally closed the scenes of tears and repinings; sometimes, perhaps, in especial cases, accompanying it by wiping away the falling tears with her ample check apron, and a kiss. There was no getting over the old lady's style of comforting, and the boy always took the pitcher with a smile, and bore it back brimming with the crystal fluid, from, as the old lady expressed it, "the north corner of the well."

This was Bernard Barton's daily life, and daily trouble, until he was sixteen. Vague dreams of breaking away from it, and venturing out upon the great sea of the world, chased each other occasionally through his brain; but they never took shape, and so the old story had gone on from day to day, and from year to year. Dreams of something beyond the boundaries of the farm, of something that should lead him among men, and make the name of Bernard Barton heard. Dreams of a time when he would have unlimited hours of study, and would not be obliged to fly with or hide his books, as though they were some stolen property.

One day, a terribly sultry one in August, Bernard had just come in from the barn for his midday meal, which still stood untouched upon the table, when Mr. Barton made his appearance. There was something upon his face that foretold a storm, and there was not long to wait for it.

"I thought I told you to mend and rehang that corn crib door, Bernard," were his first words.

"Yes, sir! and you also told me this morning that I must mend Sorrel's harness. I couldn't do both, father," was the boy's reply.

"Sorrel's harness! why it oughtn't have taken you half an hour to do that."

"You'll think differently, father, when you've seen it."

"Oh! you've always an excuse," said the farmer, angrily; "you spend more time in inventing excuses than in doing your work."

A flush flew over the face of Bernard, and the tears came starting into his eyes. His father saw it, but he had no pity on such weakness.

"You idle away your time over some newspaper, or book, and then your work isn't done, and if you're spoken to there's nothing but whimpering and crying. You don't earn your salt, and you'll never be good for anything as long as you live."

The boy's breast heaved as though it would burst, and with one upbraiding look he sprang from the table, and hurried into the kitchen, where in an instant he was followed by grandmother and Marion.

"Go back, go back, Bernard. Go back and eat your dinner. Let your father have his full swing, and don't say anything. He'll get over it soon, when he sees you've been at work this morning. Go back, child."

"No, grandmother, never! This is too much! I'll never eat bread that is begrudged me, even though it is my father's."

"Oh! he'll get over it in an hour, and be sorry, Bernard. Go into your dinner, and forget it."

"He may be sorry many times, grandma, but he never tells me so, and I can't stand this any longer."

Marion crept up his side, and drew his rough hand up to her cheek. Grandmother forced a smile to her face, and bringing forth the inevitable stone jug thrust it into Bernard's hands, wiping off his face as she did so, and kissing him twice, said—

"Ah! well, never mind, Bernard, you'll soon be a man. Now, then, bring me a cool drink from the north corner, mind; there, that's a good boy."

Bernard could not restrain a smile as he took the jug, even though his heart was breaking, and throwing an arm round grandmother's neck, he kissed her quickly, then stooping to Marion's bright red lips and tear-dimmed eyes, he drew them into his bosom, and with one little word of love he did the same, and then set out for the well. It was but fifty yards away from the house, this well with the cool north corner, but within that fifty yards what thoughts went trooping through the hot brain of Bernard. Grandma was in no hurry for the water, he argued, and he would cool that heated head, and dry away all traces of the tears before he went back to the house. A little stroll down the road to get the south-west breeze would do it, and so Bernard sat the stone jug inside the hedge, covered it with leaves, and ran down the road against the wind. On he went, but the south-west wind did not cool his heated brain, and he went farther, farther still, until in a few minutes he found himself passing through the village of Middletown, and still striking southward with a head hotter than ever.

Ten years must now pass over Middletown, and consequently the same period over the heads of all about it. Just about dusk a stranger alighted from the stage at the tavern, looking earnestly and familiarly up and down the main street, and into the face of the landlord, though claiming no acquaintance with him. His request was that his baggage should be retained there until sent for, and as for himself, he wanted nothing, but would walk to his final destination as he knew the way well. On he went, treading every foot of the road as though he knew it thoroughly, until he reached the Barton homestead. Here there had been changes, but not in the outer appearance of the old place. Farmer Barton had been dead for some years, but otherwise, save such as time inevitably brings, there had been little change. The stranger made his way straight toward the house, reaching the windows that led into the little sitting-room, and there paused. There were voices inside speaking.

"Ten years ago, this very night," said one, "and how strange it is that we have never heard a word of the poor boy?"

"He can't be alive, grandma; I'm sure that if Bernard were living he would not have let so long a time pass without letting us hear from him."

"No! no! Marion. I am content to wait. I know that I shall not die without seeing Bernard."

"And grandma, if you should see him now, perhaps you would not know him."

"Not know him! yes, indeed I would know my boy wherever I would see him, and at any time. Shall I ever forget, Marion, the day when he went out with the stone jug, and both our kisses warm upon his lips, and never came back? His poor father held out for many years against him, and even forbade his name to be mentioned, but in his last sickness he mourned for Bernard, and sorrowed for his harshness to the boy. He felt that he had done wrong, Marion, or he would not have left the farm and all that he had labored for so hard, to be reclaimed by Bernard if ever he should return. No! no! Marion, Bernard will come back some day, and bring me another jug of water from that north corner of the well. I haven't enjoyed a drink of water since he went away."

The stranger had heard all this, looking in upon the old grandmother and the beautiful girl who sat sewing beside the shaded lamp, and dropping her brown curls over her white, plump hands, and then, without waiting for more, moved silently away from the window. Down the lane he went, toward the well, and groping for a moment in the hedge, he drew forth a stone jug. In a few moments it was cleansed, filled with sparkling water, and on its way to the house; and the grandmother and the fair girl with the dropping curls were startled to see a tall, sun-browned, richly dressed man, enter the sitting-room, bearing before him a great stone jug, and saying:

"Here's the water, grandma, you sent me for."

The old lady was not long in recovering herself.

"Put it upon the table, Bernard, and come and kiss me." And then in an instant the whole three were locked in each other's arms, Marion covered with blushes, and grandma laughing aloud from her very happiness.

I cannot close my story without a sequel. Bernard's ten years, as a rolling-stone, had overthrown the proverb, for he had not only gathered moss, but he had gained fame. And when in two weeks after he said to Marion, as they were walking in the moonlight up and down the lane that led to the old well, these words, it told the whole tale of the struggle:

"I knew, dear Marion, that this day would come, and I struggle for my wealth to meet it. I felt that I should some day come back and claim my child-love, and that I should find her, but I did not look upon my wealth as a means to sit down and wear away a listless life. There is work yet for me to do in the world, and I shall do it. This spot shall be our home always, but I must still work, and you as my wife will help me."

And he did work, not upon the corn crib or upon Sorrel's harness, but upon the world's work, until all the world knew of him, and of the Story of a Jug.

AN ICELANDIC ROMANCE.

As early as 998, Errick Rande, an Icelandic chief, fitted out an expedition of 25 galleys at Sentell, and having manned them with sufficient crews of colonists, set forth from Iceland to what appeared to be a more congenial climate.

They sailed upon the ocean 15 days and saw no land. The next day brought with it a storm, and many a gallant vessel sunk in the deep. Mountains of ice covered the water as far as the eye could reach, and but a few galleys escaped destruction.

The morning of the 17th was clear and cloudless; the sea was calm, and far away to the northward could be seen the glare of icefields reflected on the sky. The remains of the shattered fleet gathered together to pursue their voyage, but the galley of Errick Rande was not there.

The crew of the galley which was driven further down than the rest reported that, as the morning broke, the large fields of ice that covered the ocean were driven by the current past them, and that they beheld the galley of Errick Rande born by resistless force and speed of the wind before a tremendous field of ice; her crew had lost all control over her, and they were tossing their arms in wild agony. Scarcely a moment had elapsed ere it was walled in by a hundred ice hills, and the whole mass moved forward and was soon beyond the horizon. That the galley of the narrator escaped was wonderful; it remained, however, uncontradicted, and the vessel of Errick Rande was never more seen.

Half a century after that a Danish colony was established on the western coast of Greenland. The crew of the vessel which carried the colonists thither, in their excursions into the interior, crossed a range of hills that stretched to the northward; they had approached nearer to the pole than any preceding adventurers. Upon looking down from the summit of the hills they beheld a vast and interminable field of ice, undulating in various places, and formed into a thousand grotesque shapes.

They saw, not far from the shore, a figure of an iced vessel with glittering icicles instead of masts arising from it. Curiosity prompted them to approach, and they beheld a dismal sight. Figures of men in every attitude of woe were upon the deck, but they were icy things then; one figure alone stood erect, and, with folded arms, leaned against the mast. A hatchet was procured and the ice split away, and the features of a chieftain disclosed, pallid and deathly and free from decay.

This was, doubtless, the vessel, and that the figure and form of Errick Rande. Benumbed with cold and in agony of despair his crew had fallen around him. The spray of the ocean and the fogs had frozen as it lighted upon them, and covered each figure with an icy robe, which the short-lived glance of a Greenland sun had not time to remove. The Danes gazed upon the spectacle with trembling eyes. They knew not but the scene might be their fate, too. They knelt down upon the deck and muttered a prayer in their native tongue for the souls of the frozen crew, then hurriedly left the place, for night was gathering around them.

WE are indebted to Robert Coddington, 366 Bowery, who publishes a large collection of portraits of Catholic dignitaries, for the portraits of Bishops McCloskey and Timon.

IT is almost too late in the day to recommend the sewing machine as a useful article in a family. No well regulated household is without one. This question settled, the next thing to do is to select the one best suited to your requirements. Both of the editors of the Home Journal have long had the Grover & Baker machine in their households, and can speak from experience. We therefore have no hesitation in saying that we like this machine, and for the following reasons: First—It is more simple, durable, and less liable to derangement than others. Second—It sews from ordinary spools, and no rewinding of thread is necessary. Third—It sews with equal facility all fabrics, the most delicate and the heaviest, and with all kinds of thread silk, cotton or linen. Fourth—Its seam is so strong and elastic, that it never breaks. Fifth—It fastens both ends of the seam by its own operation. Sixth—Its seam, though cut at every sixth stitch, remains firm, and neither runs nor ravels in wear. But, besides the above qualities to recommend the "Grover & Baker," it has a faculty which no other machine possesses. It makes beautiful embroidery without any change of arrangement. —From the Home Journal.

RIGHT REV. JOHN TIMON, BISHOP OF BUFFALO.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY CODDINGTON.

RIGHT REV. JOHN M'CLOSKEY, D.D., BISHOP OF ALBANY.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY CODDINGTON.

THE WAR IN ARKANSAS—HELENA, ARKANSAS.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, FRED. D. SCHELL.

THE WAR IN SOUTH CAROLINA.—ACTION AT LEGAREVILLE.—THE REBEL BATTERY ATTACKING THE MARBLEHEAD SILENCED AND CAPTURED.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE.

LIFE'S QUESTION.

BY HENRY ALFORD.

Drifting away
Like mote on the stream,
To-day's disappointment
Yesterday's dream;
Ever resolving—
Never to mend:
Such is our progress—
Where is the end?

Whirling away
Like leaf in the wind,
Points of attachment
Left daily behind,
Fixed to no principle,
Fast to no friend;
Such our fidelity:
Where is the end?

Floating away
Like cloud on the hill,
Pendulous, tremulous,
Migrating still:
Where to repose ourselves?
Whither to tend?
Such our consistency:
Where is the end?

Crystal the pavement,
Seen through the stream:
Firm the reality
Under the dream:
We may not feel it,
Still we may mend:
How we have conquered
Not known till the end.

Bright leaves may scatter,
Sports of the wind,
But stands to the winter
The great tree behind:
Frost shall not wither it,
Storms cannot bend:
Roots firmly clasping
The rock at the end.

Calm is the firmament
Over the cloud:
Clear shine the stars through
The rifts of the shroud:
There our repose shall be,
Thither we tend:
Spite of our waverings
Approved at the End.

LINDA,

The Dancing Girl of the Cafe St. Nicol.

By Mrs. M. A. Denison.

CHAPTER VII.

One day Eugene was leisurely walking towards the café for his dinner when, presto! he stumbled upon Monsieur Louis. That gentleman, being freshly dyed, was got up in the very costliest style. He stopped short, made an immensely civil bow, and smiled grimly. Courtesy demanded that Eugene should stop too, though he would fain have gone by.

"How are you, Monsieur Eugene?"

"How are you, Monsieur Louis?"

"It is an age since I have seen you."

"It is indeed some time."

"Pardon me, but you were going to dine?"

"That was my intention, Monsieur Louis," was the quiet reply.

"I go with you then. I am on the lookout for a quieter café, which I suppose you have found—perhaps a cheaper?"

"Both quieter and cheaper," said Eugene, coloring.

"You do not object to my company?"

"Oh, certainly not," said Eugene, with indecision.

He did not dare, or rather did not like, to tell the truth, which was that he had much rather go alone.

So the two went quietly along together, Monsieur Louis never for one moment losing his ceremonious demeanor, Eugene perplexed and almost angry that they had met again. He was determined, if an opportunity occurred, to give him the cut direct. Monsieur Louis gave orders rapidly, pulling at his moustache almost fiercely. The dinner was brought on with some light wines.

"Tell me," said Monsieur Louis, "have you seen our little friend, the Linda, lately?"

"She is not my friend particularly, and I have not seen her for a fortnight," said Eugene, stoutly.

Monsieur Louis elevated his eyebrows.

"A whole fortnight!" he said, sharply. "What an unlucky man you are! Now, I have had the privilege every day during that time."

Eugene knew in his heart that it was a lie. He looked up and kept his eye steadily upon him.

"I heard that madame and mademoiselle had left Paris for a fortnight," he said, quietly.

"Well, man, that does not place them in the antipodes, does it? Suppose they were only a few miles out; there are the steamcars, if one only has the money to take advantage of them."

"Did you receive a note I sent you on that day?" asked Eugene.

"A note—no note!" muttered Louis, scowling. "I do not remember a note."

"In it I advised you not to call on mademoiselle."

"Oh, you did! Well, the note must have miscarried."

"What! You went there?"

"See the man's astonishment! Of course I went there," he added, with an oath.

"And—and—pardon—but how did they treat you?"

"Like a king, my lord," answered Louis, with ironical voice and gesture. "You should have been there, only it might have made you jealous. Why they even sent out for confections and a most delicate meal. Then the lovely mademoiselle herself, how preciously beautiful she was! It was worth ten thousand francs to see her smile on one. What a smile the witch has got, to be sure!"

For a moment Eugene was taken aback. This man was so cool in his effrontery if he was lying; and he must be.

"You mean to say that madame, the nurse and guardian of mademoiselle, received you with deference and believed your story?" asked Eugene, incredulously.

"Why, of course, man! As to my story: I can always get out of a scrape, even if others draw me into it. I had a very ingenious estape-valve, and that, with money, you see, overcame even the old dragon's prejudices. She consented to receive me as a friend; so, since then, I have been on terms of intimacy with them."

"I believe you lie!" cried Eugene, his eyes ablaze, for the look and manner of this man made him seem infernal.

Louis sprang to his feet. This was all he wanted. Fire flashed from his eyes, all the wrinkles in his forehead were plainly to be seen. He caught up his glass, which was nearly full, and threw it in the face of Eugene. This was unpardonable. The young fellow leaped upon him like a tiger. A furious struggle ensued, which would have ended in blood if they had not been parted.

"Satisfaction for this!" cried Monsieur Louis, hoarsely.

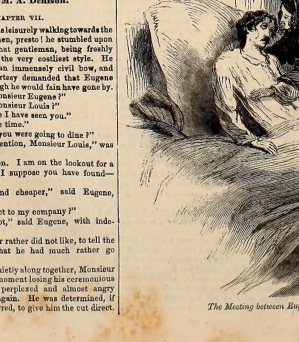
"I am ready," was the reply.

And throwing down his card he rapidly wrote his name and address, took it up again and handed it to Monsieur Louis, who received it with a muttered oath.

The young man returned to his plain lodgings, feeling himself a doomed man. All Paris rang with the skill of Monsieur Louis as a dead shot. Eugene was tolerably skilled in the use of the pistol, but was by no means a proficient. He had never winged his adversary; the other had. Besides, he could not feel revengeful, and beyond a certain amount of cool daring his physical courage was not remarkable. However, here he was with a duel on his hands. He sat down by his pen, his ink, his paper, all nicely folded and cut; he looked over to the busy streets, which could be seen from his little window.

"I shall never walk those streets again," he said, with an involuntary shudder. "This fiend will kill me—I feel it in my heart. He is merciless. He thinks I have fooled him, and he will not forgive. And my poor mother, my poor sister! What would they say if they knew I even contemplated duelling? How often we have discussed the right and the wrong, and I have flattered myself that I dared question the right of a man to kill me for an insult! Yet this was no insult; it was the truth. If ever man lied deliberately and foully that man did. The villain, to implicate us he dared! He ought to be killed. Such a wretch is too bad for the light of day to look upon. But if I killed him! Just Heaven! The thought of having blood upon my soul!"

He bent his head, with both hands he covered his pallid face. Life looked very alluring to him—yes, even if he had lost the sweet object of his first love. He was young, poor fellow, and there was a fair prospect of being famous.



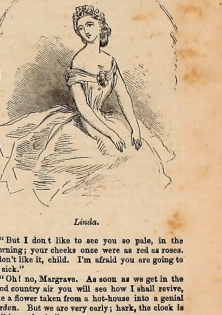
"I won't retract—and I won't fight!" he cried from between closed teeth.

But then he felt that he should be in the power of this vindictive man, who might at any time deliberately spit his venom out upon him. It would ruin his prospects. He, too, wielded the pen. He would brand him as a coward, ridicule him unmercifully, stand in the way of his preferment. In any case, he would be a most dangerous and desperate enemy.

"Oh, what am I to do?" groaned the young man.

On the one hand there was fight, on the other—flight! To run the risk of having a ball put through his heart, or going home to live again on the few francs he could earn at that distance from the capital. His mental manhood revolted at the thought. He who had made such boasts that he could support his mother and his sister, now to retreat ingloriously back, under cover of their protection, instead of their being under his. No, no! he could not for a moment contemplate that side of the question. He must stand by what he had said and take the consequences; there was no other way open to him. After all, what was life? To the Parisian born it seemed an empty thing. Every morning the papers told of some one who had deliberately shut the gates on life and gone out into the unknown future. Perhaps it would be better, weighing the chances; he thought it would. He would write a letter to his mother, his sister and Mademoiselle Linda. The old nurse would get it; but she had found him honorable, and the chances were that mademoiselle would get it. Then she would see that he had died for her, and love his memory.

This plan decided upon, he sat down and buried himself till four in the afternoon, when Monsieur Louis's messenger demanded to see him. That business adjusted satisfactorily, he tried to divest his mind of the strange and thoughts that wrought it as in a cloud, but in vain. Go where he would, do what he might, it followed him. A thousand times he despised himself for his moral cowardice, for conscience demanded its satisfaction. It said, in unmistakable language, "It is better to suffer wrong than to do wrong." It busied itself in propounding to him a thousand strange questions concerning that future he was so willing to brave. But, as is too often the case, the moral was ever weaker than the spiritual man. It could not abide the finger of scorn, it could not bear the whisper of doubt; above all, it could not place confidence in that great Being, who always in time or in eternity rewards the welldoer and punishes the ill. Poor Monsieur Eugene!



The Meeting between Eugene and his Sister in the Hospital.

CHAPTER VIII.

A COLD gray morning, just after daylight. All the streets of Paris were damp, and moisture streamed from the shop windows. The very few people abroad, workers, both men and women, walked with shrugged shoulders and pinched faces. Paris was cold and the Parisians were cold. There were fires in comfortable dining-rooms, that my lord and my lady might not feel the change in the atmosphere. A carriage drove out of one of the obscurer streets. The driver looked sleepy, so did the horses. Perhaps they, poor things, had hardly been awake all night. Inside the carriage, wrapped in heavy gray shawls, sat two women, one was young and very beautiful, the other was old and much faded.

"Linda, child, your teeth chatter; I must shut up the window," said Madame Margrave.

"Oh, no! The air of the coach would stifle me; besides, it is not so very cold, only raw."

Linda.

"But I don't like to see you so pale, in the morning; your cheeks once were as red as roses. I don't like it, child. I'm afraid you are going to be sick."

"Oh! no, Margrave. As soon as we get in the good country air you will see how I shall revive, like a flower taken from a hot-house into a genial garden. But we are very early; hark, the clock is striking only six."

"I thought it was later. By some mischance my watch has gone forward," was the reply. "Well, fortunately the station-rooms will be warm and we shall not suffer. It is better to be too early than too late."

"How gray the sky looks!" cried Linda, shuddering. "I didn't feel a bit happy this morning. I believe I must have had miserable dreams. Did you ever feel as if something was going to happen?"

"Something is always going to happen, child," replied the nurse, yawning behind her gloved hand.

"Shall we ever come back to Paris?" sighed Linda, looking regretfully after a beautiful promenade they had just left. "Look, Margrave—look at that man. He is running—he seems to be in a desperate fright."

The nurse leaned forward. The man at that moment was coming towards the carriage.

"The villain!" she cried, "what can he want?"

"Why, do you know him, Margrave?" queried Linda, curiously. Can he stop the carriage?"

"No, no, child—but I know him—it is that man whom Monsieur Eugene warned us of. There, he has gone past, but he had the audacity to bow. I hope you did not return it."

"I, nurse? of course not—I do not know him at all. Some one may be ill and he runs for a physician, though in that case he might have taken a horse, or sent for the doctor, I should think."

Speculating about it, they were driven on. Linda had sank back in the carriage, and was dreamily gazing on the objects by the roadside. They were now in the suburbs of Paris, and driving past the pleasant village of Passy. Suddenly the driver halted. On their left were the classic grounds of the Bois de Boulogne; from one of its entrances directly opposite several men appeared, bearing a rude sort of litter, on which, partly covered by a cloak, laid the body of a man, whose lifeless face upturned to the heavens, and long, beautiful hair hanging all uncurled, caused the old nurse to cry out piteously. Linda saw it, and for a moment the terrible vision deprived her of all emotion. Then a long, wild scream rent the still air. The beautiful girl hurried to the carriage door.

"Are you crazy, Linda?" cried her nurse, frightened at her extreme pallor, and the earnestness of her motions.

"No, you know I am not. You know whose body that is. He has been killed—that frightful man killed him. I must get out. Unlock the door or I will jump through the window. Men, set down that litter—he was my friend."

At last the handle of the door yielded, and she sprang out of the coach. The bearers, struck with her youth, beauty and sorrow, paused while she bent above the bier.

"Oh! is he dead?" she cried, wildly, as, brushing the rich hair back, she laid her hand upon the forehead.

"He's dead, sure enough, so the surgeon said," replied one of the men.

"Oh! his poor sister!" sobbed Linda, quite overcome. "Oh! his poor mother, if he has one, what will they do without him? Ah! me—it has broken my heart."

"Linda," cried her nurse, gently, "come, child, you can do no good there."

"No, I cannot put life again in these poor pulses. Oh! to be so foully murdered!"

"We must go on, madame," said one of the men. "People are beginning to come by."

"That frightful wood!" shuddered Linda, as she cast a glance towards the Bois de Boulogne—"oh! I shall never want to see it again. Come, nurse, we will leave Paris, and never, never return."

"My poor child we have left Paris," said her nurse, pityingly, as she assisted her into the carriage again.

"Have we? Then let us go farther, for here my heart was broken."

"Linda, foolish child, this boy was nothing to you," said her aunt, in quick tones, frightened at the rigid look of her young face, the frightened expression of her features. I am astonished that you should expose yourself so."

"Oh! nurse, you don't know—you don't know anything about it," she said, hopelessly. If you did you would not say so—no, you could not. Oh! if I could only die."

"Foolish, unhappy child!" cried the nurse, "to grieve thus over one who gave no more than a passing thought to you. No doubt he has loved a dozen fair faces since."

"No, nurse, I am sure that he died for me. I have dreaded it ever since that day—ever since that frightful man called, and you told him all. From that time I have had this impression, that my poor Eugene would be killed, or that in some terrible way I should lose him."

"Well, well, my dear, all your tears will never bring him to life. You must forget him, and then you will recover your wonted serenity. You shall have beautiful dresses, and I warrant you in time a lover handsomer and richer than poor Eugene."

CHAPTER IX.

The city of Rouen, famous for being the birthplace of Corneille and Fontenelle, is situated on the right bank of the Seine. As lovers of old histories know, it was once the capital of the ancient dukes of Normandy, and a small fragment of the old palace that once overtopped its towers still can be seen. A beautiful and picturesque city is Rouen. Its lovely boulevards nearly encircle it—a street planted with trees dividing the new part from the old. Its cathedral is a magnificent edifice. It was not till within a few years quite completed. It contains the tomb of Rollo and several eminent personages. In its old market-place, in 1431, Jean d'Arc was burned for commencing that revolution that saved France. Her ashes consecrated the river. But I will not go into any historical details—suffice it to say that the traveller is satisfied with a visit to Rouen, and enters and leaves it without losing his enthusiasm.

In a pleasant street of this pleasant city, indeed, nearly upon its outskirts, in a beautiful apartment overlooking the river, two ladies sat. One of them looked scarcely thirty—the other was much younger, having numbered but sixteen summers. Lily Atoile and her mother, for they were the mother and sister of poor Eugene, seemed both busily employed. The elder was knitting, the latter had drawn a beautiful little writing-table up near the window, and was looking over a letter as if meditating an answer.

"Did you read all Eugene's last letter, mother?" asked Lily, shaking back the light, soft curls as she looked up from her employment.

"Yes, my dear," replied the mother.

"What do you think of the part relating to that Mademoiselle Linda?"

"I don't know what to think, exactly, my dear. I know that Eugene is very young and very impulsive, and his good feelings are easily enlisted. She may be very pure and good, but I wish he had never known her."

"That is beautiful poetry in the Review—I think, do you know, mamma, that it is addressed to her. I wish I could write like that. Eugene is going to be famous; don't you think so, mamma!"

"Sometimes I hope so, child, but famous people are seldom happy."

"Perhaps not—but then it is something to be famous, even if one is unhappy. One may not know it, and thousands may be talking about and envying one. Oh! yes, I do hope Eugene may be famous. And some time, when he has made a great deal of money, I shall go to Paris and stay awhile and see the sights. That will be so delightful. The dream of my life fulfilled."

"If you keep on talking, Lily, you will never get your letter done," said her mother, gently.

"Sure enough, mamma—there, I have made the important beginning, 'Dearest brother.' Now after the first line or two everything will go straight, I hope."

How little they thought, those two women, seated amidst singingbirds, rare flowers, looking out upon the vines of sunny France, the blue river dimpling and glittering in the sunlight, the distant hills, how little they thought of the gray Bois de Bologne, the damp morning and the fatal shot aimed at the heart of their beloved. They were very happy in their son and brother. He had never given either of them the heartache yet. To them he was the bravest and handsomest creature in the whole world. Lily, poor, foolish little heart, imagined that everybody knew him in Paris by this time—that beautiful women smiled upon him, and men were jealous of his superior good looks and abilities. There is no knowing to what height her ambition attained for him. She never thought of him but with a throb of pride, and she almost held herself aloof from other people on his account. There was a girl named Marguerite who lived in the same street with the Atoiles. She had once been a playmate and somewhat of a favorite with Eugene, but before he went away he roused her anger to the highest point by dropping her acquaintance. Still she loved him, but it was a fearful kind of love, colored by the longings of revenge.

Lily, pitying this girl, had always befriended her, though sometimes she drove the iron deeper into her soul by reading Eugene's letters. The last she allowed her to hear was the one in which mention was made of the lovely dancing girl of the Café St. Nicol. Terribly it roused her jealousy, and she longed in some way to make him suffer the torments he had innocently inflicted upon her.

It happened that Lily had scarcely finished her letter—in fact was at that moment adding a momentous postscript, when Marguerite entered. She was a Rouen beauty, dark, sparkling and piquant. Her face was round and rosy, her shoulders and arms plump, her hair short and curling, her eyes very bright and black, and her form, though a trifle large, still very good. She wore a pretty brown dress, set off by a jaunty silk apron with pockets and ruffles. As she neared the room her face took on a strange look of mingled cunning and caution.

Lily looked up, smiled and nodded, as much as to say: I shall be through, soon. Mrs. Atoile smiled pleasantly and invited her to be seated. So she sat down, holding her little straw hat dangling by its blue ribbons.

"There, it is finished—all but the seal," said Lilly, gaily.

"Have you been writing to your brother?" asked Marguerite, demurely.

"Yes, it will go in this noon's mail. He will get it to-morrow."

"Have you heard from him, lately?" asked Marguerite.

"You saw a part of his last letter," was the reply. "I should have answered sooner, but I was lazy."

"I should think you would be afraid to have him there," said the girl, significantly.

"Why?" asked both women.

"Oh! Paris is so wicked, the curé says, that there are assassinations and duels going on all the time."

"I'm not afraid," said Lily, gaily; "only bad men are assassinated and reckless men fight duels—Eugene is neither."

"Eugene would never fight a duel," said his mother, with confidence.

"Still, it is a dangerous place," persisted Marguerite.

"I have no doubt the city has its temptations and its dangers," said his mother, musingly. "But Eugene was well fortified against both. He cannot forget his early education. He cannot forget the example and prayers of his mother. He may be unfortunate, but I do not think he will be wicked."

"What is that in your pocket?" asked Lily, curiously.

"A strange paper—a sort of Police Gazette," said Marguerite, taking it from her pocket. "Father got it of the police agent at the station. I will leave it for you to look at. I brought it over on purpose."

"I wonder if Eugene writes for it?" asked Lily, as she received and politely laid it aside.

"No, indeed," said Marguerite. "It would be a strange thing to see his name in that. Good morning; I must be going. I hope you'll send my regards to Eugene."

"Certainly I will; I always mention all our friends," said Lily, frankly, not noticing the bitterness in the girl's voice.

After she had gone, Lily lounged over to her desk again. What was that sudden cloud that had fallen upon her spirits?

"I never was happier than I was this morning," she said, "but now, within a few moments, I feel nervous and miserable."

"Go out and walk," said her mother, "the fresh air will revive you."

"I don't feel like walking, or sewing, or in fact anything, I believe I'll look through this delectable paper that Marguerite left. Wasn't she rather strange, mamma?"

"How do you mean, child?"

"I don't know as I can tell myself; I didn't notice it when she was here, but looking back I do. Do you believe, mamma, that she was really very much disappointed on Eugene's account? Do you think he did wrong?"

"I never thought he did," was the mother's reply. "He treated her always as a dear friend—there was no particular tenderness."

"And yet it seems to me of late she acts strangely, particularly when I read her his letters. I have known her to burst out crying."

The words had hardly passed her lips when Marguerite came flying in again.

"Oh! they are putting up great posters all over the walls," she cried, almost breathless. "Do you know we are going to have grand doings in Rouen? It's to be at the great ball to-night—dancing and singing, and everything that is beautiful. See, here is one of the handbills I picked up. Did you ever see that name before?"

"Oh! mamma, Mademoiselle Linda—now we shall see the little danseuse over whom Eugene was so pathetic."

Marguerite scowled, but when Lily turned, her face was quiet again.

"I don't know, my dear—I don't approve of these entertainments."

"Oh! I hope you will go, only to-night, for papa says I may if you will. I feel as if I must go," added Marguerite, pleadingly.

"Very well, if the case is so urgent," said Mrs. Atoile, smiling, "I suppose I must give my consent."

CHAPTER X.

"My child, my child! it is almost time for you to dress and you have not started yet. This grief will kill you. I must insist that you give it up."

"I can't help it nurse; indeed I can't," murmured the poor child, with heavy eyes. "I have tried all day, but that same weight keeps upon my heart. Oh! if I had not seen it!"

"Indeed, I wish you had not, poor child; but what possible good can your mourning do? You cannot bring the dead to life."

"No, never—never!"

The apartment was a neat one in one of the most comfortable and best kept hotels. It was taken, with two others, by the mistress of ceremonies—a Madame Rollo, who had been long known as the giver of elegant entertainments. Her little festivals were always crowded, and she counted greatly on the superior beauty and grace of Linda to draw still greater numbers.

As the old nurse was speaking, Madame Rollo entered the room.

"We shall have a splendid house," she said, chuckling. "Some of the very best families have sent for tickets—the D'Arblays, the Bretoignes and the Atoiles, who seldom go to such entertainments."

"The Atoiles!" cried Mademoiselle Linda, the color for one brief moment flushing her face. "Oh! I remember, Rouen was where he lived."

"Linda!" cried her nurse, sternly, as Madame Rollo, half smiling, stood looking at her.

"No, Margrave; but only think, they do not know that he is dead; they are coming to this entertainment. Oh! it is terrible!"

"What does she mean?" cried Madame Rollo.

"Simply that a young man by the name of Eugene Atoile was killed yesterday morning in the Bois de Boulogne in a duel, I suppose. It may not be this family—they may not even know him."

"Oh! yes; it is Eugene Atoile's family—a mother and sister. Eugene dead? Eugene dead?" she cried, in accents of terror. "It will kill his mother. I happen to know them," she added, "because at one of my entertainments in the open air a young girl was fatally injured. This Madame Atoile took her to her house and cared for her till she died. She had a son, Eugene, who was a poet. It must be the same one."

"Oh! cannot you send word!" cried Linda, piteously.

Madame shrugged her shoulders.

"That is not my task," she said, "besides it is too ungrateful. She will not very likely be here to-night, for it will be in the Evening Gazette, which probably they read before supper. Come, come, mademoiselle, this will never answer—what! tears? I am astonished—and pale cheeks. They must not come on any stage of mine. If she looks this way, madame, by evening, I insist that you use rouge plentifully. But then it would be be a pity to spoil her skin; she must recover her good looks. As for the Atoiles, let them alone; you need not suffer for them and yourself too, so wash away the tears, and look as happy as you can."

It was morally impossible for Linda to look, or even try to look, happy. To please her old nurse, who was really distressed on her account, she bustled about, hiding her face all that was possible, but constantly seeing before her that pale, dead face, and the despair of the now happy family when they should know the worst. She pictured them reading the ghastly news, till her heart was sicker than before. She need not, that time, for Lily was so absorbed in her preparations for the entertainment that she did not even unfold the evening paper when it came, and as for reading it, she did not think of such a thing. Very blooming and beautiful she looked in her pretty white hat and gauzy shawl.

"You look so much like Eugene to-night!" said her mother, fondly.

"I always do, in this hat, you know," said Lily, "and I am glad I do. I can see the likeness myself, now that my curls are cut off. Isn't it a comfort to you to have a Eugene and Lily all in one."

"Both my children are a comfort to me," said Madame Atoile, softly. "But there comes Marguerite; it is time for us to go and secure a good seat."

"How much she looks like Eugene!" cried the new comer, apparently startled. "If I had seen only her face at the window I should have thought he had come home."

"He ought to come soon, mamma, ought he not?" asked Lily.

"My dear, if he kept journeying back and forth it would cost him all he could make. No child, I think he had better stay there a year."

The two girls were very fortunate on reaching the hall. Half the students rose the moment Lily's lovely face came in view, and they were soon supplied with the most desirable seats. A gorgeous curtain shut the stage from view. Several good musicians surrounded a pianforte, which was to be played by one of Rouen's best performers, and the raising of the curtain was looked forward to eagerly. The first scenes were pantomimes, and very cleverly acted. Then came singing, then juggling, performed by Madame Rollo herself, in a nondescript sort of crimson velvet dress, with a long golden sash, and a glittering turban on her head. After this an intermission of ten minutes was accorded, and the students gathered in little knots about the hall.

One or two were talking with Lily, for she was a famous belle in Rouen, though she wore her honors very modestly, and telling the story that always preceded and accompanied the little dancer. Lily was extremely interested, and anxious to see the beautiful creature, around whose life were thrown such threads of romance. At last the tinkling of a bell was heard. The students hurried back to their seats, and in a very short time complete order was restored, and everybody waited in breathless expectation the rising of the curtain.

"Oh! how very very beautiful!" cried Lily, in a loud whisper to her mother. "I never saw anything half so lovely!"

Indeed her enthusiasm was justified, for the girl came in more like some ethereal spirit. Her large eyes, brightened by excitement, had not lost the look of melancholy that had deepened their lustre all day. Never had she seemed so radiant—never so childishly lovely. She took all hearts by storm, and her smile so sad, her attitude so unaffected, elicited round after round of applause. She had already been called before the curtain twice. Madame Rollo suggested that in answer to the noisy call, that she enter again, and dance the length of the stage, bowing as far as possible to all sides of the house. The child-woman obeyed, notwithstanding her heavy heart—she had gained the centre of the stage—there she paused; her eyes became fixed; they were immovable, resting upon Lily's sparkling face. She gave one gasp, threw her arms wildly up, essayed to speak the beloved name, and fell white and motionless upon the stage.

"Oh! she has fainted," cried Lily.

There was great confusion. The old nurse came out and lifted her darling, then hurried behind the curtain. It some time before the entertaiment could go on. Madame Rollo shrugged her shoulders as she looked at the senseless form, and muttered, "better after the dancing than before. Then all would have been ruined."

"I don't know what we shall do with your foolish little charge," she said to Madame Margrave, as the two chafed the hands of the unconscious girl. "Do you happen to know the cause of this illness?"

The old nurse shook her head, but would say nothing. She only thought as she looked at the slight figure, so much the image of death, and cast her thoughts back to the ghastly vision of yesterday, "My child will die. Oh! would she had never seen that man."

Meantime all the gossips were busy. "Would she appear again? Had anybody noticed how strangely she looked at Lily Atoile?"

CHAPTER XI.

On the next morning Lily sat again in her old place. She had been very busy, for they kept but few domestics. Her cheeks were flushed with exercise, her eyes sparkling with health. She had never looked more lovely or more like her poor brother, Eugene. Her mother was in the next room, cutting out some coarse cloth, and the jar of the great scissors upon the table could be distinctly heard. Lily sat thinking, thinking, sometimes of this beautiful little dancer, sometimes of her brother, weaving their fortunes together, pitying the poor child, and fancying her come to her fortune, and her days of toil all over, when suddenly there was heard a gentle tapping at the door.

"Come in," she said, thinking it was Marguerite. The door opened softly, and as noiselessly as a spirit came Mademoiselle Linda into the room. She did not advance, but stood with clasped hands, and piteous, imploring glances. Lily, after her first surprise, arose from her seat, smiled, went forward, holding out her hands. Linda placed hers confidingly in them, and by this time the great tears were standing in her eyes.

"You are his sister," she said, softly.

"If you mean Eugene, yes. He is my darling, glorious brother." The little figure still stood there till forced gently into a chair. She seemed bewildered, but after passing her hand across her eyes, she said again—

"I wanted to walk out this morning—I wanted to see you. I saw you last night, and oh! I was so startled! It seemed for the moment as if it must be him. It seemed to take my life all out, for when I saw him last, you—" She stopped as if the words had frozen on her lips, then bursting into an irrepressible sob, she cried, "Oh! I am so sorry for you! so sorry that you don't know yet."

"I'm sure I can't tell what you mean," said Lily, more surprised than ever; "you seem to feel very badly about something. I hope—I hope my brother was always kind. You know these poets are so different from other people. They often write things that would make one think they were dying of disappointment, or for the love of somebody, when they are not. They put themselves in other people's positions, you see."

"Yes, yes, I see. I know all that," said the girl, painfully. "He never wrote poetry to me or about me, but oh! he was kind—he was very kind. You did not perhaps read last night's paper."

"Last night's paper," cried Lily, more and more bewildered.

"I feel wicked—oh! you cannot tell how meanly I feel telling you these things—telling you that one terrible thing, I mean—and yet I have not told you."

You hint at some terrible misfortune, I am sure, There is something in your words and manner that chills me. I don't know what it is."

"Has—has anything happened to Eugene? Is he ill? he was always so much afraid of the hospitals. Oh! don't tell me he is sick."

"If there was only any way I could comfort you!" cried the young girl, distractedly.

Lily was silent, but it was an agonising silence. She felt as if all the blood in her body was congealing.

"Something dreadful, and you will not tell me," she said, at last, as poor Linda slowly turned away from her. "Listen—my poor child—has he—oh! has he been so wicked—"

"Stop!" cried Linda, with the air of an injured queen. "He wicked? I don't believe he ever did one wicked thing in all his life. No—he is the soul of honor, as good as he is beautiful—as innocent as you his sister are. Oh! could you think he would do anything wrong?"

"What am I to think at all?"

"I cannot tell you," sobbed Linda. "I only felt as if I must come round to show you that, if you were in trouble, I felt sympathy for you, and would console you if I could—but oh! I cannot—I cannot even tell you."

"Mamma," cried Lily.

Mrs. Atoile came from the next room. She started at sight of the new visitor—at sight of her, sobbing and almost crouching.

"What is it my child?" she asked.

"Will you tell mamma?" queried Lily.

The young creature raised her soft eyes, brimming with tears. She sobbed, opened her lips, caught her breath—seemed irresolute—then wringing her hands cried piteously, "I can't—I can't—God help me! You must recall it. It is in last night's paper. Only remember this! I felt for you—that I would die if only he—oh! I cannot tell!—and with one more appealing glance, she hurried from the house.

Then Lily and her mother looked at each other, a moment's dread chilling them both.

"Mother," gasped Lily, "I never read last night's paper; oh! what can it be?"

"Where is it?" asked her mother, through dry lips.

"Up there:" Lily designated the place. Her mother brought it, and adjusting her eyeglasses, prepared to look it over.

"No, mother," said Lily, quivering all over as she spoke, "it is my place—I am stronger than you."

"Promise, child, that whatever it is, you will not hide it from me. I cannot bear suspense."

"I promise," said Lily, huskily.

She sat down. The paper rattled with every touch, her fingers trembled so. Up and down the first page, up and down the second, still her startled eye took nothing in of any terrible import.

Suddenly she glanced with glaring eyeballs at one paragraph in the corner of the page, uttering a heartrending shriek, she threw the paper from her, as far as it would go, and falling on her knees, hid her face desperately, clutching at her mother's hand with an almost death grasp.

"What is it, my child—what is it? I must know. Oh! what has heaven in reserve for me? Great God, help us both!"

"Oh! mother—mother—he—is—dead!" cried Lily, gasping at every word, and tightening her grasp on the delicate hands that almost supported her. "Mother, God has deserted us."

The girl lay there entirely overcome. She knew not how time passed. She did not heed her mother's silence, till something in the hands she grasped caused her to look up, and with the cry, "It has killed her too, and I am alone," she sprang to her feet. Happily the poor mother had lost all consciousness. The shock had fallen upon her sensitive heart, and—heaven knew—perhaps, had broken it. It was an hour before the stricken life returned to the unhappy woman. They carried her into her bedroom—for Lily had called help—and laid her upon her own bed. There, till midnight, Lily sat like a ghost. She had once summoned courage enough to read that dreadful paragraph:

"KILLED IN A DUEL.—A young man of promising talents, whose letters were postmarked Rouen, fought yesterday, in the Isle de Boulogne, with a citizen well-known for his sporting and other proclivities, by name Louis l'Etourle. The younger man was by no means a match for this cool duelist, and was, in consequence killed. He fired his own pistol in the air. Cause of the quarrel unknown."

This was the cruel stab that seemed to end her life, and it was dealt to her by her lover. She scarcely breathed during the time she sat watching her mother. A dull, heavy weight oppressed her. It seemed as if she could only wait for her brother, she cared for nothing else here, or hereafter.

And now that the extent of this dreadful calamity was known, what was to be done? Lily forces her duty to claim his body. She had heard that such were kept a certain number of days, until friends were either notified or learned of the event.

"Yes, I must go to Paris," she said, and would not hear the suggestion that any friend should go. Her mother, pale and silent, looked at her with beseeching eyes.

"Mother, I must go," she pleaded so plaintively. "Mother, do not say 'no.'"

It was not in the poor woman's heart to gainsay anything now. She was conscious that the death of her idol was almost a deathblow to herself, certainly to all her hopes. She never dreamed how devotedly, how absorbingly she loved him before, and now that he had fallen, and by such a cruel death—death in which there was no hope of atonement—oh! it was too terrible to bear. She could not bear it, and yet she did. She could not live, and yet she lived on.

CHAPTER XII.

THE sun shone splendidly. On all the squares in every part of the city of Paris where there was a bit of green grass, nurses were sauntering with their charges. Your Parisian baby seems always good-natured. It revels in the sunshine, it lives out of doors. It is happy with a bonbon or a drop of sweet water. Everywhere the city seemed to have donned its holiday attire. Everybody looked gay, jubilant. Everybody, that is, there were some sad hearts in that merry-seeming place, some deathbeds, some broken hearts.

Among the latter might be classed Lily Atolle. She had been in the city now two days, and as yet had heard no tidings of her brother. She had travelled patiently from station to station, but as the young man's name had not been given in full to those officials, they could do little beyond directing her from place to place. At last she thought of the surgeons, and procuring a list of their names, she took a carriage and went the rounds, anxious, pale, disheartened; yet, still in all her suspense and trouble, beautiful and patient. Every few hours she wrote home. She had not been successful yet, but she would be, she certainly would be before a great while.

At the house of one surgeon after another she stopped, invariably receiving the same answer, "not at home," until she was thoroughly wearied out, and could have wept bitterly, but that she needed to keep her sight clear.

At last the carriage stopped before a splendid edifice. It was getting dark, but the marble front loomed up grandly; the door seemed solid rosewood, touched here and there with glittering silver; splendor shone out everywhere, for the silver curtains seemed to cover a frostwork of shining webs, so fine and costly were the festooned curtains seen under the rich plateglass.

"It's of no use as I know," she said languidly, when the coachman opened the door, "he will be hardly likely to be in."

"But he's always in, mademoiselle," said the coachman, touching his cockade, "that is, always to the poor people of the city, though he does live so grandly. I'm almost certain he'll see you, mine." She took the hint. The house was taken up with alacrity, and then the smiling servant ushered her into a great, grand room, which was divided from another as large and grand, by folding doors, the parts of which were immense plates of glass, a square in each.

"The doctor will see you in a moment, mademoiselle," said the servant; "you will please be seated."

Lily had leisure to look around her, though abstracted as she was, and as if nothing however splendid or miserable, could arrest her attention. She saw the doctor—she supposed it to be he—seated in a large armchair, talking to a gentleman of fine presence, a man somewhere between thirty and forty, with a singularly handsome face. As she gazed, the features of the visitor seemed to be familiar to her. Whose was it now, whose those eyes, only more tender? whose the gentle curve and outline of lip and face? Again and again she asked herself, but the memory was more and more perplexing. She could not tell, and was just giving it up when the doctor turned his head and saw her. Instantly he rose, and dismissed his visitor's attention, though not himself, he beckoned for her to come in. She entered timidly, and in a low, trembling voice, asked the errand that had come upon. He turned a surprised glance towards his visitor.

"It must be our singular case, Belmont," he said.

"It seems so," said the latter, looking at the young girl with curiosity and not a little admiration.

"Oh! sir, what can you mean? Have I found my poor, unfortunate brother at last? It will be good news to my mother—she is almost heartbroken."

"You heard, young lady, that your brother was killed in a duel?"

"Yes, sir," her lips quivered, her glances fell, the tears began to drop one by one out of her eyes; it brought the miserable reality so home to her; she could see the mother and the loneliness in a brother in his miserable grave, when he should have been so happy, so beloved, so honored!

"My dear young lady, if you had read the next evening's paper, perhaps—"

She looked up so eagerly.

"But I did not, I came away before I thought; I had an unusual hurry; but I ought not have dared to hope. If I could only see him once more, though he is dead."

"You shall see him, my child; you shall see him now—that is, as soon as we can drive to the hospital."

"The hospital!" gasped Lily, turning paler than before.

"Yes, my child; can I depend upon your perfect self-command?"

"I—I don't know," murmured Lily, still wondering, still in a strange maze.

"For, my child, your brother is not dead; please God—with his blessing—not likely to die."

"Not dead—not dead!" whispered Lily, her lips growing very pale indeed. "Oh! doctor, I cannot realize it!"

"There, there—no fainting," exclaimed the good man, passing her a stimulant in the form of a golden smelling-bottle. "Come, come, you will want all your strength."

"Oh! sir, how shall I send word to my mother? Oh, mother, mother, this will restore you to life again."

"Your mother is in Rouen!" said the stranger. I saw the young man this morning, and learned that much of him. I intended going to Rouen to-night. If you will give me her address, I will endeavor to break the news to her as gently as I can."

"Oh! thank you—thank you," cried Lily, tearfully, yet joyfully.

"It is settled then," said the doctor, smilingly; "shall we go to the hospital?"

(To be continued.)

A LITTLE DRAMA.

THE New Orleans correspondent of the Boston Courier gives the following dialogue between Gen. Banks and a wounded Secessionist, who wished to obtain a pass to New Iberia, doubtless for purposes of speculation:

Enter an ex-Colonel of a Massachusetts regiment, and after waiting for an interview, a colloquy something like the following ensues:

Ex-Col.: "Good-morning, General."

Gen. B.: "Good-morning, sir. What am very happy to see you?"

Ex-Col.: "General, I called to ask you for a pass to go to New Iberia."

Gen. B.: "Your name is ——?"

Ex-Col.: "Yes, sir."

Gen. B.: "You were Colonel of the Massachusetts —— regiment?"

Ex-Col.: "Yes, sir, I did command that regiment."

Gen. B.: "And you, sir, I did command that regiment." Gen. B.: "And you, sir, I did command that regiment." Gen. B.: "And you, sir, I did command that regiment." Gen. B.: "And you, sir, I did command that regiment." Gen. B.: "And you, sir, I did command that regiment."

Ex-Col.: "Why, General, you would not suppose I should continue in the service when I saw a chance to make twenty or thirty thousand dollars in a few months?"

Gen. B.: "Sir, I did not come here to make money by speculation; and it is because men like yourself are willing to see my command broken up, if they can accomplish their own purposes, that this Department is in no better condition to-day. I give no passes to New Iberia, sir, and, especially, I shall not grant one to you. Good-morning, sir."

Left ex-Colonel, apparently considering how he shall get to New Iberia without Gen. Banks's pass.

THE REPROACH OF THE SEASONS.

The springtide hour
Brings leaf and flower
With songs of life and love;
And many a lay
Wears out the day
In many a leafy grove;
Bird, flower, and tree
Seem to agree
Their choicest gifts to bring;
But this poor heart
Bears not its part,
In it there is no spring.
Dews fall upon,
The dews of grace,
Upon the soul of sin,
And love divine
Delights to shine
Upon the waste within;
Yet, year by year,
Fruit, flowers, appear,
And birds their praises sing;
But this poor heart
Bears not its part—
Its winter has no spring.
Lord, let thy love
Fresh fruits prove
Soft as the south wind blow,
Call forth its bloom,
Make its spring-time,
And bid its spices flow;
And when thy voice
Makes earth rejoice,
And the hills laugh and sing,
Lord, make this heart
To bear its part
And join the praise of spring.

THE IDLER ABOUT TOWN.

WHEN that spectacular abomination was first introduced at Wallack's Theatre, we felt misgivings that it would prove a direct attack to the traditional skeleton in every man's house. Before a month was passed our fears were realized, and we were all compelled to breathe, in private and study with the Ghost paraded glaringly before us in every shape. Secondly to this nuisance is the present style of brazen hair adopted alike by the gray and wrinkled, the fat, forty and not fair, the blooming witches of Broadway and the children of the street. Not what they do. The first time we saw one of these nondescript things was at a fashionable concert up-town. It was worn by a celebrated Italian singer, whose proportions are a delightful, and whose upper finish requires a little tapering off to embody perfect symmetry. Contrasted with this squat, inelegant chaspeau imparted additional breadth, and made the whole appearance as a solid, oblong square. Then, again, it is worn by women of sudaci us carriage upon taste and common sense, but they were not so outre, nor so universally ugly in their varieties. But when we see their shapes, with some exceptions of course, their trimmings border upon caricature, and when added the horse-shoe bend of cockades, enlarged them and stuck up a lot of long gaudy feathers, bolt upright, in front, as signs and tokens of a style more than usually vulgar, we feel an appeal against this wanton outrage of all that is pure and lovely in female appearance. We, of course, are not to be denied that ladies can wear almost anything and still be sans pear, sans reproche: and that youth and beauty can transform what would be odious and unbecoming in others into a saucy and coquettish mien that fascinates. It is not of these exceptions that we complain, but of the myriads of imitators, who throw an air of exaggeration over everything; and especially when the combination of their touch.

Some rare gems of art are now on exhibition at Snedecker's store up Broadway. His gallery is quite extensive, and comprises specimens from the studios of the most distinguished artists of this country. There is a small picture there by George Jones—a rich, golden sunset, that possesses a bold, and at stormy sky, which, in tone, treatment, truthfulness to nature, and finish, we have never seen excelled or excelled. It is a firm step in the right direction, and will undoubtedly be followed by others will be induced nearer to nature by adopting the style of one who has evidently profited by a study of nature. Then, the fine masterpiece brought at private sale the extravagant price of $5,000, the subject of the Cid Campbell sides chased by a British fleet is admirably and effectively treated. Kensett has a picture, a very little snow piece by Murvilier, a striking landscape by G. L. Brown, and a magnificent representation of the mord r scene in Macbeth by Fredericks, and the Jeremiah, picture by Inghram, are among the others, with a large number of beautiful little pictures, which will undoubtedly be followed by well to imitate.

The German opera has recommenced its performances at Niblo's Saloon, and is greeted by a very, very crowded audience. The management is evidently determined to give a first-class performance of "Trauhauser," a work which has created more enthusiasm in Europe than any opera for years. It is a remarkable work, containing thoughts of rare beauty and originality, and of great depth and originality. It should attract every musician and amateur in the city.

The Harrison English Opera Company will appear at Niblo's Saloon this week. It shall notice it in our next.

It is said and sober old England, where customs are honored for their age, and adhered to through a superstitious respect to their hoary antiquity, they are agitating with considerable earnestness the question of abolishing hoop skirts or ladies' costumes. They are ultra-radical in their views, and are determined to completely revolutionize the whole structure of ladies' dress. The Queen, a lady of worldly prudence and intelligence, combines many able articles upon the subject, in which the evils of the present fashionable dress style are severely and fully stated in terms so clear, and illustrated by such an array of facts, that it is difficult to controvert even so prejudice and scepticism. The style of dress, which is pronounced the most exquisite taste, and and every variety of rich and costly material. The skirts are distended by hoops, and are richly trimmed or adorned in this city by Richard Sisters Wells. In his article he describes the present style of dress as follows: "The trousers should be full Mamlouk, made of silk, satin, cashmere, cloth, or any material that might be preferred. These should be gathered in with an elastic band over the boot; and if the wearer thought fit, a pair of anklets could cover the band which meets the boot; the latter should be very prettily made, embroidered, or finished off with fur, fringe, or any other trimming at the top. For indoor wear, slippers could be worn if preferred, and the trousers made long enough to fall over them. A thin bodice should be fastened on the trousers at the waist, so that wearer might choose what would be suitable according to the shoulders. Above this should be worn a tunic, fitting almost tight to the figure, as far as the waist, then falling like a full petticoat to the knees, or, if the wearer so fashion occulant, nearly down to the ankles; and could be confined round the waist by a wide scarf. Over this dress, either for house or open air, could be worn almost any kind of jacket, scarf, or mantle. The sleeves could be either open or tight, the tunic not high or low in the neck; indeed this dress could, and undoubtedly would, if adopted, go through the same variations and changes that our present costume has undergone."

To give our readers an idea of the appearance of a lady in such a dress, we copy Mr. Fanelli's description in his "Dancer," of an Eastern beauty.

"She wore another vest of pale cashmere of silk, fitting closely to her shape, and fastening with buttons of pearl—some three rows of these to the waist, there opening like a tunic, so that her limbs were free to range in her large, balmoral trousers, made of that white cashmere, a shawl of which can be drawn through a ring. Her trousers were tied at the ankle with clasps of rubies, full again over her small slippered feet. Over her upper vest she had an embroidered pelisse of violet silk, with long hanging sleeves, which allowed occasionally an arm bare; from the cuffs jewels that embraced it; a many-colored Turkish scarf intertwined her waist; and then, worn loosely over all, was a pelisse of amber Cashmere, lined with the fur of the white bear. At the back of her head was a cap, quite unlike the Greek and Turkish caps which we are accustomed to see in England, but somewhat resembling the red dress of a mandarin, round, not flexible, almost flat, and an ivory ornament in the centre that it was impossible to detect the color of the velvet which covered it. Beneath it descended two broad braids of dark brown hair, which would have swept the ground had they not been turned up behind, up, and there fastened with bunches of precious stones. Here, too, crowned the hair, which fell in rich braids on each side of her face."

What will come next in the ugly revolution! Who will have the courage to begin this radical innovation, and give fashion the first downfall, when the hooped women of the present day?

Among the performers worked by the sun there is probably none more striking than that displayed in the photographic art, which is rather more or less than a photographic picture on steel, produced solely by the agency of the sun's rays, without any chemical preparations. The specimen exhibited represents a luxurious nook in a park. The plate is nearly all touched, and it is stated that 5,000 impressions can be taken from it without any perceptible wear.

During last year many prominent members of the theatrical profession died. Among the well known were William Rufus Blake, John J. Frazer, the tenor of Chanley, whose real name was Hamilton; Vere Foster, Kate Saxon, Albert Marietta, Mary Booth Mrs. Jo. Cowen, Jr., Joe Cowell, Junior, Mrs. Cowell, well-known manager of the St. Charles Theatre, New Orleans, Mrs. Drake, Henry Fox, Henry Fox, Tom Hill, Annie Wilkes, John Wood, Marie Nielsson, Rosa Rowe, Mrs. Rowe, and F. Marshall, Mrs. Marshall and Andrew Lebman.

Vestris is said to have made extraordinary improvement both in her acting and in her pronunciation of the English language. Her successful engagement in Philadelphia last week, appearing in "Lalage," was a triumphant success. She was appeared as Alexandre Mazzaroni in "The Brigand," playing all the principal music. She is said to have taken to suit her admirably. We hope soon to see her in New York city.

A new candidate for public favor, named Madame Rachel Scullin, is to appear at Wallack's Theatre on the 28th inst. She is said to have great dramatic powers and the voice of Jenny Lind, and is now singularly beautiful. The piece chosen for her début is a thrilling story of love, life, and death.

It is pretty generally understood that the lessees-ship of Wallack's Theatre will pass into other hands in April next, Mr. A. W. Jackson's lease expiring at that date. Mr. Wemyss, the present lessee, will open and spend ten thousand dollars to render it more beautiful and commodious. We should say that Mr. Stuart take the reins of management once more.

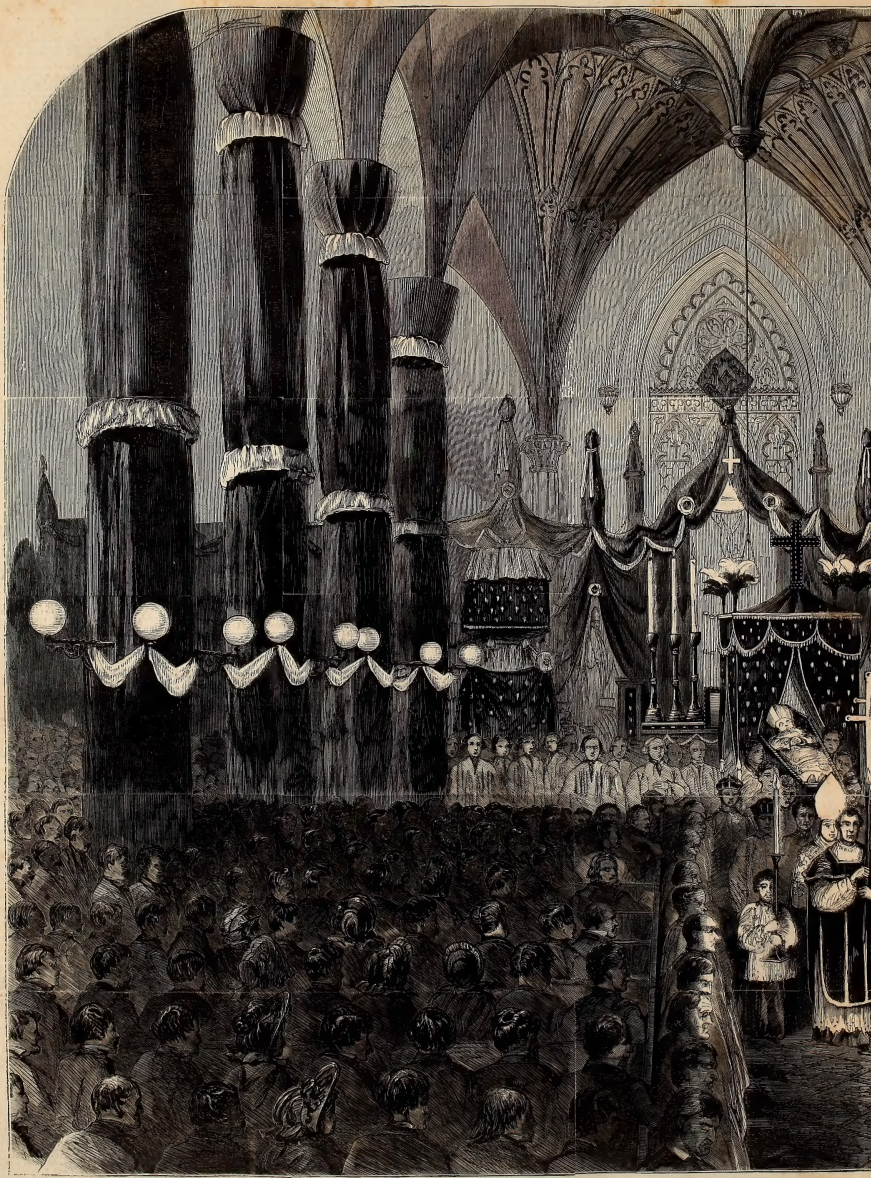
Laura Keene, who is now at engagement in Chicago. Her success through the West has been triumphant. She returns to New York to fill an engagement at Wallack's.

Every mail from Europe brings some fresh item of news, touching the movements of the various members of Adelina Patti. The manager of the Opera Italiens at Paris has offered her services for the sum of thousand dollars from subscribers for the next season, for which he is engaged. Mr. Maretzek, we presume, applied to, to take his old box, refused to do so unless he received that Adelina Patti formed part of his company.

The Bostonians are going on dreadfully about MAX MARETZEK and his opera company. The Academy of Music is not large enough to accommodate all those who would like to attend the performances. Every seat in the house for last Friday night was sold some days before the performance. It is said that the receipts for the rest of the season at the Academy will be very large.

The Gottschalk concert party has been caught in a snowstorm, not in a body, but in parts. Gottschalk and Max Strakosch were caught in a storm on the Pequonnock at Rockford, Ill., leaving Reignolf, Mrs. Strakosch and Carl Rosa to follow in the next train to Milwaukee, where all were to unite for a grand concert. But Max and Gottschalk, not finding Mrs. Strakosch were, at last accounts, embedded in three feet of snow at Minneapolis. Meanwhile, the expect to reunite at Cleveland, and concertize their way to Pittsburg, Wheeling, &c. The latest advices from Gottschalk are that he has left Minneapolis, and will be on to this city, when we hope to have some more of his delightful concerts.

They are still running "Rose Dale" three times a week at Niblo's Saloon, but the attendance is very scanty. Nothing can drive these nights to brilliant success.



The "Ticket-of-Leave Man," at Winter Garden, is the best known piece on the stage at present. Night.

There is an entire change of performance at the Olympic Theatre this week. Joe Cowell first produces a new comedy called "A Bull in a China Shop," which is receiving the greatest praise from the press and in London, together with that pretty comedietta, "Cousin Joe."

The French Theatre, at Niblo's Saloon, continues to be well patronized, but certainly the quality of attendance is large and fashionable, and the performances are excellent in every particular.

Barnum is an artist among showmen; he has a fine eye to contrasts. He will, no doubt, have thought of making his giants look taller by contrasting them with dwarfs or midgets; his dwarfs look smaller by placing them side by side with giants! He has done it well, and the Museum is crowded. The Japanese Musicians and Herr Zirom with his wonderful Enmechanicals are still in the Museum. Meanwhile, applications from all parts of the world. The thrilling drama, "The Two Orphans," attracts overflowing audiences in the lecture-room. It is well acted and finely put upon the stage.

MURDER AS ONE OF THE ARTS AND SCIENCES.—The shot for the Armstrong rifled guns is made of cast iron, and then coated with a coat of soft metal, to make it fit the bore. This is not put on by casting the metal around the shot, but by forcing the cast iron shot, but by a process of galvanizing and sapping. The cast iron shot is placed in the hands of soft metal upon them; but these were placed in a bath, and a small battery of zinc and lead discharged. According to the new and improved process which is now in use for coating the cast iron shot is turned in a lathe to the required gauge, then loaded in an oven nearly to the temperature of molten zinc, dipped into a solution of sal-ammoniac, and transfe red into a bath of fused zinc. Thus a galvanized surface—a coat of zinc—is secured. From the molten zinc vessel the shot is immediately transferred to a bath of molten soft metal, consisting of lead and a very small quantity of zinc. This soft metallic alloy adheres perfectly to the zinc surface, but will not hold to the iron directly. It will also adhere to the zinc surface, whether the shot is dipped in the molten metal, or the latter cast upon the shot in a suitable mould.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE ARCHBISHOP HUGHES AT ST. PATRICK'S CATHEDRAL, NEW YORK, JA

7.—THE CLOSE OF THE IMPOSING CEREMONIAL.—FROM SKETCHES BY OUR STAFF OF SPECIAL ARTISTS.

THE TUNE AT TWILIGHT.

BY ADA YROOMAN.

I FLOAT adown the murmured tune
In dreams of other days—the room
Grows high—a monarch's grand saloon.

I hear the little pages call,
I hear the silver fountains fall,
And happy voices over all.

Fair dames and splendid cavaliers,
Sweet smiles whose short and happy years
Have never known the blight of tears;

And royal banners, torn and old,
From conquered foes, that lie a-cold—
And suits of armor red with gold;

And over all, a princely form
In crimson robes the hue of morn,
The noble lord—the sovereign born.

Of this and all the happy land,
For many a mile; at his command,
The people give with open hand.

With breathless gaze I turn to see
The swaying throng pause in their glee
To let him pass—he comes to me.

Oh, wondrous strange! his royal eyes
See not my plain, unseemly guise,
He only smiles at my surprise.

With gentle air and gracious men
He leads me to his throne—a queen.
Ah! sure this is no fading dream.

And yet, what magic change—the tune
Has ceased, the monarch's grand saloon
Is gone—I sit alone in gloom.

LADY LORME'S STRATAGEM.

By Annie Thomas,

CHAPTER XI.—"SINFUL SISTER, PART IN PEACE."

WHEN such a tragedy as that recorded in the last chapter is enacted in a country neighborhood, especially where it concerns the magnates of it, it takes that neighborhood some considerable time to recover the shock. Every one was intensely sympathetic, and they bowed to the sensibility of their sympathy to Combhurst and offered it to the bereaved wife and sister.

For a short time the widow had "horse-up," as people called it, wonderfully; and poor Audrey had given way to the wildest and most passionately uttered reproachful bursts of grief. But after a period their emotions were changed, and why they were became a problem that their friends and acquaintances would have forfeited a good deal to solve.

The Combhurst estates were entailed on a female, in default of a male heir; so, after the reading of the will, Lady Lorme was legally a dignitary, but a burst, and Audrey was lady of the soil and mansion. But these were not the circumstances, even their greatest detractors admitted, which elevated the spirits of the sister and depressed those of the wife.

When "poor Lorme's sad fate" ceased to be so all-absorbing a topic, men began to talk about a mysterious rumor that had arisen with regard to the Earl of Evesham. He was spoken of as having turned Catholic and pronounced the world in some way or other; and many-tongued Rumor multiplied herself, and assigned all sorts of causes for such a proceeding, amongst which madness and murder found a place.

Lady Lorme began to droop just after this rumor arose, not that she believed it, but she was frantic with impatience at her ease from or see him; and he neither wrote nor came.

Corbyn Castle was just about the same time the scene of a domestic disaster, for Lady Grace's temper became soured by Mr. O'Brien's repeated absences, frequent visits to Combhurst and other signs of profound indifference to her own and honorable charms. Her sisters, with the proverbial amiability of that particular class of kith and kin, lost no opportunity of probing her wound in this respect, "only to heal," in fact, as only jealous, spiteful women can.

Lady Grace's must be acknowledged to be a hard fate. She had shown herself, not alone to him that would not have mattered, for Dillon O'Brien was a gentleman every inch of him—but to her family, perfectly willing to forget her claims to honor and glory, to come down from her high estate and marry the poor, landless, penniless secretary. And now here her heroic willingness and readiness were thrown back upon herself, for Dillon O'Brien clearly did not want to marry her.

It was indeed mortifying without her mother and sisters persisting in moralising over it perpetually. But as Lord Corbyn forswore handsome secretaries for the future, his daughters knew that an opportunity was not likely to arise for their weaknesses to be tried, so they lashed their youngest sister's unmercifully during the period that elapsed between Dillon O'Brien giving the agreed upon notice to quit and quitting.

It was hard and mortifying when so many people were awaiting the opportunity of bearing down upon her remorselessly, with censure severe and cutting, that Miss Lorme should have left her home about this time to go and travel on the Continent with the family of an uncle, thus depriving friends and foes alike of subject-matter for conversation as far as regarded "Audrey Lorme's extraordinary proceedings." Some had hoped she would have married the young Irish secretary, with whom she appeared so strangely and unaccountably friendly, and thus give room for, and rise to, scandal for so soon forgetting her old love and her brother's horrible fate. But Audrey did not do this; and to the few who saw her before she left Combhurst she gave no hint of it in being her intention to do it. Neither did she rail against or avoid all mention of Lord Evesham's name. On the contrary, when one kind and clever relation, in the person of Lady Julia Corbyn, pressed her on the point with pungent indelicacy, she said that his conduct seemed strange and dishonorable to her, but must not be for all that. She could not even be induced to be severe in her judgment on Lady Lorme, or to utter suppositions as to her possible present and future destiny. Lady Lorme had elected, immediately on her jointure being secured to her, to go off on a pilgrimage alone.

So Audrey's time went away to join her uncle, her mother's brother. Mr. Audrey; and the grand suite of room on the groundfloor were closed, the servants holiday, and my lady's artistically-shaded boudoir was darkened and shut-up, and Combhurst was left to the care of servants, and to its memories and the rats. And so months passed away, and the horror of these things passed away too.

"Poor fellow! His whole life sacrificed to an idea!"

The speaker was Dillon O'Brien. The time was the July following the sad December when the last of the Lormes had gone to his account, and found all his death in the Devil's Dyke. The place was the drawing-room of Mr. Audrey's house in Park lane, and the one addressed by the whilom secretary was Miss Lorme.

"Poor fellow! Poor fellow, indeed!" said Audrey bitterly. "But everything has been tried, Dillon. I have wept, and prayed, and implored; my uncle has commanded and intreated him to come out of his seclusion, but it's all of no avail; we only prove by asking, he says, and the sooner I am married the happier he will be."

"Then all my scruples ought to vanish," replied Dillon. "But it seems rather a cruel thing to ask you to jump into such happiness as mine will be through the circumstance of another man's utter defeat and downfall. What a devil that woman was to love Lorme!"

From which short and jagged bit of conversation it will be perceived by the intelligent reader that Audrey Lorme and Dillon O'Brien had arranged matters so satisfactorily that they had no longer any occasion to give a sigh when they looked back or wandered in memory through the alley of lilacs.

The marriage ceremony was solemnized in that edifice where every fashionable bride and groom, by royale, must, St. George's, Hanover square. The bride looked lovely, as a matter of course, in white moire antique, and the eight bridesmaids were a perfect illumination of pink and blue, with May blossom wreaths—typical these last of their extreme juvenility and surprising innocence.

The collation to the bridal party and guests, a large concourse of people assembled to see the wedding of the lady who was such a great heiress there, at Mivart's establishment. An heiress—a mere item, she was so fragile and slender—in the crowd seemed to think it the reverse of a sad sight to see a "good fortune" given by her maiden name for a name and for a rig;" for when the last works were spoken, and the knot that only Sir Cresswell Cresswell could untie was tied, there was a general exclamation of passionate pleasure, and clapped her hands till they sounded and made people look at her, seeing what a child she was, and she ran down the richly-appointed little broughham, drawn by a horse whose paces fully entitled him to have been paired for a nail-paring with "Old Jack" to come to "Bow bells." "Home!" she said, "Home, quickly!" and home she was driven to a bijou house in Old Brompton lane, which looked a mere cottage of content, and was a miniature palace of luxury.

She was a pretty woman this owner of the broughham and bijou house, with a pretty name, Mrs. Sam, a pale, haggard, careworn one. Her face was lovely as to form and feature, but terrible in its cold, wan pallor, its deep-sunken eyes. Her dull eyes were painfully large and glittering, painful in their look of long unrest, painful in their ceaseless expression of watchfulness, pain and fear all in the brilliancy of their misery. She had suffered evidently, the Venus of this abode of bliss—suffered much and long, and "what about?" her servants wondered, and, slightly roused, her husband.

It was about one o'clock when she reached the bijou house in the Old Brompton lane, and there were dainty delicacies, chiefly rosaceous, awaiting her on a hotwater dish, on the luncheon-table. There was a tempting pate, too, and a marvellous pudding, for the cook was a German and prided herself in rare confectionery. But she turned from all these succulent morsels with impatient loathing, and drank eagerly some sparkling wine that stood at her elbow, and her eyes, and new life into her veins, and courage to her heart. Woe for the woman if she had come to this.

She was dressed in black silk, this lady—in rich, lustrous, yet not shiny black silk. It was made long, full, sweeping like the garment of a queen, yet admirably suited to the slender proportions of the garb of an anchorite. There was nothing to relieve its black surface, no plain white collar or transparent gauzy neat-edging, nothing, in a thing, save a dead gold cross, suspended from a black velvet round her throat.

So, while the bridal pair were speeding away on that eternal tour which is being taken daily by deluded pairs, as a precursor to long years of calmer domestic felicity, the lady who had wished them from behind the pillar, sat and waited with impatient yearning for the shades—the tender, soft shades of summer evening—to come on.

"Unless his burial in the church has made him less of a man than he was in the world," she said at last, when she had entered her brougham, and directed it to the chapel, "he will hear me now—hear my confession, absolve, and be to me once more what he was when I risked my soul to gain him."

There was a beautiful, soul-subduing, gentling influence in the atmosphere of the chapel when she entered it. We Protestants do wrong, I think, in coming from all these things that soften the heart through touching the taste. Surely none are further from heaven through finding the odor of incense and sweet wines very sweet on earth. In another respect, too, we undoubtedly are wrong, and are wronged: why should we be condemned to sit through five-and-twenty or thirty minutes of boring platitudes dorsed out frequently in a bad voice, and with a bad style of pronunciation? It is an insult to well-educated people, and those who are refined as well as religious, to have to sit and listen to what may be pious and virtuous, but is unquestionably priggish and vulgar.

But the chapel, splendid, excited, greatly wrought upon during her drive hither, but now when she entered the church where this old religion was celebrated, a sense of holier influence fell upon her, and soothed her into unnatural quiescence.

All all unnatural as it was it rested and calmed her, ceased the throbbing heart and the beating brain, and the frightfully gnawing excitement, for a time at least, and when the calm had regned for a few minutes, this penitent went into the confessional; the moment was come when, strong in her recently gained knowledge of an important fact, she could face with fresh hopes and fresh courage her priest, and former lover.

Could he who had fanned the flame of her love to false and cold to her now? Could the hot heart that had burned, and the hot words that had been uttered in the dead buried "long ago" be as nothing to him? Or had cold uttered them? Perish the dread of such perfidy! perish since it could never be justified! Or had—oh terrible thought—years and the holier influences of Mother Church been found sufficient to work the change that should cause him to think of his soul with more anxiety than of himself?

We know how women cling to the straw while a splinter of it remains where their hearts are engaged; we know how they hope against hope, and close themselves up against despair. We know how they will excuse to others and to themselves, with equal volubility, any shortcomings in the one they have loved. But we also know how bitterly they will feel these shortcomings, and yearn for a kinder era to dawn for them and their idol's sake.

Now there had been nothing ennobling about the mad, hot-headed, ambitious passion Lady Lorme had felt for Lord Evesham. But such as it was it had been powerful and fierce enough to call forth an equally strong one from him in return. Honor, friend-ship, all, everything had fallen in despair before her fascinating presence, when he discovered to what audacious lengths she was prepared to carry her schemes for first protracting and then terminating her unhappy marriage engagement with Audrey Lorme. He had seen through and despised her for the transparent deception practised upon them in all that concerned the trousseau; but at the same time (the race of Evesham were, as he had said, almost invariably unhappy or wicked), he had in his nature the germs of goodness and increasing love for her. Then, like even bolder, better, braver men, he had taken the one course open for him to pursue when he found himself entangled in—he had run away. Away! from all these earthly trials and temptations which ever beset unwary, weak, sinful man while he is in the world; away from his self-made responsibility, his love and his bane, his shame and his sorrow; away, to bury them all in the bosom of the church.

Yet would love pursue through many a harsh and trying ordeal, reader, but have you ever passed through one after which there is, you find (oh! how sad that it should be), no more pain and suffering for you; an ordeal, coming out of which you find that everything has decreased in value and importance, from gold to starvation, from temptation, and wretchedness, and is, therefore, nothing; that health means only a fuller and stronger power of feeling, and is, therefore, little worth; that success means only a shortening of the time you may be compelled to live in the world that has used you so harshly; that riches mean only the power to get the one thing you needed, and that grief and anguish attained their full and lasting sway on that day when you passed through the ordeal of confession, and were absolved or added to, let what will come? If you have, you will understand and sympathize with the feelings of this penitent who quitted the priest on that fair July evening.

The brougham had come for her again at the time appointed by herself, and was waiting before the entrance and make her plea. The handsomely appointed brougham, lined with fawn-colored and blue silk, with its pockets for wine bottles, and its silver cruets for books, with its soft, luxurious cushions and splendidly working springs. Never a jolt nor a jar could be felt by its occupant, no matter what the road over which it rumbled. Many eyes followed the little brougham in which reclined gracefully so passing fair a woman, and between the shafts of which was placed so magnificently actioned a horse.

The coachman, without thinking that aught could exist to retard his journey course desirable, did as was usual, and turned into the Park till seven. No curly white-haired dog looked from the window, nor were the silken blinds lowered to attract attention; yet many a glance was levelled with inquiring admiration at that "neat turn-out," and its occupant. But the sun there still in the prime of her youth, dead, lost, stonily indifferent to everything. On the clear evening air were borne to her murmurs from the gay, well-modulated voiced crowd around—borne to her, but not to her ears and senses. Blind to the sight, deaf to the sense, deaf to the sounds of the park, and ring, and promenade, she saw but one thing—a tortured head bowing low, in a cheerless agony than even she would have inflicted; heard but one sound, the voice of a man signing the death-warrant of her heart and life in the words, "Sinful sister, part in peace."

CHAPTER XII.—SUNSHINE AT COMBHURST AGAIN

I DOUBT the fact of there ever having lived a man so accursed by fate, whose life has been so utterly desolate, but what he has found one woman in the world to love him—not for what he has, but for what he individually is. No matter what his personal appearance, some woman will be found to adore a baboon with a soul in it.

But when a man's fortune and station in youth have been the mark at which many crafty and designing women have aimed, however the while they did it, most tactlessly, that they, were indifferent to himself; and when, added to this, a woman, fair without and within, has been adored by him in his maturity, and has used that adoration for her own fell purposes—a man, when he arrives at the age of forty, may be excused for deeming himself that one singular accursed one on whom the heart of woman has never been set.

In a house about eight miles from London, on the old Dover road, about six months after the sentence recorded in my last had been passed by the priest on his penitent, a family party of the three members of which we have met before, were assembled in earnest conclave. The master of the house, a tall, careworn man, robed, though it was evening, in the dressing-gown of habitual and sluggish seclusion, occupied a seat on the left side of the fire; close to his elbow a lady was seated, pleading in accents of heartfrangle accents for boon to be granted her, and while she sits and pleads thus fervently, we will look leisurely at the reformed master of the house, and cursorily at his guests.

I have said that he was a tall, careworn man; this expresses little, for every other man one meets in the world is tall and careworn—or short and the same. This was a sorrow-worn man, a disappointed, a shocked man, a man who had sadly not attained the noble height and broad, powerful, massive form under the influence of the "something" that none but his head low with such reckless abandonment. Forty is the worst to have such deep, pallid wrinkles round its lips and under its eyes, and forty has no right whatever with such a dreary thing, when it is.

A man "broken" early in life is always a sad, miserable spectacle—so is a woman for that matter, but through the latter having been originally stronger you feel that the breakage must have been caused by a worse fall than would have sufficed to mar the delicate surface of a woman's soul. But this man was "broken," broken, you read that he was so in the drooping, almost crouching attitude, the long, nervous, sensitive hands, the downcast look, in his inert ways and disconsolate tone. The habit of twisting, twirling his fingers about as if they were too many for him and he wished they would drop off, and with it the feeble remembrance of the half-slippered feet, in the uninterested eye, and in the giving up of all things which characterised his under-current.

In addition to the mental languor which was preying upon and threatening to devour him, you would see at a glance that physical prostration must have long frightfully in that not long ago stalwart form. He was thin and attenuated, besides which his left brow was scarred, and the whole of the left side of his face seamed as with fire or a fall.

Will one of my readers be prepared from this second sketch to hear that the man who sat by the fire in the room of the house on the Dover road was the one whom all alike down in Warwickshire had mourned, and, indeed, dead, buried for ever in the bottom of the Devil's Dyke?

Yes, it was Sir Robert Lorme himself; and how he came to be there, and what he was to be told—accidently perforce, but truly nevertheless.

Dillon O'Brien, wandering about that December afternoon in the pauperising and unsettling manner to which indulgence ill of a heart-wound are prone, found himself strangely attracted to the vicinity of Combhurst. Now, when it is borne in mind that Combhurst was dear for him, nothing wonderful will be discovered in this by sensible people who understand the unsettling tendency to be—but still, taking all things into consideration, it was marvellously lucky that he should have gone where he did.

Walking in a desultory way through an alley in the plantation on his car ad vanitatem he had been caught by the sound of horses' hoofs and human voices. Pursuing his investigations further, he discovered that the horses were the property of Sir Robert and Lady Lorme, and that the voices proceeded from them (from the baronet and his wife, that is to say, not the horses).

They were riding down the gulley to the fatal leap when he saw and heard them first; something in the demeanor of the groom, a certain mischief, flashed upon him that caused him to conceal himself as he followed close up—close enough to hear the words she said, to divine her fatal intention, and to see her give the cut with control poor Fanchon's talent had taught her, but not near enough for the exclamation of horror he gave to reach the ear of the excited woman who leapt the chasm, and then looked back exulting nothing but escape from the fate she had grown to loathe.

He had faced many dangers and overcome many difficulties in his life; Irishmen are proverbially hot-headed in everything but danger; so now it was now with an unfaltering step and a cool, firm hand that Dillon O'Brien let himself down, when my lady galloped off, the side of the dark chasm at the bottom of which he anticipated finding the mutilated dead body of the brother of the girl he loved.

Pantaloon was stone dead, with his neck broken; the poor horse was nearly, but not quite, immersed in the water, a projecting piece of bank had caught his flank and propped it up, and along over the horse, bleeding and senseless, lay the master. To get him up by dint of earnestness and strength combined, such as man but seldom brings to bear upon anything—to stay with him till speech and sense returned faintly and partially—to then procure assistance from a surgeon friend of his (Sir Robert's), on whose prudence the latter declared he could rely—these were a few of the things Dillon O'Brien did for Audrey's brother.

One thing at first, only, Sir Robert's terrible weakness and prostration induced him, in mercy to the poor, betrayed, half-murdered man, to consent to, and that one thing was the observance of profound secrecy. "You don't know how I loved and trusted, and worshipped that woman," he said, while they sat by his bed in his friend's house that night, expecting the lamp of life momentarily to go out. "You don't know how I loved, and trusted, and worshipped that woman. I can't expect you fellows to know it, for you're younger than I am, but I never touched a woman's hand with warmth before! After that, oh, my God! even now, how the thought of her breaks me. I couldn't proclaim her what she has proved herself; I couldn't shame her by letting her read in my eyes that I know what was in her heart when, when—"

You see how it was? He could not go back to life, because he could not shame the woman he had loved—he still loved—by the sight of him alive, and knowing her after she had striven to compass his death. He could not go back and be as he had been before to her, for he was true, and could not have lived a lie. He could not go back to the world and proclaim her for what she was, and claim his release from one who had broken his heart, but who had been so dear to him.

So for an "idea," but the idea was honor—the honor of his name and of her who had been his wife, he desired that no one but Audrey should know he still lived. And that was the reason Audrey had brightened and recovered after her first interview with Dillon O'Brien; for in that interview Dillon O'Brien told her all about her brother and a good deal—the circumstances must be his excuse—about himself.

No I must go back to the special pleading alluded to by me in the opening of this chapter, and see how it has progressed during the retrospective and resuscitating flight.

The lady who leant on the arm of the broken prematurely old man was his sister Audrey, Mrs. O'Brien. With all the force of her old love for him, the sister pleaded that he should come out of his retirement and resume his proper place in the world. She used every argument seemingly that affection could devise, and she failed; he only shook his head and said he could not, he could not. What agonies she would suffer, poor lost thing, if she knew that her guilt was patent to him.

Then Mrs. O'Brien rose and signalled to her husband to leave them, which he did, taking with him a guest they had brought up from Combhurst, Blanche O'Brien, Dillon's sister, a golden-haired beauty, with laughing, surprised blue eyes.

When they were alone Audrey's purpose, whatever it had been, seemed to fail her. At last, with a great effort she gasped out—

"Robert, she knew it—she knew that you lived."

"Knew?"

"Yes; after my marriage—long, long after, a Roman Catholic priest came to see me; can you not guess who he was?"

"Evesham?"

"Yes, Evesham, Father Gabriel, now Lord Evesham no longer. On the evening of my wedding-day he learned enough under the seal of confessional from your erring wife to justify his seeking me, vilely, vilely as he had formerly insulted us. He told me nothing—no priest would peril his soul by betraying his penitent—but he came to give me the assurance for the sake of the honor of his family, he said, that never again, even in the church, would he see or hold converse with her. I guessed from that what she had told him; so then—forgive me, Robert—I told him that you lived."

So far Sir Robert had listened patiently; now he raised his head, and asked quickly:

"You said 'knew.' What do you mean? does she not know now? Don't try to puzzle me, Audrey—don't, I can't bear it."

"She knows all things now, God have mercy on her soul!" said his sister; and then she flung her arms round her brother's neck and sobbed, and Sir Robert Lorme knew that his wife was dead.

He acknowledged with contrition how faulty his idea had been when he emerged at last many weeks after this scene from his retirement, and heard the popular roar of indignation against the course he had pursued, and the popular rumors as to the reason why he had pursued it. The soft, genial, invigorating air of Italy was requisite to restore his mind to its healthy tone; it did this partially, but the cure was completed after all at Combhurst, where his sister, her husband and Blanche O'Brien continued to reside for some time after his tour in pursuit of health had ended.

When Sir Robert Lorme came back to dwell in his old family mansion, a free man, a widower, "without incumbrances," and in all respects, it is hoped, improved and chastened by the great sufferings he had undergone, many a fair bosom heaved high with hope. He would surely act on the lesson given him, and not the second time marry a "nobody," said the ladies. Men even went so far as to say that the lesson would be thrown away if a second time he married at all! However, that remained to be proved; so, on the chance of proving it, the Countess of Corbyn stopped another subscription (commenced in a weak hour, when the star of an archdeacon was in the ascendant with Lady Margaret) and gave a ball.

As it turned out, this ball was the worst thing the unfortunate lady and devoted mother could have given, for at it appeared Blanche Dillon in a blaze of youthful charms that put out everybody else as effectually as moonbeams do a tallow candle. Sir Robert Lorme had got used to seeing her at home at Combhurst; she excited no surprise in his mind then, for he had grown accustomed to seeing her; but at the ball the case was different.

He marked with astonishment how lovely she was, and he marked with displeasure how lovely all the men seemed to think her. He tried to remember the blackest portions of the horrible ordeal he had passed through pleasing his taste and his heart in his choice of a wife, even when he was younger and keener than he was now. And he could not remember anything clearly, for Blanche was constantly whirling past and dazzling him.

He called himself an old, blighted man, and scoffed at himself for looking at her, and carried himself, by a gigantic exercise of will, out of the ball-room, and into the midst of a body of politicians, who directly made a set at him and bored him, and drove him back incontinently into the ballroom, where he fell to staring at Blanche harder than ever, so hard indeed that she caught the glance and blushed. Altogether he was fain to confess to himself that night, in the solitude of his own room, that he had had many tussles with the spirit that was urging him on to defy fate a second time, and that in every tussle he got a fall that rendered him weaker and more open to the attacks of the sweet enemy who had been hitherto so disregarded.

Blanche O'Brien was one of those fair, delicately handsome women with retroussé noses and graceful ways, who carry their point by dint of sheer fascination. With a tender frankness that belonged entirely to her character, she had allowed Audrey to see that Audrey's brother was dear to her in the very early days of their intercourse. "It would be good for him to marry me, because I love him so," she said, with true womanly logic. And in time Sir Robert came to think that it would be good, too, and to struggle against his golden-haired fate no longer.

They were married at Combhurst church, as was right and proper for a Lorme to be. There was no mistake about Blanche's trousseau, though her sister-in-law had the entire management of it. The bride went from her brother's house, for the O Briens had hired "a place" close to Combhurst and gone into it a short time previous to the wedding, in order that the Lady of Combhurst might not go to her husband from her husband's roof.

Lady Lorme wanted to raise a little monument of thanksgiving and commemoration close to the spot where her husband's life had been so providentally saved by her brother. But loving lord as he was, in this one thing he was stern, that never, by look, word or gesture, should the "present" refer to the crime of the "late" Lady Lorme.

So the little monument was never raised down by the Devil's Dyke. However, in spite of this solitary prohibition, there was sunshine again of a rarely golden order down at Combhurst. The young, beautiful wife, whose only subtilty was her love, renewed the life which the former one had so nearly blasted. He was gray-haired, 'tis true—nothing but dye, not even happiness, restores the color of the locks when once it has fled—but his face soon ceased to be pallid and grief-seamed and despair-furrowed. He had another vast comfort, too, putting all others out of the question—his wife was less clever than himself! When the reverse is the case, when the early love glamour is over the man, even if his wife be devoted to him, will rue the day he took steps towards perpetually supping sorrow by the spoonful.

Here we will take leave of them and of each other, reader. "My dream is passed, my hour of pride is over." I have told my story poorly enough, I know. Its object has been to amuse, and if in that object it has succeeded it has fulfilled its mission.

But before the book is closed, bear with me and bear me company a moment longer. The scene shall close in a far-west of London cemetery. A grave, grass-covered but devoid of flowers, is visible under the silvery moonbeams, through which I stand and look at it. A small headstone, with just the letters "L. L." on it stands out clearly and distinctly, and a form is kneeling by the grave—the form of a man, robed in the straight, long garment which covers and closes in so many proud, loving, aching hearts. And as he lifts his clasped hands aloft in passionate, prayerful appeal to the "Lady of Heaven," his tones ring out in genuine agonized entreaty the words that all who live and may sin will join in—"God assoil her."

REBEL SALTPETRE WORKS IN CAVE NICKAJACK, AT SHELLMOUND.

Among the valuable spots which the successes in Tennessee have thrown into our hands is the remarkable Cave Nickajack, in Raccoon mountain, a few miles below Chattanooga. The entrance to it is in Alabama, about three quarters of a mile from Shellmound station, on the Chattanooga railroad, but most of the cave is in the State of Georgia. Its name Nickajack, is said, though perhaps on little authority, to be a corruption of Nigger Jack, a bandit whose rendezvous it formed for a considerable period. The entrance is a magnificent rocky arch some 60 feet high, and 100 wide. Just beneath is a little lake formed by a stream, which comes out from the mouth of the cave, and after a glance at the blue heavens, again plunges into the mountain side, to return once more and wind quietly down to the valley.

Formerly the only mode of entering the cave was by a canoe, but since necessity has compelled the South to work its treasures, a road enters on the left side, the stream coming out on the right.

Entering now about 60 feet you come to the ruins of a mill, now only a few timbers, and to the left of it lie broken fragments of the kettles used in the manufacture of saltpetre. For a mile and a half are tiers, three and four high, of leach tubs filled with clay, from which the liquid containing the saltpetre is drained into hollow logs. The ceiling runs in flat for a time, but soon rises to a fine arch, the side where the water oozes through sparkling with crystallized saltpetre. The stream runs far below, a canoe, once the only mode of entering the cave, floating lazily on it. After passing over the mass of leach tubs you descend into the widest part of the cave, where a sense of danger is imparted by the sight of a number of leach tubs crushed under a mass of rock from the roof. Passing to the right, a small apartment appears with a ceiling arched most gracefully. Immense stalactites meet you at every step, and make the scene romantic. The length of the whole cave is unknown. It has been explored for about seven miles. Now, when this great work of nature is strewn with ruins of human industry, the impression made on a visitor is beyond description.

THE WAR IN ARKANSAS—HELENA,

Duvall's Bluff.

We present sketches to-day of two important points in the operations of the army of the Southwest—Helena, in Arkansas, and Duvall's Bluff. The latter is 160 miles from the mouth of White river, and being the depot of supplies is guarded by gunboats. A convalescent camp is also formed here. It was the rendezvous of Gen. Steele's army before his march on Little Rock last September. Since our occupation of that place the railroad runs to it from the Bluff.

Helena is a more important place, being the capital of Phillips co., and is on the Mississippi, 80 miles below Memphis. It contains a court-house and jail. During the present war it has several times figured in the operations of the army and gunboats.

GEN. GILLMORE'S SOIREE DANSANTE.

The monotony of camp life on the sandy isles of Charleston harbor was relieved on the 23d of December by a soirée dansante given at Folly island. A hall, 90 feet by 40 feet was raised and decorated in 48 hours, under the direction of Capt. W. L. M. Burger, and tastefully decorated with bunting and flags. The guests, both ladies and gentlemen, enjoyed themselves greatly, and the dances were followed by a visit to a large and well-arranged supper-room, where delicacies little expected awaited them. There were 50 ladies present, and gentlemen innumerable.

ATTACK OF THE REBELS

On the U. S. Gunboat Marblehead.

At daylight, on the 25th Dec., the rebels opened fire upon the gunboat Marblehead, Capt. Meade, at a range of 1,000 yards, with two heavy siege guns and six pieces of field artillery. The Marblehead sustained a hot fire for some time, replying rapidly. The Pawnee, which was stationed a mile below the Marblehead, moved into Kiawah river and obtained a cross fire on the rebels. The mortar schooner C P. Williams, slipped her cable, and with great promptness came down the Folly and entered the Stono river, firing her broadside guns as she sailed up, with an occasional shot thrown from her 13 inch mortar. The rebels were finally driven off, with a loss of, as we found by examining the ground, one man killed, two guns dismounted, caissons destroyed, &c. How many more were killed or wounded we, of course, cannot tell. The Marblehead lost two killed and four slightly wounded. The dismounted guns were spiked and the next day carried off by our men.

CONSCRIPTION OF CAMP FOLLOWERS AT VICKSBURG.

It is a curious fact that in these days of conscription, the safest place has been around the armies in the field. Many actually fled here to avoid the draft in their own States, and the motley group that follow an army all rejoice in pleasant security, and enjoy with great gusto the caricatures of those who tried to "dodge the draft." But "all that's bright must fade," and Gen. Sherman rudely disturbed the bliss of this elysium by a general order from his headquarters. Gen. McPherson re-echoed the peal of thunder in his special order, No. 41, authorising division and brigade commanders to arrest and put immediately into the service all persons not provided with proper passes. At Vicksburg the scene was unparalleled. Guards were stationed throughout the city, and pedlars, cotton speculators, gamblers, rogues and all sorts of illegitimate camp followers were gathered in, and are now keeping step to the music of the Union instead of following in the wake of the army to gather "old clo'" and greenbacks.

FUNERAL OF ARCHBISHOP HUGHES.

When we read of the impressive ceremonies with which the mortal remains of some great and venerated prelate in a Catholic country, some Archbishop like Mgr. Affre giving up his life to his flock, is committed to the earth, the mind of the reader sees it dimly as some scene of the Middle Ages, some lingering trait of the forgotten past. But New York has felt that such things are real, actual living facts in our midst. Archbishop Hughes "stood forth as the great prelate of the church in this country, as the stable and heroic champion, as the defender of its principles, as the advocate of its rights, and the jealous guardian of its honor. He was not only a great prelate, but a great man, one who has left his mark on the age in which he lived, and who has made an impression that could never be effaced." And he not only stood forth in the public gaze as a great representative man, but by the force of his character seemed to raise up all his people to the elevation which he occupied. Whatever storms may have raged around him in the earlier years of his administration, he was for many years before his death regarded here and abroad by all with a respect seldom accorded to the prelate of any church.

This feeling was strikingly manifested at his death. The courts adjourned, flags were lowered to half mast, places of business closed, and from every quarter of this vast city thousands poured to the cathedral to take their last look at the great Archbishop. On his own flock the impression created by his loss was, of course, keen, deep and vivid. Profound grief, an overwhelming sense of irreparable loss and affectionate sorrow filled every heart. No building reared by human hand could have held the thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands that gathered around his bier. The trustees of the cathedral could but select a few for admission; the church, large as it is, held but a small number of those who wished to witness the funeral rites. We have endeavored without sparing toil or cost, to bring it faithfully before those who were so disappointed as well as before the thousands throughout the land who desire to behold mirrored the solemn obsequies of which the daily papers have spoken.

The body of the Archbishop was brought from his residence on Tuesday, and laid in state beneath a canopy or dais in the middle aisle, just where the altar formerly stood at which he received episcopal consecration 26 years before. He was robed in his episcopal vestments, his mitre on his head, his cross and his crozier by his side. The canopy was supported by four pillars, and surmounted by a cross. Heavy silver fringe relieved the sombre tint of the black cloth, and spots and nails of the same metal made alike contrast in the roof and cross. Of the Archbishop as he thus lay in state we present an extremely accurate sketch, made by one of our corps of artists soon after the body was placed in the catafalque. Silver candlesticks stood at the head and foot, with lighted tapers, and a cross and wreath of pine and flowers lay at his feet.

The whole interior of the church up to the top of the columns was draped in mourning. The walls were hung with black cloth, the pilasters alone being white, with a festoon of white between the capitals. The pillars in the nave were enveloped in black with white ruffles at the joints; the gothic work of the sanctuary and the high altar were similarly draped, while the pulpit and the vacant archiepiscopal throne were dressed with exceeding taste, the black cloth contrasting with the ruffles, fringes and spots of white. Of all this drapery our readers will form a correct and striking idea from our engraving.

On Thursday, the 7th, about ten o'clock, the church had become densely filled. The sanctuary was crowded with clergymen in surplices, and a long line also extended across the church, in front of the communion railing, and down the middle they sat, two by two, in chairs, from the catafalque to the door. The pews were filled with men of rank and position. Members of the State Legislature and Government, and of the Common Council, the Mayor of the city, Judges of the various Courts, officers of the army and navy, men whose names now fill the world, McClellan, Sickles, Meagher, Hayes, foreign officials, delegations of societies, filled the centre of the building, and the side aisles were densely packed with the great number of those successful in obtaining admission.

At half-past ten "The Dirge; or, Office of the Dead" began, chanted in the solemn Gregorian tones by the many white-robed clergy. At its close, from the sacristy came forth the acolytes, followed by the Rev. Christopher Farrell, assistant master of ceremonies, Rev. Francis McNeirny, master of ceremonies, Rev. Thomas Preston, as sub-deacon, Rev. William Quinn, as deacon, the Very Rev. W. Starrs, as assistant priest, all robed in black, in the peculiar vestments of their order. Then followed Bishops Bayley, of Newark; Loughlin, of Brocklin; De Goesbriand, of Burlington; Fitzpatrick, of Boston; McFarlan, of Hartford; and Wood, of Philadelphia. Bishop Timon, of Buffalo, the celebrant, closed the solemn line. The mass then began, and the "Dies iræ," that wonderful chant, pealed forth its thrilling strains from the choir, seeming, as it rolled beneath the gothic arches like the pleading of the suppliant soul. When the mass had ended, Bishop McCloskey, long the coadjutor of the Archbishop, and then, on the division of the diocese, a coadjutor still as Bishop of Albany, ascended the pulpit, robed in a violet vestment, and delivered a short but impressive address. "Bonum certamen certavi cursum consummavi, fidem servavi," was the text, which, he aptly said, seemed to be echoed back from the lips of the illustrious dead, not in a spirit of boastfulness and self-praise, but with that sense of relief which one long charged with a heavy responsibility lays it down, conscious of an honest and persistent endeavor to discharge it fully. He did not attempt to sketch the life or portray the great labors of the Archbishop, much less to develope the important events in his career and show their influence on his time; but he drew a picture of the Archbishop's character of artistic power, full of true and striking points, that mirrored the whole man. The funeral ceremonies were then resumed, and the absolution after mass by Bishops McCloskey, Timon, Bayley, Loughlin and De Goesbriand ended the solemn rites. The coffin, still opened, was then borne down the aisle between a double row of clergy, by members of the priesthood, preceded by the sub-deacon, with the cross, and by the attendant Bishops in copes and white mitres. This scene, impressive and striking in the highest degree, is before our readers. It was the closing scene of the rites paid to the memory of a man, of a churchman indeed, but one who stands now in history as one of the great men of our time and country. The coffin, closed from human gaze, was then borne into the vault below the cathedral, where the two deceased Bishops of New York lie.

METAMORPHOSES.

A writer in the Lutheran gives the following amusing account of the belief among the Germans in Pennsylvania that certain persons had the power of transforming themselves:

It was, at one time, pretty generally believed that certain persons possessed the power of transforming themselves into animals or inanimate objects. It was said, and believed by many, that David Zehner frequently changed himself into a log of wood and thus escaped the vengeance of his Indian enemies. So perfect was the transformation, that on one occasion one of the savages sat down on the log and cut tobacco on Zehner's forehead, without discovering the deception. His children, also, firmly believed in their father's supernatural powers. Many years ago, one of his sons, then a very old man, told my informant that he had once seen his father in the form of a bear. It was on a Sunday, and the boys had gone hunting, notwithstanding their father's express command to the contrary. They had gone but a short distance when bruin came out of the woods to meet them. They tried their best to shoot him, but their guns refused to do their duty. Suddenly a light flashed on their minds, and they became convinced that it was not really a bear, but that their father had assumed this shape in order to punish them for their disobedience. Having come to this sage conclusion, they hastened homeward, where their father gave the trembling boys a severe reprimand, warning them never again to go hunting on a Sunday, "for if they did the bears would surely catch them."

They needed no further admonition, but ever afterwards implicitly followed their father's directions, greatly fearing that the old gentleman might, some day or other, take it into his head to become a bear again, and give them an embrace which would be more intimate than fraternal.

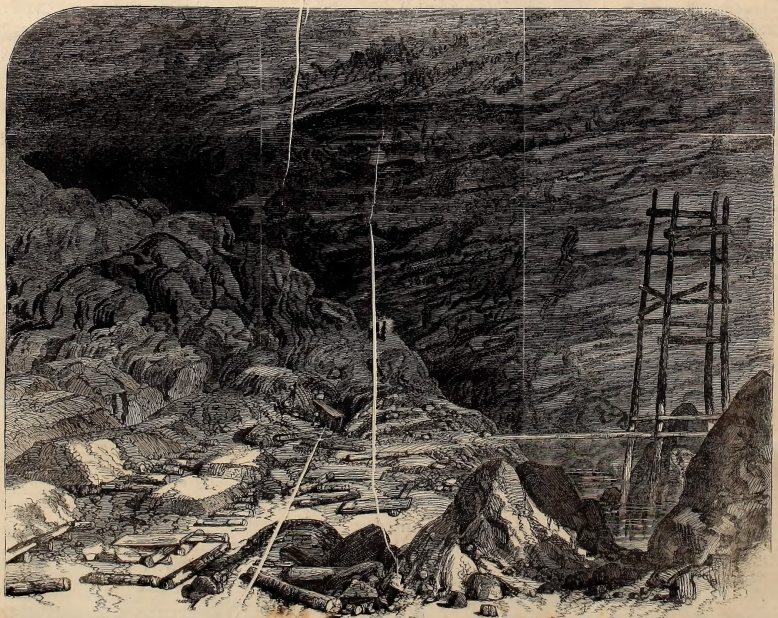
Stories like this might easily be multiplied. An old gentleman lately told a friend of the writer, with the greatest apparent sincerity, that his grandfather had been a Tory during the American Revolution, had often transformed himself into a bush, when he found himself in danger of being captured by the Federal troops.

An old soldier, named Ruprecht, also claimed to possess the power of metamorphoses. He pretended that once, when pursued by a company of Hessian cavalry, he had suddenly transformed himself into a rock, and that the whole company had galloped over him. He professed to have escaped without serious injury, but acknowledged that he had been scratched by the sharp points on the shoes of the horses, and that these wounds were exceedingly painful.

Such were the wild stories that were related at the firesides of our German ancestors. Most of them were believed to be literally true, though all the wonderful deeds therein recorded were necessarily performed without the presence of witnesses. I doubt not that there are many persons, even at this late day, who are inclined to the opinion that such things might have been.

The Sunday Dispatch, of San Francisco, says: "At the Adelphi, one night, we were struck with an exciting incident which took place on the stage. Mr. Mitchell sprang over the bulwarks of a pasteboard vessel and discharged a rusty musket at three supernumeraries, who were standing on different parts of the stage. To our astonishment, all three reeled and fell dead! We know not whether the more to admire this miraculous shot or to be horrified at the result."

Why is the polka like bitter beer? Because there are so many hops in it.



GRAND BALL GIVEN BY GENERAL GILLMORE AT HILTON HEAD, S. C., DEC. 23.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE.

THE ARMY OF THE MISSISSIPPI—ARRESTING CIVILIANS FOLLOWERS WITHOUT PASSES AT VICKSBURG, UNDER GEN. M'PHERSON'S ORDER.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, FRED B. SCHELL.

EXTERIOR AND INTERIOR OF THE CELEBRATED NICKAJACK CAVE, IN ALABAMA, NEAR CHATTANOOGA, WITH THE RUINED REBEL SALTPETRE WORKS.
FROM SKETCHES BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. F. E. HILLEN.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

MR. JONES called upon the gentleman who advertises to restore all paintings, and requested him to restore a seaside landscape, which was stolen from his two years ago.

A YANKEE speedthrift recently said:

"Five years ago I was not worth a cent in the world; now see where I am through my own exertions!"

"Well, where are you?"

"Why, I owe more than $3,000!"

"YOUNG ladies are like an arrow; they can't be got off without a beau." Another reason why they are like an arrow: We as they get into your heart, they won't be got out "till death."

"I SHOULD think these omnibus wheels would be fatigued after running all day," observed Sam.

"Well, yes," replied Seth, taking a squint at them, "they do appear to be tired."

TEETOTALISM forbids a man to touch anything that can intoxicate—except a pretty girl's lips. You may touch the article, after signing the pledge, if you'll only do it discreetly and with moderation.

AN English judge being asked what contributed most to success at the bar? replied: "Some succeed by great talent, some by a mistake, but the majority by talking without a shilling."

A YANKEE writes from San Francisco to a New York paper: "A spanish girl is the best grammar in the world; and since my arrival in town I have been studying grammar." We suppose he'll "conjugate" soon, if the girl don't "decline."

IT is a musical fact that every orchestra contains at least two musicians with moustaches, one in spectacles, three with bald heads, and one very modest man in a white cravat, who, from force of circumstances, you will always observe, plays on a brass instrument.

A MILKMAN may have a habit of stopping daily near the river and not excite suspicion; but when you find a little boy fishing for minnows in the milk pans, we begin to have our doubts.

An English newspaper recently says as follows: "Stolen, a watch, worth ten guineas. If the thief will restore it, he shall be informed where he can steal one worth two more, and no questions asked."

AN innocent young sportsman here about, to order the head of a squirrel on the top of a tall tree, climbed another one near by, and on being asked his reason for such a freak, said that he didn't want to strain his gun by a long shot!

THE farmer whose pigs were so lean that it took two of them to make a shadow, has been beaten by another, who had several so thin that they would have to run round the pump in the rain for a family stoppel that fun by tying knots in their tails!

A LAWYER once pleaded with great ability the cause of his client for nearly an hour. When he had done his antagonist, with a supercilious sneer, said he did not understand a word the other said, who merely replied: "I believe it; for I was speaking law."

BEMUS asked Jemima, a few days since, if she had seen her "vegetable friend?"

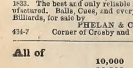
"My vegetable friend? Who's that?"

"Why, the young man I met you with yesterday, who has carrots for hair, reddish whiskers and a turnip nose."

IT is quite a prize pattern if a lady can "hem" a refusal without there being a single crossstitch in it.

A MANCHESTER poet has commenced a new epic, which begins well. It opens with an invocation to the Nine Muses, bursting forth with these words: "Ye femi-nines!"

Hawkes's Diamond Pointed Gold Pen



Medium	Pen	$0 50	Commercial Pen $1 25
Large	"	0 63	Mammoth " 1 50
Engraving	"	0 75	Leviathan " 2 00

Also, Fountain Pens—one filling: will write eight to fifteen hours. Sent, stamp for Circular.

GEO. F. HAWKES, Manufacturer,

$12 6 84 Nassau Street, N. Y.

THE STANDARD
AMERICAN BILLIARD TABLE

AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

Approved and adopted by the Billiard Congress of 1863. The best and only reliable Billiard Table manufactured. Send for Circular, and every article retailed at Billiards, for sale by

PHELAN & COLLENDER,

474-7 Corner of Crosby and Spring Sts., N. Y.

All of 10,000

10,000
10,000

EXTRA COPIES OF THE
NEW YORK WEEKLY
NEW YORK WEEKLY
NEW YORK WEEKLY
(READY TO-DAY)
HAVE BEEN ORDERED.

IT CONTAINS THE GREAT STORY ENTITLED

THE NEGLECTED WARNING;
THE NEGLECTED WARNING;
THE NEGLECTED WARNING;
OR
THE TRIALS OF
THE TRIALS OF
THE TRIALS OF

A PUBLIC SCHOOL TEACHER.
A PUBLIC SCHOOL TEACHER.
A PUBLIC SCHOOL TEACHER.

Besides the above great story, the is now publishing a splendid romance, entitled WHITE EAGLE, THE AVENGER; OR, THE BRIDE OF SUNSET CANYON, by Prentiss S. Smith, and another most exciting serial, entitled MARIE BERTRAND; OR, THE FELONS DAUGHTER, from the pen of Harry Hazle, Jr., Author to all which it gives weekly from EIGHT to TWELVE finished sketches of different varieties, a large number of fine POEMS, and a variety of departments of a useful and entertaining character, including PLEASANT PARAGRAPHS, MIRTHFUL MORSELS, KNOWLEDGE BOX, ITEMS OF INTEREST, etc., etc., the whole going to form a family newspaper which, as it freely admitted by all who take it, has not its equal either in this country or the old Price Five Cents. For sale by every News Agent throughout the Union.

NEW YORK WEEKLY

Cavalry. Artillery. Co. Pins. Corps Badges.

Sold Silver, $3. do Gold Relief, $5 50. | Sold Silver (without baitle) $1 50. do Gold Relief, $2. Battles, 20 cents each, extra. | Sold Silver, $1. do Gold Relief, $1 50. | Sold Silver, $1. do Enamelled, $1 50.

Sold Gold, $8. Sold Gold (without battles), $5. Sold Gold, $3 50. Sold Gold, $5.

Every Co., from A to M, and every Corp Badge worn by the army constantly on hand. Engraved to order and sent free on receipt of price. Terms Cash, in advance. Premiums offered to Clubs. Send for a Catalogue.

Address C. L. HALCH & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

(Formerly Packard & Co.)

FURS!

FURS!! FURS!!!

Ladies and Misses Fine Furs, in Sable, Mink, Ermine, Siberian Squirrel, etc.

Grand Fur Cape, Muffs and Gauntlets, in Seal Otter, Beaver, etc.

Sleigh Robes in variety. Retailed at Wholesale Prices.

BURKE (successor to WATKINS),

219 Broadway, corner Fulton street.

N TIONAL BATTLE PINS.

McClellan, Grant, Rosecrans, Banks, Meade, Colfax, Butler, Hooker, Sigel and Fremont. All are the same pattern as the cut, only with the name in large, grounds and cates. Perfect photograph likeness in a pin, plated with fine gold. Sent by mail. One Dollar a sample will be sent. Agents wanted in and out of the ARMY. The undersigned have the exclusive right of manufacture, and the inventor of this beautiful keepsake and receiver of gallant acts. Also,

Cavalry and Artillery Pins!

The above cuts represent perfectly the Cavalry and Artillery Pins we have been getting up in Silver to answer the urgent inquiries from day to day, from that important branch of the service so long neglected in appropriate badges. The Cavalry and Artillery Pins are Enamelled for the Divisions in

Red, White and Blue,

The outer rim highly polished as Silver can be for the Name, Co., and Regiment. These Pins are Silver, and cost One Dollar and Twenty-Five Cents, with the Name, Co. and Regiment engraved upon them, or One Dollar without engraving. If engraving is desired beyond the Name, Co., and Regiment, Three Cents per Letter or Figure will be charged.

AGENTS will be furnished at Six Dollars per dozen. The Emblems are raised, and the Pin about the thickness of a two shilling piece.

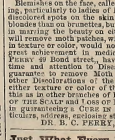
UNITED STATES NAVY

Monitor Pins.

The cut is a correct copy of the Monitor Pins got up in Silver, with the name of the Sailor and purchaser of Pin will be Engraved upon the same card for Battle Pins.

The Pins are very handsome, and are expressly to desire of many officers of the Navy. Same prices as in Solid Gold.

Agents wanted. Every Navy Yard to be represented.



LOUIS PHILIPE & CO., 609 Broadway, N. Y.

CHLOASMA, OR MOTH PATCHES!

Blemishes on the face, called Moth, are very annoying, particularly to ladies of light complexion. These discolored spots on the skin show more strongly on blonde than on brunettes, but they equally injure a face in marring the beauty on either; and anything that will remove these blemishes, without injuring the skin in texture or color, would no doubt be considered a great adornment in modern times. DR. B. C. PERRY 49 Bond street, having devoted his whole time and attention to diseases of the Skin, will guarantee to remove Moth Patches, Freckles and other discolorations of the face without injury to either texture or color of the skin. His success in this as in other branches of his profession—DISEASES OF THE SCALP and LOSS OF HAIR—will warrant him in guaranteeing a CURE in EVERY CASE. For particulars, address, enclosing stamp,

DR. B. C. PERRY, 49 Bond Street, N. Y.

Just What Every Family Wants!

SAVAGE & CO'S NO CHIMNEY BURNER for Hand Lamps and Lanterns, burns Kerosene oil with a brilliant light, without chimney, smoke or odor. Saves 25 per cent. Office, 302 FULTON STREET, N.Y. Agents wanted. Send for Circular. Sample sent by mail for 50 cents. American Institute awarded First Premium and Medal, 1863.

Friends, send a Stamp for my Circulars. 431 2d Address L. M. HARMER, Boston, Mass.

FURS!

FURS!!! FURS!!!

Ladies and Misses Fine Furs, in Sable, Mink, Ermine, Siberian Squirrel, etc.

Grand Fur Cape, Muffs, Mufflers and Gauntlets, in Seal Otter, Beaver, etc.

Sleigh Robes in variety. Retailed at Wholesale Prices.

BURKE (successor to WATKINS),

219 Broadway, corner Fulton street.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT
SMOKING CASE!

Most ingenious in its combination of the Metallic Case, containing Pipe and Stem, Stoppers and Pipe Cleaner, with a handsome Tobacco Pouch set shut, it fits the Pipe by a valve, without use of the fingers or waste of tobacco, the whole securing freedom from all odor, and perfection in Your Case. It is made in two styles, of various and handsome styles, at $1 50, $2, $2 25, $2 50 and $3 75 and $5; the two latter richly Plated and Engraved. Nothing can excel its Comfort, Utility and Beauty for all Smokers. As a PRESENT TO FRIENDS nothing could be more acceptable.

FOR THE SOLDIER IT IS INVALUABLE.

The Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco!

Of superior quality and flavor, in packages to fit the case (about a week's smoking, $2 25 per dozen), and of various Sizes for the general Trade. A liberal Discount to Dealers. Single Cases sent by mail, paid, on receipt of price and 25 cents. Also, Pocket Packages of this fine Tobacco, full weight sent (carefully put up) by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1.

RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,

Office 429 Broadway, cor. Howard St., N. Y.

COMPETITION DEFIED!

AND ELEGANT
TWO DOLLAR CHAIN

We offer to sell our WATCH, which is of the MOST SUPERB STYLE OF MANUFACTURE, AN ACCURATE TIME-KEEPER, and so sterling Cases, Hunting pattern, at the low price of TEN DOLLARS.

We therefore recommend all wanting either an ORIDE, GOLD or SILVER WATCH, Hunting Cases, to remit us $10, when they will receive a handsome Watch, accompanied by ourselves, sent, sealed and post-paid, at our expense.

Our CHAIN is the admiration of all those who have seen it. In beauty and cheapness it cannot be surpassed. ONLY TWO DOLLARS.

Mr. Recollect, the OLD ESTABLISHED AND RELIABLE AGENCY, where all orders are attended to with the utmost promptitude, carefulness and accuracy, and adapted to their destination in the most compact, reliable and expeditious manner.

Address THOMAS ORMSBY,

General Purchasing Agent, 85 Nassau St., N.Y.

Billiard Balls!

Patent Compound Ivory, 2¼ and 2⅝ in., $10 per set; 2⅞ in. Bagatelle Balls, $6 per set; 1¾ in. Bagatelle, $7; warranted for six months. WM. A. WELLING, Agent, 307 Canal Street, New York, sign of the Golden Elephant.

$60 A MONTH!

We want Agents at $60 a month expenses paid, to sell our Everlasting Pencils, Pencil Erasers, and 13 other articles. 13 Circulars free. SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Me. 434 15

American Needle Co.

J. W. BARTLETT, 493 Broadway, N. Y.

All kinds of Sewing Machine Needles.

Bartlett's Burnished Hand Needles.

Fancy HANDLED, LONG STEEL and Common CROCHET Needles.

Hackle, Gill, Comb, Card Pins, etc., etc.

Bartlett's Burnished Needles are a wonderful improvement over others for SEWING MACHINES or HAND SEWING. Try sample, 25c, any since, for 60c., by mail.—Active Demerest.

The Automatic Self-Sewer,

ONE DOLLAR.

HEMS, TECKS & GUIDES THE WORK WITHOUT THE HAND. Sent free, with complete directions. Address Bartlett's Needle Sewing Machine Furnishing Depot, 493 Broadway, N. Y.

W. FORSYTH & CO.,

42 and 44 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office), offer for sale the following Magnificent List of

WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.

Valued at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

	EACH
125 Gold and Silver Watches	$15 to $100
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	$35
200 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	$10
2500 Vest and Neck Chains	$5 50 to $10 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Cameo Brooches	3 00 to 5 00
3000 Moscic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Coral Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Gents' Breast Pins	2 50 to 5 00
3000 Watch Keys	2 00 to 6 00
3000 Silver Thimbles	2 00 to 4 00
2500 Sets of Besom Studs	2 50 to 6 00
2500 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Plain Rings	2 50 to 5 00
5000 Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 6 00
8000 Lockets	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Sets of Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 20 00
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Metal Holders	4 00 to 5 00
5000 Gold Pens, with Silver Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00

The articles in this stock of Jewelry are of the newest and most fashionable styles. A description of all the various articles are put in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, thus giving all a fair chance. Sold by mail for 25 cents each; and on receipt of the Certificate, it is at your option to send One Dollar and take the article named in it, or not. Five Certificates, $1; eleven, $2; thirty, $5; sixty-five, $10; one hundred, $15; Certificate money to be enclosed with order. Correspondence promptly answered.

AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow them ten cents on every Certificate, provided their remittance amounts to $1, and more liberal inducements to those who buy largely. Send for Circular. Address

W. FORSYTH & CO.,

42 and 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

ANOTHER VOICE

FROM THE POTOMAC!

Fathers and Mothers,

Sisters and Brothers

HEAR THIS:

SOLDIERS,

ATTENTION!

A Voice from the Potomac!

Read the following letter lately received by Prof. HOLLOWAY, No. 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.:

CAMP NEAR CULPPER, Va., Nov. 22, 1863.

Thomas Holloway, Esq:

DEAR SIR—Please send me some of your valuable Pills, for which you will find money enclosed. Soldiers who have used them say they are just the thing for us.

I have been in the service now over fifteen months and have had no sickness, except diarrhœa, and I want to have your medicine by me, in case of need.

Yours, with respect,

ANTHONY OGDEN,

Company D, 76th Michigan Regiment, 1st Brigade 1st Division, 2d Army Corps, Army of the Potomac.

Let the reader go to the nearest Drug Store and purchase a box of

Holloway's Pills
OR OINTMENT!

And send it to their relatives in the army.

Hasten! Delays are Dangerous!

To insure getting genuine, go to the Depot,

431-34 No. 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Union Playing Cards!

National American Amusement Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen. Ten of Diamonds, 22 embellished cards in the pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the games with them. Two packs mailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for Circular. Add ress

AMERICAN CARD CO.,

000 458 Broadway, or 185 William St., N. Y.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of AMERICAN PEOPLE,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, published by DR. JONES, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes for Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

Sent free to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Physician for the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 91 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 430-42

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, nine tenths of which we retain in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Cavalry and Artillery!

Solid Silver, $1 25. | Solid Silver, $1 25.

Solid 18 k Gold, $5 each. | Solid 18 k Gold, $5 each.

Sent by mail on receipt of price. Also, all kinds Corps, Co. and Division Pins engraved to order, by the single one, 100 or 1,000, and sent to any part of the country, Terms cash, in advance. Send for a Circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE.
Manufacturing Jewellers.
208 Broadway, N. Y.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY,

Merchants, Bankers, Teachers Amateurs, etc., etc.,

And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular

J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce Street, N. Y.

WEDDING CARDS.

French Note Paper, Seals and Presses, Silver Plates, etc., at J. Scott's, 39 Sandford Place, Brooklyn. For Specimens by mail, send 10 cents.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cts., together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes—64 octavo pages of great interest; Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Beauty.—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL will positively Restore Ruined Complexions, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enamelier. It whitens the skin instantaneously, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc., from any mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 113 South Seventh Street, and 41 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

WANTED, WANTED.

Do You Want Splendid Whiskers or Moustaches?

HUNTER'S CEMENT will cause them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Also, the Bald Head in ten weeks. Two Boxes for $1. Postage free. Address C. L. BRIGGS, Milwaukie, Wis.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS FROM LIFE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY, STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.,
20 cents each, $1 00 per doz. Free by mail Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 304, New York city. Send for circular.

Economy, Durability & Convenience

The Star No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil Lamps, Patented July 21, 1863. Gives a brilliant light, free from smoke, or smell. It can be turned and handled freely without being extinguished. The latest and acknowledged the best invention of the kind. Warranted as represented. Sample sent, postpaid, for 35 cents. Agents wanted.

PETER ESSIG & CO., Manufacturers, No. 2 Platt St., N. Y.

J. G. SCHULL.

MERCHANT TAILOR

33 Ann Street, New York,

Has on hand a splendid assortment of French, English and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings which he is prepared to make up in the most fashion able style and on the most reasonable terms for cash

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,

Agents for the United States for the celebrated

ALBERTINE

EXTENSION HOLDERS & GOLD PENS

Of the most handsome and durable construction, put up in new fancy cases of one dozen each, and not sold in any less quantities. They will retail for $3 each.

Price, per dozen $10 25
3 dozen 28 00

Sent by mail or express, prepaid. Address
SALISBURY, BRO. & CO., Providence, R. I.

Headquarters for Officers' and Soldiers' Pins of Every Description!

We will send either Army Corps, Division or Company Pin, in Solid Silver, with your Name, Regiment and Co. handsomely Engraved upon it, on the receipt of $1. Also, a Kearney Cross in Fine Gold Plate for $1, or a New Style Solid Silver Cavalry Pin, Engraved as above, for $1 50.

☞ Agents sending for 10 or more at one time will be allowed 15 cents on each.

ALSO, THE EMPORIUM FOR WATCHES AND JEWELRY.

75,000 Watches, Gold Pens and Pencils,

Vest, Guard and Neck Chains, Chatelains Chains and Pins, Engraved Bracelets, Engraved Spring Lockets, Seal Stone Rings California Rings, Chased Rings, Masonic Rings and Pins, Gents' California Diamond Pins, California Diamond Ear Drops, Beautiful Sets of Jewelry, New Styles Studs and Buttons, etc., etc., etc.,

WORTH $400,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

Certificates naming each article are put into Envelopes, Sealed and Mixed, and sent without regard to choice.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for doing the business 25 cents each, which must be enclosed when the request is made to know what you can have. After knowing what you can have, then if it is at your option to buy a Dollar's worth of the article or not.

Five Certificates can be ordered for $1—eleven for $2—thirty for $5—sixty five for $10—and one hundred for $15.

With the information of what you can have will be sent a Circular giving full instructions to Agents and a full Catalogue of articles.

Box 4876, N. Y. S. M. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway, New York.

We have furnished our Wesson's Rifles as follows:

State of Kentucky	1,366
State of Indiana	760
General Kilpatrick	150
Colonel Collins	320
Capt. Buck's Co., Chillicothe, O.
Col. Grant's "	Kansas.
Capt. Child's "	Athens, Ill.
Capt. Whybark's Co.,	Rollo, Mo.
Capt. McGee's "	Lexington, Mo.
Capt. Hunter's "	Sedalia, Mo.
Capt. Olds' "	Perryville, Ind.

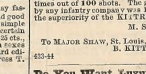
LEAVENWORTH, Oct. 12, 1863.

DEAR SIR—The Rifles (33) were put to a severe test on the 7th, at the Slade Farm, AND WON A STAND OF COLORS, in a contest against THREE VERY CRACK COMPANIES. They were fired in squads of ten, each man having three shots, and to shoot at the command. THE SCORE WAS OUT-NUMBERED TWO HUNDRED shots by the ten rifles to some 500 from the target, 9.5 times out of 100 shots. The greatest number of hits by any infantry company was 3.5. This speaks well for the superiority of the KILTRIDGE (Wesson) Gun.

Col. 1st Kansas Cav.

TO MAJOR SHAW, St. Louis, Mo.

B. KITTREDGE & CO.,
Cincinnati, Ohio.



433-44

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will cause them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Also, the Bald Head in ten weeks. Two Boxes for $1. Postage free. Address C. L. BRIGGS, Milwaukie, Wis.

Travelling Salesmen Wanted.

419-31 Apply to A. W. HARRISON, Philadelphia.

It penetrates to the very seat of this terrible disease, and exterminates it root and branch, for ever. DR. GOODALE is the first and only person who ever DISCOVERED and CURED Chronic Catarrh. It commenced—and what would cure it. Price $1. Send stamp for a Pamphlet. 378 Broadway, N. Y. NORTON & CO., Sole Agents.

Travelling Salesmen Wanted.

$75 a month, expenses paid, or a commission on sales Apply to ISAAC HALL & CO.,
432 3s Newburyport, Mass.

$50 FOR $20.

SOLDIERS IN THE ARMY.

For $20 we will forward by mail or express, prepaid, the following lot of fine Gold Plated Jewellery: 1 Set Studs; 12 Gents' Pins; 12 Gents' Rings; 1 Gold Pens and Extension Holders; 6 Vest Hooks; 4 Vest Chains; 12 Bosom or Scarf Pins; 12 Sleeve Buttons; 4 Box and Glass Pins for Miniature; 3 Double Lockets; 4 Gents' Guard Chains. Address THOMAS CAFFERTEY & CO.,
429-32 Providence, R. I.

$75 A MONTH!—I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address S. MADISON ADAMS, Alfred, Maine.

"Moustaches and Whiskers in 42 Days."

Don't be humbugged with ONGUENTS: The GREAT secret fully explained in MANUAL OF WONDERS, 12,000 sold. 12th Ed. Only 20 cts.; 3 for $1. Address C. E. RUNDLETT & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

Advantage Cards, &c.—For samples and Circulars inclose 10 cts. and address G. BALEY, Nashville, Tenn. 432-3

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.—Invoices to Agents. Preparation for the hair by power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to overcome effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.

HOYT'S MINNEHAHA HAIR GLOSS, unexcelled in keeping the hair in curl

HOYT'S IMPERIAL COLORING CREAM oils and colors the hair at the same time; changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.

HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and preserves against chapping in winter. Sold everywhere.

JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS

THE SOLDIER'S SAFEGUARD.—This is the title best-owed upon HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS by an officer of the United States Army, writing from the valley of Virginia. He says in a letter to the proprietors, Messrs. HOSTETTER & SMITH: "In every instance where your Bitters have been taken regularly and systematically, as a protective against the bilious epidemics so common and so destructive here, they have answered the desired end, and you may therefore claim for your celebrated Tonic and Preventive the designation of the SOLDIER'S SAFEGUARD." Wherever it has been tried in the army, the result has been the same. The soldiers themselves are clamorous to have a substitute for the pernicious liquors now used as stimulants in the military hospitals. Its well known basis, Spring of Rye, the purest stimulant, in the opinion of chemists, that can be produced—and its substitution for impure and the matchless invigorant is manifested with enormous sale of the finest tonic, and bilious and corrective herbs, barks, gums, roots, &c., known to modern pharmacy. HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS—the best and only preventive in malarious districts and the most powerful of all remedies in cases of debility and other physical prostration—should be in every army hospital. As a convalescent cramp, and should form a portion of the medicine stores of every regiment in the field. Given promptly to the wounded, it would save the lives of thousands to most otherwise die of exhaustion on the battle field.

Sold by all Druggists and Family grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.,
DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 476 BROADWAY.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, Illustrations. Also, Rare Books and Sporting Articles. Send stamp.
433-36 PIERRE BIBON, 25 Ann St., N. Y.

OPERATIC PEARLS.

A New Selection of SONGS, DUETS and TRIOS, comprising the Vocal Beauties of the Best Operas, with English, French and Italian Words, and Pianoforte Accompaniments. Uniform in style with the popular music books, "Shower of Pearls," "Silver Chord," and sold at the same prices, viz.: Plain, $1; Cloth, $1 25; Full Gilt, $2. Sent postpaid.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

Straight Hair Made Wavy,

Without heating it, by using the JEVINS PATENT HAIR CRIMPERS. For Sale at Variety Stores. 434-36

Published this Day.

A DANGEROUS WOMAN;
A STUDY FROM LIFE.

By MARGARET BLOUNT,
Author of "Kitty Althorne."

Illustrated. Price 25 Cents.

This is a capital story, and will deeply interest, amuse and entertain all who peruse it. The authoress, an American by birth—at present occupies a very proud and eminent position in the literary world of England. The character of A Dangerous Woman is admirably depicted.

Mailed, free of postage, on receipt of price.
FREDERIC A. BRADY, Publisher,
24 Ann Street, N. Y.

GLASS LETTERS & SIGNS

Glass Letters for Windows Dog outlast and excel Gilded Letters, are more conspicuous remarkable. Glass Signs, Show Cards, Frames, Door Plates, etc. Glass Labels for Bottles and Drawers. GLASS LETTER CO., 107 Fulton Street, N. Y. 434-6mw

C. O. D.

Agents and Dealers, and the trade in general; the following list of our most rapidly selling articles, Patent Match Safe, New Magic Tobacco Box, New Fusion Pipe, Indelible Pencil, Egyptian Cement, and many other novelties. Send stamp for Circular. Circular. S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.
000 834 Chestnut St., Phila., Pa.

Watches
FOR THE ARMY.

HUBBARD BROS.
IMPORTERS OF
WATCHES

"Particularly valuable for officers in the army and travelling."—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 21.

"Prettiest, best and cheapest lever watch ever offered."—N. Y. Illustrated News, Feb. 20.

"Splendidly finished Watches, the beauty of which is only equalled by their cheapness."—N. Y. Weekly, July 23.

MAGIC TIME OBSERVERS!

THE PERFECTION OF MECHANISM!

BEING A HUNTING OR OPEN FACE OR LADY'S OR GENTLEMAN'S WATCH COMBINED, WITH PATENT SELF-WINDING IMPROVEMENT,

A MOST PLEASING NOVELTY.

One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for ladies and gentlemen ever offered. It has within it, and connected with its machinery, its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The case of this Watch, as composed of two metals, the outer one being fine 16-carat gold. It has the improved patent lever movement, and is warranted a correct timepiece. Price, superbly engraved, per case of half dozen, $264. Single Watches, in neat morocco boxes, $55. By mail the postage is 36 cents; registering, 46 cents.

Silver Watches!

FIRST-CLASS HUNTING TIMEPIECE

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES MUST INSURE

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of two metals, the outer one first quality Sterling silver, while the inner one is German Silver, it cannot be tarnished by rubbing or heavy engraving, making it not only in appearance, but in durability, the best resemblance of SOLID STERLING SILVER in existence.

The sale of these Watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $20 each. Single Watches, in neat morocco box, can be made in a single pay-day by any one of ordinary business tact.

☞AT WHOLESALE ONLY! In many hunting cases, beautifully engraved, white enamel dial, and fancy cut hands, to good running order, by the half-dozen, $24 00; postage, $2 38; registering, 30 cents. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

☞TERMS, CASH! INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No Agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. Money in sole to everybody. Circulars free, letter, it is at our risk! Order of the most the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS. SOLE IMPORTERS.
428 169 Broadway and 2 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

10,000 Agents Wanted for the NEW PRIZE COMBINATION STATIONERY AND NEEDLE PACKAGE. Warranted of the best quality and sells to everybody. Circulars free, address J. L. G. PIERPONT, 422½ Broadway, New York, care of Miller's Post Office Box, 90.

500 More Agents Wanted.—Business New —pays $10 a day clear and requires no capital. For particulars address with stamp,
432—3 J. W. STEPHENS, Morristown, N. J.

Royal Havana Lottery.

30 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

Watches Given to All our Agents!
A GREAT CHANGE.
READER, delay not one moment, until you send for our New PRIZE STATIONERY PACKAGE Circular, whether you want it or not. It contains important information for everybody. Great inducement offered to Agents.
0000 WEIR & CO., 34 South-Third St., Phila.

A No. 1 SHIRTS
TO ORDER.
Manufacture Unsurpassed—Fitting Inimitable,
AT
CHAS. L. LOCKWOOD'S,
No. 675 Broadway, N. Y.
P. S.—Self-Measurement sent on application.

THATS I
D. BEAUDIN,
FRENCH HATTER,
NOW WITH
CHARLES L. LOCKWOOD,
No. 675 Broadway, N. Y.
P. S.—Hats made to Order and sent per Express Directions for Self-Measurement sent on application. 0000

Shuits' Unguent.—Warranted to produce a full set of whiskers in six weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 30 cents. Address C. F. SHULTZ Troy. N. Y

To Consumptives!
The Advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection and that dread disease, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, etc. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.
Parties wishing the prescription will please address
REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
0000 Williamsburg, King's Co., N. Y.

GOLD PENS AND CASES
Retailed at Wholesale Prices.

Ladies'	Pens	75 Engraving	Pens	2 00
Med.	"	1 00 Union	"	2 50
Large	"	1 25 Mammoth	"	3 00
Commercial	"	1 50 Gem, Eureka	"	3 25
Large "Eureka" do		1 60 Man.	"	3 50

The above Pens are 14 carats fine and warranted perfect in every respect for one year. A Written guarantee accompanies each pen. These pens are well known in the mercantile community for the last (10) ten years, and the subscriber believes, from the number of unsolicited testimonials given him, that they are the best pen now in use, or he would not be able to give them such guarantee he does. Send for a Circular before purchasing elsewhere, giving the exact size of pens, and the various styles of pens and cases. Pens made to order to suit every hand or style of writing.
Beware of the imitation Johnson pens, and by purchasing of the manufacturer secure the genuine article.
E. S. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office,
0 13 Maiden Lane, New York City. 0

Pens repointed on the receipt of 50 cents. 0

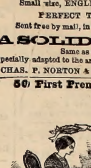
A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts., MAGNIFYING 500 times, mailed on receipt of price. Four of different powers, $1. Address F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass. 0

Prepare for the Holidays!

Booksellers, Fancy Goods Dealers, and the Public, will please remember that there is no other Gift which compares with the CRAIG MICROSCOPE and MOUNTED OBJECTS, being in endless source of amusement and instruction. Over 200 dozen Microscopes and 700 dozen objects have been sold within a year by the Boston Agent alone. The Microscope, in brass, is mailed, postage paid, for $2 25; or with six mounted objects for $3; or with 24 objects for $5. In hard rubber, for 50 cents, in addition to the above prices. A Liberal discount to the trade. Address
0000 CRAIG, 358 Broadway, N. Y.

Broker's Stock of unredeemed goods for sale at $1 per each article, consisting of a variety of rich and valuable Jewelry, worth 75 cents to $300 each. Any person sending 25 cents we will inform them in advance what articles they will receive. For further documents send 3 cents for a Circular. Address
ANDREWS & CO., 105 Sudbury St., Boston, Mass.

"Greenbacks" made easy by selling TAYLOR'S PATENTS. One Agent for each county wanted. Address, with stamp,
0 A. E. TAYLOR, New Britain, Conn.



MUNN & COMPANY,
Solicitors of American & Foreign Patents,
AND PUBLISHERS OF THE ILLUSTRATED SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, 37 Park Row, New York.
Pamphlets of information about patents FREE.
Specimen copies of the paper FREE.

COLD FEET!
USE THE ELECTRO METALLIC INSOLES.
They keep the feet warm in the coldest weather.
METTAM & CO., Proprietors,
429 Broadway, New York.
Price $1; prepaid, by mail, $1 30. Send for Circular.

$1 for 25 Cents.—$1's worth of Rare and Valuable Secrets sent free to any one for 25 cents. Address J. H. B., Hawley, Pa.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

$7. WATCHES. $7
A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED
Gold-Plated Watch,
LEVER CAP,
Small size, ENGLISH MOVEMENTS,
PERFECT TIMEKEEPER.
Sent free by mail, in neat case, for only $7.
A SOLID SILVER
Same as above, $7,
Specially adapted to the army.
CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., 38 & 40 Ann St., N. Y.

50 First Premiums in 1863.

GROVER & BAKER'S
CELEBRATED ELASTIC STITCH
Sewing Machines
Were awarded the Highest Premiums over all competitors at the State Fairs of New York, Vermont, Iowa, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Oregon, and at every respectable Institute and County Fair held in 1863.
Salesrooms, 495 Broadway, N. Y.

TOMES, SON & MELVAIN
6 Maiden Lane, New York,

Dealers in "Fire Arms," "Cutlery," "Sporting Articles," "Fancy Goods," Perfumery, Soap, Brushes, Meerschaum Pipes, etc., etc.
Military and Navy Equipments in every variety.
A large assortment of
RICH PRESENTATION SWORDS.
434-7o Constantly on hand.

C. W. BURNHAM,
607 Broadway, N. Y.
GENTLEMEN'S FURNISHING GOODS.

A large and complete stock of Merry Pringshing Goods for the Spring and winter wear, combining all the novelties of the season as they appear in Paris and London.
FINE SHIRTS
AND COLLARS
MADE TO ORDER.
JUST RECEIVED a large stock of Genuine Shaker-wool Undershirts and Drawers, very fine. Also, a large stock of English Undershirts, Gloves, Carriage Blankets, etc. Call and examine our stock.

GREAT
TRIUMPH.
STEINWAY & SONS, Nos. 82 and 84 Walker Street, N. Y., were awarded a FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.
The special correspondent of the New York Tribune says:
Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."
0000 Dyspepsia Tablets.

FOR INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by Druggists generally. 50 cents per box; sent free on the receipt of 60 cents. Depot, 307 Centre Street, second floor. 0

BALLOU'S
Patented
French Yoke
SHIRTS.
Warranted to fit, and
CHEAPER
for the same quantities and make than three of our other Shirt Houses in this city.
Circular contains the directory and prices sent free.
For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.
BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, New York.

SPORTS OF THE SEASON.
Members of the Scotch Curling Club having a fine time of it.

$15 Per Day Easy $15
AND A WATCH FREE!
100,000 men and women wanted to act as Agents in every Town, village and Camp, to sell our immensely popular, successful and valuable EXTRA LARGE SIZE PRIZE PACKAGES, containing large quantities of STATIONERY, RECIPES, YANKEE NOTIONS, etc. Sells wonderfully. Largest, Best and Cheapest ever manufactured. Each Package contains fine Writing Materials such as Paper, Envelopes, Pens, Pencils, Blotters, Emblems, Ladies' Paris Fashion Plates, Designs for Needlework, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Companions, Camp Companions (for Soldiers), Parlor Amusements, Guide for Letter Writers, Many Ways to Get Rich, Likenesses of Generals, Gents' Pocket Calendars for the Year, Union Designs, YANKEE NOTIONS of all kinds, Recipes, Gems, Army Laws and Advice, Rich and Costly Presents of Fashionable Jewellery, etc., etc., the whole worth MANY DOLLARS, if bought separately. Price each Package ONLY $5 cents retail. Wholesale rates to Agents very low. 100 to 200 PER CENT. PROFIT ALLOWED. Package of all descriptions put up for Sutlers, Pedlars, Wholesale Dealers, etc. GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE ARMY SAFE. All Soldiers are allowed to Receive and Sell our Goods. A Splendid "Solid Silver Watch," English Movements, and Correct Timepiece, presented "free" to all who act as Agents. Send for our New Circulars with Extra Premium Inducements, free.
S. C. HICKARD & CO., 102 NASSAU ST., New York, the Great Original, Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World. Beware of imposters of similar names. 0

AMERICAN
METALLIC COLLARS
"The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a Choker." to Box 2173, and receive it by return mail.
AMERICAN ENAMELLED METALLIC COLLAR CO., 94 Pine Street, N. Y.

IMPORTANT!
The public are respectfully informed that I have just received per steamer Colla a fresh shipment of the Jules Mumm & Co.'s
Verzenay Cabinet,
AND
Dry Verzenay
Champagne
of a new vintage, surpassing in richness, lightness and delicacy of wine, any brand of the same quality ever before sent by this house. A trial of the same will convince the most fastidious.
The following houses have a supply of this shipment on hand:
PURDY & NICHOLAS,
W. J. MACKIE & CO.,
H. D. FELTER,
MACY & CO.,
W. H. JACKSON & CO.,
CHAS. LANIER & CO.,
J. F. VAN ROSSUM.
JAMES MEYER, Jr.,
43 Beaver Street,
Sole Agent in the U. S. for Jules Mumm & Co's Champagne. 426-50

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both Sexes—new and reliable treatment in Journal of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South-Ninth Street Philadelphia, Pa. 0

BRIDGEWATER PAINT
For Roofs, Outside Work, Decks of Steamers, Iron Work, Railroad Bridges, etc.
R. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!
ALL Articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newberne, Fort Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates by HARDENS EXPRESS No. 74 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates. 0000

GREAT CHANCE
TO
MAKE MONEY.
We want Agents every where to sell the most splendid
STEEL ENGRAVINGS
Ever published. We will furnish them so that a stock of $10 will yield $50; also,
PRIZE STATIONERY PACKETS
With which we give, as Premiums to Agents,
Gold and Silver Watches.
Full particulars in Circular.
Mailed free. Address
G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
0 36 Beekman Street, N. Y.

The Beard &c.
IN those cases of scanty, retarded growth, where the person is over 18, by its remarkably nourishing and stimulating power, the Tennessee Swamp Shrub Balsam Bud Resin found infallible in exciting the Beard, Moustache, &c., to an exceedingly fine and vigorous growth. The history of this Balsam, with a small sample box, will be sent sealed, on receipt of return postage.
0 JOHN RAWLINS, 815 Broadway, N.Y.

Personal.—Any young Lady or Gentleman can have sent to their address a portrait of the person they will marry and be told the year in which the happy event will take place, by enclosing 25 cents and stamp, to
PROF. HUMBOLT,
0 P. O. Drawer, 6310, Chicago, Ill.

To all who wish to make Money!
Send your address to J. W. YALE, Syracuse, N. Y., and you will receive free a sample of YALE'S CELEBRATED FLAG OF OUR UNION AND MILITARY PRICE STATIONERY ENVELOPE, with Circular. 424-50

WATCHES
AND
$8. CHAINS. $11.
A Beautiful Engraved GOLD PLATED WATCH AND CHAIN, the Swiss Movement, handsome dial and hands, warranted a perfect timekeeper, $8.
Engraved SILVER, same as above, chain included, $8.
A very heavy HUNTING CASED SOLID SILVER WATCH, full jewelled and fine English Movement. Silver Capped, warranted a perfect timekeeper, and a handsome GOLD PLATED CHAIN included for $11.
We will send, on receipt of the money, one of our Watches and a Chain by mail, postage paid, to any address. These Watches are especially adapted to the Army, being heavily cased and perfect timekeepers, and in running order.
GEORGE A. KLY & CO.,
0 205 Broadway, N. Y.

250 Rare Receipts!
TELLS WHAT TO DO AND HOW TO DO IT! The Book, with 17 Engravings, sent by mail for 25 cts
HUTCHINSON & CO., Publishers,
425o 442 Broadway, N. Y.

A Secret Worth Knowing.—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER without apples or other fruit, in 12 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass

VINELAND. LANDS. TO ALL WANTING FARMS!
Large and thriving Settlement; mild and healthful climate; 30 miles south of Philadelphia, by railroad. Rich Soil—produces Large Crops, which can now be seen growing; 20 and 50 Acre Tracts at from $15 to $20 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings—churches, schools and good society. Many now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Pamphlets containing reports and giving full information will be sent free.
Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland P. O., Cumberland Co., New Jersey.
From Report of Solon Robinson, Ag. Ed. Tribune:
"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position, and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."
426-500

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York

No. 435—Vol. XVII.] NEW YORK, JANUARY 30, 1864. [Price 6 Cents.

The Gulf Between Them.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens,

AUTHOR OF "FASHION AND FAMINE," "THE REJECTED WIFE," ETC., ETC.

The $5,000 Prize Tale

Commences with this number.

THE FRIGHTFUL ACCIDENT

In the Church of the Compania at Santiago de Chili.

AMID a civil war of unparalleled carnage, when the telegraph often sends to us from various points of our vast country accounts of battles fought at the same moment, when the idea of death in fearful form has become so habitual that the death of thousands seems to lose its terrible reality, the news of an accident in Chili comes with such frightful details as to fill all with horror.

The month of May, elsewhere celebrated in May, is in Chili, made a preparation to the great Spanish festival the "Immaculate Conception," on the 8th of December. Among the associations which in Santiago attended these devotions with the greatest zeal was a well-known one of ladies and girls called the "Children of Mary," who assembled at a church which, prior to the suppression of the Jesuits in 1763, belonged to that order, and has retained the name of the church of the Compañia. Next to the Cathedral it was considered the finest ecclesiastical building in the city. The roof was lighted by stained glass, as were the windows around the cupola above the high altar. The altar and paintings were in good taste and by far the best in the city. The building was most favorably known in Chilian annals as the spot where gratuitous instruction of the poor was commenced by the Jesuits in 1592—62 years after the founding of the city.

THE DREADFUL CONFLAGRATION IN CHILI—CHURCH OF THE COMPANIA, AT SANTIAGO, DESTROYED BY FIRE ON THE 8TH OF DECEMBER—2,000 WOMEN AND CHILDREN KILLED.—FROM A PHOT. BY MYTHOS.

We give in this number a view of the church in flames, from a photograph by Mysbos, of Santiago, forwarded to us by the steamer Callao. We shall give further illustrations from the same source, and a thrilling account of the fatal scene in our next.

Barnum's American Museum.

MONSIEUR JOSEPH, THE GREAT FRENCH GIANT, 8 feet 4 inches; ANNA SWAN, the GIANT GIRL, 8 feet 1 inch; GIANT BOY, 8 feet; LILLIPUTIAN KING, 14 years old, only 22 inches high; Automaton Musical Troupe, Moving Wax Figures, Enormous Serpent, &c., &c. Tom Taylor's great drama, the TICKET-OF-LEAVE MAN, every AFTERNOON AND EVENING. Admission to all, only 25 cents; Children under 10, 15 cents.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 30, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 72 Duane street, between Broadway and Elm, New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, also FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR OF 1861, by GEORGE P. BEMIS & CO., Proprietors of the London American, 100 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One copy one year		$3 50
Two copies "	to one address	5 00
Four "	" "	9 00
Magazine and paper one year		5 00

Notice to Advertisers.

The value of our paper as an advertising medium has become so generally known, that we are compelled every week to refuse columns of advertisements. The vast increase of our circulation, penetrating as it does into the most profitable channels, renders our space doubly valuable, and justifies us in the course we have determined upon—that of increasing our rates of advertising in the following ratio:

75 cents a line on the outside or last page

40 " " on the 14th and 15th pages.

Notice to Contributors.

Our paper is beyond all others the journal that offers to the public the greatest number of American tales and poems. Great as are the numbers that constantly reach us, we are always happy to receive tales and poems of merit. If accepted they will be remunerated duly. When declined they are returned without delay.

Contributors will be good enough to write legibly, on one side only of the paper, and give their address distinctly. Comic sketches for engraving, or hints for such illustrations, are also acceptable.

Summary of the Week.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Gen. Gillmore began to shell Charleston with Greek fire, and set fire to several houses.

On the 12th and 13th the rebel papers state that 471 shells were fired into the city.

VIRGINIA.

The rebel guerilla McCown was captured on the 8th, near Sperryville, by a regiment of New York cavalry. But a rebel party dashing into the camp of the 1st Massachusetts cavalry, near Warrenton, captured 17 men and 35 horses.

Gen. Early is falling back up the Shenandoah valley.

The rebels admit that Mosby was badly whipped in the recent affair at Harper's ferry.

On the 14th about 200 rebels undertook to capture a small body of Union cavalry at Three Mile station, near Bealton; but after losing three killed and 12 wounded retired.

TENNESSEE.

On the 10th a cavalry fight took place near Strawberry plains, in which the rebels were repulsed.

On the 12th a part of McCook's cavalry met the 8th and 11th Texas regiments at Mossy creek, killed 14 and took 41 prisoners.

OHIO.

Gen. Terry is at Sandusky, to prevent any movement by the rebels on Johnson's island, or their friends in Canada, who are preparing to attack the island.

ARKANSAS.

The rebel army west of the Mississippi is said to be 34,000, half of whom are cavalry, under Gens. J. D. Lee and Ferguson, and all of whom are sadly demoralized.

NAVAL.

On the 7th the rebel steamer Dave was destroyed off Wilmington by the U. S. steamers Montgomery and Aries.

On the 9th the Fahkee and other vessels destroyed the blockade-runner Bendigo, at Lockwood's Folly inlet, near Wilmington.

The British authorities at the Belize on discovering the Eureka to be the Gerety seized her, stopped the payment for cotton and endeavored to arrest the pirates.

At Halifax the Admiralty Judge gave his opinion that the seizure of the Chesapeake was piracy.

CONGRESS.

IN the Senate, on the 11th Jan., a joint resolution was introduced relative to the French occupation of Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; also a bill to set apart a portion of Texas for negro colonization; Mr. Wilson's motion for the expulsion Senator Garrett Davis, of Kentucky, on account of his recent disloyal speech, as he termed it.

In the House, Mr. Fernando Wood moved for a general investigation of all affairs, civil, military and naval during the present Administration. This was negatived by 77 to 63.

In the Senate, on the 12th, the House bill to continue bounties to the 1st March was passed. A message from the President on the cruel treatment of Union prisoners was then received; and a bill reported for the appointment of a second Assistant Secretary of War.

In the House there was nothing of public interest.

In the Senate, on the 13th, Garrett Davis made a speech, defending himself against the Wilson charges.

In the House, there was a spirited debate upon Pennsylvania claims for damages suffered by her citizens, in consequence of rebel invasions. A resolution was adopted to inquire into the nature of them.

In the Senate, on the 14th, petitions were received from Wisconsin and Minnesota, requesting permission to extend their boundary line.

In the House, the Senate resolution respecting the management of the war was referred to the Military Committee.

In the Senate, on the 15th, amendments were agreed to, altering the amount of commutation from $300 to $400; prohibiting enlisted men serving as substitutes in regiments from any other States than those in which they originally enlisted; providing that persons exempted by physical disability, whose annual incomes amount to $1,000, shall pay $300 into the Internal Revenue fund; and making persons who have resided one year in the United States, and who have voted at any election, subject to the draft.

In the House there was nothing of any public interest. It then adjourned to Monday.

In the Senate, on the 15th of January, a petition was presented from New York praying that denaturalized foreigners might be made liable to the draft.

BOOK NOTICES.

CUDJO'S CAVE is the name of a new novel about to be published by Messrs. Tilton & Co., Boston. The author, Mr. J. T. Trowbridge, is also the author of Neighbor Jackwood, and some of the most popular contributions of the Atlantic. This story is of rebel despotism and Union patriotism in East Tennessee.

The orders for this book, on the reputation of the author and interesting locality of the story, have been so numerous as to delay the publication till a much larger edition than was first contemplated can be prepared.

ALEXANDER SMITH, whose poems, a few years since, created so much sensation, has just published a volume of Essays, under the title of Dreamthorp. It has reached the sixth edition in England, and is receiving great attention and commendations. Messrs. J. E. Tilton & Co., Boston, republish the book in their attractive style.

THE IDLER ABOUT TOWN.

How to pack the largest crowd of perspiring humanity into the smallest amount of space has been experimented upon so extensively in New York, that it may be now said to have arrived at the dignity of an exact science. We crowd our cars as herrings are packed in a barrel; we crowd our ballrooms so that dancing is impossible; we crowd our iceponds so that to cut a pigeon's wing would floor half a hundred adjacent steelclad immovables; and, lastly, when we give a private picture exhibition, we crowd the saloon so densely with the fashion, beauty and talent of the city that only the outside edges can get a sight at the gems of art. The principle is altogether wrong, and was very plainly manifested at the last Artists' Reception at Dodworth's Hall, in the Fifth avenue, on Thursday evening last. The crowd was so dense that comfort was impossible, and one of the objects was defeated, because the pictures could not be seen. All those who receive the compliment of a ticket feel gratified, but we are certain that of those who attend many go away dissatisfied. It is a great pity that the number of invitations issued is not based upon the width of crinoline and the size of the hall, for these reunions are really delightful, and are calculated to do great good to art, by bringing the purchasing amateurs into social connection with the artistic genius of the city. Even though some desirable guests should be necessarily excluded now and then, a judicious limit to the invitations will be found beneficial both to hosts and guests. We found most of our best artists represented on the walls, and the contributions were fresher and of a higher character than usual. Gifford sent a masterpiece of color, a wood and sunset, which stood foremost among the best of the pictures. A cattle piece, by Shattuck, was distinguished by marked fidelity to nature. Gignoux sent two pictures; one, the rapids below Montreal, is among his happiest efforts. Cranch, Coleman, Bellowes, Hart, Huntington, Edwin White, Cropsey, Vedder, J. G. Brown, Eastman Johnson, McEntee, Durand, Kensett, Brevoort, Launt Thompson, Bristol, and other of our first artists, contributed some of the rarest specimens of their talent, but which we are unable to mention in detail.

After we had "done" the Artists' Reception we strolled into the Academy of Music, where the Light Guard Ball was in spirited and active operation. The house was tastefully and beautifully decorated, and the rich and costly dresses of the ladies, mingling with the gay uniforms of the dashing soldiers, made the scene one of almost fairy brilliancy. The music was capital, well marked, sonorous, and so full of dash that even the lookers-on felt the dancing mania strong within them. The little canary birds in their gilded cages gave way to the spirit of nocturnal dissipation, and instead of standing on one leg, with their heads under their wings, they fluttered about the cages joyously, and did their best to drown the orchestra with their full-throated singing. Poor little fellows! they are sadly out of place midst the flaunting lights and merry tumult of a ballroom. Although the "Light Guard" are known as the "Tigers" they were very lamblike on this occasion, for even the youngest and prettiest girls seemed not in the least afraid of them. On the contrary, they trusted themselves with them in the mazes of the maziest of dances, and rested with perfect confidence on their manly arms. Oh! woman, thy weakness is thy strength, for thy gentleness can tame even "tigers." We wished we were two or three "tigers" on the occasion, for we could stand any amount of such training.

We have received several indignant remonstrances, for what is termed our "impertinent meddling with ladies' crinoline." One fair correspondent asks, with something like a sneer and a slight appearance of hope, "if we propose to dress up our women in the Eastern style, do we intend, also, to advocate the establishment of the Hareem?" We reply, the gods forbid! one is enough, at the present price of drygoods and fixings and etc. One specimen of idle loveliness is sufficient, without adding half a dozen other idle lovelinesses to help her to do nothing and dress. Besides, in this land of free speech and rocking-chairs, a man needs all the eloquence and subtlety of a Philadelphia lawyer, to hold his own against one tender and loving being, when she stands upon her rights, and favors one with a piece of her mind. Still we have the temerity to persevere in our opinion that a modification of the present costume is much to be desired. The change proposed is graceful, picturesque, easy, and, consequently, healthy. It would add much to to the beauty of the beautiful, and give the charm of piquancy to those to whom nature has not been liberal of the gift of comeliness.

The continued illness of Mr. Anschutz has thrown the baton of direction into the hands of Mr. Bergmann, a thoroughly competent and most able maestro. "Faust" has been performed three times to very large audiences, and "Fidelio" once for the benefit of Madame Johannsen. Beethoven's music is caviare to the multitude; it is too profound, too passionate, too metaphysical. It would grow into public favor by frequent hearing, we feel assured, because of its intrinsic and wonderful beauty, but no management can afford to lose money to teach judgment and taste to the public. Mr. Hermanns, the new European addition to the company, is an excellent actor, and has a voice of great richness and power. The very pleasant opera, "La Dame Blanche," was performed most satisfactorily on Monday to a good house. Madame Johannsen sang well, and Mdlle. Frederici and Mr. Hermanns sustained their rôles so charmingly that we regretted they had not more to do. It was altogether a most successful performance. The far-famed "Tannhauser," by Richard Wagner, is to be performed this week, strongly cast and well put upon the stage. We are really curious to see how the public will receive it, and shall make a note of its reception in our next.

All speculations in English operas, for the last few years, have had to struggle against many difficulties. Fashion has set its face against it, good singers were hard to procure, a fair chorus almost impossible and a proper orchestra could hardly be afforded. The time is coming when all these difficulties will disappear, and we think that the English opera company, organized by Mr Harrison, will go far towards removing them. Not that his company presents a perfect ensemble, but because it is an advance upon the past in many respects. There are three thoroughly good artists, Madame Borchard, who is a brilliant and accomplished singer, and an excellent actress; Mr. Castle, whose voice is admirable, and whose style and manner give promise of something really great in the future—a promise which will not fall short of a position as the best English tenor we have had for years; and Mr. Campbell, who to a superb voice adds much taste and refinement, and a fair dramatic ability. In Mr. George Rae we recognise a very valuable member of the company, but he wants toning down before he can be available for the principal rôles. The subordinate members are what might be termed very "shaky" indeed, and should be replaced with competent people as soon as possible. The chorus contained such venerable fossils that profound antiquarian knowledge, which we do not possess, is required to describe it. Mr. Theodore Thomas has selected a good orchestra, and we need hardly add that he conducts the opera with his well known skill and firmness.

The "Bohemian Girl" is hardly an opera to test the vocal strength of a company, and besides, it is very hackneyed, and has always been given in such a slipshod manner, that we should hardly know it if it was once thoroughly well done. It is full of set-scenes, needs dances, processions and other stage effects, which are impossible in Niblo's Saloon, and therefore we shall not criticise the performance. We have mentioned the capabilities of the artists, and we will say further that we expect much from the present organization, and ask for it the warmest support of the public. The two representations at Niblo's Saloon were attended by crowded and brilliant audiences, and we understand that a like result has attended their performances at the Park Theatre, Brooklyn, where they first appeared. The next opera performed will be W. V. Wallace's "Maritana," a beautiful and genuine work.

The theatres are running on the same course as heretofore. "Rosedale" and revivals at Wallack's, "The Ticket-of-Leave Man" at Winter Garden, and at the Olympic a slight novelty, which will be doubled this week, in the way of a burlesque, called "Mazeppa, or the Untamed Rocking Horse." Barnum's American Museum is, of course, full of novelties of the most extraordinary character, which, to be appreciated, must be witnessed.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The 8th Avenue railroad will soon be extended to Harlem river.

—— Frederick Douglass, the eminent colored orator, delivered a lecture at the Cooper Institute on the "Mission of the War," on the 13th Jan. It was attended by a large audience.

—— The Courrier des Etats Unis, of the 13th Jan., states that the French Government has decreed a measure of vast importance to the maritime intercourse between France and the United States. By an imperial decree of Dec. 20, 1863, cotton is admitted free into French ports, if imported direct from the country where it is produced, in ships carrying the French flag. The same duties hitherto levied will have to be paid on cotton imported under a foreign flag. The Courrier thinks that these different duties will probably induce our Government to revise the treaty of commerce made about 30 years ago, and which revision has been urged for the last ten years by the French representatives at Washington.

—— Edmund Kirke, the popular author of "Among the Pines," gave his lecture on "The Southern Whites," in Jersey City, on the 13th Jan. It was a very interesting discourse.

—— Capt. Edward Lott, the present commander of the Cunard steamer Persia, received a present of a set of silver from his friends, on the very interesting occasion of having made his 300th passage across the Atlantic.

—— Carl Benson suggests, in consequence of the high price of champagne and other French wines, that the people should drink cider.

—— Mayor Gunther, of New York, in his message to the City Government, refrains from discussing national politics, and gives the following excellent reasons for his reticence: "In assuming my present duties I have sedulously abstained from all expression of opinion on the exciting topics of political discussion. I claim the right, in common with all my fellow-citizens, to the enjoyment of my opinion on all these questions; but my official action and course will be confined exclusively to municipal affairs and the welfare of the city. To combat corruption and fraud, and prevent, by my influence and in every honorable way, a continuance of those abuses which have been perpetrated out he rights and patience of the public, will be my constant endeavor."

—— Gov. Parker, of New Jersey, has transmitted his annual message to the Legislature of that State, assembled in Trenton. He recommends the restoration of the old Constitution and the reconstruction of the Union on its old basis as the only objects worth fighting for. He says that a conciliatory policy should be pursued towards the rebels, with the view of a national pacification. The emancipation proclamation is, in his opinion, a standing obstacle in the way towards those results. He condemns the amnesty manifesto, and expresses the opinion that the many acts of the Federal Government of which he disapproves, or which may have been prejudicial to the general good, will be obliterated or remedied by the ballots of the people.

—— Great efforts are being made in Albany to get up a petition to the President to put Mr. Postmaster Wakeman in the place of Collector Barney. The reason given is the numerous cases of corruption recently discovered.

—— From all parts of the country come reports by telegraph and mail of terribly severe weather since Friday last. A heavy snowstorm has been prevailing throughout the West, and railroads are blocked up in all directions. In Buffalo a flood has submerged a part of the city, doing immense damage. In Chicago the mercury, on Saturday, fell to 28 degrees below zero; and in St. Louis the cold is unparalleled, the thermometer, on Saturday, standing at 24 below, and the river being frozen so as to permit sleighs to cross. In Philadelphia four persons were frozen to death on Friday night, and it was reported that five rebel prisoners had perished on the cars between Jeffersonville and Chicago, but that story is denied.

—— The Central Park has cost the city nearly $8,000,000, but has increased the value of taxable property in the adjacent wards to the extent of $27,000,000. It has 8 miles of carriage-roads, 5 miles of bridle-paths and 20 miles of footpaths.

—— The assessed value of property in Pennsylvania is about $600,000,000.

—— By the last returns there were 187 banks in the loyal States, and $32,000,000 capital.

—— A spiritualist in Boston asserts that the pirate Semmes is guided in his work of destruction by the spirit of the notorious pirate Gibbs, who was hung some 30 years since, and adds that when Gibbs has exhausted his venom, Semmes will himself come to an untimely end.

—— The grossest irregularity exists in the management of the Hoboken Ferry Company. Their two best boats are laid up disabled, and the immense traffic, which is so much increased by the Morris and Essex railroad, is now carried on by the miserable little tugboat Newark, the John Fitch and the Paterson. The other night the passengers were four hours in crossing from Barclay street to Hoboken. The Jersey city boats are admirably managed, and no delay experienced.

—— The New York Herald recommends the removal of the Federal Capital from Washington to New York.

Western.—The St. Louis Republican says that 3,000 hogs were frozen to death on Thursday, the 31st Dec., in various places along the line of the North Missouri railroad.

—— In Madison township, Ind., lately, Jacob Schrimer murdered a friend of his for love of his friend's wife, who, in order to facilitate her marriage with her paramour, poisoned Mrs. Schrimer. They were then married. Their honeymoon was interrupted by the discovery of Schrimer's body, with the head split in two. The guilty lovers have been arrested.

—— Gov. Brough, of Ohio, was inaugurated on the 11th Jan., at Columbus. In his inaugural address he takes the highest anti-slavery grounds. He recommends a heavier tax than did Gov. Tod for the support of soldiers' families.

Southern.—The Raleigh (N. C.) Standard says: "In consequence of the alleged disloyalty of the extreme western counties of North Carolina to the Jeff Davis Government, they have been deprived of all mail facilities."

—— The Raleigh Progress says: "The beauties of secession, but dimly seen at first, are becoming more and more vivid as the revolution advances, and from present indications it will not be long before he who runs may read. The communication of officers of the Army of Tennessee, read in the House of Representatives on Tuesday, shows that there is an alarming state of demoralization and disaffection in that quarter. If there is to be a Dictator, Mr. Foote wants Gen. Lee. We have as much confidence in, and respect for, Gen. Lee, as any man living, but we tell Mr. Foote that the people of North Carolina, who set out to fight for freedom and liberty, will not submit to a Dictator in the person of any living man while the power is left to resist."

Military.—The testimony is unanimous that the 34th regiment of Massachusetts cavalry, Col. Wells, in co-operation with Gen. Averill, behaved with the utmost gallantry. It was their first experience of long marches and perilous service, but they bore themselves handsomely, officers and men, and came back with flying colors. They were successful in occupying the attention of a body of rebels many times larger than their own, until Gen. Averill had performed his work and gone home, when they cleverly outwitted the enemy, who expected to capture them in force, and came back to Harper's Ferry at their leisure. The expedition was every way honorable to the regiment.

Naval.—Another Chesapeake case has occurred. Six pirates, who had, at Matamoras, engaged passage on board the J. W. Gerety, bound to Havana, suddenly rose, mastered the crew, put them into a boat, altered the name of the ship into the Eureka, and then put into Belize. They sold the cargo of cotton to some merchants there. When the news of the piracy reached Belize, the British authorities there seized the ship, and as the pirates had escaped, they have offered a reward of $500 for their apprehension.

—— From a return made to the Navy Department, it appears there were 372 disasters on the Western lakes last year.

Personal.—Gen. Hunter has gone to the South to join Gen. Banks.

—— Madame Anna Bishop is making a tour westward. Her reception has been very flattering.

—— Kit Carson has been appointed Col. of the 2d regiment vols., in New Mexico.

—— Bandmann's "Hamlet" is pronounced admirable by the Chicago critics. One of them says, "It is nearly equal to Shakespeare's Hamlet."

—— The Boston journals give glowing accounts of the enthusiastic reception given to Mr. Bailey on his arrival at Malden, after his triumphal acquittal of the ridiculous charge brought against him by an officious nonentity.

—— Gen. Grant was lately rallied about the persistent and preposterous use, by a New York paper, of his name for the Presidency. The General replied: "I aspire only to one political office. When this war is over, I mean to run for Mayor of Galena (his place of residence), and if elected, I intend to have the sidewalk fixed up between my house and the depot." If Gen. Grant should go on joking in this dry style, he will soon joke Lincoln out of the next nomination.

Obituary.—Dr. John W. Robinson, Surgeon of the Kansas regiments, and formerly Secretary of State of Kansas, died on the 28th of Dec. at Fort Smith, Ark., from over fatigue in the service.

—— Hon. Caleb Blood Smith died on the 6th of Jan. at Indianapolis. He was born in Boston, April 16th, 1808; removing to Cincinnati, he graduated in Miami Union, Oxford, Ohio, and commenced the study of law in 1828 in Connersville, Ind. In 1833 and again in 1840 he was a member of the House of Representatives for Indiana. In 1843 he was sent to Congress. In 1856 he was one of the Presidential electors on the Republican ticket for Ohio, and in 1858 he removed to Indianapolis, where he remained till 1861, when Lincoln made him Secretary of the Interior. In Dec. 1862 he resigned that position for the position of United States Circuit Judge for Indiana. He was a good lawyer and much respected.

—— Col. Edwin Rose died of dropsy on the heart, at Jamaica, L. I., on the 12th of Jan. He was born in 1807, and educated at West Point. He was in the Black Hawk war. In 1837 he resigned his commission and became civil engineer to Michigan. In 1861 he offered his services to the Governor and was appointed Col. of the 81st regiment. He was in the Chicahominy battles. He was much loved by all who knew him.

Accidents and Offences.—A most terrible accident occurred on the 12th at Hornesville. A workman in the large steam sawing mills happening to get entangled in the machinery, was drawn into it, and had his arm sawn clear off, falling from loss of blood upon the circular saw he was cut right in two about his middle. His name was Alonso Lewis. He had been a soldier.

—— Mr. Samuel Sears, a merchant, 23 Park Row, died on the 12th of Jan. from the effects of inhaling nitrous oxide, or laughing gas, which was administered to him by a dentist to prevent the pain of teeth extraction.

—— Mr. Malcolm Campbell, one of the ablest and most respectable lawyers in our city, was arrested on the 15th Jan., on the Napoleonic pretence that he would not betray the secrets of his client. We shall next hear of the arrest of the Catholic priest for not revealing those of the confessional. Gen. Dix rebuked the action of his subordinates by immediately releasing Mr. Campbell, with a handsome apology.

—— The official return of persons killed during the riots has been made; it amounts to 165, of which 149 were men, 11 women and 5 children.

Foreign.—Some time ago a lunatic named Ashmore, confined in the Richmond (England) Lunatic Asylum, was killed in the night by another patient, not previously supposed to be dangerous. His widow brought an action against Dr. Lalor, the superintendent, which, after two days' trial, was decided in his favor, the jury not considering that she sustained any damage by losing an insane husband.

—— Mons. Eugene Provost, the conductor for years of the opera in New Orleans, is now leader of the orchestra of Mons. Offenbach's popular theatre, Les Bouffes Parisiens, in Paris. He is to bring out an operette of his own during the season.

—— The Geant balloon, in its late aerial journey, performed a total distance of 370 leagues (925 miles) in 16 hours, being at the rate of 58¼ miles an hour.

—— The English merchants and manufacturers are rejoicing in the large increase of their foreign trade the past year. The value of the exported linen goods alone, for the last 10 months, was $23 640,260—the United States taking one-third in quantity and value.

—— Associations called "Steelboys" are organizing in Ireland, whose operations are of a disorderly character, and are exemplified by assisting defaulting tenants to carry off their crops.

—— Not a single person was killed or injured on the Great Western Railway in the year 1862, though eight millions and a half of passengers were carried over it.

—— The number of political journals in Paris and the Departments, at present, is 318, of unpolitical 6,700.

—— The old statue of Napoleon I., from the Place Vendome, has been placed on a pedestal at the Rond-point of Courbevoie, and being only 30 feet from the ground, appears to much greater advantage than formerly at 138 feet.

—— Madame Succa, of the Berlin opera, is such a favorite there that she has been engaged for life at an enormous salary, with a six months' vacation annually to rest herself.

—— The ladies of Paris have adopted a fashion for the winter of wearing their dresses drawn up over colored jupons, light woollen materials of striped patterns, with a band of plaid or narrow plaited flounce near the edge. They have thus given up the practice of sweeping the streets.

—— A letter dated Demarara, Nov. 6, says: "The Eldorado of Sir Walter Raleigh appears to be at last discovered close to the penal settlement up the Cuyuni river; and a company is just starting to work the gold mines, which appear to be the richest and most easy of access in the world."

—— There are 2,116,000 horses in England—600,000 for private use.

—— There has been no rain in Hungary for nearly two years. As a consequence, the crops have come to nothing, and the flocks and herds are dying, disease having followed the drought. The writer estimates the loss at $60 000,000.

—— A French paper has published the correspondence between the Pope and Jeff Davis. It appears the latter wrote to his Holiness respecting the letters sent by the Pontiff to the Archbishops of New Orleans and New York. The Pope acknowledged the receipt of the letter, and advised Jeff Davis, whom he styles illustrious and honorable President, to close up the civil war and live charitably with his Northern brethren.

Art, Science and Literature.—Miss Fanny Kemble has just published a volume in London. It contains "An English Tragedy," in five acts, by herself; "Mary Stuart," a play translated from Schiller, and "Mademoiselle De Belle Isle," a play from the French of Alexandre Dumas. The London critics serve the volume up without mercy. The Saturday Review facetiously attributes the dulness of these productions to her residence in America, which stultifies even a Kemble.

—— Mrs. Henry C. Watson gave a private reading in Chickering's rooms to her friends, on Friday 15th Jan. Her programme comprised selections from the best authors of England and America, interspersed with music, which was charmingly rendered. Mrs. Watson has every requisite of a successful elocutionist; a charming presence, a fine and flexible voice, capable of every phase of modulation, great taste and the rare faculty of bringing out the poet's true meaning, without that extra emphasis as unartistic as italicising the point of a witticism, which ought always to be left to the reader's sagacity. The room was filled with an audience at once recherché and appreciative. If Mrs. Watson should give a series of public readings, there can be no doubt of her achieving a great success. She sang the following songs: "When Daisies Pied," "Come unto these Yellow Sands," and "Where the Bee Sucks," with great tone and finish. The best recited morceau of the evening was Edgar A. Poe's famous "Song of the Bells," to the refrain of which Mrs. Watson's voice was eminently suited, being clear, soft and silvery as a bell itself.

—— "Days and Nights on the Battlefield," a work by the war correspondent of the Boston Journal, is having a very large sale.

Chit-Chat.—At the Cincinnati fair for the benefit of the sick and wounded soldiers, a young soldier gave $5 for a kiss from one of the fair stallkeepers; the beautiful and blushing creature suffered the infliction for the sake of her country.

—— A young lady in Chardon, Wis., has just gained a verdict of $10,000 damages against a gay deceiver, who, after courting her for 14 years, refused to marry her.

—— Here is a specimen of Washington "personals:" "A lady of refinement and education would like to make the acquaintance of a senator or foreign legation. Address, post office, to Florence Benton."

—— There were 2,503 marriages last year in Boston, and 4,693 deaths.

—— The Female Sensation Society has been holding its 47th anniversary in Boston.

—— The amount of gold and silver produced throughout the world, in 1863, is estimated as follows: California, $70 000,000; other portions of the United States, $30,000,000; British Columbia, $6,000,000; Mexico, $25,000,000; South America, $13,000,000; Russia, $22,000,000; Australia, $75 000,000; New Zealand and British Colonies, $12,000,000; other countries, $18,000,000. Total amount, $270,000,000; or quadruple the product before the discovery of gold in California. Nearly all this increase has been in the United States and in the South Pacific islands, including Australia.

—— Among the many curious relics in the Cincinnati Fair is a chip from the Beech Tree Forks of Licking, showing the tomahawk marks of Daniel Boone, which was the corner tree and starting point for his claim to lands in Kentucky. The yearly growth of wood having covered this tomahawk mark, it was necessary, in settling the numerous lawsuits in Kentucky, to produce the mark made by Boone. This was done by carefully scaling off the yearly growth, until the mark appeared corresponding with the year he made it, and the chip being in court and the tree proved from which it was taken, Boone's claim was established. G. Graham was presented with the chip after the trial, and it is now on exhibition at the fair.

THE MARBLE MAIDEN;

OR,

The Sculptor of Florence.

By Ernest Trevor.

CHAPTER I.

The golden day was dying in Florence, as Guido, a young sculptor, stood before the statue of a beautiful girl on which he had just bestowed the finishing touches of his skill. An enthusiastic admirer of the divine art, his delight, as he now gazed on his masterpiece, was transformed into an absorbing passion. It was his ideal of female loveliness, and it appeared as though he had hitherto neglected the living beauties of his native city that he might throw his heart away upon an insensible statue. Never before had he felt such ineffable extacy as now, when he beheld the triumph of his skill complete before him. It was the crowning hour of his life. It had grown by slow degrees from a mere mass of stone into its present bewitching shape; every day as he worked it had caught some new charm, until now the young sculptor felt that, familiar as he was with all that was exquisitely lovely, either in the breathing or inanimate world, it held nothing comparable with this the inspired work of his own hands.

His admiration grew so intense that it became an overpowering infatuation, and as he now gazed upon the beautiful figure, he mournfully regretted that it was but stone after all.

"Oh! that I, having given form to that beautiful creature, could also give it life!" This burst from his lips in a moment of uncontrollable love and sorrow, and overwhelmed with his emotions his head dropped on his breast. As he raised his eyes to gaze once more upon the matchless statue, the sunset's crimson light threw its full flush upon its face, which he, excited to almost a frenzy, fancied smiled lovingly upon him.

Sinking on his knees before a picture of the Holy Virgin, he cried:

"Blessed and Immaculate Virgin, give life to this beautiful statue, and I will henceforth devote myself to thy holy service."

After remaining absorbed in this delicious mood for some time, he slowly rose, and fixed his adoring gaze upon the marble maiden. What was his rapturous surprise when he saw, as the purple flush of sunset died away upon it, that its face assumed the glow of life, and that her lips moved—her eyes returned his glance. So oppressive was his delight that his eyes drooped, and then he saw a tide of sensation throb through the hitherto inanimate statue—it had quickened into life—he heard a deep musical sigh, he saw her bosom heave, and then, as though overpowered by the light, she raised her hand to shade her eyes from the glare of day. Never since Adam saw Eve in Eden had mortal man felt what Guido felt then.

But who can paint his surprise when he beheld the marble maiden, after glancing around her, step from her pedestal, and, without looking at him, walk with the grace of a Hebe around his studio? His first thought was that he was in some exquisite dream, but the evidences of his senses convinced him that he was under no delusion. He was awake, and in his studio; the daylight was slowly fading, but all was clear. He saw his prized sculptures, there was his cast of the Laocoon, there his beautiful copy of the Medician Venus, the Antinous of the Capitol, and there his Apollo de Belvidere. No, all was palpable. Although treading in clouds of golden ether, he was awake—the Holy Virgin had granted his prayer. His marble maiden was endowed with life.

Strange sight was it to see the now living statue pacing gently round the spacious apartment, which was adorned with the most exquisite works of art, and looking on them with a childish wonder, while he, her creator, with clasped hands and speechless extacy, trod step by step after her like a loving shadow. When she walked, so did he; when she stopped, he stopped also; sometimes she paused so suddenly that he almost touched her. To his infinite delight he noticed that when she approached anything he specially prized she remained gazing on it, as though she had inherited his tastes. But when she came to the famous Apollo and paused in admiration before it a jealous pang shot through his heart, and he said in thoughts, "Holy Virgin, preserve her from loving a statue! Preserve her from my fate." After gazing upon it, she went close to the statue and touched it. She recoiled—paused—and walked on. Guido's relief of mind was so great that he drew a deep sigh.

The sound aroused her—she stopped—turned round, and for the first time she confronted her creator. Their eyes met; hers dilated with a strange joy; she smiled, put forth her hand, to meet his, which instinctively offered itself. They touched—the bliss was too much—his sight swam, and he would have fallen had not the marble maiden clasped his hand, and sustained him. By a strong mental effort he overcame the sensation of swooning, and with hand clasped in hand they stood gazing at each other. After a pause he spoke, but she only smiled sweetly, and fixed her eyes so intensely and lovingly upon him, that language has no power to tell his joy. Leading her to a couch he seated himself beside her, and then they sat there, looking at each other in a state of silent extacy. In this trance of enjoyment they remained till the midnight bell tolled. The beautiful creature gave a deep shudder, as though a mighty chill had fallen upon her, and with a rapid but somewhat tottering step she reached her pedestal, and stiffened into marble. Overwhelmed with this terrible calamity, Guido sat immovable until the dawn, when his wearied and overtasked senses found a temporary refuge in sleep.

When he awoke the glorious day was full over Florence; he endeavored to persuade himself that he had been dreaming, but his sense of consciousness was too strong for that. Rising from the couch upon which he had remained stupored with despair the entire night, he advanced to the alcove in which his idolized statue was placed, and gazed fondly upon it. There it stood cold and immovable. With considerable effort to convince himself he put forth his hand. He touched it. It was nothing but marble. He threw himself once more upon his couch; he must have been in a delirious vision. But vision as he had now believed it to have been, it was sweeter than any reality, and he lived over again in a delicious reverie the visionary interview with his marble maiden.

In this dreamy elysium he remained till the bell announced midday, when the same rush of life coursed through the inanimate statue; with a pleasant smile she stepped from the pedestal, and advancing to where Guido sat in breathless excitement, took her seat beside him, and taking his hand in her own, gazed into his eyes with inexpressible tenderness. Another day of joy was passed.

There they were, side by side, communing, for although she had no words for his fond ears, her eyes told more than any language could, and the world had never held a happier man than Guido. As midnight approached a presentiment of sadness fell upon him, and he awaited the sound of the bell with feverish anxiety. As the first stroke clanged the beautiful maiden shuddered and arose as before, and moving to the pedestal on which she had been formed, stepped upon it. Ere the last sound died away she was the dead and rigid marble.

The blow this time, however, fell lighter on her lover than before, for he lived in the hope that noon would once more re-animate her. His impatience as that hour approached may be imagined, and as the clock announced the noon she stepped from her stony root, like a beautiful flower suddenly gifted with life, and walking to where he stood, placed her head on his bosom.

Thus days rolled on; from noon to midnight he sat as though entranced with the mysterious being, the creature of his own hands. Still, in the midst of his most rapturous moments, there was a haunting sadness which prophesied woe. Nothing of the kind, however, seemed to lurk in the breast of the marble maiden, for her eyes were perpetual fountains of smiles.

CHAPTER II.

Early one morning the duke, who had long been a most generous patron of Guido, sent an attendant to announce his approach. The sculptor prepared for the royal visit, and moved his treasured statue into an alcove, which was concealed by velvet curtains. When the duke arrived Guido showed him all his models and works, excepting his marble maiden. As his visitor was about to depart the midday bell sounded, and, to the dismay of Guido, the purple curtains were drawn aside by the beautiful statue, who stepped smilingly into his studio.

Charmed by her loveliness, the duke gave one long and admiring gaze, and bowing to the maiden, pressed Guido's hand and took his leave.

That day and night the duke thought of nothing but the beautiful creature he had seen, and unable to struggle with his passion any longer, he sent the next morning for the sculptor. After some desultory conversation the duke suddenly said, as though it required an effort to speak it:

"Pray, Guido, who was that fair creature I saw in your studio yesterday? Your wife?"

With an embarrassed air the artist replied:

"No, sire."

"I comprehend," returned the duke, with a meaning smile; "she is your mistress."

The sculptor blushed and faltered:

"No, sire."

The duke's face brightened as he said:

"She must be your sister, then?"

"Yes, sire," stammered Guido, hardly knowing what he uttered.

With a delighted air his patron took the sculptor's hand and said:

"My dear Guido, I will make your sister the proudest lady in all Florence. She shall be my wife; and I will put a crown upon the only brow I have seen worthy to rule over my beautiful Tuscany."

He then commanded Guido to repair to his home and announce to his supposed sister that early next morning the duke would come with a gallant escort to convey her to the cathedral, where their nuptials should be solemnised with a splendor becoming her beauty and his state.

Dumb with despair, the wretched artist reeled to his home.

Early next morning the duke, accompanied by his principal nobles, repaired to the house of the sculptor, whom he found in the deepest despondency.

Surprised at his haggard appearance, the kind-hearted prince asked what ailed him and where his sister was.

"Alas, sire, that is the cause of my grief; I know not where my sister is. When I returned home yesterday I discovered that she had fled, whither I know not. Oh, sire," continued the sculptor, "would that I were in my grave!"

The duke's astonishment was great, while his sorrow equalled that of the bereaved brother.

"Have you searched for her everywhere?" inquired the disconsolate lover.

As he said this he threw aside the curtains of the alcove. He there saw the beautiful statue. Uttering an exclamation of surprise, he gazed upon it, affected even to tears.

"How like the peerless maiden I had hoped to have made my bride!" cried the duke. "My dear Guido—I need not ask you—but this, of course, is modelled from your sister?"

"It is, sire," said the sculptor.

"Then, Guido," said his patron, "I must beg of you to let me have it. I will make you the richest man in the city. This will I ever keep in remembrance of her."

It was in vain that the sculptor objected. He offered to make the duke a copy, but nothing would satisfy the mourning lover, and he commanded his attendants to convey the marble image straightway to the royal palace.

Taking from his person a chain of gold, to which was suspended a cross of diamonds of immense value, he threw it around the neck of the bewildered Guido, and bidding him come to the palace to concert measures for the recovery of the missing lady, he departed, taking with him the statue. As they left the studio, the miserable sculptor sank on his couch in the deepest despair.

When the duke reached his palace he commanded his attendants to place the statue in his own cabinet, while he went to council, in the vain hope of dispelling his private sorrows with the cares of state.

It was near midnight when he regained his own apartments. With a heavy sigh he immediately went to look at the marble resemblance of his intended bride. Upon entering his cabinet, to his unspeakable astonishment, it was gone. The pedestal was there, but the statue had disappeared. As he turned to summon his secretary he saw, to his horror, the marble figure approaching him.

"What sorcery is this? The holy saints protect me!" cried the duke, as he fell senseless to the ground.

At that instant the midnight bell sounded, and the maiden, without noticing the prostrate form of the duke, stepped on her pedestal and was once more insensible stone.

The cry of the duke had aroused the household, and his attendants, entering, found their monarch senseless on the floor.

They speedily bore him to his couch, and sent for the most eminent physicians of the city. When he came to himself those around him were astonished at his incoherent speeches.

"Where is my beautiful statue? I saw it walk to me—tell her to come to me—where is my living marble maiden?"

They naturally concluded that he was insane, and the report of his madness spread like wildfire through Florence.

When the sculptor heard what the duke had said he was seized with a mortal terror, and, rushing to the palace, he snatched a battleaxe from one of the guards, and going to the marble figure, dashed it into a thousand pieces.

The effort awoke him; he had fallen asleep before his great work. But, alas! to his intense grief, the remains of his cherished statue were strewn around his studio. He had broken it in his dream!

Overwhelmed with sorrow, he sought his couch. But that very night the marble maiden appeared to him in a vision as an angel, and said:

"Guido, rejoice that thy guardian saint has saved thy soul from being enslaved by an image of thine own creation; for what thy fancy conceived in its dreaming mood thou mightest have carried out in thy waking hours, and thus have perilled thy immortal soul."

WINTER SPORTS AT NEW YORK AND ST. LOUIS.

Those who delight in winter sports had a short carnival at New York. For a few days the Central Park afforded splendid sleighing and fine skating. Thousands, knowing how uncertain the duration of such favors is, availed themselves of the moment. Sleighs of every form and variety glided over the crisp crackling snow; the splendid equipage of the more wealthy or pretentious; the modest vehicle of the more quiet citizen; the clumsy sled of the proletarian, differing from each other no less than the steeds, all gave animation and variety to the Park, as they glided through its serpentine roads, ever and anon passing the lakes where gentlemen and ladies were skating, often in such numbers as to make the greatest skill necessary to avoid mishaps.

At St. Louis the Mississippi is frozen over, and the Democrat thus describes the scenes on the river which we portray:

"The icy floor which that skilful joiner, Jack Frost, has laid down on the surface of the Father of Waters, has become the temporary habitation of quite a number of persons, who ply their various vocations in tents and shanties erected opposite the city. On the Vine street road, as it is called, a small village has sprung up. One of the houses on this road has for a sign Lindell Hotel on the Ice, and others have high-sounding names to attract the attention of passers by. These houses on the ice are extemporized dram shops, but several persons, not having the fear of Gen. Fisk before their eyes, have opened gambling hells, where 'chuckaluck,' 'three card monte,' and other games are played.

"The river was alive with skaters, and many persons crossed over to view the romantic scenery of Bloody island, the dyke and Illinoistown. Loaded wagons were crossing in safety, and large quantities of ice were being carted away."

We call attention to the advertisement of the "Rural" in this paper, and especially to the new feature—a Department devoted to Sheep Husbandry by Hon. Henry S. Randall.

Photography in Peru.—We have received from Mr. Richardson, of Lima, Peru, some photographs which are the most exquisite specimens of art we have seen for some time. They have a delicacy, minuteness, clearness and perspective about them which leave nothing to be desired. He is equally excellent in portraits and buildings, as our readers may judge from the portrait of our friend, the Hon. E. G. Squier, the distinguished antiquarian and United States Commissioner in Peru, and which will appear in our next paper. We take this opportunity of thanking Mr. Richardson for his promptitude and kindness in sending these most valuable photographs on to us.

Story of a Fieldmouse.—A singular instance of the foresight of a fieldmouse was lately brought under our cognizance. A person clearing the garden ground of Mr. Thompson, Dalkeith, Scotland, came upon a growing turnip, which he pulled up by the root. Guess his astonishment when he found that the turnip was completely hollowed out, as neatly as is if it had been done by the chisel of a joiner, and the interior filled with large garden beans. The work, from the size of the hole whence the inside of the turnip had been extracted, was manifestly that of a mouse, and the object, no doubt, of filling the interior with beans was to provide against hunger in the barren winter weather. Near the place where the turnip was growing there were several stalks of beans, upon which some pods had been left, and it is supposed that the cute mouse had helped itself to these. The beans in the turnip (a small one) were counted, and it was found they amounted to no less than six dozen and two.

SIEGE OF CHARLESTON—THE DOOMED CITY FIRED BY GILLMORE'S EXPLOSIVE SHELLS FROM FORT PUTNAM, JAN. 3.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE.

NEGRO FESTIVITIES AT VICKSBURG.

THE negroes preserve all their African fondness for music and dancing; and in the modified form which they have assumed here have given rise to negro dances and melodists in our theatres, a form of amusement which has invaded many. But the colored people should be seen in one of their own balls to enjoy the reality. The character of the music and the dance; the strange grading of colors, from the sooty black of the pure breed to those creatures, fair and beautiful, whose position among their darker brethren shows the brutal cruelty of their male ancestors for generations, who begot them to degrade them, and who have that for years been putting white blood into slavery. There is in these negro balls one thing which cannot fail to impress any observer. Coming as they all do from a degraded and oppressed class, they assume nevertheless in their intercourse with each other, as far as they can, the manners and language of the best classes in society. There is often a grotesque exaggeration, indeed; but there is an appreciation of refinement and an endeavor to attain it which we seldom see in the same class of whites.

BOMBARDMENT OF CHARLESTON ON Jan. 3.

ON Sunday, Jan. 3, Gen. Gillmore broke the stillness by hurling into the city of Charleston 20 shells loaded with Greek fire, and prepared by Col. Bell, so as to avoid their too sudden explosion His invention was highly successful, the shells al bursting in the city at the desired moment, and the result was a fire in the southern part of the city. All the lower part of Charleston is now deserted, the warehouses emptied and closed, hotels abandoned, none but the wretched poor, unable to escape, linger in the streets The boasting city lies at the mercy of Gen. Gillmore, and the science of Beauregard has drawn invincible lines of fortifications around a heap of ruins and ashes.

THE GREAT SNOWSTORM ON THE PRAIRIES—SUFFERINGS OF THE PASSENGERS ON THE MICHIGAN CENTRAL RAILROAD, NEAR CALUMET, ON THE 1ST OF JANUARY.—FROM A SKETCH BY A PASSENGER.

The $5,000 Prize Tale.

We commence in this number the magnificent novel by Mrs. ANN S. Stephens, to which the surprise awarded the prize of FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS, offered last year by the proprietor of this paper for the best American novel. The public mind has been excited with curiosity to read this thrilling and exciting romance, and many readers will find it surpass the most sanguine expectations.

Mrs. Stephens stands in the very foremost rank of American novelists. Her novel, "Fashion and Famine," met with a sale altogether unparalleled in a pure work of fiction. Although "Uncle Tom's Cabin," by its appealing to excited political feelings, obtained an immense circulation, it scarcely surpassed that which Mrs. Stephens obtained for her "Fashion and Famine," which had no adventitious aid to circulation.

"The Gulf Between Them" is in no way inferior to her former great novel. By rare delineation of character, in rapid action, thrilling incident, and sustained interest, it will fascinate every reader, and it will afford our readers the greater pleasure from the fact that it is a novel of our day and country.

This work of singular beauty was formally transferred to us on the 16th of December, as appears from the following:

NEW YORK, Dec. 16, 1863.

DEAR SIR:—Your note, announcing that my story has drawn the prize offered in your Illustrated Paper, has, you may well suppose, given me great pleasure.

With many thanks for your prompt action in the premises, and a sincere desire that you may find as much benefit from the story as your munificence and extraordinary spirit of enterprise has conferred on me, I inclose a receipt for the money, and remain,

Your obliged Friend,
ANN S. STEPHENS.

FRANK LESLIE, Esq.

NEW YORK, Dec. 16, 1863.

Received of FRANK LESLIE FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS, in payment of a prize awarded to my story, entitled "THE GULF BETWEEN THEM," which he is hereby authorized to publish in his Illustrated Paper.

ANN S. STEPHENS.

Elsie and Mr. North.

THE GULF BETWEEN THEM.

BY

MRS. ANN S. STEPHENS.

DEDICATION.

With a heart full of personal memories of the dear old time when we learned to love each other so devotedly, I dedicate this novel to my friend of friends, Mrs. Lettie Canavan, of St. Domingo.

ANN S. STEPHENS.

CHAPTER I.

Music in the Central Park—such music as made the flowering shrubs, covered with late May blossoms, thrill in the soft air and glow out more richly from the sweet disturbance. It was a glorious afternoon, the lawns were as green as an English meadow, and my observations of beautiful things has no higher comparison. All the irregular hills, ravines, and rocky projections were broken up with trailing vines and sweet masses of spring-flowers, that every corner and nook your eye turned upon was like a glimpse of paradise.

This was the still life of the scene, but above and beyond was congregated that active, cheerful bustle which springs out of a great multitude bent on enjoyment—cheerful, luxurious, refined, or otherwise, as humanity is always found. Carriages dashed in and out of the crowd, the inmates listening to the music or chatting together in subdued voices; groups of smiling pedestrians wandered through the labyrinths of blooming thickets, or sat tranquilly on rustic seats sheltered by such forest trees as art had spared to nature. The whole scene was one of brilliant confusion; but out of the constantly shifting groups, forms so lovely that you longed to gaze on them forever were now and then given to the beholder; and equipages vied with each other that might have graced the royal parks of London or Paris without fear of criticism.

Just as the sun began to turn its silver gleams into gold, the music ceased with a grand crash. The final melody was over, and the swarm of carriages broke up, whirled off in different directions, and began to course about the ring again, or drive through the various outlets towards Harlem, Bloomingdale, or the city, which lay in the soft gathering haze of the distance.

Among the stylish equipages that disentangled themselves from the crowd was a light barouche, cushioned with that rich shade of drab which has a pink flush running through it, and drawn by a pair of jet-black horses. The carriage was so perfect in its proportions and so exquisitely neat in its appointments, that it would have been an object of general admiration during the whole concert, had not its inmates carried off public attention before it had time to settle on the vehicle.

The eldest, a woman of thirty-two or three, elegantly dressed and generally recognized, seemed to be the mistress, for it was her gloved hand which gave the signal for moving, and the coachman always looked to her for directions.

A slight gesture indicated home, the moment she saw her equipage free from the crowd, but the lovely young creature on the front seat uttered a merry protest and gave a laughing counter-order, threatening the elder lady with her half-closed parasol, till the point here which covered it fluttered like the fringed leaves of a great pink-hearted poppy.

"Only a short drive," she said; "you can't want to go into the house, dear Mrs. Harrington, such a heavenly day as this."

"But, my love, I have forty things to do!"

"All the more reason why you should neglect every one of them, since it is not possible for you to do them all," replied the young girl, with a laugh and a pretty wilful air that few people could have resisted. "Elizabeth, are you tired?"

The young lady whom she addressed had been leaning back in her seat by Mrs. Harrington, quite regardless of their laughing contention, looking straight before her in a smiling, dreamy way, which proved that the brightness of the day and the spell of the music had wiled her into some deep and pleasant train of thought.

Her friend spoke twice before she heard, laughing gayly at her abstraction, and Mrs. Harrington added—

"Do come out of dreamland, dear Miss Fuller; I am sure I cannot manage this wilful little thing without your help."

The young girl shook her parasol again in a pretty threatening way as she said—

"You are not tired, Elizabeth?"

"Tired! Oh no; it is very pleasant," she replied, in a voice that was low and musical with the sweetness of her broken reverie.

"See, you are in the minority, Mrs. Harrington," cried Elsie Mellen. "You had better submit with a good grace."

"Oh, I know Elizabeth dared not side against you; she spoils you worse than anybody, worse even than your brother."

"But it's so nice to be spoiled," said Elsie, gayly; "and you must help in it, or I shall do something dreadful to you just here before everybody's eyes."

She clenched her hand playfully, as if to carry her threat into instant execution, and Mrs. Harrington cried out—

"I promise! I promise! James, take another turn."

The man turned his horses with a broad sweep, taking the road around the largest lake. Here the spoiled beauty ordered him to stop. She wanted to look at the swans, "such great, white, lovely drifting snowballs as they were." Mrs. Harrington made no objection, but leaned back with a resigned smile on her lips.

A person possessed of far more imagination than Elsie Mellen ever dreamed of, might have stopped on the very road to paradise to gaze on that pretty, Arcadian scene.

The lake was one glow of silver, broken up in long, glittering wraths by troops of swans that sailed over it with leisurely gracefulness, now pausing to crop the short grass from the sloping banks, or ruffling their short white plumage, and stretching their arched necks for payments of fruit whenever they came near a group of children, or saw a rustic from the country, who was sure to delight in seeing the birds feed.

The sunshine came slanting in from the west, cooling half the Park with shadows, and lighting the rest with gleams of pure gold. The paths around the margin of the lake and all the sloping banks were alive with gayly dressed people, and a single boat, over which a flock of gay parasols hovered like tame birds, mirrored itself in the water.

"Now see what you have gained by obeying my orders," exclaimed Elsie, casting her merry eyes over the scene. "I declare the swans look like a fleet of fairy boats. How I would like to sail about on one! There, that will do; James, drive on."

"Home?" inquired the man.

Before his mistress could answer, Elsie broke in—

"Yes, Mrs. Harrington, since you are properly submissive, we will go home, if you wish."

"Oh, I only proposed it because we have so much to do. I should enjoy a longer drive. Indeed, now that you have suggested it, we will take at least one turn."

"That's a darling," cried Elsie; and, without further ceremony, she ordered the coachman to take the Bloomingdale-road, laughing out something about dying for old sheep instead of lambs. "But I want to stop at Mailloreds," protested Mrs. Harrington, "and I then must see about—"

"Oh, never mind, we shall have time enough," exclaimed Elsie. "Drive like the wind, James, the moment you get beyond these horrid policemen. I wouldn't have anybody pass us for the world!"

The coachman obeyed, and directly those two black horses were dashing along the road in splendid style, leaving cars and prudence far behind them.

Elsie was in her element, wild as a bird and gay as the sunset. She talked and laughed incessantly, saying all sorts of merry things in a childish fashion, that kept Mrs. Harrington in explosions of laughter, more natural than she often indulged in, while Elizabeth Fuller leaned back in her seat, listening, absently sometimes, to their graceful banter, glancing at the young girl with affectionate admiration of her youthful loveliness, or the effence losing herself in the pleasant train of thought which had absorbed her all the afternoon.

Three persons more unlike in appearance than these ladies, it would have been difficult to find, but a casual observer would probably have been most attracted by the buoyant loveliness of Elsie Mellen.

She was only seventeen, looking even younger with her fair curls, her brilliant bloom, and the childish rapidity with which smiles chased each other across her face. She looked the very personification of happiness, with a bewitching naiveté in every word or movement, that made her very childishness more captivating than the manners of older and more sensible women.

Mrs. Harrington was a stylish, dashing widow, with a suspicion of rouge on her somewhat faded cheeks, and an affectation of fashionable listlessness which a look of real amiability somewhat belied.

Caleb writing the Invitations.

She was one of those frivolous, good-natured women, who go through life without ever being moved by an actual pleasure or pain, so engrossed in their petty round of amusement, that if they had originality faculties capable of development into something better, no warning of it ever touches their souls.

It was not easy to form an opinion concerning the young lady by her side—indeed, even where her personal appearance was concerned, a stranger would scarcely have been able to decide whether she was beautiful or not.

She was three years Elsie's senior, looking somewhat older than that when her face was in repose, from its grave, almost serious expression. The large gray eyes looked out almost coldly from under thin, straight, black brows; the dark hair was banded smoothly away from a forehead that betokened intellectual strength; the mouth was a little compressed, giving token of the reticence and self-repose of her nature, and a classical correctness of profile added to the quiet gravity of her countenance.

But it was quite another face when deep feeling kindled the gray eyes into sudden splendor, or some merry thought softened the mouth into a smile—then she looked almost so girlish as Elsie herself, and one could but wonder at having ever called her cold, or doubted if she were really beautiful.

Her grave or smiling, it was not a face easy to read, nor was her character more facile of comprehension, even to those who knew her best and loved her most.

She looked very stately and queenlike, wrapped in her ample shawl and leaning back in her seat, with a quiet grace which Mrs. Harrington tried to copy; but the effort was quite useless, and only made the ambitious little woman appear more fussy and affected than ever.

"Here comes Tom Fuller," cried Elsie, suddenly. "Was there ever such an ungraceful rider! Just look at him, Bessie, and laugh, if he is your cousin. I insist upon it!"

"Oh, I think he's such a love!" cried Mrs. Harrington. "Deliciously odd."

"I'll tell him you said that," cried Elsie; "he'll blush like a great Scotch school-girl."

"Oh, don't!" exclaimed the widow, clasping her

Grantley Meuen's Vale.

hands as if she thought Elsie was about to stop the carriage and inform him then and there. "What would he think?"

The young man at whom Elsie was laughing quite unrestrainedly, rode rapidly towards them, and when he saw who the carriage contained, his face glowed with a mingled expression of pleasure and embarrassment that made Elsie laugh harder than ever.

He made a bow almost to the saddle, nearly lost his hat, and did not recover his presence of mind until the carriage had dashed on, and he was left far behind to grumble at his own stupidity.

"It is too bad of you to laugh so at him," said Elizabeth Fuller, a little reproachfully.

"Why, darling, he likes it," cried Elsie, "and it does him good."

"I am sure his devotion to you is plain enough," said Mrs. Harrington, with a sentimental shake of the head. "Hearts are too rare in this world to be treated so carelessly."

"Oh, don't!" exclaimed Elsie. "You'll be repeating poetry next! Tom is a nice man, just a great awkward lump of goodness; but I must laugh at him. Dear me, what a groomsman he will make! Bessie, I know he will step on my dress."

"I hope so," Elizabeth replied, good-naturedly; "I shall consider you served quite right."

"Oh," cried Mrs. Harrington, roused to a fear she was fully capable of appreciating, "it would be such a pity to hurt all that beautiful Brussels point torn—do caution him, my dear."

"No," said Elsie, with mock resignation, "Bessie insists upon having him for groomsman, and I shall let him put his foot through my flounces with perfect equanimity, by way of showing my affection for her. Talking of giving your life for your friends, what is that in comparison to giving your flounces?"

Her companions both laughed, but Elizabeth said seriously, "When you know Tom better, you cannot help respecting him; he is my one relative, and I love him dearly."

"Of course," said Elsie, "and I mean to be his cousin, too; but it is my cousinly privilege to laugh at him."

"Perhaps he will not be content with a cousinly regard," said Mrs. Harrington, mysteriously.

Elizabeth glanced quickly at Elsie, with a little trouble in her face, but the girl laughed, and replied—

"Oh yes, he will; Bessie is his ideal—he will never think of your little me."

"Family affection is so sweet!" added Mrs. Harrington. Elsie made a grimace, and hastened to change the conversation, for there was nothing she dreaded so much as the widow's attempt at romance and sentiment.

"These horses seem perfectly broken," she said. "Brother Grant needn't have been doubtful about them; he sha'n't persuade you to change them, shall he?"

"They are beautiful creatures," Bessie observed, absently.

"Naturally Mr. Mellen was anxious that they should be entirely safe," said Mrs. Harrington, theatrically, "for he has trusted his dearest treasures—his sister and his betrothed wife—to me; and if there is danger, it is for them as well as me."

"What a pretty speech!" said Elsie. "I know you got it out of a novel!"

She had a gay scarf wound about her neck, and began complaining of the warmth.

"I would not take it off," Mrs. Harrington urged, "you will be certain to get cold."

"There is no danger," replied Elsie; "I shall smother, wrapped up in this way."

"But you must keep it on!"

"Indeed, I won't; there!"

They had a playful contention for an instant, then Elsie snatched the scarf from her neck with a triumphant laugh, and held it up beyond Mrs. Harrington's reach.

A sudden rush of wind carried the light fabric out of her hand, and it floated away like a gorgeous streamer. Elsie gave a little cry, but it was frozen on her lips. One of the horses had been restive from the first. The scarf floated over his head, curved downward, and one end got entangled with his bridle. The shy, spirited creature gave a wild bound, communicated like terror to his companion, and away the favorite pair dashed, taking the coachman so completely by surprise, that he was helpless as a child. It was one of those brief occurrences which pass like lightning to lookers-on, but which seem an eternity to the persons in danger. Mrs. Harrington's shrieks rang out on the air; Elsie gave one shuddering moan, and crouched down in the bottom of the carriage, hiding her face in Elizabeth's dress.

Elizabeth Fuller was deathly pale. She realized the full terror of their situation. She uttered no shriek, but clasped her arms around Elsie, and strove to speak a few reassuring words to Mrs. Harrington, which were drowned by the woman's terrified shrieks.

Elizabeth looked desperately down the road over which the horses were rushing like wild desert steeds. The carriages in sight were turned quickly on one side, and their inmates seemed uncertain how to assist them. Any attempt to stop the frightened and infuriated animals threatened certain death.

Elizabeth saw this, and her heart died within her. They were now at the top of a long hill, keeping the road, but hurled onward like lightning. At the foot of the hill was a loaded cart, its driver vainly striving to whip his team out of the way. The brave girl saw this new danger, and fell back with a groan. She knew that the carriage would be whirled against that ponderous load, and dashed to atoms. Effort was hopeless, she could only stretch forth her arms upon Elsie, close, close to her cold heart, and pray dumbly that she might be in mercy permitted to die for his sister.

Still, in her anguish and terror, she looked out beyond the leaping horses, as they thundered down the hill. The man had sprung from his cart, and, with his whip in both hands, was lashing his overtasked beasts in frantic terror. Beyond him came a person on horseback, riding furiously. But they were close to the cart now. It was still more than half across the road. Sick with dread, she closed her eyes, holding Elsie close, and turning, as it were, to stone, with the shrieking young coward in her arms.

In another instant there was a shock which threw them all off their seats; and when Elizabeth could realize any thing, or recover from the deafening effect of Mrs. Harrington's cries, she knew that the horses had been stopped—the peril was over.

The gentleman she had discovered through blinding clouds of dust, riding swiftly towards the hill, had seen their danger, dismounted, and with ready presence of mind, prepared to seize the horses the instant the carriage struck against the cart.

One wheel was forced partially off, but there was no other harm done. Elsie and Mrs. Harrington had both flung themselves on Elizabeth, so that she could neither see nor hear; but the widow discovering that she was still alive, made a little moan, and began to shake out her flounces when she saw the gentleman who had rescued them standing by the side of the carriage.

"You are safe, ladies," he said, opening the door; "you had better get out and walk on to the hotel—it is only a few steps."

"How can we ever thank you!" sobbed Mrs. Harrington. "You are our preserver—we owe you our lives!"

He smiled a little at her exaggerated manner, which would break out in spite of her real terror, and helped her to alight from the carriage.

"We are saved," moaned Elsie, lifting her form from Elizabeth's bosom. "I'm not hurt—I'm not hurt!"

She sprang out of the carriage and stood trembling by Mrs. Harrington. For the first time, relieved of their weight, Elizabeth was able to move and look up.

The stranger was standing by the carriage with his arm extended to assist her. She partially rose—looked in his face—then, without the slightest warning, beyond a deep, shuddering breath, sank back insensible.

Elsie and Mrs. Harrington gave a simultaneous cry, but there was no opportunity for the widow to go into hysterics, as she had intended, since the stranger and the footman were fully occupied in lifting Elizabeth from the broken carriage. Elsie was crying wildly, "Bessie! Bessie!" and wringing her hands in real affright.

"She has only fainted," said the stranger hurriedly; "we will carry her on to the hotel."

He raised the insensible creature in his arms, and carried her down towards the inn, as if she had been a child; while her companions followed, sobbing off their terror as they went.

Once in the house, and the stranger out of the way, Mrs. Harrington recovered her wits sufficiently to give Elizabeth assistance, and restore her to consciousness.

She opened her eyes, gave one glance around, and closed them again.

"Are you hurt?" cried Elsie.

She shook her head.

"What made you faint?" demanded Mrs. Harrington. "The danger was over."

Elizabeth made a strong effort at self-control, sat upright, and tried to answer.

"I can't tell—I—"

"Do you know that gentleman?" asked Mrs. Harrington.

"Why, how can she?" said Elsie.

"Well, she fainted just as she looked at him."

Elizabeth controlled herself, found strength to rise, saying in reply to Mrs. Harrington's repeated inquiries—

"How should I know him?—what folly!"

But she was trembling so violently still, that they forced her to lie down again.

"Stay with her, Elsie," said the widow, "and I will go and see how we are to get home."

She went out of the room, and in the hall encountered the gentleman just as she had expected.

She overwhelmed him with protestations of gratitude, to which he listened with no great appearance of interest, though Mrs. Harrington was too completely dazzled by his brilliant appearance and manner to perceive the absent, preoccupied way in which he received her.

"I don't know how we are to get home," she said.

"Your coachman has engaged a carriage from the hotel-keeper," he replied; "it will be ready in a few moments. Your own horses are not hurt, luckily."

"I don't know what Mr. Mellen will say!" she exclaimed. "He warned me not to keep the horses."

The stranger turned quickly toward her, with a sudden flush on his face.

"May I know who I have had the pleasure of assisting?" he asked.

"I am Mrs. Harrington," she replied, with a simper, "of —— street. I am so—"

"And your friends?"

"Miss Mellen, the sister of Grantley Mellen; and the other lady is his betrothed wife."

"She! That—"

"Yes, yes! Dear me, if any accident had occurred, how terrible it would have been! They are to be married next week," continued the widow, hurriedly. "Mr. Mellen is out of town, and will not be back till just before his wedding. Oh, I shudder to think! Dear, dear sir, how can I thank you!"

The servant came up at that moment to say that a carriage was ready to take them back to the city, and the gentleman escaped from her flood of meaningless gratitude.

Mrs. Harrington ran back to call her friends, and found Elizabeth quite composed and strong again.

"He's the most magnificent creature!" exclaimed the widow. "And you don't know him, Elizabeth?"

"Have I not said so? Come, Elsie."

As she passed into the hall, Elizabeth drew a thick veil over her face, and when the gentleman came forward to assist them, she hurried on, leaving Mrs. Harrington to repeat her thanks, and Elsie to utter a few thankful words, to which he listened with more interest than he had done to all the widow's raptures.

They were in the carriage: the door closed; the stranger gave his parting bow, but Elizabeth only leaned further back in her seat, and they drove on, leaving him standing in the road.

"His name is North," said Mrs. Harrington. "Such an adventure! What will Mr. Mellen say?"

"We won't tell him yet," Elsie replied; "it would only frighten him. Be sure and not mention it, dear Mrs. Harrington."

"Oh, of course not,—just as you like. But what a handsome man that was! North—North? Who can he be?"

"Whoever he is, he has saved our lives," said Elsie.

"Yes, yes! But, dear Miss Fuller, how oddly you acted!"

"Do put up your veil, Bessie," added Elsie.

"Elizabeth obeyed, showing her face, pale and shaken still.

"I was very much frightened," she said; "I think my side was hurt a little—that was why I fainted."

She made no other answer to their wonders and questions, and they drove rapidly back to Mrs. Harrington's house.

The stranger stood upon the porch of the hotel, looking after the carriage as long as it was in sight, with a strange, inexplicable expression upon his handsome face.

After a time, he roused himself, mounted his horse, and rode slowly back to the city.

CHAPTER II.

On the shores of Long Island, where the ocean heaves in its whitest and most crystalline surf, a small cove had broken itself into the slopes of an irregular hill, after generations of beating storms and crumbling past, taking a crescent shape, and forming one of the most picturesque bits of landscape to be found along the coast. The two points or promontories that stretched their green arms to the ocean were clothed with thickly growing white-pines, scattered with hemlocks, and a few grand old oaks. The country sloped beautifully down to this bright sheet of water, and swept around it in rocky points and broken groves, giving glimpses of rich grassland, more luxuriantly cultivated than is usual to that portion of the island. As you looked on the scene from the water, a house was visible on the sloping hillside, and came in full view as the shore was approached. It was a noble stone mansion, old as the hills, people were used to say, and solid as their foundations. The house had been a stately residence before the revolution, and, without an earthquake or a ton of powder, would remain such for a century to come.

Whatever the body of the house had been in the good old times, when ornament was little thought of, it had been rendered picturesque by lofty towers, and additional wings with oriel windows and carved balconies in one direction; while the other wing clasped in a conservatory, of which nothing could be seen from the distance but wave upon wave of rolling crystal emerald, tinted like ocean waves by the wealth of green plants they covered.

This was the residence of Grantley Mellen, inherited from a maternal uncle just after his first struggle in life commenced. It was backed by many a fruitful field and broad stretch of timber-land, which altogether went under the title of Piney Cove.

Grantley Mellen, since he became possessed of the estate, had completed the work his uncle commenced when he built the two grand towers, and a more picturesque building could not well be imagined, with its broad lawn, its clumps of forest trees, and that magnificent ocean view, which was broken only by the pine groves on the two points.

This was by no means the only house visible from the cove. As you turned the southern point, a village was seen down the coast; and about half way between that and the pines was a wooden house, brown and weather-beaten, standing unsheltered on the bleak shore. Back of this house, shutting out all prospect but that of the ocean, was a tall cliff, covered with ragged yellow pines and stunted cedars, from which on stormy nights many a quivering flame had shot upward, luring ships to their ruin. Still, with this grim protest against the name looming behind it, the lonely old house was called "The Sailor's Safe Anchor," and was known all along the coast as a fishing-lodge and small tavern.

But once within the cove, you saw no sign of habitation save the mansion house and its appurtenances. Grantley Mellen had been some weeks at the cove, renovating and preparing the house for the reception of his bride; for it was understood that he intended henceforth to make it his permanent residence. But the wedding-day was near, and he had gone up to the city, leaving the last preparations to the care of a singular class of household servants, one of his uncle's philanthropic importations from the South, where he had owned a plantation, emancipated all its slaves except a half dozen, that would only accept liberty on condition that they might follow the old man to his northern home.

Grantley had accepted this sable household with the general inheritance, for, spoiled and pampered as family negroes are apt to be, they had proved generally faithful and obedient.

Though a very reverential and submissive person when her master was present, Clorinda, who had appointed herself housekeeper of the establishment, was apt to get on to a very high horse indeed when there was no superior authority to hold her in check; and, on this particular occasion, she was absolutely what she declared herself—"chief cook and bottle-washer."

This sable functionary was very busy two or three mornings before the time set for her master's wedding, not only in the general preparations for that event, but with a grand idea of her own, which she was earnestly carrying into effect. If the house was going into the hands of a new mistress, the colored persons of the establishment would commemorate the event in advance with a grand entertainment.

To this end, Clorinda, who had appointed herself lady patroness in general, had betaken herself to Mr. Mellen's library with Caleb Benson, the high-shouldered, bald-headed occupant of "The Sailor's Safe Anchor," and the person whose prerogative it had been to supply fresh fish to the family at Piney Cove. Besides this, he performed a good deal of work in the grounds, and made himself generally useful.

This morning he had come up to the house at Miss Clorinda's special request, in order to assist in the literary department of the coming entertainment. Neither Clorinda nor any of her dark compeers could read or write, but invitations must be sent out after the most approved fashion; and Clorinda had a fancy that the neighborhood of so many books would be a great help, so she led Caleb with august ceremony into the spacious library, and laid a quantity of pink note-paper and yellow envelopes, all covered and embossed with silver, on the table before him.

"Jes set down, Mr. Caleb, and write dem tings out special," she said, rolling up a great leathern chair, and patting its glossy green cushions enticingly. "Set down, Caleb, an' write, for I know yer kin."

Caleb laid his cap on one chair, and his stout walking-stick across another. Then he rubbed the hard palms of his hands fiercely together, and sat down on the edge of the chair, that threatened to roll from under him each moment.

"Now, Miss Clo, what is it you want of me? I'm on hand for a'most any thing."

"I knows you is, and ales wuz, Caleb; that's why I trusted yer wid de delicatest part ob dis entertainment. 'Member it's premptory to de weddin'."

"Preparatory, isn't that the correct word, Miss Clo?"

"Well, prepostatory, if you ain't suited, Caleb Benson."

"Wal, wal; don't git out to sea afore the tide's up, old woman."

"Ole woman! Ole woman yerself, Caleb Benson!" retorted Clorinda.

"Jes so," answered the fisherman, seizing upon the largest steel pen to be found, and grinding it on the bottom of a bronze inkstand. Clorinda put both hands to her mouth, and would have cried out; but, remembering how few teeth she had to be set on edge, thought better of it, and stood in glum silence while Caleb made his preparations.

That remarkable functionary had a piece of business before him which threatened to task the resources of his genius to their full extent, but he was not the man to shrink from the responsibility which his desire to retain a high place in the powerful Clorinda's good-will had induced him to accept.

"Now, then," said Caleb, giving his chair another hitch, dipping his pen afresh into the inkstand, and holding it suspended over the paper, with a threatening drop slowly collecting on the nib. "Now we'll get under weigh jest as soon as you give the signal."

"Tak car ob de ink!" shrieked Clorinda, pulling the paper from under his hand in time to preserve it from the great blot of ink that descended on the table-cover instead. "Dat's a purty splotch, now, ain't it; yer a nice hand, Caleb Benson!"

"'Tain't much, nobody'll ever notice it," said Caleb, wiping it off with his coat-sleeve. "Don't raise a breeze about nothin', Clorindy."

"Don't talk to me 'bout breezes," she retorted, in an irritated tone, for Clorinda, I am sorry to say, had not even a fair portion of the small stock of patience which usually falls to our sex. "I 'clar to goodness dere ain't nothin' so stupid as a man. I jis hate de hull sect."

"Oh, no you don't, Clorindy," he replied, teazingly; "you hain't got so old yet but what you can squint as good as the youngest of 'em when there's a fancy mulatter chap round."

"What do yer mean by ole!" cried Clorinda. "I tells you what, Caleb Benson, ef yer only undertuk this job to be a aggrawatin' and insultin' me, you and I'se done! I ain't gwine to stand sich trash now I tells yer! Is dis yer gratitude fur all I'se done? Who got ye de run ob de house, I'd like to know; who sot ye up for selling better fish than anybody in de neighborhood; who nebber said nothin' when de soap-fat all disappeared, and you said it had melted in de sun; who fixed up mince-pies fur you; who—"

There is no telling to what extent Clorinda might have carried her revelations, but the old man interrupted her with all the excuses he could think of at so short notice.

"I was just funning, Clorindy; don't go off the handle. In course I want to obleege you. Thar, thar! Now what do you want to have wrote? We ain't going to quarrel—old friends like us."

"Ain't we!" cried Clorinda, threateningly. "Then jis you keep a civil tongue, dat's all. Times is changed, and der's a new misses a comin'; but you may all onderstand dat I rules de kitchen yet, and I'se gwine to."

"Sartin, sartin! Wal now, about these here billet ducks," said Caleb, cunningly; "I must hurry up, you see, or I shan't get round afore night."

Clorinda forgot her injured feelings in her excitement about the party, and ordered him to work without farther delay.

"Wal," said Caleb, spreading out the paper again, "I'll leave a blank for the names, that'll save trouble. I reckon you want somethin' like this—'Miss Clorindy and Miss Victory's compliments—'"

"What's Vic got to do with it, I'd like to know?" Clo burst in; "it's my party, just 'member dat. It's enough to hev her company, widout her settin' up for a hostage."

"Any thing to suit," said Caleb, patiently. "Wal, then I'll say that Miss Clorindy hopes to hev the pleasure of Mr. so and so's company, and wants to see you to a little tea drinkin' this evening."

"Lord!" cried Clo. "If ye hain't got no more larnin' dan dat, I'd better find somebody else! Do yer tink I got pink paper and silver-sprigged 'welopers to write sich trash on? Tea drinkin' indeed! Why dis here's to be a rigler scrumptious, fash'nable 'tainment! I want yer to say, 'Miss Clorindy consents her most excruciating compliments, and begs to state that, owing to de 'spicious ewent ob de master's weddin', she takes dis opportunity to 'quest de 'stinguished company ob Mr. Otheller Jones for dis evenin', to a reparatory 'tainment; and she would furder mention dat dar will be plenty ob weddin'-cake, wid a ring in it, ice cream in pinnacles, red and white, and a dance in de laundry to fiddles.' Dar, dat's somethin' like."

"Yes," said Caleb, quite breathless; "now tell to me as I get ahead, 'cause it's a mighty long rigmarole."

"Oh," added Clorinda, "den at the bottom you must put—'P. S.—Yaller gloves and 'rocur pumps, if convenient.'"

That last touch of elegance quite upset Caleb, and he began to think that if Clorinda was black, and couldn't write her name, she really was a wonderful woman. Clo was so softened by his applause that they got on very harmoniously, and the invitations were written out in the most remarkable manner, in Caleb's largest hand. As it was an affair of importance, he put capitals at the beginning of nearly every word, and sometimes in the middle, and altogether the writing made such a show, that Clorinda was quite delighted.

"Don't forget the P. S.," said she. "Now, rat rug!"

"Yes," said Caleb, making a tremendous flourish. "P. S.—Yaller gloves and 'rocur pumps, if convenient."

Clo inspected the first note as carefully as if she could read, expressed her approbation, and urged him on, till, with much labor, Caleb completed the requisite number, put them safely in their gorgeous envelopes, and directed them to the persons Clorinda mentioned.

"Now, Jo be as quick as you kin," she said; "I'se got to go back to see to tings—can't trust dat Vie! Wal, I guess Mr. Dolf'll see de difference 'tween folks and folks."

Dolf was a special weakness of Clorinda's, though it was to be feared that it was only her reputation for accumulated wages which induced that dashing yellow individual to treat her with any attention.

Caleb received his last instructions, and started on his mission, which was successfully fulfilled. Then he took his way homeward before going back to the house to acquaint Clorinda with the result, which was equal to her expectations, and that was saying a great deal.

As he approached the little tavern, he saw a gentleman standing on the steps, with a colored servant guarding a pile of guns, fishing-rods, and other tackle, with which idle men frequently come down from the city to endure Caleb's humble fare for a while, and gratify their masculine propensity for destruction.

But this gentleman was a stranger to Caleb, and he looked at him enviously, though with the approbation which his appearance would have elicited from more refined judges.

"I suppose you are Caleb Benson," the gentleman said, throwing away the end of a cigar, as the old man mounted the steps.

"Me, thing call me so, sometimes," replied Caleb; for the instincts of his birthplace had not deserted him, and he never answered a question in a straightforward manner, if he could help it.

"Some friends of mine told me I could find very comfortable quarters with you," pursued the stranger. "I have run down to see the place, and take a day's duck shooting. I want two good rooms if I can, and leave my traps here, so that I can come over whenever I feel like it."

"I want to know?" said Caleb. "Wal, I guess I could fix you up, if you ain't too particular."

"I am not at all particular what I pay," replied the gentleman; "I suppose that is satisfactory."

"I ain't going to say 'bout dat," returned Caleb, his eyes beginning to twinkle at the prospect of a liberal guest, who meant to come frequently.

"I notice you'd like to see what I can do in the way of rooms, Mr.,—Wal, I don't think I quite ketched your name."

"Mr. North," he said, smiling at the man's shrewdness.

He stood for a few moments talking with Caleb, and though the old fellow was not easy to please, he was quite fascinated by the stranger's manner; and, having a very vague idea of princes, he was almost inclined to think that this splendid-looking creature might be one who had strayed over from his native kingdom on a fishing excursion.

"Now let me see the rooms," said Mr. North. "I suppose my name may as well carry the traps up stairs—the place is certain to attract me."

Caleb looked at the stylish colored individual who was leaning, in a graceful attitude, over the luggage, and a brilliant idea struck him.

"I say you," he called, "I've got a ticket that'll just suit you, Mr.——What's your name?"

"If you are redressing me," replied the sable gentleman, majestically, "my name is Mr. Julius Hannibal."

"Want to know?" said Caleb. "Wal, here's an invite that was just meant for a fine-looking chap like you."

He drew one of the notes from his pocket and held it out, and Hannibal took it with considerable dignity, doubtful how to receive such unceremonious compliments.

"You are in luck, Ju," said his master. "What's it all about, Mr. Benson?"

"Why, Mr. Mellen—he's one of our rich men down here—is going to be married this week, so his servants thought they'd have a blow-out to-night, for fear they wouldn't get the chance after the new mistress comes."

"Go, by all means," said North, almost eagerly. "Make all the friends you can, Ju, for we shall be here a good deal—go, certainly."

Hannibal drew himself up, bowed to his master, and said to Caleb in a stately way—

"I shall be most happy to mixture in the festive throng, but would most 'spectfully state to Miss Clorindy that moreour pumps is banished from prime society, and only patting leathers is worn—but these is trifles."

North took the note from his hand, and could not repress his merriment as he read it; but Caleb received that as a compliment, and looked so serious, that it was easy to discover what share he had taken in the matter.

"Flunnies of no cream, and a dance in the landing," read Mr. North." "Why choose the landing, Mr. Benson?"

"Loundry, laundry! I guess its blotted a leetle."

"Oh yes—I see! Upon my word, it is quite magnificent! So Mr.—Mellen, did you call him?—is married this week. Well, well, that's a fete that overtakes most of us, sooner or later. We will go up stairs now, if you please, Mr. Benson."

The old man led the way up to the rooms which he kept in readiness for visitors of the first stamp, and which had been made quite comfortable by the various strides of furniture that the different occupants had presented to Caleb.

The bargain was not a difficult one, as Mr. North appeared quite willing to pay Benson his own price, and the old fellow was only in doubt as to what extent it would be safe to carry his extortion.

When they went down stairs again, the steamboat had just come in to the landing, and Dolf, Mr. Mellen's man, was making his way to the tavern, having come down to the island to see that the house was in readiness, and dazzle the eyes of the females by his wonderful new clothes.

"That's just the ticket," said Caleb; "Mellen's man'll take you over to the place, Mr. Julius, and show you a good time going there and coming. You'll have to fix your master up first, so you can come with Dolf!"

While Julius was going through the ceremonies of an introduction, Mr. North called him away, and seemed to be giving him some very particular directions. When he came back, Dolf, who was greatly rejoiced at his coming, said, anxiously,

"Won't he let you go?"

"Of course," answered Hannibal, but a little uneasily. "It was only about a fishing-rod I left behind."

CHAPTER III.

The day wore on. Every thing was in a state of preparation in the old mansion-house. The last evening of the week is generally an open visit down in the pantry, that its pasted surface might harden into beauty. The ice-cream freezers, ready to yield up their precious contents, were set away in a cool place, and Vic'ry, a pretty mulatto girl, that had come to the house an orphan child, was busy carving red and white roses out of a little pile of turnips and beets, which, shaped blood-beets, intended to ornament divers plates of cold turkey and chicken salad. This pretty fancy work was carried on in the front basement or housekeeper's room, while a little wood-fire glowed in the open stove, and things from the kitchen. Clorinda, the moving spirit of all this commotion, rushed from basement to kitchen, and then to the pantry and store-room, in a state of exhilaration that carried fresh currents of air with her wherever she went. This was the great day of her life, and she felt its importance in every cord of her strong frame.

"Now," she called out, addressing Victoria with a pompous lift of the head, "'cer can come up stairs and help prepare de parlor room an's so bad but that I've seen wuss; but there's 'muff of 'em, so cum 'long o' me, and shut up de drawn'r room winder-blinds."

Victoria ran up stairs, two steps at a leap, and, in a breath, was shutting out the beautiful sunset, and quenching a thousand flashes of arrowy rays that were streaming in from the glowing ocean.

"Now," said Clorinda, as the last shutter was closed, "'cer can take the spy-glass and see if any passon is wobble comin' up from de pint."

Victoria was only too glad. She sprang across the tessellated pavement of the hall, and seizing the glass, swept the shore with a slow movement of the hand, from right to left.

"Nary a passon coming," she said, laying down the glass, with a disappointed air.

"Don't talk," snapped Clorinda, snatching up the glass and levelling it fiercely at the ocean. "Jes like yer, now—can't see yer hand afore yer face. There's a boat put inter the cove whilst yer was looken, and here am Clorindy to tell on it."

"So thar sun," cried Victoria, snatching the glass, "a-comin' full split across the meddler. Now for it!"

The little limited mulatto gave a hop on to the portico, and another to the soft grass of the lawn, whence she ran, like a deer, towards our sorrowing friend, with high shoulders, who was crossing towards the house at a far brisker pace than was usual to him.

"Han yer give the instergations!" cried Victoria, out of breath with swift running. "Am the folks a coming to spend de night?"

Caleb looked wonderfully grave, and attempted to shake his head; but Vic saw, by the gleam in his eyes, that it was all pretence and clapping her hands like a little gypsy as she was, dashed into a break-down on the grass, calling out, "Vic, Vic, I told yer—I told yer so!"

"Well, what will you all dis muss 'bout?" exclaimed Clorinda, sailing out to the lawn with a broad straw flat overshadowing her like an umbrella. "Well, Caleb, I hopes ebbery ting am pernicious 'bout de party."

Caleb, who was an old fisherman, reared at Cape Cod, and not to be put out of his way easily, occupied plenty of time before he answered. The afternoon was warm, so he took the oil-cloth cap from his head, and wiped its baldness vigorously with an old silk handkerchief, then deposited the handkerchief in the crown of his cap, and settled himself into his garments with a shake, sailor fashion.

Clorinda's broad flat vibrated with its wearer's impatience, and Victoria was standing down the grass, and mouncing the old man with her fist during the whole of his slow performance.

"Now," she said, "now!"

"Wal, the long and the short of it is, they're all a-coming, especially from Squir Rhodes. Miss Jessie was very much set at him, I'm sorry to say, and said his colored people hadn't much chance for fun anyhow, and shouldn't be kept back from what come along in a mat'rial way."

"Squir Rhodes was also a passon as I 'spected," said Clorinda. "Let me see how many of 'em will count up."

She made rather bungling work in counting her fingers, going over them three or four times, and getting terribly puzzled in the end.

In the midst of her confusion, Victoria gave a little cry of dismay, and made a rush for the house, where she instantly threw off her apron and tucked it under one of the hall mats.

Clorinda, filled with indignation by this strange proceeding, turned in search of the cause, and so terms was Dolf, Mr. Mellen's own man, crossing up from the lawn, with two other gentlemen of color, evidently from the city.

Clorinda smoothed the broad straw flat from her head, and began to arrange her head-dress turban with both hands, thus unhappily exposing some tufts of frosty gray that had managed to creep, year after year, into her wool. After this rather sweet toilet, she drew herself up with a grand air, and marched down to receive the strangers in a glorious cloud of indignation.

"Mr. Dolf, yer welcome as hot-house peaches—and these gemmen, may I request an interdiction ?"

Dolf had just been informing his companions that the lady preaching there was not to be sneered at in any particular whatever, as she ruled the roost of Piney Cove, and had, everybody said, laid up lots of riches; besides, as for cooking, well, he could only say it was not necessary; they would see what Clorinda was in that line when the supper came on.

This speech had prepared the strangers to receive their sable hostess with great distinction, and when she launched a stupendous courtesy at them in acknowledgment of their elaborate bows, she mutual admiration became among the whole group then and there, was an oasis in human nature.

"Miss Clorinda—Mr. Sparks, of the Metropolitan Hotel; Mr. Johnson, assistant waiter at the upper-crust gentleman, who is going to stop at the Sailor's Safe Anchor."

Clorinda had just recovered herself from one courtesy, when she took the wind in her crimson and fluttered off into a couple more without loss of time.

The neighborhood was obligated to any gemmen as brings sich passons inter de sereicty ob Piney Cove. If yer hasn't had deceived an invite from Mr. Benson, dat white passon yer seen up yander, you'll have to look out."

Clorinda took two puff envelopes from her bosom as she spoke, and gave them to Mr. Sparks, of the Metropolitan, who, like Hannibal, grinned, with a smile that flitted across her face like smoke from a furnace.

"It speaks ob pumps and yeller gloves as bein' indispensible, but I 'spects dat's nonsense as my friends dus, Dolphus, can't be spected ter imply."

The gentlemen smiled in bland thankfulness, exchanging a glance of ivory and second-hand white kids in the operation.

"You didn't expect me," whispered Dolf, joining Clorinda when she turned to conduct the party to the house, "but the last will push, I guess you're not offended at my bringing these fellows?"

"Fended!" exclaimed Clorinda, stepping upon the grass as if it had been egg-shells, that she had resolved not to crush, "when was yer Clo ebber 'fended wid yer, Dolphus?"

"Poor fellows," said Dolf, looking back at his friends, "they see my felicity and are ready to burst with envy."

"Am dey?" exclaimed Clorinda, bridling—"poor fellers; but I guess dey can't help it. Dey'll up inter half a dozen, so dey am bound ter suffer."

The whole group had reached the front portico by this time. Vic, who had stolen behind the hall-door, and watched their approach through a little crevice, came forth now, blushing till the golden bronze on her cheeks burned red. Clorinda flamed up in a moment.

"What 'hab yer done wid yer apron, chile? yes march right 'bout an' get it ter once. Who ebber heam oh chile oh yer age widout apron?"

Victoria looked like the veiled like diamonds; she drew aside, leaning against the wall, with the grace of a bronze figure, half frightened out of her wits, but radiant still. She turned right and left to tell about her apron, or drive her down stairs? She cast an imploring glance at Dolf, but he looked resolutely away.

Come in, gemmen, out oh sight oh dis audacious chile," cried Clorinda, almost sweeping poor little Vic down with a flourish of her skirts.

"I," said Hannibal pompously Dolf, who had a genius for keeping out of storms. "The gentlemen were just saying, as we came up, how much they would like a walk towards the woods. So with your permission, Miss Clorinda, we will leave you to the feminine duties of the toilet; though beauty when unadorned is most adorned."

"Yes, dem de gray hairs will peek out. Hi! hi! look dar!"

These audacious words were uttered by Victoria, whose positing would could no longer be restrained.

The rest of the gentlemen fell to examining their gloves with great earnestness. Dolf made a hasty retreat through the door, calling on them to follow him, and Clorinda in her condescendency defied finger-marks on Victoria's hot cheek before she darted off to a looking-glass, and fell into a great burst of tears over the state of her treacherous turban.

"Now," said Vic, gathering herself up from the wall, and rubbing her cheek, down which great hot tears were longing with passionate violence—"Now I guess and does it, sure; she won't let me—"

"Vic! Vic!"

It was the treacherous voice of Dolf, who came strolling in from the portico.

"Vic, don't be so audacious, you lovely spitfire; go this minute and make up with her, or we've lost all chances of that new cotillion I was learning you."

"I can't! I won't!" burst forth the pretty, bronze fury, stamping down the mat and her apron under it. "She's a—she's fat cattle, thar!"

Dolf snatched the little sprite from the rug, and stopped her mouth with—no, it wasn't with his palm. John and I'd rather say no more about it.

Five minutes after, Victoria went demurely up to Clorinda, found her sitting before the glass in utter humiliation, and protested that the whole thing was nonsense. That she hadn't seen a gray hair, and the turban was awry, it must have happened when Clorinda ran up stairs in such hot haste. Victoria was sorry; oh, very, very sorry. Would Miss Clo only overlook it this once, and begin to dress for the ball?

Clorinda's heart swelled like a rising tide under Vic's hypocritical condolence, but she could not be quite convinced about the turban; she was a woman of reason, however, and felt that the evil was not without its remedy. So she kindled an immense quantity of wax-lights, crowded them before her looking-glass, and at once commenced the mysteries of a full toilet. The result was so satisfactory when she took a survey of her pink barege dress, covered with innumerable small flounces, and the gorgeous white gauze scarf, glittering with silver, which formed a turban, with long sweeping ends falling to the left shoulder—that she melted at once towards the girl who had helped to make her so resplendent.

"Jes see what splendiferous idees that chile Miss Elsie hab, Vic," she cried, shaking the flounces into place over her crinoline. "Now 'cerves she never seen dis sumptious dress more an once, but sent it down here good as new; 'sides de turban, jes see it shine. Yes, Vic, I forgives yer, so shut up, and don't look inter yer eyes no more."

Vic darted away, and in a marvellously little time came back, her hair braided in with scarlet ribbons, and a dress of several gorgeous colors fluttering from her in every movement of her graceful form. She was fanning herself before the glass when Clorinda started up.

"What an dat?"

"Dat? why it am a carriage. Oh, golly, golly, they'in coming," cried Vic, wild with delight, and away the two darkies went down the great staircase and into the hall, where the front doors of the house were commenced with astonishing elegance.

Two or three wagons sat down their sable loads, and directly the whole house was in a stir throughout all the basement story, and the laundry floor vibrated to the elastic tread of dancers, whose natural love of music gave grace and spirit to every movement. The kitchen was filled with the euphonious strains of music, and in every particular Clorinda's ball was a success.

At last Clorinda disappeared from the laundry, and Dolf followed her into the supper-room, where he exclaimed in raptures at the gorgeousness of the table.

"Yes," said the housekeeper, modestly, "but how am we to get 'long widout wine: Marza Mellen carried off de keys, and without dat—"

She was interrupted by Dolf producing a key which had been resting in his pocket; "catch me unprepared; I thought about the wine."

Clorinda almost embraced Dolf in her delight, but he did not seem to observe the demonstration in his haste to reach the wine-cellar.

When he came back with his arms full of long-necked bottles, Clorinda's happiness was complete, and directly after there was a rush of feet and an abrupt silence of the two fiddlers. The company were come into supper. After the first rush of food had subsided a little, Dolf placed himself at the head of the table, with a corkscrew in one hand and a bottle in the other.

"Ladies," he whispered Virginia, "I hope dar's lots of pop in it."

A rushing explosion, and the rich gurgle of amber wine ran into the crowding goblets satisfied her completely.

Dolf lifted his glass and prepared himself for a speech.

"Ladies of the fair sect, and gentlemen—"

That moment Mr. Julius Hannibal, who had allowed himself to be crowded towards the door, stole out and went softly down the hall with the stately motion of a cat, he crept along the hall and opened the front door.

A man came out from the shadows of the portico, and glided into the hall. It was Mr. North, Hannibal's master.

CHAPTER IV.

A CROWD of carriages was in front of the church—a throng of richly-dressed people filled the aisles, and the bridal party in sacred veils never witness, save on the occasion of a grand wedding. Mrs. Harrington had done her pleasant work famously. Not a fashionable person among her own friends, or a distinguished one known to bridegroom or bride, had been omitted. Thus the stately church was crowded. Snowy dresses and rare and costly ornaments; lace, glittering silks, and a flash of jewels were seen on every hand, fluttering in the dim religious light around smiling faces and grace-fully bending figures.

A buzz of whispered conversations rose from nave to gallery; for a large portion of that brilliant throng had never seen the bride, and curiosity was on the qui vive regarding her.

In one of the front pews a friend of Mrs. Harrington was sitting with a group of her own set, and conversing in whispers. Of course she knew all about it, and could tell them why Mr. Mellen, the great catch of the season, had chosen a wife so utterly unknown to their set.

Certainly Mrs. Chase knew all about it—had the particulars from her sweet friend, Mrs. Harrington, who was, they all knew, a sort of lady patroness to the affair. Would she tell? Of course—why not? There was no secret about it now, and it might be ten minutes before the bridal party came in.

(To be continued.)

I. THE WINTER CARNIVAL AT ST. LOUIS—THE MISSISSIPPI FROZEN OVER.—FROM A SKETCH BY

H BY G. R. ELLSBURY. 2. THE SPORTS OF THE SEASON IN THE CENTRAL PARK, NEW YORK.

THE WINDS.

BY W. L. BERTRAM.

Thin winds of the spring—they are heralds bold,
They announce o'er land and sea
The retreat of the winter, weary and old,
The flowers' new birth from the loosening mould,
And the coming of bird and bee;
And the hearts of all rejoice, rejoice,
And the blood of our veins leaps light,
As they trumpet, all day, the queen, their choice,
And the triumph is felt, that swells their voice,
In their loud huzzas at night.

The winds of the summer are lovers true
Of all things bright and fair,
From the tender flowers they kiss the dew,
And sing soft songs at the daily woo,
Then faint in the fields of air.
They fold their wings in the sultry noon,
From the sun confounded night;
But they wake at the cricket's and beetle's tune,
And sigh with the maids beneath the moon,
In the wild, luxurious night.

The winds of the autumn are mourners all
For the beauty passed away;
And they sob and sigh as the dead leaves fall,
While a misty veil, like a funeral pall,
Is hung o'er the dreary day.
They mourn the fate of the fading flowers,
That the frosts have touched with blight;
They wander abroad with the tall cloud showers,
And a strange, wild feeling the soul o'erpowers,
As they moan in the ghostly night.

The winds of the winter are warriors dread,
From the realms of ice and snow;
Terror and death from their wings are shed,
And desolation it is spread,
Wherever their legions go.
The iron ranks of the woods they break,
And the mighty grave down with fright;
From their ire a speedy flight we make,
And, safe at home, how we shiver and shake,
At their terrible shouts at night!

LINDA.

The Dancing Girl of the Café St. Nicol.

By Mrs. M. A. Denison.

CHAPTER XIII.

It was indeed true that the wound which seemed to have endangered life was yet not fatal. When carried to the dead-house, where strangers are generally conveyed, some one of the bearers detected the motion of life. A surgeon was sent for, who pronounced his state temporary suspension of the faculties, and had him sent to one of the hospitals. There the surgeon whom Lily met, distinguished as much for his generous dealings with the poor as his great skill and immense practice, became interested in his case, and Lily, under Providence, was led to the very person who could best relieve her terrible suspense.

The hospital was a large, commodious building, none better in all France. The wards were skilfully constructed, so that each patient could have what seemed the luxury of privacy. The patients in the room where our poor young friend Eugene lay were generally of the better classes, better I mean in purse and privileges. It was late in the afternoon, the sun shone in brilliantly, but its fallen rays were jealously screened, so that it was not too bright for the faint eyes of sickness.

"Nurse," cried a weak voice.

The cleanly, white capped woman was instantly beside him.

"Has nobody been here? Has nobody inquired after me?"

"Nobody but the doctor, dear heart," was the reply, in a cheery voice.

"I thought I saw my sister—I suppose I was dreaming. They must hear of it soon—my mother and my sister—pray God it may not kill my poor mother."

"Oh! no, some kind, good friend will tell her, but keep up your spirits. You I see the doctor coming—and, by-the-way, my dear, there's a lady with him—a young lady, too. Now, don't move, don't speak, don't be excited in the least, because if you do I must tell the doctor that you've not been in a fit state to be seen. Ah! you in a pretty young girl, and surely by her face I know she is your sister."

Lily came forward, but under the doctor's training she was as calm and quiet as if she had but just parted from him.

"Oh, Eugene! Eugene!"—and there she stopped, sat down on the side of the bed, took his wasted hand in hers, and strove to check her emotion. She grew somewhat faint, but after a few moments it passed away, and he was calmly happy.

"What will mother think of me?" he murmured.

"She will only be too thankful that you are spared," said Lily. "Now, you are to be taken to a private house, and I am to be your nurse. Mr. Belmont, a friend of the kind surgeon, says you may stay at his residence, and he well cared for till you recover. He says he knows you very well by reputation, for I told him what you wrote, and what your signature was. Oh! Eugene, if I knew you I'd write under my real name, in case of accidents, you know."

"Not many such accidents as these are likely to come off, I hope," said Eugene, smiling drearily. "Never again, under whatever provocation, will I allow the hand of any man to be raised against me. I feel in the air, thank God!"

"Oh! Eugene, we never dreamed, mamma and I, that you would be a duellist. But never mind, all it is all over. This experience has cured you, I am sure."

"How did you leave mother?"

"Ill, but by to-morrow she will be quite well. That kind Mr. Belmont is going to Rouen, to see her."

"I wonder if it is the Belmont who is so rich?" murmured Eugene. He endowed a college, I believe. He is an Englishman by birth."

"I dare say it is the same one," said Lily; "he must be rich, at all events he is handsome, and a great friend to literary people."

"It is the same one, I think," he said, and sighed a little.

With woman's quick perceptions, Lily interpreted that sigh.

"I have seen her," she whispered archly, "and she is as beautiful as you said."

"Oh! Lily—"

"You know very well who I mean—Madamoiselle Linda. She's a little darling, and looks all good as she is pretty."

"Where did you see her?"

Then Lily had to tell him all; how she first saw the beautiful dancer, her solicitude on his account, her visit to the house, to all of which he listened eagerly, and smilingly.

"That has done me a world of good," he said; "shall I ever be able to rescue her from such a life?"

"Why, doubts that you are to be rich and famous? I am sure I do not, especially after going through such a dreadful experience. You will be careful now; but that awful Monsieur Louis, where is he? she should be rid of the blessed man."

"They say he will not dare come back to Paris," said Eugene; "the police are on his track, for he has been guilty of other and graver crimes, so I think I shall never be troubled with him again. To think what a villain he would have made me!"

Two days after that Eugene had gained greatly. Mr. Belmont had returned, and reported that Lily's mother was overjoyed at the good news, that she left her bed the same day, and was making preparations for her visit. He added also that Eugene should be moved immediately, as everything was prepared for his comfort. Mr. Belmont was a bachelor. Mr. Belmont was encouraging Lily to his heart's content. The child had never seen such splendor as met her eyes in that magnificent dwelling. Everything of the most gold wish seemed ready to her hand. Her brother was placed in a large and most elegant chamber, on a couch fit for the occupancy of a king, and Lily was installed by his self-ordained to be his companion. A good nurse was engaged, and altogether Lily had never been so regally served.

Under this kind nursing Eugene improved rapidly.

Not so poor little Linda. The troupe left Rouen for Paris, and Linda was in the intelligence that her boy was still living reached in the widow's ear. From village to village, and from town to city they carried her, but she failed daily and perceptibly. Even Madame Rodin could not encourage her encouragement such an automaton. The woman went with her company, leaving nurse Margrave at a wretched village, which was also in the first stages of a typhoid fever. The poor nurse was for a time overwhelmed with their misfortune. Her darling's sickness absorbed all her faculties; she did not apprehend or think of other dangers.

Looking over her baggage at the small tavern at which the two were stopping, she found, to her horror and dismay, that they had been robbed of her money and many of her clothes. Her watch, also, which she had put aside as needing repairs, was gone; and in a pamphlet of the latter, the poor creature rushed downstairs proclaiming her loss.

"A pretty story," said the landlord, a hardhearted type of his class, "and a likely one. I'm not so easily taken in."

"But, sir, we were travelling, I and the child, with Madame Rollo's troupe. She will tell you that we are not liars."

"Oh! aye! any of them can trump up a story—ye deserve to be robbed, going among such company. And that child is not yours. It's my opinion that ye'd both better tramp to the poorhouse, for I shan't turn my tavern into a hospital. I can't tell you, so you may pack your trucks, you and the girl, as soon as you can. At any rate, you can't stay in this house another night."

This was discouraging and very cruel. Nurse Margrave knew Madame Rodin, and Linda, Linda, who laid in a feverish sleep, was aroused by her entrance. Her wild eyes turned imploringly to the door.

"Oh! Margrave," she said, faintly, "don't feel bad, we'll get another engagement in a few days. I'll wish I had an accident."

"I don't know, child, where we can get anything," said the nurse, hiding her tears; "I begin to feel discouraged."

"Why, what is the matter, Margrave?" cried Linda, noticing the change in her voice.

"My poor child, we have lost everything."

"What can you mean?" cried Linda, in terror.

"Our money, child—all our money is stolen, and I have only a few francs in my purse."

"Oh, Margrave! don't be very dreadful," said Linda, pressing her slight hands upon her burning forehead. "What are we going to do?"

"I don't know, child; it seems as if Providence had deserted us."

"No, no; you must not say that. It is bad—but—there is the diamond ring—"

"That has gone, too, child. It was in the little box with our money."

"Oh, Margrave! Then we can't stay here. I must get well, indeed I must;" and she attempted to rise from the bed, but, weak and giddy, fell back again. "My head is dizzy," she said piteously, and my hands burn so. Oh, dear! I wish we were in Rouen; those kind people, his mother and his sister, would care for us. Oh, I am sure of it."

"Yes, child, I wish we were in Rouen, for more reasons than one; but we are not, we are thirty miles by railway from Rouen."

"That is not so very long a journey," said Linda, piteously.

"No, not if you were well, poor child."

"Then I must be well!" exclaimed Linda, with decision. "We must go to Rouen. Nurse, how much money have you?"

"Enough to get there and buy food on the way; a little more—we should not perish."

"Then get ready, nurse, and leave me to myself. I know I can get up strength enough to go."

The woman hesitated, but what else could she do? They were evidently on the way to pauperism, while at Madame Atolle's she felt as if they could be received and cared for, at least not turned upon the town, as they were to be here.

"It don't look much like finding your brother, now," said the nurse, almost querulously.

"Never mind, Margrave. Don't you know you have often told me that it is darkest always just before day? And it has been more than once. If God sees fit to find my brother; if not, I am sure he that He is going to take me away. There, don't cry, nurse. I'm sure you would not stay long behind, and for all we know, my poor brother may be in Heaven."

"Child, you tear my heart all to pieces, talking that way."

"Then I am sorry; I won't talk so again," and the little hot hand went caressingly over the withered face of the nurse. "But I'm sure I've been a great care and trouble to you. I've been a poor foolish thing, who would worry over some things and make myself miserable. But you love me, nurse?"

"Indeed, child," she added the woman, bending down and kissing her feverish cheek. "This much I know, I am old and worthless, and should not be missed, but God will take care of you."

"And of you, too, nurse," said Linda, piously. "Now go down and get your dinner, then wrap me up well and call a carriage. Once in the cars, there'll be a soft cushioned seat for me, and sleep. The sight of his sister will cure me, and I know I can rest there."

Poor child! She had to be helped down and placed in the carriage, and when they reached the railway the old nurse carried her in her arms and fed the dear child with slow drops of fire. Still she bore her burden patiently, never once murmuring, hiding her face from observation, lest the passengers should think her disorder infectious, and arrived at Rouen, in a state of restlessness and bewilderment that made her almost incapable of thinking. Calling for a carriage, she threw the money to the coachman and told him to take her to Madame Atolle's. The coach stopped at a splendid mansion, from which lights flashed everywhere, for it was evening, and the nurse was greatly vexed by repeals of laughter and singing voices. The poor nurse had almost got out of the carriage before she perceived that it was not Madame Atolle's.

"Where I wait to go there is little flower-garden in front, and the house is not large and gay," she said.

"Oh, you should have said the widow Atolle's," said the coachman, slamming the coach door to and driving off again.

The baskets in her arms had grown heavier, and the low moans were indicative of pain. When they stopped—at the right house this time—the poor nurse was unable to alight, for the restless strength enough to stagger into the hall and there sank down upon a lounge, her charge in her arms. Madame Atolle came forward somewhat startled at the manner of her visitor's entrance.

"My good woman," she said, recalling at sight of the burden she bore, "you have made a mistake. I do not entertain strangers."

The kindly voice reassured the nurse.

"Oh, no, madame. You do not know me, you never saw me, but I am Linda's nurse, the dancing child. Pity our misfortune, madame, and give us at least a bed for the night. I have been robbed of all her earnings, and we are penniless."

Madame Atolle stooped down.

"Is not this the little dancing-girl?" she asked, startled at her appearance.

"Yes, madame. Your poor son knew her—knew how innocent and good she was. And, madame, I implore you to allow her to lie on at last. She is now worried into a fever."

"Poor child!" said the widow, pityingly. "So she is sick, and you have been unfortunate. You shall not be weary, too. Have you carried her all the journey?"

"In these arms," replied the old madame.

"Then sit still, I will send one of the servants to take her upstairs. She shall be put in a good bed, and I will send for a physician. My child has placed you under my charges, and I would not turn a sufferer from my doors."

"Oh, madame, how can I repay you?" cried the old nurse, joyfully.

"I am repaid, good woman, for all I have ever suffered. My son is restored to me."

"What blessed days, madame, you were dead!"

"Who was thought to be dead," said the grateful mother. "I thank God that, through the kindest care and the best of nursing, he has recovered—or is recovering."

"My poor darling!" exclaimed the nurse, with tearful eyes, "I fear I shall lose her, she was always so dear."

"Oh, no!" said the kind Madame Atolle, as the servant took the light creature in her arms and carried her upstairs, "she is very ill, but not dying. I think we shall save her if we have faith and good attendance. They work miracles."

CHAPTER XIV.

It is no wonder that Lily's eyes were bright and her mouth and cheeks all dimples. Lily was at home again, her brother by her side, though still very weak and pale, and Lily was the promised bride of Monsieur Belmont. Yes, he had wooed and won this sweet pearl, and apparently did he prove his gratitude. Lily had just returned. It was chilly weather now, and her furs had dropped from her shoulders, rich sables they were, a gift from one who prized her above all the world. On a lounge near her brother's knee, looking almost as happy as herself. One might have detected, however, a sadness in the dark eye that told of some secret sorrow.

"Isn't it good to be at home, Eugene? I'm sure I thought I should like Paris, and so it is a good place to stay in for a while. But this dear, quiet home! Herbert says I may stay here six months in the year if I wish to. He intends buying property here—has, he says, for some time. Oh, mamma, have you heard anything about the poor little Linda?"

A look of caution from her mother, which she did not understand.

"Yes, my dear, I have heard from her. Come into the other room and put your furs away. My dear," she whispered, as Lily followed her, "the poor child is in this house, dangerously ill."

"Oh, mamma!" cried Lily, clasping her hands. "Is it possible for me one moment to be completely happy without some misfortune comes. In this house?"

"Yes, my dear. She has been here a week, and is so ill that we despair of her recovery."

"Oh, is not that dreadful! Just when Eugene has recovered."

"He must not know it yet, my dear; besides, I could never have thought of such a consolation as that for Eugene. But he is too weak to bear the knowledge just now."

"Oh! mamma, can I see her?"

"Yes, the fever is not infectious, and you will be careful. Poor child! she raves sadly. She loved Eugene deeply innocently, but too well. Will you go up now?"

"Yes, mamma, immediately," said Lily, sadly. "You will find her sadly altered," said the mother, as they opened the door of the chamber, softly. More sadly than Lily was prepared for. She burst into tears as she saw the thin, sharpened face, the wildly bright eyes, the clustered hair and attenuated fingers. At the head of the bed, grimly wiping her eyes, sat nurse Margrave. She could not look for rest now. Her darling's life was all in all to her.

"Poor little thing!" murmured Lily, correctingly.

"That is Eugene's," said the sick girl, catching the glitter of a ring on Lily's finger. "That was his; it is mine now—my wedding-ring. Nurse Margrave, you shall be married, too, when we will, unless I go to heaven before him. Nurse didn't like him at first, but she likes him now."

Then her mind wandered to other fancies.

"I will wear my beautiful crimson to-night. Is it time? He must be at the café now; oh! how I will astonish him! I will astonish myself, for his eyes will give me triumph. He don't know how I watch for his applause. Is it time?

"He said my hair was beautiful; don't cut it off—will you, Margrave? she cried, plaintively. "It is very thick and presses on my brain, I know; but he will murmur if you cut it off. See how it glitters. Ah! I wish I were a thousand times more beautiful.

"There—it's no use—they will sing that sad song that goes through my heart so. They will cry to me to come back to the old life. I had a dream one day. I dreamed I saw him on the street, and his face was—oh! so white. I touched his forehead, and it was cold. It almost killed me. There—there—stop singing, I am weary and want to sleep."

It's that way she gabbles on from morning till night, poor child," cried the nurse. "It seems a hard fate she was born to from the beginning; the love of father and mother denied her, and many more which others, often the poorest, enjoy. Alas! poor child, I sometimes think she will only find happiness in heaven."

"Not as she is!" cried Lily.

"The doctor says this night will decide. It's the ninth. From four in the afternoon, till eleven or twelve, she goes into a stupor. He says that toward the morning, about three or four, she will drop off and wake well."

"She must not die," said Lily, softly.

"Oh, my dear, my dear, we must spend upon the wishes or wills of mortals, then might we have hope. But, alas!" and she shook her head sadly.

The night came, and with it that time of fear of hope and doubt. Poor little Linda had gone into her strange trance, and the deep shadows settled on her face. Her old nurse watched anxiously and tearfully. Lily, as she was in the chamber, quietly busy about something. She said afterwards that she was finding some nice clothes to have ready for her brother would go for a long ride after the clock struck twelve. The doctor came in at nine—for he took a strange interest in the delicate little creature—and said that there was but little time of extremity, for he hoped to awaken her. He could not do it now, he said, for nature needed a certain amount of rest, and he should not disturb it for more or soon. So the minutes crept on. Eugene was below on the lounge, asleep. He had fallen into a deep sleep, and his mother would not have him awakened him. The hours glided on, and every sense was anxious. Lily had begged to sit up in an adjoining room to read, that she might be near at the slightest warning. More and more exhausted seemed the sleeper to grow, till at last it appeared as her breathing was scarcely discernible.

"It is time to arouse her," said the doctor. The clock pointed to half-past eleven. He went to the bed and gently called her name; then he tried to force down some stimulant; then he touched her, shook her almost roughly. The poor old nurse tried, her voice almost drowned in tears, but not thing seemed of any avail. Lily stood by, with a white and frightened face. Suddenly she clasped her hands, and looked for a moment at her mother, then shook her head, glided softly from the room, and downstairs. There, kneeling by her brother, she called him. He awakened with a start.

"Why, Lily, child, how pale you look! Is it late?"

"Hush, Eugene. I came here to beseech you to save a life."

"What can you mean, child, are you still asleep, dreaming?"

"I haven't been asleep or dreaming. Oh! Eugene, I must tell you, and I believe you will have strength to bear it."

"What do you mean, sis?" and he started bolt upright.

"Eugene, that poor little dancing-girl is here. She has been—there! you turn so white you frighten me."

"No, no—tell me."

"She has been here several days sick. She is in a stupor now, and if not roused to consciousness, the result will be death. Eugene, darling, I believe you could save her."

"Yes, yes—let me go," he had risen eagerly.

"Stop—you must be cautious, too; mother does not know I have told you—I didn't dare—but, Eugene!"

He was gone.

Still they stood gathered round the bed. The doctor had nearly given up all hope now; not the faintest stirring of the bedclothes could be seen. Suddenly a shrapnel face shone in their midst. Mrs. Atolle saw it and gave a faint cry.

"Let me come," he said, and they made room for him. The nurse clasped her hands, her face grew light and expectant. He went close up to the bed, his handsome face working strongly. He bent down—he whispered close to her ear, "Linda, come to life—Linda, be cured!"

There did seem a rippling of the sluggish current to come into those deathly cheeks. Again he bent, looked at her with all his might, and kissed her lips, this time calling her passionately. Yes, there was the stirring of life—the struggle had commenced. He lifted her head upon his arm again and again he called her, till at length the white lids fluttered open, and she was saved. Eugene cast a triumphant glance about him. The eyes closed—opened again—then, with a long, deep drawn sigh of satisfaction, the girl smiled, and looked freely round.

"Saved!" said the doctor.

"She knows us all," said Lily, triumph in her voice. "Oh! mother, forgive me, but I thought it would be the best."

"My child, you are forgiven; I should have had a nurse fallen. Come, children, we need not be afraid to leave her now, we all need rest," she added, seeing that her son grew pale again.

As for the old nurse, she sat near, taking no part apparently in the rejoicings, only sobbing quietly. Lily was drawn from the chamber, and her darling was better, that there was a prospect, even so remote, that she would get entirely well again. Eugene went slowly from the chamber, and Linda not say what he felt. It seemed as if his only care had at last fallen off—for he had thought continually of Linda—not dreaming that he could be under the same roof with him. That was a happiness that he had not in the least expected. His heart was lighter now that it had ever been, and all his old imaginings came over him again, making him more of a poet than before.

CHAPTER XVI.

"I NEVER thought, child, to see you sitting there again, I'm sure."

It was nurse Margrave, who seemed to be arranging some little things in a trunk in the corner.

"And it is certainly we owe an eternal debt of gratitude to Madame Atolle, and all the kind family. They have treated you as if you were their own."

"God bless them for it," murmured Linda.

"Yes, you may well say that. I wish you could think how we both looked when we first came here. I all dressed and tumbled worn, and you in a heap in my arms (here nurse bobbed her head under the trunk cover). I wonder any decent person would take us in. I'm sure. Would hardly have blamed one for telling us to go. And I shall never forget that cruel landlord. I'll go there sometime when you come to your rights, and give him a bit of my mind."

"He was a very unfeeling man, certainly," said Linda, "but on the whole I am very glad, it has all turned out well—just like a fairy story."

"Except that you have not found your brother, yet."

"Oh! but that will come in good time. Indeed, I wish I might never have to dance again. Oh! there goes Eugene into the garden. Isn't he handsome? I wonder when I shall be well enough to go into the garden?"

"In a week, or two, child—but I fear it will be months before you get your pretty looks back."

"And Lily will be married before that. Have you seen her lover, nurse?"

"No, I've staid by you, child, night and day. I had no time to bestow on rich gentlemen who come a courting."

At that moment in came Lily, her arms full of jewels.

"Oh! are they not beautiful?" cried Linda, with childish enthusiasm. "Someway I always loved jewels. Good nurse seemed shy of them, once, I remember, love them too well. These are lovely. Are they yours? Are they new?"

"Yes, dear. Mr. Belmont sent them to me. I am to have two or three other sets. I do not care so very much for them, but he seems to take delight in giving me such rich things. Wait till I am married, dear, and you shall have a set."

"Oh! how nice it must be!" said Linda, "to be able to give all these things. Do you know I have laid awake nights, thinking who I would make presents to, if I were rich?"

"You may be, child, for you know—oh! the the Lord have mercy!" said the nurse.

"What is it, nurse?" and Mademoiselle Linda grew pale and frightened at the unusual sound.

"Why! my blessing, my darling, here is the diamond ring!"

Oh! nurse," exclaimed Linda, shrilly.

"My child, we are rich again. Now we shall be able to repay these kind people."

"You must not talk of payment," said Lily, gravely. "You know I am going to be very wealthy; and mother would never hear of taking anything."

"But isn't it strange, dear child?"—her old eyes glittered almost as much as the diamonds—"there was a new set of lots come, where it must have slipped when I thought I put it away so snugly. How thankful I am! and how glad I did not find it when we were at that wicked landlord's."

"Why so, nurse?"

"Why, when I told him I had a diamond ring stolen, he began to laugh. 'Look here,' says he, coarsely, 'it's well for you that you can't show that diamond ring, for I tell you I'd had you up for theft. People like you don't generally sport diamond rings.' But your mother's a real lady; she will believe me."

"Besides, Monsieur Eugene knows," added Linda quietly, "he found it on the bouquet," and then Linda told his sister how it was found, omitting some of the particulars.

"I have been thinking a time of poverty might come," said the nurse, "but never allowed Linda to wear it. And she was a good child and never asked for it. For then, you see, we had a home, and he needn't have said it—people like us don't sport diamond rings, unless they are dishonest, and that I assure was now my greatest fear."

"Let me examine it," said Lily, "it is very beautiful, and looks as if it might be of great value," she said.

"Yes, I believe so know," responded the nurse, "for I suppose now I must sell it, somewhere. Of course Linda and I can't stay here for ever. I wish there was a little cottage for us, though, and a little of the rose color in the poor cheeks. Then I know she'll be as proud to work for herself as she ever was."

"Of course I shall," said Linda a little haughtily, "only if it could be something else than dancing. But I wont complain even of that, if I only get my health, I might sing, I think."

"Suppose I show this to Mr. Belmont?" queried Lily, "he will certainly know the value of it."

"Yes, I suppose you may," said the nurse doubting. Soon after he had come, Lily took the ring from a little case in which she had inclosed it.

"How much is a pure diamond worth of that size?" she asked.

"What! have you turned diamond dealer? Good heavens! where upon earth did you get this?" he asked, hitching his chair.

"Why, have you ever seen it before?"

"Seen it," and a strange look came over his face, "it was years ago, and I was a boy. From the five years ago. I never expected to see it again. Where did you get it?"

"Will you tell me honestly."

"Of course, you know I don't doubt that, but I am anxious to learn for very peculiar reasons."

"You know our little dancing girl upstairs. Well, here comes her. She said it was thrown to Linda on a bouquet."

I must see that woman," he said, much agitated, "strange, very strange indeed."

"Shall I send her here?"

He was walking the floor, "If you please," he said, without stopping.

Another moment and the man of wealth was confronted by the figure of nurse Margrave. His only speech was,

"Great heavens! can it be?"

She in turn gazed at him in consternation.

"I should know that face anywhere," she said, in violent emotion. "Oh! can it be that justice will be done my sweet child at last."

"You are nurse Margrave."

"And you are—" he held his hand up warningly.

"Never mind my name, child," it is long since consigned to oblivion. But who is the young lady with you?"

"Your sister Horace," again the hand went up.

"I am Herbert Belmont, now, nurse. My sister! my father must have died years before she was born."

"My poor boy, your father was not dead."

"Not dead."

"No, after that fearful time when his clothes were found, and the supposition was universal that he was still living. Secreted, for eight years he was a prisoner in his own house. This poor babe was born just after his real death. It was given to me to be reared in secrecy. I took it to Italy, according to directions. For a few months I heard from the mother—then she died. You, of course, have nothing about this innocent one; and when I tried to find you the house was broken up—you had disappeared. I then took sole charge of the child, and supposed her dead, since, for more than three years she has taken care of herself and of me. Oh! Mr. Herbert, I should have known you anywhere, though all these years have passed. And is it you that are going to marry Miss Lily, that beautiful angel?"

He turned away again this evening," he said, struggling with himself.

In less than an hour the widow Atolle, Lily and Eugene were called to the nurse's room, and she made no difference to them—Lily merely saying:

"I love you for yourself, if you had neither name nor money."

Thus Linda found the brother she had searched for so long and patiently—and thus was she relieved from a life of care and toil.

Mr. Belmont was married, and took Linda and her nurse, with his wife, to Italy, where they remained three years. During that time Eugene devoted himself to his profession, and when Mr. Belmont returned with his beautiful wife, and yet more lovely sister, no one remembered her, in the glorious bride of a glorious poet, as the little Dancing Girl of the Café St. Nicol.

THIRTY YEARS AFTER.

BY ERNEST TREVOR.

We were sitting alone together,
Gertrude of Wyoming was the book we read,
The twilight was softly on the weather,
And the fire was burning bright and red.

On my shoulder her head she rested,
Looked in my face and gave a sigh,
Drooped her grey eyes, and softly murmured,
"Who so happy to-night as I."

Gently I took her yielding fingers,
Lifted them to my lips with zest
Her soft white hand as it fondly lingers,
Like a wearied bird that has found its nest.

Oh! as I clasped her—dearer—dearer—
Twining my arms round her slender waist,
She raised her eyes, which grew nearer—nearer—
Till her fond lips on mine she placed.

Earth and all the stars may perish,
But not the memory of that thrill,
For in my heart I feel it vibrate,
Love's first sweet kiss—I feel it still.

LIEUT.-COL. HORACE P. RUGG.

Commanding 59th Regiment New York (Veteran) Volunteer Infantry.

This officer, leading back a veteran regiment, is the only one now in the State, and probably in the service. He was born in Wilmington, Vermont, on the 11th day of March, 1822. He is a grandson of the late David Rugg, of Vermont, and a descendant of the heroine of Haverhill, Mass., Hannah Dustin, whose statue, after the lapse of years, he came to this city with his parents, and since that time has resided here.

At the outbreak of the war he entered the service of the United States as a private in the 71st regiment, N. G. S. N. Y., and served in the 3 months' campaign of Monterey, July 21st, 1861. Soon after return ing home with his regiment he received the rank of Adjutant. On 21, 1861, of the 59 th, there came, added to it, a light and a heavy company, and on the 14th of this, and was shortly after wards attached to the Army of the Potomac, as Major, and on the 4th of August, 1862, he was promoted to the rank of Lieut.-Colonel. During the battle of Antietam, Sept. 17, 1862, and Lieut.-Col. Nov. 19, 1863.

Upon the 20th of April, 1863, he left the battle-fields of the army of the Potomac, and arrived in almost all consequence in the city of New York, where he helped to The young officer and his regiment can boast of their gallantry at Malvern Hill, Bull Run, South Mountain, Fredericksburg, Marye's Heights, Gettysburg, and the Wilderness, where they were engaged from the rifle-pit on the fore-front of the battle, and fought with such coolness as to fill up their ranks as fast as they fell in wards. The enemy at between the two fires, and the 59th, with the 140th, were the last to leave every town in a few days, and fix up a little line of breastwork.

A CENTENARIAN REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIER.

John Phillips, of Sturbridge, Mass.

While we are giving every week portraits of the gallant men who are upholding the Government of the United States, it is a source of pleasure to one who remains among us of generations long since passed away.

John Phillips, of Sturbridge, was born June 29, 1760, his father, Jonathan, being the third in descent from Rev. George Phillips, of Watertown, who died in 1644.

At the beginning of the Revolutionary war he was in the age of 16 enrolled into a militia company, and ordered to Providence, but did not long remain in the service. He was after this long career has been spent at the old homestead. He was a member of the General Court in 1815 and 1816, and though a Democrat voted for Lincoln at the last election.

In religion he has always been a Baptist, and has been a member of that church 77 years, and a Deacon 64 years, he taking the place of his father in that office. He married Miss Mary Perry, daughter of Benjamin Perry, who had two other daughters named Mercy and Grace. He was but 18 years old when they were married, and they lived together 64 years, she dying at the age of 82, having had a family of seven children.

His hearing is still as good as that of most old people, but his sight is not so good. He is now in his 103, and used them till he was about 80, when he was called to wear them, and continued to do so without them until within a few years, but is now unable to read at all. When he is in a room he can tell by the noise in Worcester as witness at court, and was able to recognize his neighbors and give his testimony with the utmost clearness.

At the time of his birth Pownal was a province of Massachusetts, and Thomas Pownal was appointed Governor of South Carolina, which Lieut.-Governor Hutchinson was appointed Governor of Massachusetts Bernard was appointed; and he has lived under the Administrations of Washington, Jefferson, and so on under the Constitution. He has lived to see the population of the United States rise from 3,000,000 (including Maine) to 1,231,066.

In the year of our Lord, 1820, his friends and fellow-citizens had a celebration in the part of Sturbridge called Fort Hill, in honor of the 60th anniversary in which he took much interest and pleasure, and of which he was the last survivor. He addressed them then was: "My friends, I give you thanks for this opportunity of seeing you so numerously assembled, and for the attention bestowed upon me; but I feel unworthy to receive it. As I have been requested to offer prayer on this occasion, I will first make a few remarks in order to prepare the way for it. Prayer consists of four particular points—viz., the goodness of God; 2d, our unworthiness; 3d, our need; 4th, the power and reality of revealed religion. 4th, the depravity of man. Here I stand a monument of God's goodness."

He was always a strong vigorous man. At 16 he stood six feet high, and weighed 195 pounds. His weight now is about the same.

His manner of living has always been plain and frugal, temperate in all things, but not to excess, and not to late hours, usually retiring early and rising early. He never has used tobacco in any drinking, sleeping, working and in all things. His beverage have been cold water, tea and coffee and cider, all of which he has continued through life, and still partakes of the regular family meal. He has not drank to the amount of a gill of spirits for over 50 years. Since he was 90 years of age he has laid up and relaid 20 rods of stone wall, laying about two rods in a day. He has used tobacco ever since he was young man. His memory is good, more particularly as with all aged people, of the events of his early life. He told us he remembered his father, his grandfather, and his great grandmother, who died at the age of 96. He has always had a strong constitution, but is not fond of talking, and disposed to narrate his experiences.

GREAT SNOWSTORM ON THE PRAIRIES.

THE great snowstorm which came with the New Year commenced on the 30th on the Illinois prairies. The railroads were blocked up, and on the Michigan Central railroad the suffering of a train was great. As the train left Detroit on New Year's Eve approached New Buffalo, they found a freight train blocked up with snow, unable to get forward or back. After waiting two hours in the hope that the freight train would be able to proceed, they then started back. At Michigan City the second snow-plough attached, but the progress was slow; but after passing Chicago, and near the junction of the Michigan Southern, it was found impossible to proceed. An engine was sent to Chicago for aid.

Meanwhile the passengers waited and shivered. The cars were furnished with a stove above to each. It was as difficult to keep warm four feet from the stove as it was to feel, perhaps. The wood provided was wet or green, or both. Exposed to the penetrating wind, dam with frost, which crept inside the prairie, the condition of the passengers became exceedingly uncomfortable. The silver became pain in the feet, and cold in the head and should a be cold wood and no relief engines came, and the fuel was fast getting out. The passengers thought of, and a sum raised in putting boards in a shanty to feed the stove, which yielded no return of comfort. The flame seemed to leap up the pipe and play on the cold air, and smoke was discovered about the roof of the car, and the passengers fanned the floor because of the heat. One car did burn so as to render it untenable. The fire was put out before it had done much damage, because it was not safe to kindle another in it. And so the night passed. The cold grew more and more intensified and shrieked like mad, the snow filled the air, and the drifts grew deeper. The cars were covered, piercing to the quick women and children, like sharp arrows. Those who had not had a berth to rest each comfy carefully distributed of their stores among the less provided for, and all were cheerful, and even up in nursing mothers and their infants. The men found employment in procuring fuel when it came and the baggage car, and between the latter and the nurses' car.

At last a Michigan Southern train, drawn by three engines, arrived at Chicago. The cars were crowded, stopped and arrangements were made for the transfer of the passengers to Michigan City. Here was to be a distance of 300 yards, more or less, was to be traversed. The passengers were deeply chilled to the core and frost-laden wind was sweeping the path like a storm of hail. Here a lady fainted, and here the passengers would be taken to the city if they would instantly start, or be left to reach it on foot. It was a question in order that the engines might not freeze up before they reached Michigan City. Here the passengers ran with feeling. Few had escaped being frozen, children and women were missing and looking, and inquiring for each other.

At last a Michigan Southern train, drawn by three engines, arrived at Chicago. The cars were crowded, stopped and arrangements were made for the transfer of the passengers to Michigan City. Here was to be a distance of 300 yards, more or less, was to be traversed. The passengers were deeply chilled to the core and frost-laden wind was sweeping the path like a storm of hail. Here a lady fainted, and here the passengers would be taken to the city if they would instantly start, or be left to reach it on foot. It was a question in order that the engines might not freeze up before they reached Michigan City. Here the passengers ran with feeling. Few had escaped being frozen, children and women were missing and looking, and inquiring for each other.

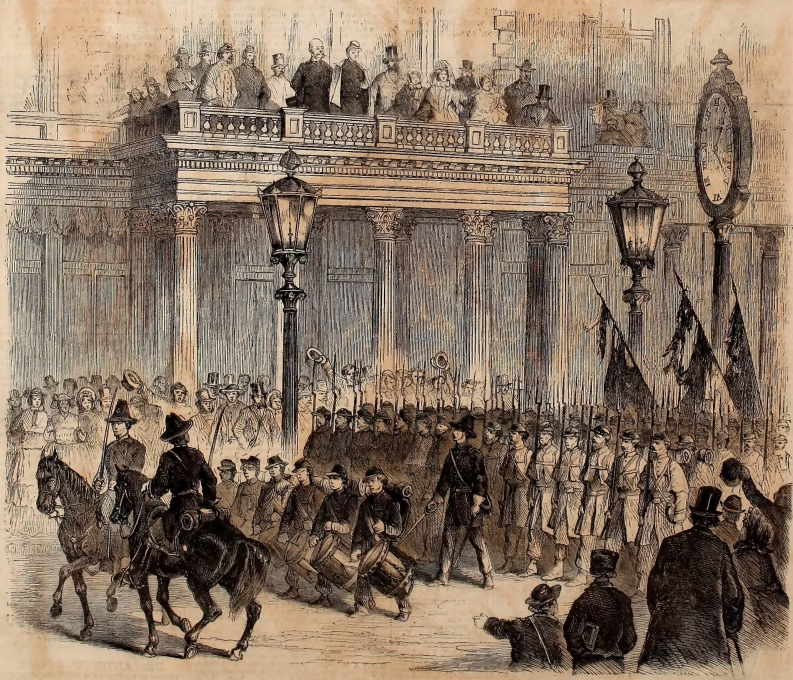
At last a Michigan Southern train, drawn by three engines, arrived at Chicago. The cars were crowded, stopped and arrangements were made for the transfer of the passengers to Michigan City. Here was to be a distance of 300 yards, more or less, was to be traversed. The passengers were deeply chilled to the core and frost-laden wind was sweeping the path like a storm of hail. Here a lady fainted, and here the passengers would be taken to the city if they would instantly start, or be left to reach it on foot. It was a question in order that the engines might not freeze up before they reached Michigan City. Here the passengers ran with feeling. Few had escaped being frozen, children and women were missing and looking, and inquiring for each other.

At last a Michigan Southern train, drawn by three engines, arrived at Chicago. The cars were crowded, stopped and arrangements were made for the transfer of the passengers to Michigan City. Here was to be a distance of 300 yards, more or less, was to be traversed. The passengers were deeply chilled to the core and frost-laden wind was sweeping the path like a storm of hail. Here a lady fainted, and here the passengers would be taken to the city if they would instantly start, or be left to reach it on foot. It was a question in order that the engines might not freeze up before they reached Michigan City. Here the passengers ran with feeling. Few had escaped being frozen, children and women were missing and looking, and inquiring for each other.

THE RETURNING VETERANS.

SEVERAL regiments of veteran volunteers have recently returned from the seat of war, covered with honorable scars, and bearing their tattered and battered colors through our streets. The people have given enthusiastic demonstrations at every step of their march, clapping their hands, and cheering with all their might and main. Nothing of the arrival has been duly acknowledged in the newspapers, and their deeds have been recorded in prose and verse, but a public welcome home to the troops has not been equal to their merits. No preparations were made by the State authorities to receive them. No place had been provided for their shelter. No tables were spread for their entertainment. No music to welcome them as they marched home.

On the 11th the 69th and 99th regiments N. Y. Volunteers, which have been in the service of the Potomac, on furlough were publicly received and welcomed by the Mayor, the Gen. Sec. Mayor Gunther, Brig.-Gen. Spicer, Gen. Morris and several members of the Common Council. The troops were received on the right of the line of the Park, and marched through the Park to the City Hall, where they were addressed by the Hon. Commissioner Sandford. The Sergt.-Major made a few remarks in which he spoke of the high esteem in which Col. Hammell was held by the men of his command, and paid a tribute to his character as a man and a soldier. Lieut.-Col. Hammell briefly responded, and while thanking his men for their kind thoughts of him, he remarked that he had not done his duty. We give in this number a portrait of Lieut.-Col. Rugg, and shall give in subsequent numbers, portraits of the Colonels of the regiments returned. In honor of the men we see these heroic men, whose names are associated with so much of the glorious victories of the war.



A NEW YEAR'S DAY CONTRABAND BALL AT VICKSBURG, MISS.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, FRED. B. SCHELL.

OUR CENTENARIANS—JOHN PHILLIPS, OF STURBRIDGE, MASS., AGED 103 YEARS AND 6 MONTHS.

LIEUT.-COL. HORACE P. RUGG, COMMANDING THE 50TH N. Y. VETERAN VOL.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.

THE RE-ENLISTING REGIMENTS—GEN BURNSIDE REVIEWING THE 66TH AND 50TH NEW YORK VETERAN VOLUNTEERS AT THE FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

A GENTLEMAN who had married a second time indulged in recurring too often in conversation to the brunettes and virtues of his first consort. He had, however, barely discernment enough to discover that the subject was not an agreeable one to his present lady.

"Excuse me, madam," said he, "if I cannot help expressing my regrets for the dear departed."

"Upon my honor," said the lady, "I can most heartily affirm that I am as sincere a mourner for her as you can be."

A LITTLE fellow, not more than five years of age, hearing a person name it his father's tabledecanter as the familiar line, "An honest man's the noblest work of God," said he knew it wasn't true; his mother was better than any man that was ever made.

BUSY PLACE.—They have a little town "Out West," which appears to have been overlooked by Dickens and other English travellers, and which is "all sorts of a stirring place." In one day they recently had a great fight, a dog-fight, hang a man, rush three men out of the town on a rail, get up a quarter race, and a two-quarter race, a quarter-pulling, a match coughing, and preaching by a circuit rider, who afterward ran a footrace for eggnogg all round, and as if that was not enough, the Judge of the Court, after charging his grand jury at a single handed poker, and whipping a person for saying he didn't owe cents he gave, went out and helped to lynch his grandfather for hog-stealing.

"GOING, going, just a going!" cried out an auctioneer.

"Where are you going?" asked a passer-by.

"Well," replied the knight of the hammer, "I'm going to the Zoological Gardens, to tell the managers that one of their lions is for sale."

An irresolute man's mind, is generally, as Richard III. said of his own body, "but half made up."

THERE are few who are not more solicitous about their wives' conscience than their own.

The following is an Southern army contractors appears in the Chattanooga Rebel. It will assist her more distinctly to remember:

To rob the country two contractors come,
One cheats in corn, the other cheats in rum,
While for a rise in leather, if you can scrabble,
A rogue in spirit or a thief in grain!

A ROMANCE OF CURRENCY, BY RHYMED.—They meet in the street and they sigh, passing by. Meet again, and its plain that they're both nothing loth man and wife for the life.

"Dear," says he, "your love me?"
"Yes, I do. Pray, do you love me too?"
"Fondly!"
"I'at ask Mamma!"
Off he goes, to propose, and receive mother's leave.
He says "I Yes."
You may guess with what joy he employs various trades, by way of gaining the wife to furnish for his spouse a fit house. When that's done, they're made one by a priest; and have a neat set of soon-honeymoons—Misses, kisses, Mister, Missis—what a tale of true love this is.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS

HABITUAL CONSTIPATION.—HOW TO EFFECT A CERTAIN AND PERMANENT CURE.—Some occupations of life predispose to costiveness, especially those which allow but little exercise. Persons who construct this unfortunate habit of body, under such circumstances, might possibly be relieved by changing their sedentary employments for others of a more stirring kind; but this is by no means certain. Habitual constipation is a very obstinate disorder. All the ordinary so-called remedies invariably aggravate it. Nothing can be more injurious than the continued use of strong cathartics. They at first irritate, and finally almost paralyze the bowels—rendering them so torpid that enormous doses of cathartic medicines have no effect upon them. A mild aperient, combined with a gentle stimulant, is the true remedy, and a combination to the happiest proportion of these ingredients is found in HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS. This famous stomachic invigorates the whole intestinal canal, while gently removing from its convolutions all impediments to a free passage through them. No drastic purgative has this double operation. No ordinary stimulant effects the desired object. Cathartics, even when combined in hopeless by distinguished medical men here been cured in a few weeks by this agreeable tonic. Those who have tried all the medicines of the discovery in vain, we say try this preparation, and your recovery is certain. There is no sufficient reason why constipation should be the consequence of any other habit. HOSTETTER'S BITTERS, by supplying the vigor which would otherwise be withheld from the viscera, will in all cases enable the system to perform its excretory functions regularly and healthfully. Even physicians even make it a point to prescribe for the excitement in some cases, but this is wrong, amounting to despair, in others, which are rarely until the accompaniments of the disease are far advanced. It is, in fact, that ladies afflicted with these wretchless often make secret efforts to conceal them from the physician, as they are justly ashamed and corrective as the "Bitters" afford. If the disorders of the digestive organization were better understood, it would be seen that no blame attaches to the sufferer, as a general rule, but, on the contrary, a tiny physician for the object of a tender sympathy and a tender cure.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER, SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 476 BROADWAY.

Do you want to get Married?

If so, don't fail to buy

"Courtship Made Easy," a Book of 100 pages, Illustrated, containing full instructions in the Art of "Psychologic Fascination," with Explanatory Charts enabling any person, of either sex to fascinate and win the undying love of any person they choose instantly, thus securing happy homes and wedding suites. Sent by mail for 60 cents and two red stamps.
Address E. D. LOCKE & CO.,
636-9 Box 1865, Portland, Maine.

FURNITURE,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),
No. 87 Bowery, New York.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash.

Their stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE,

in Sets, from $22 to $100.

TUCKER'S NEW STYLE PATENT SPRING BED,

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each.

Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

FURNITURE,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),
No. 87 Bowery, New York.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash.

Their stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE,

in Sets, from $22 to $100.

TUCKER'S NEW STYLE PATENT SPRING BED,

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each.

Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

SOLDIERS Co PINS & CORPS BADGES

Every Co. from A to M, and every Corps Badge worn by the Army constantly on hand. Engraved to order, and sent free on receipt of price. Also Cavalry and Artillery Badges. A splendid list of PREMIUMS offered to Clubs. Don't Fail to send for an Illustrated Catalogue. Address

C. L. BALCH & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Miss Braddon's New Novel.

UNPARALLELED ATTRACTIONS!!

EVERY lady should secure an early number of

FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE

FOR FEBRUARY 1864,

Containing the opening of MISS BRADDON'S new and exciting Romance,

THE DOCTOR'S WIFE,

the advanced sheets of which were obtained at a cost of $3,000.

This will be esteemed beyond all doubt her greatest and ablest work, having been secured by TEMPLE BAR at an enormous cost.

Our February number will contain a splendid double page colored Fashion plate, showing eight full dresses, a four page Fashion plate; rules of Bonnets, Caps and Headdresses, and twelve pages of miscellaneous patterns, a number of interesting Tales, Sketches and Illustrations.

Every lady should take it for these reasons and

1st.—Because it is the earliest chronicler of the latest Parisian Fashions.

2d.—Because it has established Agents in Paris, London and Berlin, who forward by every steamer the latest novelties, in advance of their publication in those cities, exclusively for this Magazine.

3d.—Because, having the Largest Engraving Establishment in this country the Publisher possesses unequalled facilities for rapidly reproducing Fashion Plates for this Magazine.

4th.—Because the Colored Steel Fashion Plate is double the size of the largest plate published in any other Magazine. It consequently contains twice the number of Models for Dresses.

5th.—Because it contains a full-sized Cut Pattern of some new garment for Lady's use, imported expressly for this Magazine.

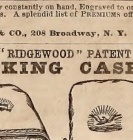
6th.—Because it also contains a Mammoth Four Page Engraving of the latest Modes—the largest Fashion Plate ever published in any Magazine.

7th.—Because, in addition to the Fashions, a large space is devoted to choice Literary Matter, including Illustrated Tales, Biographies, etc.

8th.—Because One Hundred Dollars expended in procuring Foreign Fashion Books would give less available information than can be had in Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine for $3 per annum.

9th.—Because each number contains over 100 Engravings of the latest style for Morning, Walking, Dinner and Evening Costume for Ladies and Children.

Hawkes's Diamond Pointed Gold Pen



Medium	Pen	$0 50	Commercial Pen $1 25
Fine	"	0 62	Mammoth " 1 50
Engraving	"	0 75	Leviathan " 2 00

Also, Fountain Pens—one filling will write eight to fifteen hours. Send stamp for Circular.
GEO. F. HAWKES, Manufacturer,
432 6 68 Nassau Street, N.Y.

Billiard Balls!

Patent Compressed Ivory, 2¼ and 2⅜ in., $10 per set; 2 in. Superior Balls, $8 per set. If in Bagatelle, $7; warranted for six months. WM. H. WELLING, 427 Broadway, corner Grand. New York, sign of the Golden Elephant.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT
SMOKING CASE!

Most ingenious in its combination of the Meerschaum Case, containing Pipe and Stem, Matches and Pipe Cleaner, with a handsome Tobacco Pouch attached, filling the Pipe by a valve without the use of the fingers or waste of tobacco, the whole securing freedom from all odor, and perfection of a Cigar Case. It is made for service, of various and handsome styles, at $1 50, $2, $2 25, $2 50 and $3; the two latter highly Plated and Engraved. Nothing can excel its Novelty, Utility and Economy for all Smokers. As a PRESENT TO FRIENDS nothing could be more appreciable.

FOR THE SOLDIER IT IS INVALUABLE.

The Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco!

Of superior quality and flavor, in packages to fill the case (about a week's smoking, $2 75 per dozen), and of various Sizes for the general Trade. A liberal discount to Dealers. Single Cases sent by mail, paid, on receipt of price and 25 cents. Also, half-pound packages of the fine Tobacco alone, sent (carefully put up) by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 25.

RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,
Office 69 Broadway, N. Y.

FURS! FURS!!

FURS!!!

Ladies and Misses Fine Furs, in Sable, Mink, Ermine, Siberian Squirrel, etc.

Genuine Fur Caps, Muffers and Gauntlets, in Seal Otter, Beaver, etc.

Sleigh Robes in variety. Retailed at Wholesale Prices.

BURKE (successor to WATKINS),
210 Broadway, corner Fulton street.

THE STANDARD

AMERICAN BILLIARD TABLE

AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

Approved and adopted by the Billiard Congress of 1863. Best and only Billiard Tables made. Manufactured, Balls, Cues, and every article relating to Billiards, for sale by

PHELAN & COLLENDER,
434-7 Corner of Crosby and Spring Sts., N. Y.

Just What Every Family Wants!

SAVAGE & CO'S NO CHIMNEY BURNER for Hand Lamps and Lanterns, burns Kerosene oil with a brilliant light, prevents the chimney, smoke or odor. Saves 25 per cent. Office, 270 FULTON STREET, N.Y. Agents wanted. Send for Circular. Sample sent free for 50 cents. American Institute awarded First Premium and Medal, 1863.

GREAT TRIUMPH.

STEINWAY & SONS, Nos. 82 and 84 Walker Street, N. Y., have received the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.

The special correspondent of the New York Times says:

"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

$60 A MONTH! We want Agents at $60 a month expenses paid, to sell our Everlasting Pencils, Gold Pens and all other articles. 16 Circulars free. Address
SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Me.
434-38

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office),
offer for sale the following Magnificent List of

WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.

Valued at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

150	Gold and Silver Watches	$150 to $300
250	Ladies' Gold Watches	$38
500	Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	$18
2500	Vest and Neck Chains	$5 00 to $10 00
3000	Gold and Enamel Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00
3000	Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 to 5 00
5000	Cameo Brooches	3 00 to 6 00
2000	Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
2000	Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
1000	Cameo Ear Drops	5 00 to 6 00
1000	Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3500	Coral Ear Drops	4 00 to 5 00
3000	Gold Lockets	3 00 to 5 00
3000	Watch Keys	2 00 to 5 00
2500	Gold and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 5 00
2500	Sets of Bosom Studs	2 50 to 4 00
2500	Sets of Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 4 00
5000	Plain Rings	2 50 to 5 00
5000	Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 5 00
5000	Lockets	2 50 to 5 00
1000	Sets of Ladies' Jewelry	4 00 to 6 00
10000	Gold Pens, Silver Mixed Holders	4 00 to 5 00
5000	Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00

The articles in this stock of Jewelry are of the neatest and most fashionable styles. A description of all the various articles are put in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, thus giving all a fair chance, and sent by mail for 25 cents each; and on receipt of the Certificate, it is at your option to send One Dollar, and have the article named in it, or not. Five Certificates, $1; eleven, $2; thirty-two, $5; sixty-five, $10; one hundred and fifteen, $15; Certificate money to be enclosed with order. Correspondents wanted everywhere.

AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow them 50 per cent. on every Certificate sold, and their remittance amounts to $1, and more liberal inducements to those who buy largely. Send for Circular. Address

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

Love, Courtship and Marriage.—The Physiology of Marriage; or, How to Win a Lover, and Husband. A NEW Book for 25 cents. Over 100 pages, on the above subjects. Sent free by mail for 25 cents—5 for $1. Address UNION BOOK CO., Box 13, Hinsdale, N. H.

Dr. B. C. Perry,

DERMATOLOGIST,

No. 49 BOND STREET, NEW YORK,
(Formerly of No. 37 Warren St., Boston.)

Treats successfully all

Diseases of the Scalp, Loss of Hair and Premature Blanching;

ALSO

Removes MOTH, FRECKLES, and other DISCOLORATIONS from the FACE, without injury to the texture or Color of the Skin.

☞NO CHARGE FOR CONSULTATION.☜

For particulars address, enclosing stamp,
DR. B. C. PERRY,
435ow 49 Bond Street, N. Y.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de VISITE, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
$15-20 PIERCE BIBBON, 25 Ann St., N.Y.

Singer & Co.'s Letter A Family Sewing Machine, with all the new improvements (Hemmer, Braider, Binder, Feller, Tucker, Corder, Gatherer, &c., &c.) is now ready for delivery. It is a beautiful of all Machines for Family sewing and light manufacturing purposes. It has the Lock-stitch (which is alike on both sides), and has great capacity for sewing all kinds of cloth, and with ALL KINDS of thread. Even leather, as well as the finest muslin. It will sew from the coarse No. 24 machine. It will run 200 spool cotton as well as No 90 linen thread. With it can also be easily learned by seeing the machine tested.

The Patent Office we will supplied with silk twist, thread, needles, oil, &c., of the very best quality.

Singer & Co.'s Office, 458 Broadway, N.Y.
000 I. M. SINGER & CO., 458 Broadway, N. Y.

Union Playing Cards!

National American Amusement Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Eagles for Aces, are the trumps in the pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars and Flags are the suits, and represent the thirty-four States. Every pack retailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for Circular. Address

AMERICAN CARD CO.,
000 458 Broadway, or 105 William St., N. Y.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of AMERICAN PEOPLE,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by DR. TYSON, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes for Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

☞ Fill out to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,

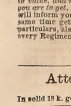
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 89 FIRST Street, Troy, N. Y. 430-43

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.,



Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and in the same time can get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Attention, Soldiers!

In solid 18 k. gold, $3 50.

Every soldier should have A BADGE WITH HIS NAME MARKED DISTINCTLY upon it. The Subscribers will forward to any soldier in the army a solid Silver Badge with his Name, Company and Regiment engraved upon it, on receipt of One Dollar. The above cut represents size and style of Badge furnished. It can be fastened to any garment. Address

DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewellers, 208 Broadway, N. Y.
All kinds of Army Corps, Co. and Division Pins to order.

WANTED! WANTED!

Do You Want Splendid Whiskers or Moustaches?

HUNTER'S ONGUENT will force them to grow beautiful dark wiskers upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Also, on Bald Heads, in ten weeks. Two Boxes for $1. Further Benefit. Address C. L BRIGGS, Milwaukee, Wis.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS FROM LIFE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.,

50 cents each; $1 50 per doz. Free by mail. Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1618, New York city. Send for circular.

Economy, Durability & Convenience

The Star No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil Lamps, Patented Aug. 11, 1863. Gives a brilliant light free from smoke, or smell. It can be trimmed and handled without being extinguished. The cheapest and most reliable of the best inventions of the kind. Warranted as represented. Sample sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Agents wanted.

PETER ESSIG & CO., Manufacturers, No. 2 Platt St., N. Y.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY,

Merchants, Bankers, Teachers and others, &c., &c.,

Are warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular

J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce Street, N. Y.

WEDDING CARDS.

French Note Paper, Seals and Presses, Silver Plate, etc., at J. Eversells, 321 Broadway, cor. Duane St. For Specimens by mail, send 25 cents.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate, command the affections and influence with or any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cts., together with a Guide to the mysteries of both sexes free. —An extraordinary book, of great interest; Third edition; over 100,000 copies sold already. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Beauty.—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Author Beauty. It whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a delicate and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 153 South-Seventh Street, and 41 South-Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

J. G. SCHULL,
MERCHANT TAILOR
33 Ann Street, New York,

Has on hand a splendid assortment of French, English and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings which he is prepared to make up in the most fashionable style and on the most reasonable terms for cash

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,
Agents for the United States for the celebrated
ALBERTINE
EXTENSION HOLDERS & GOLD PENS

Of the most handsome and durable construction, put up in new fancy cases of our own design, and not sold in any less quantities. They will retail for $3 each.

Price, per dozen $10 26
" 5 dozen 26 00

Sent by mail or express, prepaid. Address
SALISBURY, BRO. & CO., Providence, R. I.

Headquarters for Officers' and Soldiers' Pins of Every Description!

We will send either Army Corps, Division or Company Pin, in Solid Silver, with your Name, Regiment and Co. numbered, on receipt of $1. Also, a Kearney Cross in Fine Gold Plate for $1, or a New Style Solid Silver Cavalry Pin, Engraved as above, for $1 50.

☞ Agents sending for 10 or more at one time will be allowed 15 cents on each.

ALSO, THE EMPORIUM FOR WATCHES AND JEWELRY.

75,000 Watches, Gold Pens and Pencils,

Vest, Guard and Neck Chains, Chatelaine Chains and Pins, Engraved Bracelets, Engraved Spring Lockets, Seal Stone Rings California Rings, Chased Rings, Masonic Rings and Pins, Gents' California Diamond Pins, California Diamond Ear Drops, Beautiful Sets of Jewelry, New Styles Studs and Buttons, etc., etc., etc.,

WORTH $400,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

Certificates naming each article are put into Envelopes, Sealed and Mixed, and sent without regard to choice.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for doing the business 25 cents each, which must be enclosed when the request is made to know what you can have After knowing what you can have, then it will be at your option to send One Dollar, take the article or not.

Five Certificates will be sent to any address for $1, or Twenty for $3—and no further call for $15.

With the information of what you can have will be sent a Circular giving full instructions to Agents and a full Catalogue of articles.

Box 4876, N. Y.

S. M. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway, New York.

The Great Rural and Family Weekly!

NEW VOLUME, NEW FEATURE,

MOORE'S RURAL NEW YORKER, long known as the Best and Most Popular AGRICULTURAL, HORTICULTURAL, LITERARY AND FAMILY NEWSPAPER in this country, will enter upon its Fifteenth Year and Volume on the 1st of January, 1864. The new volume will at least equal either of its predecessors in Contents, Style and Appearance, for we have resolved to spare no effort or expense to enhance the reputation and standing of the paper as the BEST NEWSPAPER OF ITS CLASS

ON THE CONTINENT!

Always Loyal, Practical and Progressive, THE RURAL is the FAVORITE FARM AND FIRESIDE JOURNAL—largely read and admired in both Town and Country. Its ample pages comprise Departments devoted to the following subjects:

Agriculture, Horticulture,
Architecture, Rural Economy,
Education, Natural science,
Literature, General News,

With various minor Departments, and including numerous Illustrations, Tales, Sketches, Music, Poetry, Enigmas, &c., &c., rendering the paper Instructive and Entertaining to the various members of the Family Circle.

In addition to the above variety, the RURAL for 1864 will contain a New and important FEATURE—a Department exclusively devoted to

SHEEP HUSBANDRY,

Conducted by Hon. HENRY S. RANDALL, LL. D., of Cortland Co., N. Y., formerly President of the State Agricultural Society, and generally conceded to be far the best authority on the subject in this country.

P. BARRY, Esq., author of "The Fruit Garden," and formerly editor of The Genesee Farmer, will also contribute to the RURAL for 1864—enriching its Horticultural Department with the results of his experience.

THE WAR NEWS, MARKETS, &c.,

Receive special attention—the RURAL containing Reports of the principal Cattle, Provision, Produce, Wool, and FRUIT MARKETS in the country. Remember that the RURAL ensures the publication of the very best cultivated sections of America and that its Editors, Contributors and Correspondents strive to promote the Pecuniary Interest and Home Welfare of its readers and subscribers. Also that it is not a monthly or only 12 issues a year, but a Large, Beautiful and Timely WEEKLY.

STYLE, FORM, TERMS, &c.

Volume XV. for 1864, of the RURAL NEW YORKER will be published in the same style as now—with New Type, Good White Paper, and many Fine Illustrations—Form will continue the same—Forty-eight Double Quarto—with an Index, Title Page, etc., at close of year, completing a Volume.

Terms, Always in Advance.

$2 a year; 3 copies for $5; 6 for $10; 10 for $15—with a free copy for every club of six or more.

☞ Now is the time to Subscribe and form Clubs. Efficient Local Agents wanted in every town and county by the United States and Canada mails, to whom we offer handsome Premiums.

☞ Specimen Numbers, Premium Lists, etc., sent free to all disposed to favor their fellow-citizens and community by introducing the paper to more general notice and support.

D. D. T. MOORE, Rochester, N. Y.

The Great Money-Making Article.

Everybody needs it. Agents of Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample sent to Soldiers, post free, by mail, for 35 cents. Address

BENNETT & MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

Decalcomanie, a beautiful art by which any person can clear $6 per day—Graham's Celebrated Portraits, Flowers, Landscapes, Comic Designs, &c., in SIX SHEETS, Ageler's Secret, Greek Fire, Art of Engraving, Secret of Secrets, Penmanship, Sympathetic Tan, Prof. Wood's Hair Restorative, Gold and Silver Powder, Transfer Paper, Bronzing, &c., &c., postpaid, on receipt of 25 cents. Address

EUGENE G. GRAHAM, Worcester, Mass.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Two $1—Sample returnable. Glass Signs, Show Cards, Frames, Door Plates, etc. Glass Labels for Bottles and Druggists. GLASS LETTER CO., 107 Fulton Street, N. Y. 434-7eow

DR R. GOODALE'S CATARRH REMEDY.

It penetrates to the very seat of this terrible disease, and exterminates it root and branch, for ever. DR. GOODALE is the first and only person who ever told the world what Catarrh really was—where it commenced—and what would cure it. Price $1. Send stamp for a Pamphlet. Depot, 612 Broadway, N. Y. NORTON & CO., Sole Agents.

Travelling Salesmen Wanted.

$75 a month, expenses paid, or a commission on sales. Apply to ISAAC HALE, JR., & CO.,
423-3t Newburyport, Mass.

Swords, Sashes, Belts.

Wholesale and Retail. Manufactured Swords 431-6t B. KITTRIDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by W. M. EARL, M. D., 300 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cents. Address Dr Wells' Office, 308 Broadway, New York. 433-6t

We have furnished our Weapon's Rifles as follows:

State of Kentucky	1,360
State of Missouri	760
General Ripley	150
Colonel Collins	320
Capt. Bode's Co., Chillicothe, O.
Col. Grant's " Kansas.
Capt. Child's " Athens, Ill.
Capt. Whyback's Co., Rolla, Mo.
Capt. McGee's " Lexington, Mo.
Capt. Hunter's " Sedalia, Mo.
Capt. Olds' " Perrysville, Ind.

LEAVENWORTH, Oct. 12, 1863.

DEAR SIR—The 76th ult. was put to a severe test on the 7th, at the State Fair, AND WON A STAND OF COLORS, in contest against THREE INFANTRY COMPANIES. They were to fire in squads of ten, each man having five shots, and to shoot at the command "Fire." We were OUT-NUMBERED TWO HUNDRED shots by the infantry. Distance 200 yards. We hit the target 45 times out of 50 shots. The greatest number of hits by any infantry company was 15. Thus establishing the superiority of the ALL PURPOSE (Weapon). Gun.

M. S. GRANT,
Col. 1st Kansas Cav.

TO MAJOR SHAW, St. Louis, Mo.
B. KITTREDGE & CO.,
423-4t Cincinnati, Ohio.

$50 FOR $20.

SOLDIERS IN THE ARMY,

For $20 we will forward by mail or express, prepaid, the following lot of fine Go'd Plated Jewelry: 1 Vest Chain; 1 Pair Engraved Seal Rings; 3 Gold Pens and Extension Holders; 6 Vest Hooks; 4 Fancy Watch Keys; 1 Set Studs; 1 Pair Sleeve Buttons; 4 Box and Glass Pins for Miniature; 3 Double Glass Lockets; and Thimble and Pencil Case. Address

THOMAS CAFFERTEY & CO.,
Box 1,000, Cincinnati, O.

$75 A MONTH!—I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machine.
Address J. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

"Moustaches and Whiskers in 40 Days." Dont be humbugged with ONGUENTS. The GREAT SECRET DISCLOSED in the BOOK of WONDERS, 13,000 sold. 10th Ed. Only 20 cts; 3 for $1. Address C. E. HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.—Superior to every other preparation for the hair in power to restore and keep it in use to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to cure dandruff, and all other impurities or irregularities arising from the use of lead, &c., and to remove all heats and blights of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA HAIR GLOSS,
unexcelled in keeping the hair in curl

HOYT'S ORIENTAL COLORING CREAM gives and colors the hair at the same time; changes light red hair to a beautiful brown or black.

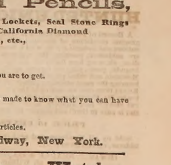
HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER
imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and preserves youthfulness of appearance. Sold by druggists generally.

JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 19 University Place.

Straight Hair Made Wavy,
Without heating it, by using
LYON'S PATENT HAIR CRIMPERS.
For Sale at Variety Stores. 434-6t

GLASS LETTERS & SIGNS

Glass Letters for Windows hung outlast and excel Gilding. Signs, Show Cards, Samples returnable. Glass Signs, Show Cards, Frames, Door Plates, etc. Glass Labels for Bottles and Druggists. GLASS LETTER CO., 107 Fulton Street, N. Y. 434-7eow



C. O. D.

Agents and Dealers, and the trade in general; the following list of our most rapidly selling articles, Patent Mica Anti-Corrosive Tobacco Box, Patent Piston Pipe, Indelible Pencil, Egyptian Cement, and 40 more novel and useful inventions. Send Stamp for Circular. S. W. RICE & CO., 51 Nassau St., N. Y. 000 434 Chestnut St., Phila., Pa.

Card Pictures, Photographs, &c.

K. W. BENICZKY,

HAVING ENLARGED AND IMPROVED HIS GALLERY, No. 3 ☞ NEW-ST. Chambers Street, has increased facilities for making Card Pictures and other Photographs. AT THE LOWEST PRICES. 000

Watches
FOR THE
ARMY.

"Particularly valuable for officers in the army and travellers."—Frank Leslie's, No. 4.

"Prettiest, best and cheapest in the series ever offered."—N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 10.

"Splendidly finished Watches, the beauty of which is only equaled by their cheapness."—N. Y. Weekly, July 23.

MAGIC TIME OBSERVERS!

THE PERFECTION OF MECHANISM!

BEING A HUNTING OR OPEN FACE OR LADY'S OR GENTLEMAN'S WATCH COMBINED, WITH PATENT SELF-WINDING IMPROVEMENT.

A MOST PLEASING NOVELTY.

One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it, and connected with its machinery, its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The case of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being fine 18-carat gold. It has the improved ruby-action lever movement, and is warranted an accurate timepiece. Price, superior quality, per case of half dozen, $203. Sample Watches, in neat morocco boxes, $35. By mail the postage is 30 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!

FIRST-CLASS HUNTING TIMEPIECE

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL AND WORK, AND, CHEAPNESS IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES MUST INSURE

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faithless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of two metals, the outer one first quality Sterling Silver, while the inner one is German Silver. It cannot be recognized by cutting or heavy engraving, making it not only a handsome, but a durable, and the real resemblance of SOLID STERLING SILVER in appearance.

The sale of these Watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $25 and upwards. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single day by any one of ordinary business tact.

☞ AN WHOLESALE ONLY! In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, white enamel dial, and fancy red hands, in good running order, by the half dozen, $66; postage, $2 38; registering, 20 cents. Sent only by the case. Cash to accompany order.

☞ TERMS, CASH! INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE! No Agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. All money is sent us by express or mail, as preferred letter, if it is at our risk! Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., SOLE IMPORTERS,
423 169 Broadway and 2 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

BURNHAM'S CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.

10,000 Agents Wanted for the NEW PRIZE COMBINATION STATIONERY AND NEEDLE PACKAGE. Warranted of the best quality and sells to everybody. Circulars free. Address J. L. G. PIERPONT, 423½ Broadway, 2d New York, care of Miller's Post Office Box, 90.

3 Card Photographs Only $1.—All different. Sent free by mail. Address J. H. YOUNTAIN, Photo.,† Hawley, Pa.

Royal Havana Lottery.

30 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

Irwin P. Beadle & Co.'s Ten Cent Novels.

The most brilliant series of Cheap Publications ever issued. Stirring chronicles of the times! Exciting adventures on sea and land! Works which every one should read and recommend to his neighbor.

JUST ISSUED,

THE

HUNTED UNIONIST

A Record of late occurrences in Georgia. The most graphic revelation of the age, revealing the persecutions and indignities to which Southern Unionists are subjected; painting the cruelties of rebel guerillas; showing how fugitives are hunt d with blood-hounds; portraying the terrific spectacle of Lookout Mountain and other points around Chattanooga; and forming the most startling picture of REAL LIFE IN REBELDOM ever submitted to the public. It is written by Mr. Cummings, author of the great "Farragut story," now running in the New York Ledger, and is sure to thrill and interest the million of readers

PRICE 10 CENTS.

Sold by all Newsmen, and sent, postpaid, to any address, on receipt of price.

IRWIN P. BEADLE & CO., Publishers,
137 William Street, N. Y.

N. B.—Disabled Soldiers, persons out of employment, etc., who wish to act as local traveling Agents, can sell these books rapidly enough to make great wages. Address as above (enclosing a stamp) for particulars. o

Watches Given to All our Agents!
A GREAT CHANGE.

SHADEN, delay not one moment, until you send for our NEW PRIZE STATIONERY PACKAGE Circular, whether you will be an Agent or not. It contains important information for everybody. Great Inducement to Agents.
000o WADE & CO., 24 South-Third St., Phila

A No. 1 SHIRTS
TO ORDER.
Manufacture Unsurpassed—Fitting Inimitable,
AT
CHAS. L. LOCKWOOD'S,
No. 675 Broadway, N. Y.
P. S.—Self-Measurement sent on application.

HATS!
D. BEAUDIN,
FRENCH HATTER,
NOW WITH
CHARLES L. LOCKWOOD,
No. 675 Broadway, N. Y.
P. S.—Hats made to Order and sent per Express Directions for Self-Measurement sent on application.
0000

Shults' Unguent.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. SHULTZ, Troy, N. Y.

STAMMERING
Cured by Bates's Patent Scientific Appliances. For Pamphlets and Drawings describing the same, address o H. C. L. MEARS, 377 West 23d St., N. Y.

To Consumptives!

The Advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, etc. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address
REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
Williamsburg, Kings Co., N. Y.
000o

A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts.,
MAGNIFYING 800 times, mailed on receipt of price. Five of different powers, $1. Address F. B. BOWEN, Box 239, Boston, Mass. o

Soldiers' Timekeepers.

SPLENDID WATCHES, SILVER AND GOLD PLATED, Open and Hunting Cases, $6, $8, $10 and $15. Sent free on receipt of price. Just the Watches for Soldiers' wear. Send for our Trade Circular of Watches, Jewelry, etc.
C. H. KIMBALL & CO.,
Room 32, 209 Broadway,
435-89 Cor. Beekman St., N. Y.

MUNN & COMPANY,
Solicitors of American & Foreign Patents,
AND PUBLISHERS OF THE ILLUSTRATED SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, 37 Park Row, New York.
Pamphlets of information about patents free
Specimen copies of the paper FREE.

COLD FEET!
USE THE ELECTRO METALLIC INSOLES.
They keep the feet warm in the coldest weather.
METTAM & CO., Proprietors,
49 Broadway, New York.
Price $1; prepaid, by mail, $1 30. Send for Circular.

Army Corps Pins in Fine Gold Plate, richly Enamelled and Chased. Newest and most handsome style. Mailed free for only $1, by GEO. DEMERIT & CO., Jewellers, 303 Broadway, N. Y. 435-6o

GOLD PENS AND CASES.
Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each Pen. Send for a Circular. Pens reported on receipt of 6 cents.
435-47o E. B. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

SUSPICIOUSLY EXTRAVAGANT.

MRS. JONES (who is not aware her husband is listening)—"Well, Biddy, I'll make you a present of my b irs antique, and make Mr. Jones give me another."

[Jones, who is an awfully suspicious man, cannot make it out why she makes her girl such a handsome present.]

GOLD WATCH FREE!
$15 Per Day Easy $15

—100,000 men and women wanted to act as Agents in every Town, Village and County, for the most popular, useful and valuable ARTICLE EVER OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC. A LARGE SIZE VALUE PACKAGES, containing large quantities of STATIONERY, RECIPES, YANKEE NOTIONS, etc., Sold wonderfully. Only 25 cents. Largest, Best and Cheapest ever manufactured. Each Package contains more real valuable articles than any half dozen others ever s ld, such as fine Writing Materials, Paper, Envelopes, Pens, Pencils, Rubber, Embossing Ladies' Paris Fashion Plates, Designs for Needlework, Colognes, Recipes, Household Companions, Camp Companions (for Soldiers), Parlor Amusements, Guide for Letter Writing, Many Ways to Get Rich, Likenesses of Generals, Game Cards, Calendar for 1864, new Comic Album, Language of Flowers, Yankee Notions of all kinds, Recipes, Gems, Army Laws and Advice, Book of Curly Pictures of Fashionable Jewellery, etc., etc., etc., the whole worth MANY DOLLARS, if bought separately. Price only 25 cents; ONLY 25 cents retail. Wholesale rates to Agents very low. 100 to 300 PER CENT. PROFIT ALLOWED. GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE ARMY. All Soldiers are allowed to Receive and Sell our Goods. A Splendid Gold or Silver Hunting Case Watch, English Movements, and Correct Timepiece, presented "free" to all who act as Agents. Send for our New Circulars for 1864, with Extra Premium Inducements, Free.

S. C. HICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., New York, the Great Original, Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World. Beware of imposters offering our Premiums.

Attention of Officers and all members of the Army is called to the New style Corps Pins in Fine Gold Plate, richly Enamelled and Chased. Mailed free, for $1, by GEO. DEMERIT & CO., 303 Broadway, New York.

$2 TO $5 PER DAY!—Agents, local and traveling, wanted everywhere. Business honorable, easy and permanent. Article of great good profits, and adze useful to citizen or soldier, man, woman or child. Full particulars sent free, or box of samples by mail, 31 cents. C. J. BESTOR,
435-89 27 Main Street, Hartford, Conn.

The New Bellevue, or perfected STEREOSCOPE, just patented, has a sliding focus and a sliding, hinged, cross-sweeping lid eyes, and is mailed, prepaid, for $2 50; with 12 assorted views, $3; by HENRY CRAIG, 333 Broadway, N. Y. Liberal discount to dealers. 435o

Salesmen Wanted.—Salary Paid. Address (with stamp) to Harris Bros., Boston, Mass. 435-47o

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, CURED and PREVENTED. Particulars Address
435-47o CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

BALLARD PATENT BREECH-LOADING RIFLES and CARBINES,

Carrying the copper water-proof cartridge, and also using ordinary loose powder. This gun is now admitted by all competitors to be superior to any other now in use. Simple in its mode of construction and perfect workmanship are a sure guarantee against its getting out of order. The great celerity of loading with either fixed or loose ammunition alone makes it superior to all others, and renders it good for both sporting and military purposes, and have been adopted both by the Grand Government and a number of States. We have the highest testimonials of their efficiency and merits.

We also offer to the public our new Cartridge and Sporting Rifle, manufactured by ourselves. This gun is not equal to a belt or pocket weapon. No one wishing a rifle should fail to send for circular.

For farth r particulars send for descriptive circular. TERMS—Do not forget that Ballard Rifles and Pistols may be used with either copper cartridge or loose ammunition.
MERWIN & BRAY, Sole Agents,
o 362 Broadway, N. Y.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Sexual causes, in each Sex—a remarkable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in a sealed letter envelope, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

GREAT CHANCE
TO
MAKE MONEY.

We want Agents everywhere to sell the most splendid

STEEL ENGRAVINGS

Ever published. We will furnish them so that a stock of $10 will yield $90 also,

PRIZE STATIONERY PACKETS

With which we give, as Premiums to Agents,

Gold and Silver Watches.

Full particulars in Circular.
Mailed free, Address
G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
o 7 Beekman Street, N. Y.

NEW CORPS PIN.

We can now offer to Officers and all members of the Army our New Style Corps Pin in Fine Gold Plate, richly Chased and Enamelled, with Corps designation in Fine Enamel, Inlaid, Colored, to denote the Division, being the neatest, richest and finest Pin ever got up. Mailed free for $1.
GEO. DEMERIT & CO., Jewellers,
435-6o 303 Broadway, N. Y.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

ALL Articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newbern, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at that route, by HARTDEGEN & EXPRESS No. 74 Broadway. Soldiers charged low rates. 000o

To all who wish to make Money!

Send your address to J. W. YALE, Syracuse, N. Y., and you will receive free a sample of YALE'S CELEBRATED FLAG OF OUR UNION AND MILITARY PRIZE STATIONERY ENVELOPE, with Circular. 434 6o

WATCHES
AND
$8. CHAINS. $11.

A Beautiful Engraved GOLD PLATED WATCH AND CHAIN, fine Swiss Movement, handsome dial and hands, warranted a perfect timekeeper, $8.

Engraved SILVER, same as above, chain included, $8.

A very heavy HUNTING CASED SOLID SILVER WATCH, full jewelled and fine English Movement, Silver Chain, warranted a perfect timekeeper, and a handsome GOLD PLATED CHAIN included, for $11.

We will send, on receipt of the money, one of our Watches and a Chain by mail, postage paid, to any address. These Watches are especially adapted to the Army, being heavily cased and perfect timekeepers, and in running order.
GEORGE A. ELY & CO.,
o 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Handsomest Pin Out.—The New Style Army Corps Pin in Heavy Gold Plate, Beautifully Enamelled and Chased. Mailed free for only $1, by GEO. DEMERIT & CO., 303 Broadway, N. Y. 435-6o

Dyspepsia Tablets.

For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by S. G. WELLS, and sold by Druggists generally. 50 cents per box; sent free on receipt of 60 cents. Depot, 207 Centre Street, second floor. o

VINELAND, LANDS, TO ALL WANTING FARMS!

Large and thriving Settlement; mild and healthful climate; 36 miles south of Philadelphia, by railroad. Rich Soil—produces Large Crops, which can now be seen growing; 20 and 30 Acre Farms at from $15 to $20 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings—Churches, schools and good society. All now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The handy will select the place to suit and to unimproved. Letters answered. Papers containing reports and giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland, P. O., Cumberland Co., New Jersey.

From Report of Solon Robinson, Ag. Ed. Tribune:
"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position, and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."
428-30o

$7. WATCHES. $7

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED

Gold-Plated Watch,

LEVER CAP,
Small size, ENGLISH MOVEMENTS,
PERFECT TIMEKEEPER.
Sent free by mail, in neat case, for only $7.

A SOLID SILVER
Same as above, $7.
Specially adapted to the Army and Navy.
CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., 38 & 40 Ann St., N. Y.

Volunteers, Attention!

For the derangements of the system incidental to the change of diet, Wounds, Eruptions and Exposures which every Volunteer is liable to, there are no remedies so safe, convenient and reliable as HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT. 25 cents per box. To insure getting genuine, go to the Depot,
o No. 80 MAIDEN LANE, New York.

Sportsmen, Tourists, and Army and Navy Officers.
Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses

Portability combined with great power of Field, Marine, Tourists', Opera and general out-door day and night couple perspective glasses, will show distinctly a person to know him at from 5 to 6 miles. The excellence of the great magnifying power strength and improved the sight, without the distressing effort of frequent changes. Catalogues sent by enclosing stamp.
SEMMONS, Oculist-Optician,
0000 60½ Broadway, N. Y.

FRENCH FLANNEL ARMY SHIRTS

Dress Shirts
TO MEASURE,
SIX SHIRTS
$12, $15 & $19.

Dress Shirts,
TO ORDER,
are made a Perfect Fit, Superior Work and Use Unequalled in Quality for the Price.
An extensive assortment of imported SCARFS, TIES, RIBBED SHIRTS, GLOVES and SUSPENDERS.
JAMES PARRISH, 323 Canal Street, New York
326

THE CRAIG MICROSCOPE.

This is the Best and Cheapest Microscope in the World for general use. It requires no focal adjustment, and magnifies about 100 diameters, or 10,000 times, yet is so simple that a child can use it. It is mailed, prepaid, for $2 25; or with six beautiful mounted objects for $3; with 24 objects $5; by HENRY CRAIG,
o 333 Broadway, N. Y.

A Secret Worth Knowing.—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER: Without cider or apples. In 12 hours. Recipe sent to any one for 25 cts. Address
F. B. BOWEN, Box 239, Boston, Mass.

TOMES, SON & MELVAIN
6 Maiden Lane, New York,
Dealers in "Fine Arms," "Cutlery," "Sporting Articles," "Fancy Goods," Perfumery, Soap, Brushes, Horse-hair Rugs, etc., etc.
Military and Navy Equipments in every variety.
A large assortment of
RICH PRESENTATION SWORDS.
435-7o Constantly on hand.

BALLOU'S
Patented
French Yoke
SHIRTS.
Warranted to fit, and to be
CHEAPER
for the same qualities and make than those of any other Shirt House in this city.
Circular containing drawings and prices sent free.
For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.
BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, New York.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 436—Vol. XVII.] NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 6, 1864. [Price 8 Cents.

THE CATASTROPHE AT SANTIAGO—REMOVING THE REMAINS OF THE DEAD TO THE CEMETERY.—FROM A SKETCH BY AN AMERICAN RESIDENT.

THE CATASTROPHE AT SANTIAGO DE CHILE—THE SEARCH FOR MISSING KINDRED.—FROM A SKETCH BY AN AMERICAN RESIDENT.

Barnum's American Museum.

MONSIEUR JOSEPH, THE GREAT FRENCH GIANT, 8 feet 4 inches; ANNA SWAN, the GIANT GIRL, 8 feet 1 inch; GIANT BOY, 8 feet; LILLIPUTIAN KING, 14 years old, only 22 inches high; Automaton Musical Troupe, Moving Wax Figures, Enormous Serpent, &c., &c. Tom Taylor's great drama, the TICKET-OF-LEAVE MAN, every AFTERNOON AND EVENING. Admission to all, only 25 cents; Children under 10, 15 cents.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 6, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to Frank Leslie, 72 Duane street, between Broadway and Elm, New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, also Frank Leslie's Pictorial History of the War of 1861, by George P. Bemis & Co., Proprietors of the London American, 100 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One copy one year	$3 50
Two copies " to one address	5 00
Four " " "	9 00
Magazine and paper one year	5 00

Notice to Advertisers.

The value of our paper as an advertising medium has become so generally known, that we are compelled every week to refuse columns of advertisements. The vast increase of our circulation, penetrating as it does into the most profitable channels, renders our space doubly valuable, and justifies us in the course we have determined upon—that of increasing our rates of advertising in the following ratio:

75 cents a line on the outside or last page.
40 " " on the 14th and 15th pages.

Notice to Contributors.

Our paper is beyond all others the journal that offers to the public the greatest number of American tales and poems. Great as are the numbers that constantly reach us, we are always happy to receive tales and poems of merit. If accepted they will be remunerated duly. When declined they are returned without delay.

Contributors will be good enough to write legibly, on one side only of the paper, and give their address distinctly. Comic sketches for engraving, or hints for such illustrations, are also acceptable.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

Gen. Marson, with a large force, recently made a raid from Point Lookout into Westmoreland, Northumberland and Richmond counties, destroying great quantities of grain, pork and bacon, with several tanneries and bridges, and drove off prisoners, horses, mules, cattle and sheep. How much this will be felt by the rebels may be judged, that lately a Richmond paper devoted an article to a drove of swine that entered the city, whose advent caused the people as much joy as that of some Yankee prisoners caused them grief—for Yankees eat.

In the attack on our train at Moorefield junction, the rebels lost 13 killed and 20 wounded.

On the 18th the rebels attacked our pickets at Flint hill, near Fairfax Court-House, but were repulsed. Two divisions of Lee's army have gone to reinforce Longstreet.

TENNESSEE.

On the 14th Jan. Gen. Vance (rebel) made a raid towards Temsville, and captured 23 wagons, but was pursued by Col. Palmer, who retook the wagons and brought in Gen. Vance, with his Adjutant-General and Inspector-General, with 150 horses and 100 stand of arms. Tennesseeans in Bragg's army are deserting by scores.

Great distress is said to prevail in the rebel army, but Longstreet has, it is stated, received heavy reinforcements, and is advancing on Nashville.

Union men in Tennessee are crossing out their accounts without recourse to law, and the hellhounds who murdered men, women and children, and hunted them with dogs through the mountains, are daily cut down.

NORTH CAROLINA.

This State shows great opposition to the Davis tyranny. It wishes to secede from secession, and take the exploded position of armed neutrality or isolated independence. A call for a State Convention has been issued at Raleigh.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The shelling of Charleston continues regularly. The rebels, in despair, are preparing rams to attack our fleet. A naval expedition up Morrell's inlet destroyed a rebel schooner lying there loaded with cotton, turpentine and rosin.

FLORIDA.

A small guard of the 10th Conn. and 24th Mass. getting wood near St. Augustine, were suddenly attacked by superior numbers, losing Lieut. Walker in command, and 25 men killed.

LOUISIANA.

Madisonville or Lake Ponchartrain was taken before Jan. 12, by the 12th Maine and 9th Conn. and some other troops, and is now garrisoned.

Gen. Banks has ordered an election on Feb. 22.

The rebels are concentrating near Baton Rouge, but discontent prevails, and deserters come constantly into Ullman's lines.

TEXAS.

Gen. Fitzhenry Warren has occupied Indianola. Cotton is pouring into our lines, and the rebel cause in Texas is looked upon as hopelessly lost.

Gen. Dana has relieved Gen. Washburne.

On the 29th an affair took place at Matagorda bay, between the 13th Maine and a large force of rebel cavalry aided by a gunboat. Our men under Gen. Herron had landed to cut off the rebel pickets, but were forced to re-embark. The rebels the next night lost their gunboat, the J. G. Carr, by fire.

NAVAL.

The Florida is at Brest watched by the Kearsage. The pirate was to sail in February, and to be escorted out by a French man-of-war, for fear that we should punish her for her atrocities.

The rebel steamer Gen. Jackson was captured Dec. 31, off Mobile, by the Kennebec. She is worth $100,000, her cargo consisting of cotton, turpentine and rosin.

The Ranger, Bendigo and Hero, blockade-runners, have been destroyed off Wilmington, but at the expense of the steamer Iron Age, which ran ashore and was blown up.

On Dec. 24 the schooner Exchange, blockade-runner, was captured off Galveston by the Antona.

On the 31st the steamer Gray Jacket was taken by the Kennebec near Mobile, and on Jan. 17th the John Scott by the same vessel.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 17th January, Mr. Wilson's resolution for the expulsion of Garrett Davis was referred to the Judiciary Committee. A vote of thanks was passed to Com. Vanderbilt for his present of the steamer Vanderbilt.

In the House, Mr. Dawson offered a resolution that whenever a rebel State laid down its arms and submitted to the Government, it should be at once re-admitted on the former status. Rejected by 77 to 56. A resolution offered by Mr. Smith that it was the duty to put down the rebellion at all hazards was carried by 112 to 16.

In the Senate, on the 19th, Mr. Bayard made a long speech, and defended himself for refusing to take the oath of allegiance.

In the House there was nothing of public interest.

In the Senate, on the 20th, a bill establishing an uniform ambulance corps was reported by the Military Committee. Mr. Collamer made a very able speech in favor of members taking the oath of allegiance.

In the House the sitting was consumed in a discussion upon taxing whiskey.

In the Senate, on the 21st Jan., Mr. Reverdy Johnson made a very strong speech in defence of Garrett Davis, in which he made assertions of a very hostile character to the Administration. Mr. Foote, of Vermont, was also opposed to the administering of the oath.

The Senate adjourned to Monday.

In the House the time was occupied in revenue discussions.

In the House, on the 22d, the bill to increase the internal revenue was taken up, the amendments agreed to in the Committee of the whole adopted, and the bill finally passed by a vote of 87 against 68. The tax on spirits is fixed at 60 cents per gallon—an increase of 40 cents—and that all domestic spirits on hand are subject to taxation. The act of July, 1862, acted prospectively, but this bill taxes the entire stock on hand, and when it is considered that the distilleries have for the past year been driven to their utmost capacity, in anticipation of an increase of the spirit tax, the effect of the action of the House on the whiskey speculators may be easily imagined. The bill also levies a tax of two cents per pound on cotton. The joint resolution amendatory of the Confiscation act was debated for awhile, and the House adjourned till Monday.

THE IDLER ABOUT TOWN.

There are all kinds of institutions in New York, institutions ranging from the highest intellectual points down to the most vulgar and debased, and there are all classes of persons to honor and patronise them by their presence. But the most curious of our modern institutions is the "Ice Carnival," a sort of general fancy-dress party and masquerade! The idea is new to these latitudes, although it is common in northern Europe, but we think that with perseverance and judicious supervision it will be adopted by our people and become popular. Several of these quaint entertainments have been given in the far-off regions of Hoboken and Brooklyn, but as we should have required several handbooks and a band of trusty explorers to discover their locality, we did not venture on the journey, and have not, consequently, seen them. But we had an "Ice Carnival" of our own last week on the Fifth avenue skating pond, which was lively and spirited, indeed—first-rate as far as it went—but was considerably interfered with by the mild weather and the consequent mushy, cut-up state of the ice. The fact is, there had been such a carnival on the pond all day—over 2,500 people having skated there—that the glassy surface was as badly scored as a Polish prisoner's back after the application of the Russian knout. Still the night carnival was rather a jolly affair. The moon shone as bright as day, so that you could see the faces of the skaters without the aid of the glaring lights which surrounded the pond on all sides. On we dashed towards the ice ballroom behind our spanking grays; we should have heard the band discoursing the most exquisite music, but the wind being unfavorable, somebody else heard it instead. However, we were saluted by showers of very brilliant rockets, which being fired against the wind, insured the return of the sticks as near to the assembled crowd as possible. We narrowly escaped receiving three in our hat, and perchance our head, and the thud they made plunging into the ground close to us made us thankful that they did not favor us direct.

The scene on the pond was very animated. A hundred glow-worm-like lanterns were glancing along its surface with arrowy swiftness, lighting up here and there the dazzling dresses of gold, velvet and laces. There were quite a number of fancy costumes. Ladies in the Highland kirtles, and the still more becoming and seasonable Russian dress, short tunics trimmed with fur; cavaliers of all periods and no periods; then there were sultanas on ice, and, oh, eternal fitness of things, bears on ice! and, oh, anomaly of anomalies, excruciatingly refreshing, devils on ice! An iced devil is not seen every day, and we are grateful to the ice carnival for having afforded us the sight. Every one seemed to be in a blaze of enjoyment. Of course we took the prettiest and sweetest girl of our acquaintance with us. We always do—for we are sensitively organized, and cannot endure proximity with anything short of the beautiful. We assisted remarkably dexterously in putting skates upon the smallest and prettiest feet in New York, and started off with the fleetness of a Mercury and the grace of an Apollo. We are not absolute master of skating; our teeth have a strong sympathy with the outside "edge," only our teeth accomplish more in that way than our feet, but we were decidedly more accomplished in the art than our companion. So we skated and skated, and skated away, until the warm blood tingled in every vein and we both grew excited. Every now and then we indulged our companion in a little show off, doing something backwards, gliding half a yard on one skate while shaking the other in the air as a balance; and once we indulged in our chef d'œuvre, the spread eagle, with, we confess it, our toes a little turned in, for our figure is not favorable for exhibiting the royal bird in the necessary right angle-toed position. Still she admired us vastly, and as we dashed off in that graceful, swaying, unisonous motion, we felt emboldened by that admiration, and exclaimed with fervor, "Dearest Ariadne, the propitious moment has arrived," here we swayed off on the right foot, "when the passion of my life must find words," here we swayed off on the left foot; "let me, beloved, lay this heart at your feet;" here a confounded rut caught our heel, and brought us down with a wud on the ice that would have broken a thinner man into pieces. Ariadne, too, the false as fair, sailed off at lightning speed, leaving behind her a little cutting laugh, which hurt us more than the fall. We were wet, very wet, shaken in our person and in our affections, and on after reflection we believe that we merited the endearing epithet of "bear" bestowed upon us by our gentle companion, as we took our surly ride homewards. We called and apologised the next day, but that night on the ice is between us, and the wine of affection has had a cooler that for ever forbids all genial reopening.

The German opera company has produced Richard Wagner's "Tannhauser" at the Academy to crowded houses. It has been received with much applause, for it is the representative idea of young Germany, and young Germany must, of course, sustain it. But the mass of the audiences voted it, as a whole, a heavy bore. We have not space to devote to a critical analysis of this work, we leave that to the dailies and the musical journals. We devoted much space to it when it was first produced in the Bowery, acknowledging in it some grand thoughts and masterly combinations, and its ingenious and brilliant instrumentation, but its ineffable dulness was as striking then as now. Its labored recitatives, its still more labored solos, in which they endeavor to banish any phrase which will possibly interest the ear, has been successfully carried out, and its false theory, which demands that the orchestra shall be perfectly independent of the singers, and that neither shall bear any sustained melody, are probably points on which abstruse German admiration may be deservedly bestowed, but are certainly beyond our loving appreciation. It will probably be asked, why any man should write an opera four hours and a half in length, for the purpose of showing how little he can put into it to please the public. It will possibly be answered that science is more noble than [illegible]—that Euclid's problems were not intended as a jest book. That is it precisely. But Euclid proved something, while Wagner has not.

Max Maretzek opens here on the 3d February, and will carry his season on for three months. This will be, we think, very pleasant news to all. The success of his company in Boston has exceeded the expectation of every one. All his artists became popular favorites, but Mazzoleni became the rage. We shall be delighted to hear them once again.

We regret to learn that the English opera cannot find a place to perform in, until the middle of February. Then, however, we shall have "Maritana" produced in first-rate style, every part having been thoroughly rehearsed. The performances will resumed at Niblo's Saloon.

We have received quite a number of Spanish journals from Havana, and they all contain the most glowingly eulogistic accounts of the performances of Harry Sanderson. The whole city seems to be fascinated by his dashing and brilliant playing, and the critics go into extacies over his execution, which they look upon as superhuman. A humorous and sarcastic journal has published his portrait. It was sketched, we presume, while he was doing some tremendous tours de force; for bits of pianos, whole pianos, music, music stools, &c., are being dashed about him in terrible confusion. The same journals speak of his great success in a money point of view, which we are very glad to know.

Two of the most spirited and attractive balls come off within two weeks. One, the Liederkranz Society and the other the Arion Society, both being not only fancy dress but masquerade also. The societies are German, of course, and present a combination of music and art very desirable to be associated with, and the very elements over all others to make social gatherings delightful.

Wallack still runs "Rosedale" three times a week, and presents revivals of old and modern comedies on the other nights. The house is crowded every night; rain or shine, it makes little difference to the habitués of Wallack's Theatre.

"The Ticket-of-Leave Man" every night at Winter Garden. Florence must be making a fortune.

"Mazeppa; or, the Untameable Rocking-Horse," has made a great hit at Mrs. John Wood's Olympic Theatre. The daring feats of horsemanship exhibited by Mr. Drew excite so much admiration that the people grow hysterical, and roar with laughter.

Barnum's Museum is rich this week in human curiosities; the tallest and the smallest men and women in the world can be seen there every day and every evening. Then there are some musical wonders that can hardly be matched anywhere, together with the dramatic performances in the lecture-room, and half a million curiosities in and about the halls.

The Distinguished Dead of 1863.—The King of Denmark, the King of Madagascar and the King of the Sandwich Islands are the only monarchs who died during the past year. France has lost Billault, her leading Government Minister. England's list of distinguished dead is unusually large. It includes the Marquises of Lansdowne and Normanby, Sir George Cornewall Lewis, Mulready, the painter, Sir Cresswell Cresswell, Lord Clyde, Archbishop Whateley and Lord Lyndhurst. In this country but very few prominent citizens have died; Archbishop Kenrick was the only great dignitary in the ecclesiastical sphere. In the army our losses have been severe, including among the Generals the names of Berry, Reynolds, Sill, Lytle, Bayard, Saunders, Buford and Corcoran. The navy has lost the gallant Commodores Foote and Rogers. The rebels have lost Stonewall Jackson, Generals Paxton, Tracy, Tilghman, Pender, Garnett, Barksdale, Helm, Smith, Van Dorn, John B. Floyd and Mr. Yancey. Mexico has lost one of her best men, General Comonfort.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—Miss Dickinson's address in the House of Representatives, Washington, yielded as follows: Total receipts from tickets, $1,116 50. Expenses—advertising, printing and erection of platform, $85 50; net proceeds, $1,031. A cheque for this amount has been placed in the hands of the Vice-President and Speaker, to be delivered by them, in behalf of Miss Dickinson, to the Freedmen's Relief Association.

—— The Board of Councilmen has received three communications from the Mayor—one announcing that Gen. Dix had taken possession of the Park barracks for the reception of the returning regiments, and that he would have them cleaned; another recommending an ordinance compelling railroad companies to cart away dirt thrown from their tracks to some dumping ground; and a third urging a memorial to the Legislature for authority to issue $5,000,000 to pave with Belgian pavement all the streets below 14th not already so paved. These communications were referred to appropriate committees.

—— The Custom House frauds are being investigated in Washington by a Committee specially appointed. It is generally believed that Collector Barney will resign and Wakeman, of the Post Office, be his successor.

—— The 5-20 loan of $500,000,000 has been all taken.

—— Gold fell to 148 on the 21st January.

—— The ladies of the North Baptist Church, Hartford, Conn., recently invited the gentlemen of the choir to a leap-year sleighride. The latter accepting, the former hired a large sleigh, called for their guests, handed them in, drove them to Windsor and back, gave them a good dinner and paid the bill, taking tender care of them all the time.

—— A sort of spotted fever, very fatal, is prevalent at Carbondale, Pa., six or eight deaths occurring daily. The victims die a few hours after being attacked.

—— Harvey Hutchins has recoved $10,000 from the Syracuse and Binghampton Railroad Company for serious injuries received from an accident on a car.

—— The Joint Committee on the Conduct of the War has been announced in the Senate and the House as follows: Senators Chandler, Wade and Harding; Representatives Gooch, Julian, Odell and Loan. The members are the same as on the old Committee, with the exception of Senator Harding in place of Senator Wright, who took Andy Johnson's place, and Mr. Loan in lieu of Mr. Covode, who was not returned to the present House. The Committee will commence its sessions immediately.

—— E. S. Hayward, Brighton, N. Y., has been awarded by the Monroe County Agricultural Society prizes for the following crops: Rutabagas, 776 bushels per acre; profit, $123 88. Barley, 40 4-10 bushels per acre; profit $23 27. Potatoes, 290 bushels per acre; profit, $74 44. Carrots, 529 bushels per acre; profit, $108.

—— There are six miles of wooden pavements, which, after six years constant wear, are nearly as perfect as when laid down. They are made thus: "Lay down flooring of one-inch boards on a bed of sand, coat the floor with asphaltum, stand on end blocks of wood six inches high by three inches thick and nine inches in length, in rows about one inch apart, divided by strips of boards. Fill in these open narrow spaces with asphaltum."

—— A question affecting the banishment of Clement L. Vallandigham came before the Supreme Court of the United States on Friday. It was originally ex-parte, Vallandigham being the petitioner. The motion for a writ of certiorari to the Judge-Advocate-General was argued by ex-Senator Pugh for and by Judge-Advocate Holt in opposition thereto.

—— The Union Lincoln Association of this city is now fully organized, Simeon Draper as President, John Quackenbush as Vice-President, S. J. Glassel as Secretary. Resolutions have been adopted strongly urging the renomination of Mr. Lincoln. The Hon. Truman Smith was a speaker at the last meeting.

—— The National Union Club of Philadelphia, on Thursday evening, adopted resolutions recommending the renomination of President Lincoln. The Union League of that city has indicated a similar preference.

—— A barn belonging to Mr. Byron K. Stevens, in Ravenswood, L. I., was burned on Friday evening, with a large quantity of hay. No insurance.

—— W. W. Treadwell, cashier of the People's Bank of Hudson, Mich., absconded on Thursday, with $6,000 belonging to the bank.

Western.—There is an evident disposition of the Western States to avail themselves of the recent proclamation. The Arkansas delegation have had another interview with the President, who, in answer to their proposition, expressed his intention to adhere to the principles as stated in his Message and Proclamation, and his hope that they might be able to comply with the same. The statements made by the delegation are to the effect that the free population of the State is 394 025; slaves, 111,115; total, 435 440. In 30 counties, which have always been in favor of the abolition of slavery, the population is—free, 167,154; slave, 13,690.

—— A notorious character of Morgan's command, named Dick Low, escaped from Camp Morton about three months ago, and managed to get to Owen county, Ky., where his friends reside. The Deputy Marshal of Owen county, hearing of his arrival, immediately arrested him, and he was incarcerated in the county jail. His friends, it seems, banded together to the number of about 15 or 20, and on the night of the 13th attacked the jail, overpowering the guard and effecting the rescue of the prisoner. They carried him off in defiance of the citizens, amid the wildest shouts of triumph.

—— The California State Senate, on the 22d Jan., adopted a resolution recommending the renomination of Mr. Lincoln for President.

Military.—Gen. Schofield has been ordered to relieve Gen. Foster, in command of the Department of the Ohio, the latter officer not being sufficiently recovered from his wounds to continue his duties. Gen. Schofield has left Washington for Knoxville.

—— From every quarter, says the Portland Advertiser, we hear of a great rush to re-enlist. A large number of the 5th have re-enlisted. Officers from the Rappahanock report a perfect furor for re-enlisting. It is thought that more than three-fourths of the men in the old regiments will re-enlist. Volunteers are also crowding into the ranks, and bounties on the decline. A week since $400 were freely paid by town agents for recruits, but to-day they are plenty at $300. Any town can fill its quota at this rate.

—— Gen. Spinola has been deprived of the superintendence of the recruiting for the brigade, and Col. Nugent put in his stead. It was at Gen. Spinola's office that the outrages upon personal liberty occurred which would have disgraced Russia.

Gen. Dix is about having his powers enlarged, so as to meet the recent enormities committed at Lafayette Hall, where men were openly dragged from the sidewalk and forcibly compelled to enlist.

—— A commission is now sitting in Fort Lafayette to examine into the cases of the political prisoners there.

Naval.—Assistant-Secretary Fox, of the Navy Department, has addressed a letter to Mr. Oliphant, owner of the fast steamer Kiu Kiang, notifying him that the Government steamer Eutaw will be immediately dispatched to New York, for the purpose of testing the relative speed of the two vessels.

Personal.—N. C. Trowbridge, whose intercepted correspondence was recently published, is a native of Georgia, and was concerned with Lamar in the famous Wanderer and Echo cases. He was arrested in 1862 on suspicion of being a spy, but subsequently released by the Commission, of which Major-Gen. Dix, Judge Pierrepont and E. D. Webster of the State Department were the members, on principle but not to in any way aid rebellion.

—Grace Greenwood, in her lecture at Chicago to aid of the Old Ladies' Home, related the following bedicut: "S he remembered riding in a carriage by the borders of the Mediterranean, with an intimate friend of Seattle. They talked of the ancient bronze of Rome. In the connection her friend spoke of her ancestors, how they had come to America from Switzerland, and who, she said, was the right of her eyes. She knew that he would not be angry with me provocative and have plenty of friends. Soon after, in a Roman scene, his friend said that he must excuse himself to the service of his country. Grace Greenwood then told how he had only laughed at that conversation for the young man referred to was Col. R. G. Shaw, now of the Fifty-fourth Mass'ch'sett's."

—Mr. McElrath, who retired from the Tribune newspaper in January, has returned to the position he held in it.

Obituary.—Mr. John M. Elliott, 80 years of age, and for 60 years a printer in New York, died Jan. 21, at his residence, No. 191 Grand street, Jersey city. Deceased was the only survivor of the celebrated Miranda expedition of 1805.

—Thomas D. Foster, the author of innumerable negro melodies from the very commencement of minstrelsy, died at 31 Spring street, on Jan. 20. His funeral was celebrated on Thursday, and he was laid in the grave with a band was playing "Old Folks at Home," and "Come Where my Love Lies Dreaming." In the hundreds of singers who have profited by his compositions entertain proper regard for his name, few will doubtless indeed it by the construction of a fitting monument.

—S. A. French, chief engineer of the city, died on the 16th of January.

Accidents and Offences.—The trial of John R. Hoskins for the murder of Policeman Gourley, nearly ten years ago, was concluded in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, before Judge Leonard, on Jan. 20, and resulted in the prisoner being convicted of manslaughter in the first degree.

—G. Jones (Count Jonones), who some years ago was a small actor in the Keeney's, was convicted on Jan. 23, at Boston, of being a "common barretor," in other words, a promoter of strife and causeless litigation.

—Henry Caldwell, a recruiting agent of New Britain, Connecticut, had his house burglarized on Jan. 18, about half a mile east of that village. His skull was fractured by a large auger bit, or some such tool, in his head. It is supposed that he was murdered on Saturday night. He had $600 in cash with him, of which he was robbed; but a gold watch and pin were left on his person. Prints in the snow in the garden where the had been a scuffle, and that two men made the attack.

—The Hon. S. P. Barter, of the Kentucky Senate, was brought to the Kentucky Hotel, in Jersey, on Jan. 21. His clothes caught fire, and as he was too weak, from long sickness, to save himself, he died before assistance could be rendered.

—Felix Gill, of Spruce street, Philadelphia, has been arrested on the charge of murdering his wife. Inasmuch as a license of $20 00 was recently left him, and a property insurance, of $3,000 was made payable. This money he handed to his wife, a d said to be supplied by her with what he required. He seemingly dissipated upon the strength to his good fortune. he became a companion with the most abandoned characters, and wound up his career of crime by murdering his wife. Before he left, however, much intoxicated, spoiled for money. The woman, whose blood was curdling, was almost over part of the room, and the furniture of which was broken to pieces, must have struggled hard. She descended by against her fate. She was beaten to death with a poker.

Foreign.—An English hairdresser has had the neither of his establishment fitted with an iron apiarie with three wheels carrying bells rather birds. Under pretence that he must purchase, a lady entered him, and the customers being placed underneath, have their heads washed by machinery.

—Dr. Lyon, of Verviers, France, cures varicose veins with a solution of acetate dipped in a solution of potash of chloride of iron—from 8 to 16 grammes to half a pound of water.

—Coal mines, 150 miles square in area, have been discovered in Brazil. The coal is bituminous, and generally of a good as the best English.

—Pekin, China, has the oldest newspaper in the world. It has been published for 1,400 years, and is printed on a large sheet of silk.

—A Frenchman has invented a way of pulverizing state, and then making it with some substance by which it is converted into a very hard and durable material for building purposes.

—John Pringle, Nelson's coxswain on board the Victory, died very aged 100 years.

—Lyons lace is not always lace. A lady recently bought some elegantly embroidered articles, but unfortunately the pattern was made of a sort of paper, and melted off at the first washing.

—A Canadian has invented a newspaper is in process of incubation. The capital is said to be immense. It is to advocate most liberal principles.

Art, Science and Literature.—The Herald says that the finest pictures stolen from the houses of the Londoners of late are now being hawked about the market by Wall street brokers, who have got them for a mere song.

Chit-Chat.—A London optician has invented a "small" opera glass, which squeeze on a sheet of camera writes words &c. It cannot be taken hold of, nor can the writing be rubbed out by ordinary agency.

—Land in the Poultry, a street in the centre of the city of London, is worth a million and a half pounds sterling.

—A Northern English rector used to think it polite to read the service before the arrival of the music. A little while ago he forgot his manners, and began to read, which caused the—"Stop, sir," called out the clerk, "He isn't come yet."

—Frenchmen philosophers have invented a method of making statistics more easy than the old of graphs. The system, which appears to be simple, a mechanical application supposing the chief results of the first observations. The sitter is placed in the centre of a circular chamber. It from sheep or ranged in circles, each chamber are placed at equal distances at 20 seconds, by means of a clock. The sitter is photographed in succession, and by a mechanical contrivance of extreme ingenuity, the images of all the others are traced and noted upon the copy. A short sitting is required, and the result is said to be a perfected resemblance, a model of likeness is insured, and, it is said, an agreeable mark of art.

—The most remarkable chance of opinion ever known occurs in the New York World, of Saturday, 23rd of January, where after some remarks upon Gen. McClellan's book, it says, verbatim: "It is to be hoped that Judge Russell will visit upon him the utmost penalty of the law. In the old days the rebels are now have been dragg d through the nearest horsepond, and we are really modern now unless we believe, the infliction of a fine and imprisonment." BY. G OD! we say we want to the law length of shrouding his being drawn through a horsepond.

—The following letter has been received by the principal of a public school in England, in reply to a circular, asking the opinion of the parents upon the practice of flogging: Dear Sir—Your flogging circular is duly received. I hopes as to my son John you will flog him less as often as you like. Hes a bad boy is he. Although I've been in the habit of teaching him myself, it seems to me he will have nothing—his equinity is somthing outrageously deficient. Wallop him well, Sur, and you will serve my hearty thanks. Yours, MOSES WALKER. P. S. Wat accounts for John being sich a bad scollar is that he's my son by my wife's first husband."

—Louis Napoleon is said to have recently observed: "I always gauge my English popularity by Punch's representations of me. When I am peaceful he flatter s my physique; when I am in bad odor he makes me ugly. He has made me ugly lately. This is why I suppose I am very much out of favor of hi-hat just now."

—At a recent temperance meeting in Scotland, a convert got up to speak: "My friends," said he, "there was a time I was a drunken sinner. (Cheers.) In a month of reward, my friends, I has s severe ion as my pocket to deny I ever had before. (Loud cheers.) In another month, my friends, I has a good coat on my back as any I ever had before. (Cheers much louder.) A fortnight after that, my friends, I has a pocket-book I felt pretty sure to put in think I kept the pledge another fortnight I should want one." (No cheers.)

"MY STRENGTH IS SUFFICIENT FOR THEE."

I know not how, I know not why I live,
When all the light within me's fled
To you bright star, in heaven's blue valley,
Where rest the blessed dead.

I know not how, I know not why I'm here,
And yet pursue th' busy round of life—
Perform the task of each day's toil,
Engage new ties, and in the varied strife,

I know not how, I know not why I stay,
When dearest ones have passed for e'er away;
No gladsome smile, no tears for me,
No joyous meeting, no merry voice of glee.

I know not how, I know not why it is
My fate differs in this respect way:
As days, and weeks, and months are fleeting on,
Each seem to beckon me away.

I know not how, I know not why to love
Bright flowers, yet blooming on my way.
Or why new friends should e'er be won gone,
Lending a radiance to each passing day.

I know not how, I know not why I try
To struggle up the rugged steep of life;
Battle for right, perform the task
And hasten on, forgetful of the blight.

I do know how, I do know why I live:
The loving hand of Jesus leads me on—
Whispers, "I'm I be at home with me
In that calm there is no busy throng."

I do know how, I do know why I'm here;
Thy loving voice from Calvary's mount is near;
Patiently run thy race, a little longer wait,
You too shall be within the golden gate."

I do know how, I do know why I bear
The rugged Cross, Thou, on my way, hast given;
For on the Cross thou didst bear my sin,
And, pressing onward, reach the goal of Heaven!

ROSIN.

By Mary Ashe.

THEY had nerved themselves for the terrible crisis, but now John Lockdale and his wife sat down in the small apartments they had hired, and thought refuge in the strangest terms.

Their story was a common one. He had been early a clerk in a large concern in New York, and by his ability, industry and business talent had won his way upward, so that at twenty-three he had been taken into the concern as a partner. He had then courted and married Miss Ormsbee to the modest little house which he had hired and furnished, the gentle girl who now sat broken-hearted on the sofa.

Among the friends whom he had gathered around him was Henry Ulshoeffer, a man of talent, full of plans and projects, always in speculations, and never in one long enough to realize more than a success more than a week, although no one ever knew a project of his of any moment to succeed.

He was dangerous, for he was plausible and really so kind hearted and well-meaning. Lockdale often laughed at his schemes, but in his indignation at the immense gulf which the crash of 1857 contrived to make him pay, and the unblushing impudence with which they extorted an average profit of fifty per cent on every dollar of capital employed, the utterly bankrupt agency.

Land in the Poultry, a street in the centre of the city of London, is worth a million and a half pounds sterling.

A Northern English rector used to think it polite to read the service before the arrival of the music. A little while ago he forgot his manners, and began to read, which caused the—"Stop, sir," called out the clerk, "He isn't come yet."

—Frenchmen philosophers have invented a method of making statistics more easy than the old of graphs. The system, which appears to be simple, a mechanical application supposing the chief results of the first observations. The sitter is placed in the centre of a circular chamber. It from sheep or ranged in circles, each chamber are placed at equal distances at 20 seconds, by means of a clock. The sitter is photographed in succession, and by a mechanical contrivance of extreme ingenuity, the images of all the others are traced and noted upon the copy. A short sitting is required, and the result is said to be a perfected resemblance, a model of likeness is insured, and, it is said, an agreeable mark of art.

—The most remarkable chance of opinion ever known occurs in the New York World, of Saturday, 23rd of January, where after some remarks upon Gen. McClellan's book, it says, verbatim: "It is to be hoped that Judge Russell will visit upon him the utmost penalty of the law. In the old days the rebels are now have been dragg d through the nearest horsepond, and we are really modern now unless we believe, the infliction of a fine and imprisonment." BY. G OD! we say we want to the law length of shrouding his being drawn through a horsepond.

—The following letter has been received by the principal of a public school in England, in reply to a circular, asking the opinion of the parents upon the practice of flogging: Dear Sir—Your flogging circular is duly received. I hopes as to my son John you will flog him less as often as you like. Hes a bad boy is he. Although I've been in the habit of teaching him myself, it seems to me he will have nothing—his equinity is somthing outrageously deficient. Wallop him well, Sur, and you will serve my hearty thanks. Yours, MOSES WALKER. P. S. Wat accounts for John being sich a bad scollar is that he's my son by my wife's first husband."

—Louis Napoleon is said to have recently observed: "I always gauge my English popularity by Punch's representations of me. When I am peaceful he flatter s my physique; when I am in bad odor he makes me ugly. He has made me ugly lately. This is why I suppose I am very much out of favor of hi-hat just now."

—At a recent temperance meeting in Scotland, a convert got up to speak: "My friends," said he, "there was a time I was a drunken sinner. (Cheers.) In a month of reward, my friends, I has s severe ion as my pocket to deny I ever had before. (Loud cheers.) In another month, my friends I has a good coat on my back as any I ever had before. (Cheers much louder.) A fortnight after that, my friends, I has a pocket-book I felt pretty sure to put in think I kept the pledge another fortnight I should want one." (No cheers.)

"MY STRENGTH IS SUFFICIENT FOR THEE."

I know not how, I know not why I live,
When all the light within me's fled
To you bright star, in heaven's blue valley,
Where rest the blessed dead.

I know not how, I know not why I'm here,
And yet pursue th' busy round of life—
Perform the task of each day's toil,
Engage new ties, and in the varied strife,

I know not how, I know not why I stay,
When dearest ones have passed for e'er away;
No gladsome smile, no tears for me,
No joyous meeting, no merry voice of glee.

I know not how, I know not why it is
My fate differs in this respect way:
As days, and weeks, and months are fleeting on,
Each seem to beckon me away.

I know not how, I know not why to love
Bright flowers, yet blooming on my way.
Or why new friends should e'er be won gone,
Lending a radiance to each passing day.

I know not how, I know not why I try
To struggle up the rugged steep of life;
Battle for right, perform the task
And hasten on, forgetful of the blight.

I do know how, I do know why I live:
The loving hand of Jesus leads me on—
Whispers, "I'm I be at home with me
In that calm there is no busy throng."

I do know how, I do know why I'm here;
Thy loving voice from Calvary's mount is near;
Patiently run thy race, a little longer wait,
You too shall be within the golden gate."

I do know how, I do know why I bear
The rugged Cross, Thou, on my way, hast given;
For on the Cross thou didst bear my sin,
And, pressing onward, reach the goal of Heaven!

ROSIN.

By Mary Ashe.

THEY had nerved themselves for the terrible crisis, but now John Lockdale and his wife sat down in the small apartments they had hired, and thought refuge in the strangest terms.

Their story was a common one. He had been early a clerk in a large concern in New York, and by his ability, industry and business talent had won his way upward, so that at twenty-three he had been taken into the concern as a partner. He had then courted and married Miss Ormsbee to the modest little house which he had hired and furnished, the gentle girl who now sat broken-hearted on the sofa.

Among the friends whom he had gathered around him was Henry Ulshoeffer, a man of talent, full of plans and projects, always in speculations, and never in one long enough to realize more than a success more than a week, although no one ever knew a project of his of any moment to succeed.

He was dangerous, for he was plausible and really so kind hearted and well-meaning. Lockdale often laughed at his schemes, but in his indignation at the immense gulf which the crash of 1857 contrived to make him pay, and the unblushing impudence with which they extorted an average profit of fifty per cent on every dollar of capital employed, the utterly bankrupt agency.

"Rosin—forty dollars," said Lockdale, hesitating.

"Well, I know," said the other, "that rosin has ruled high lately, but there's a mighty heap coming in now from the North State, and that will bring it down. Anyhow, I ought to make a little sunthin' out of it."

Lockdale paused, his head swam, but his old business education prevailed, and in a moment he said, in a firm voice:

"What does he mean, Lucy? Rosin at forty dollars? I never heard of anyone who had any."

She, too, looked perplexed, as though some new misery threatened them, and this was part of some plot against her husband, but she thought it shrewd into her mind, and, so with a brightening face, she exclaimed:

"John, what was that paper that Ulshoeffer gave you the day before your regiment started?"

The mystery was here, and Lockdale seemed to recollect something. He sprang from his bed, and, with hands quivering with excitement, endeavored to dress. Lucy at last calmed him, and when he was ready he was completely exhausted. As she laid him again on his bed to rally, he gasped, rather than spoke:

"Quick! get that paper of Ulshoeffer. It is all there; rosin, $40 a barrel!"

Lucy soon found the paper which had never been opened, and began to read it, but he could not hear her words.

"Is there no list, Lucy?"

"Yes; on the back, there is schedule A. 850 barrels of rosin, at 75 cents, in the Atlantic Docks, storage paid to January 1, 1863." $637 50.

"What! Lucy, let me see." And when he was convinced he exclaimed: "Can't have risen from one dollar to forty," and then began to calculate: 850 at $40. "Why, Lucy, that is $34,000; and is it possible I am worth that? and we thought ourselves paupers. I must go down town."

Lucy went out and ordered a carriage, and in constant fear of some great accident from the excitement, she helped him to it, and entered with him. Lockdale ordered the driver to go at once to a large auction house at the foot of Wall street, where he was known.

Here he was received by the senior partner with great kindness and compassion, touched at his altered fortunes. John told his story and asked what rosin was worth.

"Why, my dear sir, I call sell it for you to-day at $75, and, indeed, I would advise you not to hold it. If you wish I will dispose of it for you, and have a cheque for you by three o'clock."

The weak-hearted and assignment he overhanded over, and while Lockdale and his wife drove off to get the refreshment both needed, the rosin was sold for over forty-two thousand dollars.

We need not follow their fortunes. The shock to his system might have proved fatal—it produced a cure. With economy around his wife's cottage in New Jersey, a mind free from harassing anxiety, with his wonderfully acquired little fortune safe in 7 3's, he quickly gained his health and spirits, and when we were last at Rosina Lodge he was preparing to resume his old position as partner in the house of Samuels, Lodge & Co., putting in ten thousand dollars.

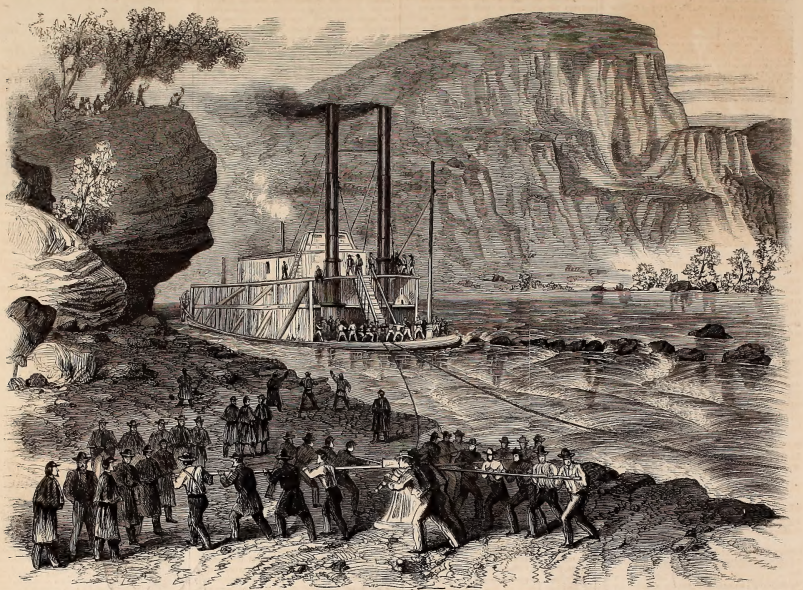
Ulshoeffer, to whom he gave three thousand dollars, maintains that he always knew that it would turn out well, and has entered his money in a machine for manufacturing ice.

A CLERICAL GIANT.

ONE hundred years ago, the Rev. Dr. Story, of Boothwyn, apparently accredited to be the strongest man in Eastern Pennsylvania. He stories that are told of him are true, his strength must have been truly gigantic. He is said to have put alive a sack of wheat with each hand almost effortlessly, and to have jokingly asked the farmers "whether they had chaff in their bags."

Now it happened that, at that time, there lived in Philadelphia a man also claimed to be the great champion of the province, and who could not brook the idea of a clergyman should be reputed to be possessed of greater strength than himself. So he made a trip to Reading, with the express purpose of forcing a contest with the giant. The next day he appeared, arriving at his destination he found that the doctor was attending to some pastoral duties in the country, but was soon expected to return.

Overjoyed at this unlooked-for news, he rode forth to meet him, and soon descried a horseman, who, from the description he had received, could be no other than the clerical giant. Dismounting from his horse, he awaited the stranger's approach, and, on coming to the way from Philadelphia? to give him a challenge." Of course, the doctor was glad to accept the challenge, but on consistent with his profession to take part in a fight. The champion of the populist would take no denial, and the clergyman was at last induced to accompany him.



Now, the doctor knew nothing about "the noble art of self-defence," but was sufficiently enough to stand off the first few blows, and then, with a sudden dodge on his opponent, he seized him by the waistband, and, with a powerful effort, lifted him clean over his head into an adjoining field. The champion was perfectly astonished at the feat. He recognized in his grassy resting-place, in that peculiar state that he had been in the hands of an invincible member, and asked the doctor "whether he would not throw him through a hedge?"

Though tradition is silent on the subject, it is most supposed that the doctor was not so ungentlemanly as to thus assault; but it is certain that the champion returned to Philadelphia without daring to boast of possessing greater strength than the Clerical Giant.

DEATH ON THE BATTLEFIELD.

THUS writes an officer fighting in Spain under the Duke of Wellington: "Death gradually hardens us to such scenes, and death, far from creating terror and confusion, is often laughed to scorn. On the evident approach of a general action, we regard its probability to each other by unreflecting remarks as to the state of the weather, 'Shall we have before to-morrow night,' and none of us, even during the action, conduct ourselves with the proper proportion of sober sensibility. I much fear that we view our present people in English and suppose natural, and perhaps think more of the affair of life and death. I have heard some very free jokes escape under fire; and on the field of battle I remember being as much at ease as ever covered with dirt or dust from the splash or blow of a round shot. I recollect having near him a lead place at any absurd accident in common life. On our advance to the attack, I have frequently called out to our centre, and hardly out of common shot of the enemy on the top of the hill. To Grave, the officer of the 3rd division amused themselves by leapfrog, and other boyish gambols. I recollect, on the evening before being gee equited on the superficial aim, of the soldier of the 3rd, I must soon be one of the adjutant-General's department, well known for his gallantry, requiring to see, in the words, the state some of us might possibly be with us before the next day. I recollect the satisfaction of the description made it very dangreeable, particularly as I was not myself in the least apprehensive—in evidence of which I was the first to propose a game at leapfrog. You will be astonished, no doubt, to find yourself one to such cases. But I am convinced that on receiving an invitation to rise, being convinced of the impossibility of your services, you would very unpleasant accident has happened to you. This satisfies me as to your not being wounded, but remaining quiet on the ground, with certain very unpleasant feelings of the mind. I am one of your friends, and I am now a surgeon, who, opening your cot, finds you are shot through the body, and you are bleeding to death very fast. Spit, sir, spit. In the affairs your mouth, and you will be relieved by your medical friend, your medical friend, who is ascertaining who, put a ball through your body, and who is at his wits-end to know you to suffocate, while he goes to congratulate your jealous commanding officer."

During the recent stay of the Russian officers in our midst, they desired their legation at Washington to procure them a chaplain of the Greek denomination. Dr. Mortimer, who is well-known in the capital, though now practising here, was named, and accepted the position, which he has since highly honored with his services. He left long ago N. Y. Wallis, in a leading article in the Home Journal, gave his happy experience of the case of cheap rating, and in his no-sacred manner for the benefit of his fellow-medical his delicate manipulations. This may seem somewhat incredible, but the country possesses no such living men of rank and official distinction as a wit case. He is conversant, even at night-or-tete, and so true is his conviction that it is impossible to detect it in a place. Such services may be unusually costly, but, considering his exceptional ability to render them, they are, we should speak as well of his conscientiousness as his ability.

STEAMER PAINT ROCK PASSING THE "SUCK" BETWEEN CHATTANOOGA AND BRIDGEPORT.—FROM AN ACCURATE SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, FRED. B. SCHELL.

THE SUCK IN THE TENNESSEE RIVER.

WE give another striking view of Tennessee scenery, the suck between Bridgeport and Chattanooga, with the steamer Paint Rock drawn through the rapids. The current here dashes along at the rate of 80 miles an hour, forming, as the water boils and foams amid the rocks, a succession of whirls and eddies through which the steamer with a full head of steam can make no progress. Windlasses on shore are manned, and by dint of steam and human muscle the 300 yards are at last accomplished after two or three hours' toil.

Yet this was the best means of communication between Chattanooga and Bridgeport, the base of supplies, and the Paint Rock, whose ample sleeping accommodations we also portray, the crack boat on the river.

DUVALL'S BLUFF, ARK.

DUVALL'S BLUFF was, prior to the war, a place almost unheard of, a little post village on the White river, Prairie county, Ark., till a railroad connected it with Helena. This has made it important now. It is the depot of supplies of our army in Arkansas, and the station of a convalescent camp, being well guarded by gunboats. As Price is said to be raising a new army, it may figure in important events.

SLEEPING ACCOMMODATIONS ON THE PAINT ROCK.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

THE CORNISH MINER UNDER THE SEA.

FIFFULLY the tapers shine
In the deep Botallick mine,
Over which there springs no turf—
Over which there moans the surf—
Hoary ocean seems to chide
Rocks and metals that divide
These dark galleries from the tide.

What can the dreams of the miner be
Sixty fathoms under the sea,
As he breaks the copper ore
Two hundred fathoms out from the shore?
What to him do the mad waves say
As they dash their angry spray
Overhead from day to day?

Perhaps of freedom he hears them tell
In their constant flow and their mighty swell,
While his stirring heart grows sadder and sadder
Till he longs to mount from ladder to ladder—
To leave the sounding sea below,
Never again to downward go
Beneath its proud and taunting flow.

Others mine beneath the sand
Or the emerald turf of their fatherland—
But it is not so with the miner here,
He is under the sea from year to year;
The golden luxury of light
Is a blessed thing to his weary sight,
And the breath of Heaven is his heart's delight.

Eight hours out of the twenty-four
He buries himself 'neath the ocean's roar,
But the sir to him is doubly pure
When he seeks home on the cliff or moor,
Where the golden sunlight has no thrall,
But lovingly rests on the cottage wall,
And the light of day is free to all.

There are happy dreams for such as thee,
Oh, Cornish miner, under the sea!
For the blessings we too little prize
Are living pictures before your eyes—
And the changing hues of the zoolite
Are never fairer to any sight
Than your varied dreams of the golden light.

Jonathan Spear's New Year's Eve.

My conscience, how it snowed! Down it came in a regular fleecy cloud, making the whole air white as—as—well, as white as snow. It was not a half and half sort of snow, a little feathery fall, then a sleeting, drizzling rain for a while, then sleet, then something else, and finally a thaw by way of a finish. It was not one of those kind, but a good old-fashioned snowstorm, in which every drop stuck honestly where it fell, and said, as plainly as it could speak, "There's going to be sleighing to-morrow!"

It was just after nightfall, and still early, when Jonathan Spear was travelling up Broadway. He did not expect to go sleighing on the morrow, yet nevertheless he was glad to see the snow, for nothing does so add to the enjoyment of the New Year's Day as a good swinging snowstorm, one of the olden time. Therefore it was that he enjoyed feeling of wind about the lamp-posts, and pile itself upon the stoops, make heaps upon bat-rians, and great bunches upon the breasts of close buttoned coats, until it fell off of its own weight.

It was a glorious night, too, to see the people enjoy it. To see them run, and laugh, and shout though there was really nothing to laugh and shout at, and to see their eyes sparkle, and their faces glow with the excitement. Then it was so funny to see everybody lose their false pride, and look in the shop windows, and gossip together for a moment, and then run on, wishing each other a "Happy New Year!"

All these things Jonathan Spear saw, and they made him the happier for seeing them. He had just left the counting-house after parting with the clerks and employés, wishing them all a "Happy New Year!" and making them the customary present, and had only stopped to buy one or two little things more than had been already bought, to add to the gifts which he intended to make on the morrow; for Jonathan Spear, though an old bachelor himself, had at least half a score of nephews and nieces, who looked upon him as the very example of goodness and generosity, and would certainly have believed in a sudden ending of the world if uncle Jonathan had failed to remember each individual of them on a New Year's Day.

Jonathan had never married, but from a very early part of his life he had declared his independence of boarding-houses, and become a house-keeper, taking as the presiding deity of his household a venerable widow Watkins, wonderfully skilled in the mysteries of the cuisine and in making things generally comfortable. For fifteen years the widow exhausted her motherly care over Jonathan, and then transferred a large share of it, and took to coddling the two orphan children of Jonathan's deceased sister, Nellie and Maggie Warren, who were left to Jonathan's care, and, as both he and the widow concluded instantly, were brought to the home of their bachelor uncle, as the very best place they could be brought to; a conclusion that was warranted by experience, for in years, thanks to the care and coddling of the widow, and the superintendence of Jonathan, they grew up two beautiful and accomplished girls, making for their bachelor uncle as bright and happy a home as waited for any man that New Year Eve in all New York.

"Oh, uncle, I'm so glad you've come! We've been looking for you this hour. Let me unloose your comforter, and Maggie will take your hat. We've got so much to tell you."

This was Nellie, who was talking as fast as her tongue would allow her to, and all the time shaking the snow off her uncle, and helping to divest him of his comforter and overcoat, ending it all off by giving him a kiss and seating him in the great easy chair, in front of one of the cheerfest and brightest fires that ever was built; while Maggie stood ready at the little table that was drawn up to his side, to make his tea and help him to the warm, tender, juicy steak that smoked before him. Jonathan Spear had never known a sick day in his life, and as a natural consequence he was not unblessed with appetite, which found ample employment on the steak and tea; and then while Nellie and Maggie ran away to arrange all the little knick-knacks and pleasant things for the morrow, Jonathan Spear drew his chair up a little closer before the fire, and began to think, and his thoughts ran somewhat in this way:

"Well, here another New Year has rolled around, which makes me fifty-five. Pretty round age that, Jonathan Spear; you're not as young as you were twenty years ago, sir. But, then, what's a few years? Ain't I just as smart as I was then. I'm worth half a dozen of the young men yet. Haven't I got good health? Haven't I got a good appetite, and ain't I got the nicest home in the world? Ah, yes! Jonathan, that's all true; but why ain't you rich? That's it, man, you're getting old, and you're not getting rich. You've missed your chance, Jonathan. It should have been done twenty-five years ago! Now, then! what would you give just to take back that twenty-five years, and have another chance? Give! why, man, you'd give anything that was asked of you!"

"Would you?" said a tiny voice, almost in Jonathan's ear, that made him jump so that he almost knocked over the small table, and then looking all around and seeing nobody he began to persuade himself it was nothing but imagination.

"Now then, what would you give, Jonathan Spear?" and this time the voice came right out from the chimney-back, and Jonathan stared with concentrated force into the fire for an elucidation. Just as he was doing so a little figure stepped daintily over the glowing coals and out upon the hearth. It was not more than twelve inches high, and most exquisitely formed. Its face was red, very red, and so was its hair, while every garment from its shoes to its cap was of the same color, the buttons being carbuncles, and the trimmings scarlet enamel upon gold. Jonathan gazed with bewildered eyes for a moment, and then feeling that he sat by his own hearth and had a right to ask questions, said—

"What's your name, and where the plague did you come from?"

"Never you mind," answered the little red gentleman, "but just attend to what I've got to say, for this is a busy night with me, and I haven't time to waste in talk."

"Oh! then you're Santa Claus?" said Jonathan, in a kind of obtuse way.

"Santa Claus!" shouted the little red gentleman, slapping his hand upon his thigh with a crack like a rifle, and giving a laugh that fairly shook the house. "Now do I look like Santa Claus? Why, man, if ever you'd read 'The Night before Christmas' you'd never be so stupid as to take me for Santa Claus. No; I'm not Santa Claus, and it don't make any difference who I am, but I've asked you a question, and I want it answered. You said just now that you wanted to be twenty-five years younger: what do you want that for?"

"So that I can be rich," answered Jonathan.

"Why, haven't you had every chance," said the red gentleman, "and neglected them? You were once cashier of the Highflyers Banking and Trust Company, weren't you? Why didn't you make money out of that?"

"Ah! why didn't I?" said Jonathan, smiling grimly. "Because I was a fool and didn't use the money of the bank to speculate on and shave notes that the bank could not take?"

"Um! And then you were assignee for the house of Humdrum & Co., when they failed. There was a fortune in that for you—a hundred thousand, at least. What did you do with it?"

"Gave it up to the creditors," said Jonathan, doggedly.

"Um?" said the little red gentleman again. "And you might have had plenty of money, many times, if you had chosen, could you not, Jonathan Spear?"

"Yes," mumbled Jonathan, "if I had chosen to keep what was in my hands and let the rightful owners whistle."

"And why didn't you?" said the little red gentleman, with a significant leer of his left eye.

"Oh, because I was a fool!" responded Jonathan, with a petulant shrug of the shoulders.

"And, I suppose, if you had another chance, you would correct all those mistakes?"

Jonathan was not exactly prepared to answer that question, but he responded with a knowing glance at the little red gentleman that did quite as well as words, and brought forth a new proposition.

"Now, then, Jonathan Spear, I want to ask you plainly which you would prefer: whether to have a quarter of a century taken off your age, landing you safely at thirty and leaving you to recover the mistakes of your life and grow rich, or that you remain at your present age, with such wealth as you may choose to possess yourself of?"

"I'll keep my present age and have immediate wealth," was Jonathan's immediate answer.

"Think well of it, Jonathan Spear; twenty-five years of life is not to be despised."

"Fiddle for the years!" said Jonathan, sharply. "What is life without money?"

"Why, you're not poor, are you?"

"No, not poor."

"And in good health?"

The Little Red Gentleman appearing to Jonathan Spear.

"Capital—never was better."

"And yet you do not enjoy life."

"Oh! I—I—s. But then I'd rather be rich."

"Well, well! So be it then. You shall be rich, Jonathan Spear, but on conditions."

"Name 'em," said Jonathan, in a twitter of excitement.

"I shall present you with three gifts," said the little red gentleman, "each of which will be wealth, but they must be used in the order in which I give them, and you must not disobey my injunctions as to their use, nor use the second or the third until you have surrendered to me the preceding gift. Do you understand?"

"Perfectly," said Jonathan, eagerly.

"And," continued the little red gentleman, "when you have once surrendered a gift it can never be recalled. Do you agree to it?"

"Of course! Of course!" responded Jonathan, almost jumping out of his chair for joy.

"Very well, then; let us shake hands on the bargain."

And the little man stretched out his hand towards Jonathan, who seized it with a quick grip, which came to as rapid a conclusion, for Jonathan found the hand one that, if the old saying of "a cold hand accompanies a warm heart," and vice versa, be true, then the little red gentleman's heart could have been nothing less than a lump of the purest ice, just from the north corner of the North Pole. When it was over and the little red gentleman had in his place, he addressed Jonathan while that individual was blowing his fingers.

New Year's Eve.

"Now, Mr. Jonathan Spear, the first gift I have for you is a key to the mines of Obfuscation."

"Obfuscation!" echoed Jonathan. "I think I think I've heard of that place before."

"Yes, to the mines of Obfuscation. The most wonderful silver mines of the world, but yet undiscovered. No man has to this time entered their depths, and you, consequently, are the first mortal who has been entrusted with a key. Take it."

Jonathan grasped eagerly at the key, and, looking with curiosity at the thing, scarce a tenth of an inch in length, he asked:

"How am I to find them?"

"You have nothing to do," answered the little red gentleman, "but grasp the key in your hand and go wherever the power that seems to lead you may direct. It will take you straight to the mouth of the mines, and then there is nothing but to unlock the door and walk in. But, remember, you must only visit them on the first day of every month, and then you must only bring away as much as you can carry of the silver you will find there. Remember this, and do not attempt to transgress."

"I think one hack load of silver in a month will be about enough to suit me!" said Jonathan, with a chuckle.

"The next gift," continued the little red gentleman, "is a box, at the bottom of which you will find a single piece of gold. This you can remove and close the box, on opening which again you will find another piece, and so on without end. But you must remember that, between the taking of each piece from the box, you must perform some good act."

"Some good act!" echoed Jonathan. "Why step an long?"

"You must perform some good act," repeated the little red gentleman, emphatically.

"Let me see," mused Jonathan, "some good act. Well, that's easy enough. I can always do some good act apart some of the money for the benefit of the poor. How will that do?"

"Excellently well," was the response. "As long as a tithe of the gold is laid aside for the poor so long will all be right. And now, Jonathan Spear, I have the last and most important gift for you. It is this vial. A drop from it, rubbed in the palm of the left hand, will render you invisible, and in that state give you admission to all the treasures of the world. Understand me, not of the hidden treasures, but all those which have been acquired by men. You can enter banks and treasuries, the safes of merchants, and the secret places of hoarders of gems."

"And what use will that be to me?" asked Jonathan, looking curiously on the vial.

"That's as it may be," answered the little red gentleman. "Time will tell how far you may se fit to use the gift I give you as the last. With this gift I have no charge to make. If you should ever wish to surrender it—as you will perhaps surrender the rest—the way to summon me will be through its aid. A single drop upon the tongue, accompanied by the word 'Come!' and I will be with you."

Jonathan took the vial gingerly between his finger and thumb, and looked at it as he would upon some strange object, and then said:

"'Pon my word, I don't think I shall ever want this little article. In fact, I don't see what I want with three gifts at all. I'm quite content, I assure you, with the key to the mines of Obfuscation."

The little red gentleman smiled grimly, and answered drily:

"I think you'd better be careful of it;" and then, after a moment's pause, he continued, "now, then, Jonathan Spear, have you anything further to say?"

"Nothing!" answered Jonathan, who held the three gifts in his hands, and was rather anxious for his friend to go away now, because Nellie, Maggie, or perhaps old Mrs. Watkins might come in, and he was not anxious to have them see him there. Therefore he repeated, "Nothing! I'm much obliged to you, I'm sure."

"I don't want any thanks," said the little red gentleman; "therefore as my business is done, I'll be off. Good-night! and a Happy New Year to you!" and he sprang with one leap right into the midst of the burning coals, and in the most curious manner possible gradually melted down into their glowing bed and entirely disappeared. Just then Nellie and Maggie came dancing into the room as happy as two birds, and just as full of twitter and talk, and Jonathan hurried the three gifts into his pocket, rather disposed to say something sharp to the girls for coming so suddenly upon him; but when he remembered that he had never yet spoken cross to them, and that to-morrow would be New Year's Day, he concluded to smother his ire, which he did by hiding it behind taciturnity. The girls laughed and petted about their uncle for awhile, and then seeing that there was no response, looked inquiringly at each other and at him; for it was not at all Jonathan's way, and still finding that he did not respond to their little jokes and droll ideas became quiet also, and seating themselves on either side of the old man, attempted to interest him with little talk about the morrow, and of the preparations they had been making to receive calls, and the happiness they hoped to enjoy. But Jonathan, whose entire thoughts were in his pocket with the three gifts, and the memory that to-morrow, being the first day of the month, he could visit the silver mines of Obfuscation, only answered, when he answered at all, in monosyllables, until at last the poor girls, fearing that they had dreadfully offended their uncle in some way, were almost ready to burst into tears. In fact, all enjoyment was gone for that evening, and after a solemn hour or two, instead of a story from uncle Jonathan—for Jonathan was a capital teller of stories, and always had something new on hand—they went away to bed with heavy hearts, almost fearing to give him the good-night kiss; and finally, after a long guessing consultation as to the cause, without satisfactory conclusion, laying each her little head on the pillow, to throb itself asleep; while Jonathan, thinking only of his great coming wealth, no sooner were they out of the room than he rushed to the door, and locking it, drew again from his pocket the three gifts. It was the key to the silver mines of Obfuscation that had the greatest interest for him at that moment. In a few hours he could have evidence of its value, and bear away some of the treasure to which he was the first human admitted. How he bemoaned the hours that must elapse before he could bear off his load of silver. Should he wait until to-morrow at daylight? No, indeed! that very night, as soon as the clock turned twelve, he would visit the mines. He would enjoy the New Year's Day better if he had a load of silver in his coffers. Every ten minutes Jonathan looked at his watch, but it still lacked three hours of midnight. He tried to read, but it was of no use, the letters all ran together, and page after page he went over without understanding a word. Then he thought he would take a nap of an hour or two, as it was usual for him to do, in his chair, but that would not do, there was no sleep in him. Every distant cry in the street of "Happy New Year!" rang upon his ears like a jibe or a taunt, and every cinder that fell from the grate made him start and gaze into the fire, as though he expected the little red gentleman to reappear. A most uncomfortable three hours did Jonathan Spear spend; but at last the time was gone, and the city clocks, every one, had rang out the hour of midnight. Then Jonathan seized the key in his right hand, and not without some fear and trembling, grasped it tightly. In an instant he was astonished to find that some unseen power was impelling him forward, not towards the door of the room, but directly at the wall, and a stout brick wall at that. He was more astounded still to find that, as he walked directly at the wall, it gave way at his touch like so much putty, and through he went, and was in the street in an instant. It was still snowing merrily, and the streets were full of people, but none of them seemed to notice Jonathan, who walked straight on without the ability to stop himself or swerve to one side for anybody or anything. Suddenly Jonathan discovered that, in his eagerness to journey to the mines, he had forgotten the very important points of a hat and overcoat, and consequently found himself going through the streets bareheaded and thinly clad, while the snow came down in whirling eddies and gave him the full benefit of its coldness. There was no help for it now, however, and on he went in a direct line, through houses and churches, over streets, and away out to the open country, across fields and through woods, into hills like a mole, and coming out on the other side, until at last, with a dive into a mass of solid rock, Jonathan found he stood before a stone door just tall enough, and broad enough, to admit a man of his size, and having no visible sign of knob or lock, save only a tiny keyhole, which Jonathan knew in a moment was the spot for his key.

In a minute it was applied, and a single turn sent the door whirling on its hinges, and in he walked. Such a sight never before met the eyes of mortal man, and Jonathan could not help standing still and staring with admiration. There, as far as the eye could reach, was nothing but solid rocks and columns of burnished silver. Heaps upon heaps of lumps and masses, from the size of a marble up to the highness of a house. The floor was one plane of pure metal, as bright as a looking-glass, with not a scratch to mar its surface, and from a thousand different angles he could see his form reflected, and thrown from one point to another. All this splendor for miles and for miles, thousands upon thousands of little men, none of them over twelve inches in height, and clad all in silver armor, and silver leather, with long handled picks and hammers, and silver barrels, were digging and mining, carrying and wheeling the lumps about and away. At first none of these little miners seemed to notice Jonathan, but as he stepped forward from the door, one of them, whom Jonathan recognised at a glance as a master, came up, and, touching his cap, uttered only one word, which was,

"Welcome."

Jonathan was delighted to think he was welcome, for it must be confessed he was rather staggered when he saw the crowds of little miners, whom he thought might be guards over the silver and perhaps keep him from taking any away. Therefore when the master miner bade him "welcome," he was so delighted that he shook hands with him at once, remarking that it was very fine weather, asking after his family, and various other little original remarks, by way of opening the conversation, until at last he made a hint or two, in a roundabout way, in relation to the business that brought him there, at which the master miner said, very blandly,

"Walk in, Mr. Jonathan Spear, and help yourself. The entire mine is at your service. Look around and see what you like best, and my men shall put it into proper carrying shape for you."

Jonathan did look around, and in doing so, he saw that every one of the many thousand miners had in the front of his cap, just where the coal miner carries his lamp, a magnificent carbuncle. Now Jonathan did not know much about gems, but these splendid jewels made his eyes water, and he knew enough to know that if he could carry away a back load of them that he would have a burden worth many loads of silver. It did not take long for this to get through his brain, and he followed it up by saying to the master miner,

"Did I understand you to say that everything was at my service?"

"Everything!" said the master miner, in rather a hesitating voice, as though he divined Jonathan's thoughts.

"Then I'll take a load of those carbuncles that I see stuck in front of your caps," said Jonathan, in a feeble voice.

"What!" said the master miner, almost turning a somerset, as he sprang a yard back. "Would you take away our lives? Why, man, every one of these is the warrant for its wearer dwelling in his place, and for his existence!"

Jonathan begged pardon in a stupid kind of a way, feeling guilty all the while, and knowing that if the little red gentleman had intended that he should have carbuncles he would have said something about them in the agreement, therefore he thought the best thing for him to do would be to get his load of silver and be off as soon as possible. To this end he went about with the master miner, trying now this lump and now that, each being, as he declared, too light for him, and at last settling upon a mass that was so big and heavy that with all his strength he could not lift it from the ground. The master miner tried to persuade him to take a small one, as the way was long, and he was rather an old man; but Jonathan would not listen to him, and finally the master miner was obliged to call in sixty-seven of his strongest hands to lift it on Jonathan's shoulder, who, however, at last, staggered away with the load. The master miner politely opened the door for him, and bade him good-night as he shut it, and Jonathan was once more in the open air. He thought, as he passed out, the open door, that he heard a peal of suppressed laughter, as though it came from many thousand mouths, but he paid no attention to it, and staggered on with his load.

The night had become very dark, for the snow had ceased to fall, and though Jonathan had the key for his guide back to his home, the way was very long, and at each step the lump became heavier. Still he tottered on; though he might have sat down by the wayside and knocked off a bit, he was too anxious for the whole to do that. There was but one consolation for him in all his weary, staggering trudge, and that was the comfort of calculating how much the lump would bring and what he would do with the money, though even this little comfort was dashed with bitterness as he thought of all the splendid carbuncles which he did not get. The night was very cold, but yet Jonathan steamed with perspiration from the labor of his burden. Once in a while, when he would be forced to stop and lean against a fence or a wall, for a moment's rest (for he dared not lay the lump down, lest he might not be able to take it up again), the wind would cut him to the very bones, and creeping under his clothes, which were not kept together by an overcoat, would chill him with a deathly chill.

At last, after a journey that seemed ten times longer than that of going, Jonathan landed his lump safe in his own parlor, and threw himself, weary and sore, filled with pains and chattering with cold, into his chair.

There upon the floor lay the glittering mass for which he had so toiled; but one-half the interest was gone, for he was too sick to care for anything. He had barely the strength to huddle the lump away into a chest, lock it and drag himself off to bed, where he tossed about in a restless, uneasy, dozing way, until morning; and then, when Maggie and Nellie came, almost trembling, to wish him a "Happy New Year," to send off instantly for the doctor and make his calculations on passing the holiday in bed, under the ministration of Mrs. Watkins and Doctor Tincture.

It was a week before Jonathan could crawl out of his bed, and with pale face and still sore bones, go about his business. The first thing was to get the chest containing the lump out of the house and into the hands of an assayer. When this was done, and Jonathan realised the cash, he found that his lump had brought him twenty-five hundred dollars; a very pretty sum, but to his now grasping imagination, a mere trifle toward getting rich. His mind could now run upon nothing but how he could hurry up the acquisition of wealth and the next first day of the month seemed years away. Jonathan was no longer the Jonathan of old. In the counting-room he was cross and snappish, so that everything went at sixes and seven, and two of his old clerks, who had been many years in his employ, had gone off because they could not stand his quarrelsome way; while several of the old customers, who, though not large buyers, were safe ones, had transferred their custom to another house because Jonathan had insulted them by making allusions to small customs, petty business, and such like unnecessary remarks; while at home Jonathan was moody and sulky, rarely conversing with his nieces, and when he did ending off the talk with some snarling remark that would bring the tears into their eyes, and make them wonder how it was that their uncle, who was once so kind and so pleasant, could have become so changed.

All this arose from Jonathan's thinking too much about the silver mines of Obfuscation.

At last the first of February arrived, and Jonathan made his second journey. He was wiser this trip, and determined not only to go in the daytime but to wear his hat and overcoat, and take with him a bag. The key was grasped, and as before it led him on through every obstruction to the door of the mine, which was unlocked, and he stood in the midst of the same magnificent scene. The little men went on with their work, not appearing to notice him, but the master stepped forward, with a bow, and bade him welcome.

"Here I am, you see!" said Jonathan, trying to speak in as cheery a way as possible, though all the time he felt rather ashamed of himself. The master miner smiled grimly, and said, as before,

"Walk in, Mr. Jonathan Spear, and help yourself. The entire mine is at your service. Look around and see what you like best, and my men shall put it into proper carrying shape for you."

With that Jonathan went to work to fill his bag and threw in lump after lump until, as before, the master miner was obliged to call in sixty-seven of his men to help get the burden on his back, Jonathan all the time casting greedy glances at the carbuncles in their caps. It was a heavy load, heavier, if possible, than before, that Jonathan staggered out with, and this time he heard the peal of laughter loud and distinct, as he drew his key out of the lock, and knew that it was at him, and for his greed. His journey home was partially a repetition of the past, though now he had time to take it by easy stages, with the advantage of an overcoat and hat, and to consider on his future usage of the key. That night he went to bed with aching bones, but in the morning he was up, though every twinge told him that he was a fit subject for the bed, Mrs. Watkins's hands and those of Doctor Tincture; for Jonathan was troubled with an idea, and that idea he was determined to put in execution. He intended to pay another visit to the mine. There was no reason, he argued, that he should not go there every day, in spite of the injunction of the little red gentleman, and he was determined to try it. The master miner had welcomed him heartily, and no doubt would. A month was too long to wait. Every day now would be something like, and would soon count up, therefore Jonathan determined to go every day and bring away a back load of silver.

As soon as he had his breakfast, in fact before it was fairly swallowed, he grasped the key and was off, and the usual journey brought him to the door of the mine. The door was unlocked, and Jonathan entered, but as soon as the glare of the burnished silver gave him a chance to look about, he was surprised to see that every miner was resting upon his pick, shovel and barrow, and staring directly at him. He stood still, and waited for the master miner to come forward and welcome him; but he waited in vain, for no master miner came, and still the workmen stared. At last Jonathan, having waited what he supposed was a reasonable time, thought it would be best to help himself, which thought he undertook to put in execution by picking up a lump, which he was about to drop in his bag, when such a yell arose as fairly froze the marrow in his bones and stopped him instantly. He did not drop the lump, but stood looking all around him in terror, when suddenly, from every part of the mine, he saw the little men rushing towards him like a swarm of bees. There was no time to think, for the first one that came struck the lump to the earth, and then began such a kicking, cuffing and buffeting of Jonathan as never was seen before at the mines of Obfuscation or elsewhere. One jumped upon the top of his head, while half a dozen more were on his shoulders, and hundreds in every direction put in, each on his own account, a kick or a blow, laughing all the time, as though they enjoyed it as the merriest of jokes, until Jonathan, without an unbruised inch of skin on his body, was landed on the outside of the door and left to crawl his way home as best he might.

The next day, without the power to turn in bed, a mass of bruises, and a head from which everything that looked like a hair had been plucked, Jonathan, having cleared the room of all attendants, took the little vial from his pocket. He was heartily tired of the key to the mines of Obfuscation, and wanted to give it up, because he was afraid ever to go back to it. Now he would try the box with the piece of gold, and consequently he took just one drop from the vial upon his tongue, and shouted "Come!" in a loud voice, which no sooner had he done than a clap like thunder came in the middle of Jonathan's head, and the little red gentleman sprang from nothing on to the table at his side.

"Whew!" said Jonathan, rather taken aback at the suddenness of the whole thing.

"Well, what now?" asked the little red gentleman, with something of a frown.

"Why—you—see," said Jonathan, hesitatingly. "I thought—well—I would like—you see—to—in fact—give you up this key."

"Um!" he grunted. "Couldn't make proper use of it, hey?"

Jonathan hung down his head.

"No matter—all right!" said the little red gentleman. "Anything more to say? No! Then I'm off."

And off he was, leaving Jonathan staring in blank astonishment at the spot where he had stood.

Now came the box, and Jonathan was eager to get at it. He did not lose any time, for though he was so bruised and lame that he could barely lift his arm, he determined to try its virtues. At it he went and lifted the lid, and sure enough there, in the bottom, lay the most beautiful newly-coined double eagle that ever was seen. Jonathan was delighted, and in the excess of his delight declared that one-half of those beautiful coins should be set aside for the poor, at which declaration, made aloud, he thought he heard an audible grunt of satisfaction arising from somewhere; but looking all around the room and seeing nothing, he went on with his operations and opened the box a second time. There was the double eagle, bright and handsome, and once more Jonathan vowed one-half to the poor. Piece after piece Jonathan picked out from the box, laying them in heaps upon the bed, and dividing them into two parcels, one for himself and one for the poor, until, from very weariness, his hands relaxed and he dropped asleep, only to awake the next day. Then, with the first blush of morning, he looked about, and seeing the two piles of gold on the bed, his liberality of the night before was gone like a flash. Why should he give so much to the poor? What had the poor ever done for him? No, he would give them one-half what he had laid out for them, and that was too much; and so he separated the heap of the poor into two parts, and put one of them upon his own pile. He had scarce done so when he was startled by loud knocks, and by what sounded like score of voices in supplication. He listened a moment, and then had hardly time to shuffle away the heaps of gold when Maggie and Nellie entered the room, with alarm on their faces, to tell their uncle that the house was fairly besieged by beggars, each of whom demanded aid as though it was a debt. Jonathan knew in a moment that it was the work of the little red gentleman, but he was determined that he would not be too liberal with the beggars, and so he handed over to his nieces the small pile of gold to distribute among them, with many injunctions not to give too much to any single one, and not to give any more of it than they could help, and then Jonathan went on with his picking of double eagles out of the bottom of the box.

He was still sore and lame from his beating, but that did not deter him from sitting with the box before him and piling up the gold, even though he could hear the clamors of the beggars outside, crying for their share, which he clung to with desperate tenacity. All day this was so, and all the next day and the day after, and again the day after that, until his fingers were worn nearly to the bone and the joints of his arms ached equal to the toothache. And still he kept diminishing the heap of the poor more and more every hour, though they still clamored around the house; and now that he was able to get into the street and drag himself about a little, they followed him with supplications, and when unsuccessful with maledictions and reviling. At last this got to be so terrible to Jonathan that the cry of the poor was never out of his ears, sleeping or waking, and yet his heart grew harder and harder, and more and more he stinted the heap of the poor and added to his own. He would start and groan in his sleep, fighting off the myriads of beggars that beset him in his dreams, and sought to snatch from him his hoarded gold.

Those who had known Jonathan Spear a few months before and had often complimented him by saying what a hale, hearty and good-looking man he was for his age, now passed him in the street and did not recognise him, for his hair had grown so very gray and his eyes had become bloodshot and sunken, while his step was weak and his hand trembled. Jonathan no longer stopped to gossip with a friend on the street, and as to a joke, such a thing never passed his lips any more. He thought that every one who looked at him had a design upon his money, and even in his own home he was suspicious and quarrelsome, until Nellie and Maggie never thought any more of sitting with him of an evening, but would stay either in their own rooms or in that of Mrs. Watkins.

Jonathan saw at once that, though he had gained wealth, he had not gained happiness with it, and yet he was not willing to part with any of his acquisitions. The more he got the closer he became, until his name became a byword among all with whom he had dealings, and got them into a way of calling him such names as "a beggarly old miser" and "an old hunks," and epithets equally unpleasant to reach his ears.

All this time Jonathan was seriously thinking of how slow he was accumulating wealth, notwithstanding he was drawing forth a double eagle every few minutes, and then would come up in his mind that drop from the little vial that was to be rubbed into the palm of his left hand, and give him invisible admittance to all the wealth of the world.

"But," he argued to himself, "they will not be mine, and, what good will they be to me?" And then the greed of money came up, and Jonathan Spear argued again:

"But if I have admittance to them, what can prevent me from helping myself?"

And then a sharp pang went through his breast at the thought, for so far, however greedy he had been, he had not openly admitted to himself that he was willing to be dishonest. But the gold was at work.

"Pshaw! who will know anything about it? Won't he be invisible? If nobody knows it, nobody is hurt!"

And, again visions of the vast wealth he might so acquire ran through his brain; no trust, that the silver mines of Golconda and the little box was as nothing beside them.

"I can cover more in one load than a hundred from the mines, and nobody the wiser; to say nothing of being obliged to break my back, and be taxed by a parcel of wretched pigmy miners, or worried to death by an army of beggars. I'll do it!"

And do it he did. Every time that a little thought would struggle up in his mind that he was about to commit robbery, he would crush it down, and think only of the heaps of greenbacks the loss of gold to which he could go every day, and every hour, if he pleased; of the grand gems, and articles of wonderful value, not only in this land, but all over the world; and then his very brain would swim with the idea, and he wondered how he could have been so stupid as to spend his time with the key of the mines, and the little box, when he had such riches at his disposal. There was no time to be lost, so he clapped a drop from the vial upon his tongue, and said, "Come!" though it must be confessed not in a very confident tone of voice, for after assuring the little red gentleman so positively that he had no use for the wish, he felt somewhat ashamed to send for him in such a hurry. With the word he came like a flash, this time not with a frown upon his face, but with a sneer. He spoke quick and sharp.

"So soon?"

Jonathan was terribly bothered, and for a minute was speechless.

"Speak up man! What are you afraid of? Haven't you called me?"

"Yes!" stammered Jonathan, "I want—to—"

"To give up the box. Why don't you say it outright? Where is it? Hand it over!"

Jonathan was only too glad to get over the matter so easily, and eagerly thrust the box into the little red gentleman's hand, without a word. The little red gentleman poked it into his pocket, with an audible "Fiddlesticks!" and then turning to Jonathan again, he said:

"Now, then, Jonatsan Spear, I'm going to leave you, and remember you have only one time more to call for me."

Jonathan nodded assent, but spoke never a word, for he felt dreadfully ashamed of himself, and could not look the little red gentleman in the eye, so down sat he instead.

"So consider well before you do it, and when you have done it, if I ever hear a word of regret uttered about you, my dread there will be trouble between us. Good-night!"

And pop he went into nothing, like a patent ghost, and Jonathan was left alone.

That night he resolved he would sleep well, and the next day should be a jubilee. He would go to a bank or two, and look into the state of their deposits; visit one or two large diamond merchants, and perhaps select a few score of such as ran over five or six carats each. He might call upon the United States Treasury, perhaps crop in at some of the large broker's offices. There was no hurry just yet, and he would see where he could bestow his attentions with the greatest profit. Thinking upon this, he went to bed but instead of dropping away into that comfortable sleep he had promised himself, he tossed and tumbled about hot and feverish, wishing all the time for the morning, that he might start upon his tour.

When the next day came Jonathan, being determined to test the matter before he went out rubbed a drop of the liquid in his left hand, and boldly uttered into the presence of Gold the name of Maggie, and was delighted to find that they were utterly unaware of his presence, but scarcely had he entered the room when he saw that they had both been crying, and that they were talking of him and his unkindness. Jonathan could not stand this, in his wish to exultant enjoy, and consequently went out upon his errand. He was bent for Wall street, but he thought it would do no harm to stop into Messrs. Griffey and Co.'s, the great jewellers, on the way. He did so, and walked from one end of the great shop to the other without being seen, and then, just as a trial, he took up a dozen or two of fine large diamonds, and putting them into his pocket went out. After this he went into Wall street, and dropping into the Ethereal Bank, amused himself for awhile by handling the bundles and piles of bills, and then gathering together as many of them as he could conveniently carry, wended his way home.

"Now, how much better this is," mused Jonathan, "no breaking of one's back, or running the risk of being beaten and killed. Two months like a mill horse, picking twenty dollar pieces out of a box. Here I have as much in a few hours as I could have got out of the box in a month. I don't think I shall ever want to see the little red gentleman again."

Our journey was enough for the day, for Jonathan wanted to count his morning's work, and admire his diamonds, which he did until the darkness came. Nellie and Maggie never came into his room now of an evening, and Jonathan was glad of it, for he never could have looked them in the face. The next morning he was ready for another journey, but, of course, he must get some breakfast, and read the papers—he always read the papers, that he might see what property or stocks was for sale to invest his money in. This morning he had scarcely opened the sheet when his eye lit on a paragraph headed "Great Robbery!" and went on relating the disappearance of the diamonds from Griffey and Co.'s, and ending off with the announcement of the arrest of the clerk, who had them in charge, and his committal to prison on suspicion of the theft.

"Where! here was a pretty business, a business that Jonathan had made no calculation on. What was to be done? Nothing. Absolutely nothing! The man must get out of the scrape the best way he could, and Jonathan went off on his walk. This day he contented himself with carrying off a few bundles of greenbacks from a dozen brokers, and stripping the safes of a merchant of all the funds intended to pay imperative obligations that day, and for the very next day of the week himself, who was alone in the office and busy counting it. Now, then Jonathan congratulated himself, nobody could be suspected of the theft, for nobody was there but the merchant himself.

The next day he looked in the paper to see if any mention was made of the disappearance of the broker's or merchant's funds, but there was none, though there was something that made Jonathan's very hair stand on end with horror. It was an account of the disappearance of $240,000 from the Ethereal Bank, and the arrest of the teller, who had blown out his brains in the bank parlor, while awaiting the coming of the officer who was to convey him to prison. He had always heretofore borne an irreproachable character, and left a wife and four young children, the papers said.

Never before had Jonathan's hand shaken so, or his teeth chattered so fearfully. Never before had he known his limbs to grow so suddenly cold, or the money to burn so in his pocket. For the terror of the moment he clutched it out, and flung it across the room in an agony of horror. He saw before him the stark, bloody corpse of the man who had shot himself in the bank parlor, and he felt as though his brains had bespattered everything he touched. He saw the hideous face open at home and the four weeping little ones. He could stand it no longer, but rushed from the solitude of his room into the street. He had gone but a few yards when he met Dr Tincture.

"Bless, me! Mr. Spear, how very ill you look! You must really be more careful of yourself. If you don't, I will not insure your life a week more. Life is very uncertain, Mr. Spear. I've just got an instance of it on hand now. An old lady friend of mine I am going to call on, Mrs. Hardcastle, who hasn't had a sick day for twenty years, until yesterday, when she was struck with apoplexy on hearing that her son had been arrested for robbing Griffey & Co.'s store. I think she must die tonight. Nothing can save her. Very mournful indeed, very! and the old lawyer walked off, without noticing the look of the rigid, deathly pale man he left behind him. For many minutes he stood there staring at nothing, and then, without knowing the way, walked rapidly on, and stood in front of the store of the merchant from whom he had the day before taken the money. The store was closed, and Jonathan stood gazing at the shutters for hours. How long he had stood there he did not know, but he felt a touch on his shoulder, and turned to see an old acquaintance.

"How are ye, Spear? Love anything by Hitchcock? Very remarkable failure. They say he's gone crazy because his daughter has run away with a story about the money that he says was spirited away. Very odd, indeed! Very sorry for his family! Fine people! Fine people! Good-day, Spear! you don't look well. Hadn't you better go home and nurse yourself up a bit?"

Yes; he would go home and summon once more the one who had put it into his power to rise above this misery. He had brought it, and he must relieve it: and soon Jonathan Spear stood once more in his room with the little box in hand, and from drop upon his tongue, crying hoarsely, "Come!" and the little red gentleman jumped before him with a bang and a flash, and a mushroom on his clothes glowing fiercely. This time he did not speak, but awaited for Jonathan, who cried, chokingly:

"You have ruined me!"

"Weak, whining fool!" said the little red gentleman. "I ruin you! It is your own greed that has ruined you! Look at your course. Fifty-five years of your life you have come to me. I have served and respected. I entrusted you with wealth, but you were not content with plenty in the key of the mines, but your greed must have more. I was gratified in the golden box, but even with that inordinate wealth, which properly used, would soon have made you the richest man in the world, you desired more, and saw fit to use the third gift, not as I gave it to you, merely for admission to the treasure of the mines, but to take what was not your belonged. You have summoned me to return this gift, and demand from me the repairing of those evils which your greed have occasioned. I have no power to repair them, but there is a power given me over one who has abused the third gift, and I am about to use it. Come!"

Jonathan sat petrified with horror. He tried to speak, but his tongue had grown to his mouth. The little red gentleman was growing larger, and flaming all over like a solid mass of terrible anger. A second time he cried in a fearful voice, "Come!" and Jonathan essayed to beg for mercy, but not a word would pass his lips. At the third time the fatal summons was pealed forth, "Come!" and he sprang at and caught the throat of Jonathan, who——

"What's the matter, uncle? You cried out so loud that we came right down to see what was the matter?"

"Oh, bless my heart! Oh, dear! oh, dear! oh, dear! Where has he gone?"

"Where has who gone?" said both Nellie and Maggie with one voice.

Jonathan was standing bolt upright in front of the fire, rubbing his nose, and looking all round the room wildly.

"Don my word, girls, I think I've been asleep! How long is it since you left me?"

"About ten minutes," says Nellie, looking at the table and at her uncle. "Don't you think, uncle, you have eaten too heartily, and fell asleep from it?"

"That's it!" said Jonathan. "That's the little red gentleman, girls!"

"The little red gentleman!" said Maggie, her eyes dancing with eagerness. "Oh! uncle, tell us about the little red gentleman!"

And then shall be our story for the New Year's Eve. And as long as my name's Jonathan Spear I'll never wish to be rich again.

MARGERITA.

BY ADA. VROOMAN.

I LOVED you long and I loved you well,
Margerita,
Loved you better than words can tell—
Hark! the solemn midnight bell,
Margerita.

Only an hour of earth is mine,
Margerita,
Who breaks the goblet spills the wine,
Before I go let lips of thine,
Margerita,

Undo the cruel wrong you did,
Margerita,
Griefs are not less for being hid;
You know I went because you bid,
Margerita.

I dared not hope to call you bride,
Margerita,

And yet, as careless mariners glide
Into a whirlpool deep and wide,
Margerita,

One fatal day I spoke, to hear,
Margerita,

These cruel words fall cold and clear
Upon my pained and startled ear,
Margerita,

"For ever leave me," then I knew,
Margerita,

The very breath I sadly drew
Was only drawn for love of you,
Margerita.

Only a year ago, and yet,
Margerita,

A hundred years lies in the real have set
Upon my heart—then count regret,
Margerita.

But I—oh, hark! the clanging bell,
Margerita;

Methought I heard an organ swell—
Ah, now I know that all is well,
Margerita.

CURLING AT THE CENTRAL PARK.

HAVING shown in No. 434 what some imagine the Scottish game of curling to be, we give them a real view in this paper, from the fine painting by J. G. Brown, N.A., of Scottish gentlemen, in a case of strength and agility, and the unrolling of the stones to the goal, the sweeping and invigorating exercise for those who have strength and dexterity to perform it, and the pleasure it yields.

It is a favorite sport in Canada, where the long winter gives abundant opportunity for its practice on the frozen lakes, and we trust only a little more time to gain admirers among us.

BATTLE MONUMENT AT ST. FOYE.

WHILE we are in the midst of a great war, our Canadian brethren have been erecting a monument to commemorate wars of the last century. On the 13th of last June, the 69th anniversary on which Canada inaugurated a monument erected at St. Foye, a village near Quebec, where the second battle of Quebec was fought, in which the English general Murray, defeated by Lévis and driven back into the city. For a moment the action was by Wolfe was in danger, but an English fleet appeared and dared at the mouth of Canada. The ceremonies that day were composed of English and Americans, French and Canadians, and a thousand other races to come memorate all who fell.

It is composed of cast iron, bronzed, and rests on a stone base. It is eighty-six feet, and is crowned by a figure of victory. The inscriptions, sent to Canada from France, a present from Prince Napoleon. The pedestal is encircled by a colonnade, composed, on one side, the name of Murray, the General who led the defeated, and on the other that of Lévis, commander of the French troops. M Charles Baillargeon was the architect.

A PLANTATION ON THE TECHE.

THE finer plantations of the South, those owned by high-minded persons, full of a true Christian idea of the great responsibility imposed upon them by the existence of slavery, and who strive to be enshrined in history. They are rapidly disappearing with the great revolution which is sweeping revolution, like a flood from the land.

The Teche country is the loveliest in Louisiana, and on other days we have noticed it copiously enough. But misfortunes have come upon it. The terrible catastrophe at Iberville seemed swept away many of the wealthier planters, and blighted the blooming Bayou with mourning widows and fatherless child ren.

The Bayou Teche, which Acrise has depicted in detail is that of Mrs. Porter, known as Oak Lawn. It is on the Bayou Teche, about five miles above Franklin, St. Mary's parish. It has a fine park in front, and is of the house comprises about two acres, and is finely shaded with live oaks, magnolias and other trees.

The house itself is a finer old-style building, erected by Judge Porter, the brother-in-law of the present owner, to whose brother it descended on his death. The Porters were Irishmen, sons of the Rev. James Porter, who emigrated to Louisiana in 1798.

Mrs. Porter, who resides part of the year at Newport, R. I., has not been here, but has made of greatly from our troops. Her plantation is in good condition, twenty gangs of all of sabres, in the cane rows, which were formerly kept very tidy and well weeded—washed, a limehouse standing near. The slaves were well kept, but are now thoroughly demoralized; some 300 still remain, but all idea of labor has been lost. They do not even cultivate the patches allowed for their own use, on which of old they raised large quantities of tobacco and vegetables, not all of this market or in the neighborhood, often indeed to their hilarious.

Provision was made for the spiritual instruction of the negroes, a neat brick Episcopal church being erected for their use, and a hospital stood ready for the time of confinement.

We show also the gate and porter's lodge, the overseer's house, the mill and still by the bayou, the sugar mill, where for nearly 1,200 or 1,800 barrels of sugar were made each season.

PICTURES OF SOUTHERN LIFE.

The Snuff Dippers.

THE pictures of Southern life drawn by Northern press and pencils are generally prized by the lovers of the sensational or romantic, and we give in this number a picture of the Snuff Dippers, drawn by a German officer on the staff of General Bragg.

Nothing can be more surprising than to see young women shown down to the very verge of the last refinement descending to do so disgusting a practice as this snuff dipping, which in the old days of chewing tobacco is the very weakest for the coarsest use of the narcotic plant. This mode of using tobacco, in preference to chewing or smoking, seems genuine to our Southern ladies, but ought certainly to be cured by a full account of the mischief which usually is prepared.

THE TERRIBLE CALAMITY AT SAN-TIAGO DE CHILE.

WE gave in our last a fine and correct view of this fatal church from a photograph by Mydans. To-week we give sketches of incidents in the horrid calamity from drawings by an American resident.

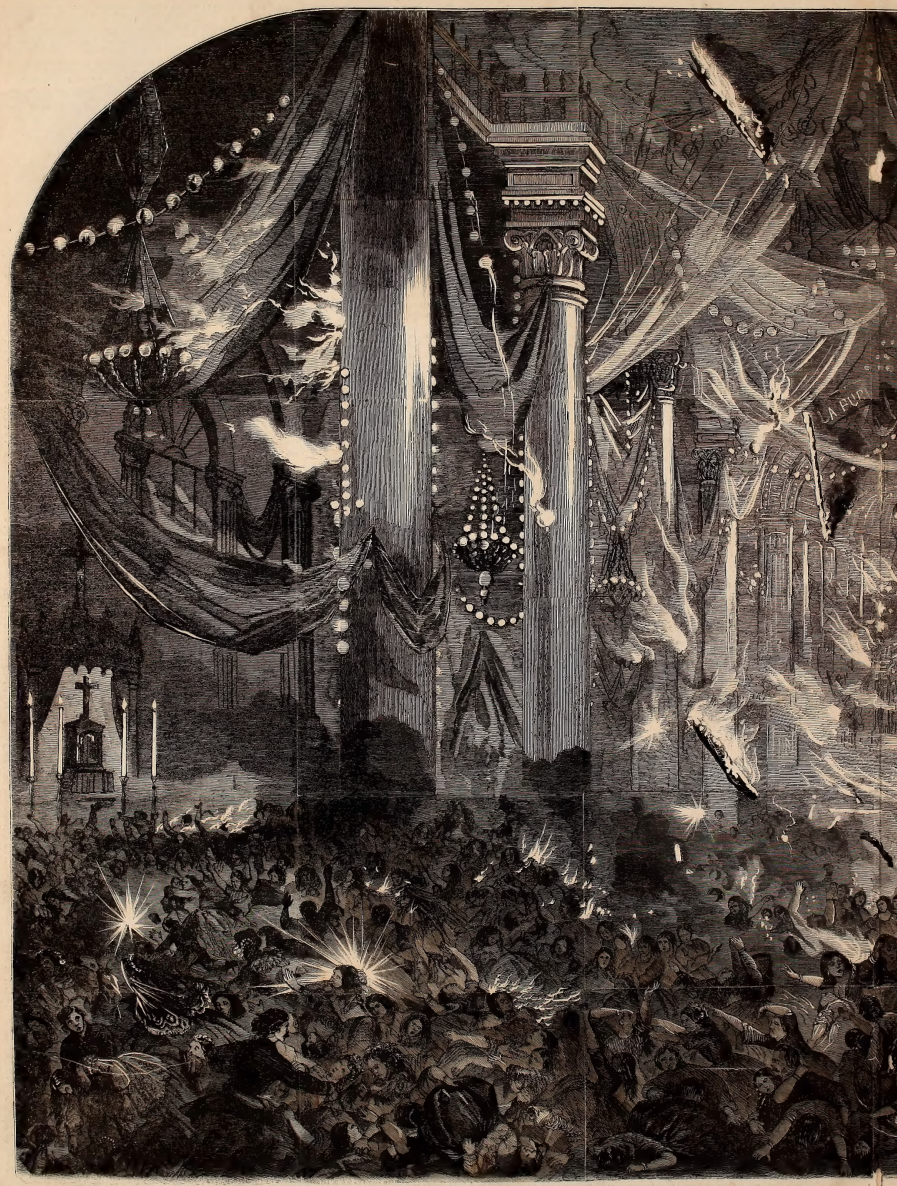
The gaze of the church at the time of the late fearful accident was the Señor Ugarte, who wished to come down from the altar by lighting up the stage, a masque entirely unprecedented. Over the high altar a frame was put up, on which the painting was encircled by gas-lights, and thousands of other lights ran down the sides of the column and over the nave. It is said that many of those were complete lamps a thousand times, and that the house was on some great forgetfulness of its dangerous inflammability.

The church had filled 3,000 women, comprising the fine, gay, rich and poor—the fashion of Chile, and the others, those to bear a remen from the talented Eva Garcia, one native Indian or Chilo, when the crowd of fire at the foot of the pigeon's longer to the virgin over the altar, and the flames rose to the top of the mask in drapery and pasteboard device to the wooden roof, which is tinder of dome.

The sudden cause of the fire was awful. The dense mass of women, appareled in their gay costumes, were fainting, and all entangled by their long swelling dress, and those in those were burning. Each was at their heels, to the main door shown in our sketch; those men become choked, and the small side doors opening into vestibules were also filled by those who had at once trodden down in the fearful struggle for life. Fire was everywhere, streaming along the roof, and the cries of the dying from those hung is rom there among the struggling women.

Of the 3,000 present within the pile, but few escaped, and most of them wounded, scorched and naked. The walls were strewn with clothes, and fainting with heat, terror and pressure, and the ability to take the measures of escape that all those who risked their lives to save them. It was only almost supernatural efforts that some of them were dragged from the tightly packed mass of women in the front of the burning church and by those few, a great majority only lived a few hours.

The reserves, approaching the scene of the conflagrations of victims, were time and again stirred by the heart-rending cries of unknown, and followed by their own desperate struggles, saved by their coolness from being killed. It is said that the most unfortunate gestures of those who, upon the very threshold of safety, saw a fearful, staggering death swiftly approaching.



The scene within the church, at the steps of the main door, fronting upon the plaza, was one of fearful agony. The white-dressed and wretched women to the infant of tender age, all in the one mass, locked in a beautiful girl of some 17 years, as yet untouched by the fire, and in a period when dresses above, and by her and her sister and mother, locked in a dreadful struggle, and a struggle for their lives without, who ever and again dashed recklessly through the scorching doorway, and those cruelly grasped the clothing or limbs or the nearest. Within the church, the struggle was for life, and it was fire, the weaker gradually sinking forward and trampled to death by those again, and the stronger battled with desperate energy to reach the swing doors, and in a desperate struggle to gain them. But all was in vain, and in an awfully brief space of time the fire had done its work. Those who lay on the floor of the church was a sea of fire, fed by the combustible decorations and clothing of the worshipping ismas. The roof fell in: the towers followed, and the whole was an awful mass of ruin, where the doorway.

Here scenes of sublime daring have not been wanting. Enduring gratitude has been excited in every heart by the noble action of Señor Don Pedro Nelson, the Minister of the United States, his countryman, who, when the fire broke out, was in the house. He was generous man who risked the fury of the flames to save the lives of others. Those others were to their remembrance. An Englishman or an American, it is not known, but he was a young man, who, from the flames, to save in his powerful arms a lady, risked with her life to save her, and the two fell back in a blaze, and locked with smoke fall back into the volume never to be seen again. A young man, who, after having in vain implored some bystanders to save her mother, rushed into the fire, and shortly after miraculously issued forth with her parent in her arms, and fell at the feet of her preserver, and then, just before the smoke suffocated her, and the presence of mind left her, she threw herself down upon the body her body might be protected.

The scene of horror surrounding the dead followed. Over 2,000 bodies were conveyed to the cemetery, and all so disfigured that they required the aspect of recognition. Sadness was plunged in grief; some were identified by their clothes, and by other things, thousand of others bewailed the loss of the fond ones, and the carriers of sorrow, and the sad night have been saved but for the police who took advantage of the confusion to plunder the dead. An American was badly wounded in the attempt, and saw in my person who he might have rescued.

No stone or extra epithet is on record; but it is said that the Señor Ugarte was buried with all the honor our dramatic and ecclesiastic to present the memory of those who, in the concert, lament, locusts, in nature, the extreme to which is only by a sense of sorrow of the mass, that in a sacrifice, woe of bewildered, and renew the scene of bathing, in spite of all our literature.

A LEARNED young lady defines a thimble as a domestic, ingenious, truncated cone, covered on its summit, and semi-perforated with symmetrical indentations.

TERRIBLE CONFLAGRATION AT SANTIAGO DE CHILE—INTERIOR OF THE CHURCH OF THE COM

HE COMPANIA, WITH THE CONGREGATION WRAPPED IN FLAMES.—From a Sketch by an American Resident.

THE WIDOWED SWORD.

THEY have sent me the sword that my brave boy wore,
On the day of his young renown—
On the last red field, where his fate was sealed,
And the sun of his days went down.
Away with tears
That are blinding me so;
There is joy in his years,
Though his young head be low;
And I'll gaze with solemn delight evermore
On the sword that my brave boy wore.

'Twas for freedom and home that I gave him away,
Like the sons of his race of old;
And though, aged and gray, I am childless this day,
He is dearer a thousand-fold.
There's a glory above him
To hallow his name—
A land that will love him
Who died for its fame;
And a solace will shine, when my old heart is sore,
Round the sword that my brave boy wore.

All so noble, so true—how they stood, how they fell
In the battle, the plague, and the cold;
Oh, as bravely and well as the story could tell
Of the flowers of the heroes of old.
Like a sword through the foe
Was that fearful stroke,
That so bright ere the blow
Comes so bloodily back;
And foremost among them his colors he bore—
And here is the sword that my brave boy wore.

It was kind of his comrades, ye know not how kind,
It is more than Indies to me;
Ye know not how kind and how steadfast of mind
The soldier is ever on the
They knew well how lonely—
How grievously wrung,
Is the heart that its only
Love loses so young!
And they closed his dark eye when the battle was o'er,
And sent his old father the sword that he wore.

THE GULF BETWEEN THEM.

BY

MRS. ANN S. STEPHENS

(Continued from page 295.)

"Well, this was it. Mr. Mellen was—"

Oh they all knew about Mr. Mellen; he had been in business down-town for years, a rich worthy old gentleman his uncle died, and left him so enormously rich that there was no guessing how many millions he was worth. But then poor Miss Elsie! Of course, what a sweet pretty creature she was! Strange that the old uncle forgot to make her an heiress. Left every thing to the brother, and she had nothing on earth but her beauty. But the bride, the bride, what about her?

"Well," said Mrs. Chase, coming out of this storm of whispers and questions, "there is no great mystery in the bride. Indeed, so far as she was concerned, every thing was rather commonplace—such people had been done up so often in romances that was foreseen. Just what a sweet pretty creature she was! Strange that the old uncle forgot to make her an heiress. Left every thing to the brother, and she had nothing on earth but her beauty. But the bride, the bride, what about her!

"Well," said Mrs. Chase, coming out of this storm of whispers and questions, "there is no great mystery in the bride. Indeed, so far as she was concerned, every thing was rather commonplace—such people had been done up so often in romances that was foreseen. Just think "You don't mean to say that she was that eternal governess who is continually travelling through magazines and marrying her rich young gentleman of the house?" cried a voice, almost out loud.

"No, no, nothing quite so bad as that," answered Mrs. Chase, with a low soothing "hush," and shaking her head till the pink roses on her bonnet fluttered again. "She came from somewhere in New England. The father was thought to be a rich man. At any rate he gave her a splendid education, and travelled with her in Europe nearly two years, when she was quite a missish girl. He also educated her cousin, the young man who is to be promoted to a clerk in a handsome setting out in life; but when the father died there was nothing left—all his property mortgaged or something—at any rate Richard never got a cent, and her cousin would have been poor as a church-mouse but for the few thousand dollars that had set him up in business. He wanted to make that over to her at once."

"Generous fellow!"

"You may well say that," continued Mrs. Chase, brushing down the enthusiasm of her friends with a wave of her white jewelled hand. "She would not take a cent of his money, but came here to the very school where she had been educated, and hired out as a teacher."

"Is it possible!"

"Dear me, how noble!"

"But how did she get acquainted with Mr. Mellen?" cried a voice, that, for the heart, or they will be upon us before we know a word about it."

"His sister, Miss Elsie Mellen, was a pupil in the school. Their love for Miss Fuller was perfect infatuation. The brother worshipped her—sweet creature, who could help it?—and so the acquaintance began at the parlor of a boarding-school, and ends—Hush, hush!"

There was a slight commotion at the door, followed by the soft rustling of silks and turning of heads. Then a gentleman of noble presence, calm and self-possessed, as if he were quite unconscious of all the eyes bent upon him, came slowly up the broad aisle with the object of all this conversation leaning on his arm.

Certainly the bride gave no evidence of her low estate in that rustling white silk, which shone like crusted snow through a sheen of tulle; or in the veil of Brussels lace that fell around her like a fabric of cobwebs overrun with frostwork; but she was deathly pale, and seemed chilled through with fright. You could detect intense emotion from the shiver of the clematis spray, mingled with snowy roses, in her black hair; but otherwise she seemed quiet as marble.

Following close upon this noble pair, came a tall, brass-jointed young man, glowing with pride of the lovely creature on his arm, and, really, any thing more beautiful, in a material sense, could not well be imagined than that youthful bridesmaid. Like the stately girl who had passed before her, she moved in a cloud of shimmering white, with just enough of blue in the golden hair and on the bosom to match the violet of her eyes.

Once or twice Tom Fuller missed step as they were going up the aisle, when Elsie would make a pause, look rapidly at her companion's skirts, and only seem relieved when her partner stumbled into place again. Then she followed the bride, her cheeks one glow of roses and smiles, dimpling her fresh, young mouth, as if she were the Queen of May approaching her throne.

The bridal-pair knelt at the altar, and a solemn stillness fell upon that brilliant multitude as the vows which were to unite that man and woman for all time were uttered. Even Elsie looked on with earnest sadness in her eyes; and so Mr. Tom—why, the noble-hearted fellow made a fool of himself; and was compelled to shake the tears surreptitiously from his eyes, before he dared to look up from the long survey he had been taking of his patent-leather boots.

It is almost frightful to remember how few moments it takes to bind immortal beings together in a union which may be for happiness, and, alas, may be for such misery as eternal bondage alone can give. The feeling of awe befitting that sacred place had scarcely settled on the gay assembly, when the altar was deserted, and Gramley Mellen led his wife out of the church. The chill had left her then. Agitation had given a faint glow of color to her cheek, softened the mouth into its sweetest smile, and whenever the clear gray eyes were lifted, one could see the timid, shrinking happiness, which made their depths so misty and dewy.

Gramley Mellen was a proud, somewhat stern man, and at the church-door he betrayed, in spite of himself, some amount of the old relief which Mr. Harrington had given to the affair, in spite of his express wishes. But whenever he looked into the lovely face at his side, or felt the clinging touch of her hand upon his arm, his features would soften into an expression of such tenderness that its whole character was changed.

Elsie Mellen stood close, dexterously keeping her dress from under Tom's feet; indeed, she looked so lovely and fairy-like, that it made the awkwardness and embarrassment of her great, honest-hearted companion more palpable.

Tom Fuller knew that he appeared dreadfully out of place playing the part he did in this imposing ceremony, but he had not the courage to refused a request that Elizabeth made, and during the last three months, the mischievous sprite by his side had kept his blundering head in a state of such constant bewilderment, and so bewildered, that about in his great, manly heart, that he would not have minded in the least if he had been stumbling over all hot ploughshares for the pleasure of walking with her.

The group had reached the porch and lingered there a moment, waiting for the carriages to draw up. The shadows were from Gramley Mellen's—Elsie's face now; he bent his head and whispered a few words, that made Elizabeth's cheek glow into new beauty. Suddenly her eyes encountered those of the crowd on the left—a sudden pallor swept the roses from her cheek—her hand closed convulsively on Mellen's arm; but in an instant, before even he had noticed her agitation, she had recovered her color on to the carriage graceful and queen-like as ever.

Standing among the throng at which she had escaped, each one grave, stood his own old rascal, her from danger only a few days before. He was gazing eagerly into the faces of the newly made husband and wife, with an expression upon his features which it was not pleasant to encounter. But after that quick look, Elizabeth never again turned her head, and the stranger shrank back among the crowd with disappointment.

The guests were gathered about the sumptuous table which Mrs. Harrington had prepared, and the fair widow herself, in a dress which would have been youthful even for Elsie, was the cynosure of her entertainment which baffles description.

She was gay and coquettish as a girl of sixteen, but there was enough of real kindness of heart and nature to make those who knew her forgive these airs and graces, and the little delusion under which she labored that thirty-five could be dressed to look like eighteen.

I doubt if there ever was a wedding reception that did not prove a somewhat dull affair, and though this was an exception to the rule, perhaps, Mellen seized the first opportunity to whisper to Elizabeth that it was time to prepare for their departure.

"And so I shan't see you for a whole week," said Tom Fuller, ruefully, as he accompanied Elsie out of the room, as she followed Elizabeth up stairs to change her dress. "What shall I do with myself all that time?"

"A whole week!" repeated she, laughing merrily. "It is quite dreadful to contemplate—I only hope you won't die."

"Oh, you are laughing at me," said Tom, heaving a sigh that was a perfect blast of grief.

"How can you fancy that?" cried Elsie; "I thought I was showing great sympathy."

"You always do laugh at me," urged Tom, "and it's downright cruel. I know I am awkward, and always do the wrong thing at the wrong moment, but you needn't be so hard on a fellow."

"There, there!" said Elsie, patting his arm as she might have smoothed a great Newfoundland dog; "don't quarrel with me now! Next week you are coming down to Piney Cove, and you shall see how nicely I will entertain you."

"Shall you be glad to see me—really glad?" pleaded Tom, red to the very temples.

"Oh, of course," cried she, laughing; "you are a sort of cousin now—it will be my duty, you know."

She danced away, leaving him to pull his white glove in a perplexed sort of way, by no means certain that he was satisfied with being considered a relation, and treated in this cavalier manner.

Mrs. Harrington had run up stairs for an instant, and stopped Mellen and his bride on the landing for a few last words.

"I hope you are satisfied, Grantley," she said; "it have done my best; I do hope you are pleased."

"My dear friend, every thing has been perfect," he answered.

"I don't thank you for all your kindness to me," Elizabeth said, holding out her hand; "but believe me, I feel it deeply."

"My dear, don't speak of it! Grantley and Elsie are like relatives to me," cried Mrs. Harrington, "and I love you so much already! You looked so lovely—what a mercy we came off so well from our fright—"

"There is no time for pretty speeches," broke in Elsie, giving her a warning glance, and pulling Elizabeth towards their dressing-room; "go back to your guests, Mary Harrington."

But Mellen stood still after they had entered the chamber, and detained Mrs. Harrington.

"What fright?" he demanded; "what did you mean?"

She was too thoroughly confused to remember her promise.

"Oh, nothing, nothing!" she said; "I have sold the horses, so it doesn't make any difference."

"What do you mean?" he asked. "Have you had an accident?"

"No, no; the gentleman saved us—such a splendid creature! But it was so odd. The moment Elsie looked in his face she fainted dead away—courageous as a lion till then—just like a novel, you know. But she said she never saw him before; it was really quite interesting."

Gramley Mellen grew suddenly pale; doubt and suspicion had been his familiar demons for years, and it never required more than a word or look to call them in.

He controlled himself sufficiently to speak with calmness, and Mrs. Harrington was not observant; but he did not permit her to return to her guests until he had heard the story.

"Don't mention it," she entreated; "I promised Elizabeth not to tell; she thought you would be frightened, and I suppose you would."

Mrs. Harrington hurried down stairs, and Mellen passed on to the chamber which had been appropriated for his use. But his face had not recovered its sternness, and Master Dolf, who presided over his toilet, did not at all approve of such gravity on a man's wedding-day—having drank quite champagne enough to make him feel in as exuberant spirits as were desirable himself.

The leave-takings were over; Tom Fuller had given his last farewell squeeze as Mellen drove off with his sister and his bride towards the home where they were to begin their new life.

The journey was not a long one: the swift train of the Erie Railroad bore them along one of the Long Island railroads, then they left it at a way station, where a carriage waited to carry them to the quiet old house in which they were to spend the honeymoon.

There was to be no journey, both Mellen and Elizabeth wished to go quietly to the beautiful spot where the bride was to make home, and spend the first weeks of their happiness in complete seclusion.

The drive was a charming one, and the brightness of the bridal day would have caused even a deeper gloom from Mellen's mind than the shadow which Mrs. Harrington's careless words had brought over it.

From the eminence along which the road wound, they caught occasional glimpses of the silvery beach and the long sparkling line of ocean beyond; the whole scene looked more lovely than out, and they drove through beautiful groves with pleasant homesteads peeping through the trees, and distant villages nestled like flocks of birds in the golden distance.

The apple-trees were in blossom, and the breeze was laden with their delicious fragrance: the grass in the neighborhood was in freshest green, the young grain was sprouting in the fields, troops of robins and thrushes darted about, filling the air with melody, and over all the blue sky looked down, flecked with its white, fleecy clouds; the sunlight played warm and beautiful about the way, and through the early loveliness of the season, the married pair drove on towards their new home.

They came out full upon the ocean at a sudden curve in the road, and Elizabeth, unacquainted with the scene, uttered an exclamation of wonder at its loveliness.

Below them stretched a crescent-shaped bay, with a line of woodland running far out into the sea; and in the right curve of the extremity of the bay, a little village peeped out, picturesque dwellings were dotted here and there, giving a home look to the whole scene, and over the whole steady ocean to which they had turned, the tall roofs and stately towers of the Piney Cove mansion were visible through the trees.

"The dear old house!" cried Elsie, clapping her hands. "The dear old home!"

Gramley Mellen was watching his wife, and a pleased smile lighted up his face when he saw how thoroughly she appreciated the beauty of the place. He did not speak, but clasped her hand gently in his, and held it, while Elsie uttered her wild exclamations of delight. They drove up to the entrance of the house.

"Welcome home!" exclaimed Mellen, as he lifted his wife from the carriage and conducted her up the steps, Elsie following, and the servants pressing forward with their congratulations, headed by Cousinda, so that for the first few moments, Elizabeth was conscious of nothing but a pleasant confusion.

From the hall where they stood, she could look on the ocean; the grounds sloping down to the water's edge in a closely shaven lawn, broken by stately old trees and blossoming flower-beds. The view so charmed her with its loveliness, that at first she hardly heeded the magnificence of the different apartments through which they led her.

There were quaint, shadowy old rooms, full of odd nooks and corners, and heavy massive antique furniture, where one could also away a morning so pleasantly; and in the modern portion of the dwelling, a long suite of drawing-rooms, with a ball-room beyond, which had been fitted up with every luxury that wealth and refined taste could devise.

"Be happy," Gramley Mellen whispered, when his wife tried to find words to express her delight. "Be happy—let me have peace and rest—it is all I ask."

He looked in her face, eager for the smiling surprise which he had expected to find there. It was pale as death.

CHAPTER V.

Elsie took Elizabeth up the broad flight of steps which led from the hall, and conducted her to the suite of rooms that had been prepared for her reception. "I had them arranged close to my little nest," she said, "because I knew Gramley would never be content unless I was within call. I hope you like them, Elizabeth?"

Elizabeth answered that they were beautiful, as indeed they were. But it was a grand, lonely splendor that she looked upon, which almost chilled her. The chamber was large and richly furnished. Every thing was massive and costly. The carpet soft as a flower-bed and as brilliant in tints. Wherever she turned, her eyes fell on exquisite ovirlays reflected by limpid mirrors; curtains of richly tinted satin shut out an imperfect view of the ocean, and Elizabeth could not help remarking that the principal windows faced northward, away from the bloom and glory of the sunshine. Even the dressing-room, which was in one of the octagon towers, looked out on the only barren spot in view—a storm-beaten grove of cedars that stood, ragged and bristling with dead limbs, on the beach.

Spite of herself, Elizabeth was chilled. She loved the morning sunshine like a worshipper, and felt as if all the gorgeous splendor which surrounded her was shutting it out from her own portion of this new home.

"Did Mr. Mellen do this?" she asked in a faltering voice. "Was it his taste?"

"Every bit of it," answered Elsie. "He exhausted himself in fitting up my snuggery. The rest was left to me. I had carte blanche, you know, as to money; and it was splendid fun getting about and ordering things. Don't you remember how much I used to be away from school?"

Elizabeth smiled, and made an effort to appear thankful and pleased.

"See what close neighbors we are," said Elsie, lifting a curtain that seemed to drape a window, but revealing a door which she pushed open.

Elizabeth stepped forward, and in contrast with the rich gloom of her own chamber, saw a suite of the brightest, sunniest rooms, that ever a capricious beauty inhabited.

The dressing-room which she entered, was hung with bright, cerulean blue, overrun with what seemed to be the embroidery pattern of pale-lace. The carpet was thick, soft, and almost as white as ermine, with a tangled vine of golden water-lilies and broad, green leaves running over it, as if the water they grew in had been crusted with snow, and the blossoms, soft, fresh, and bright, upon the surface. The couch, easy-chair, and general furniture, were of polished rosewood, upholstered in delicate azure silk, shot and starred with silver. A luxurious number of silken cushions lay upon the couch, chairs, and even on the floor; for two of these were heaped against the pedestal, on which a basket of flowers stood, and upon them lay a guitar, with its broad, blue ribbon hanging loose. A gay table was loaded with every exquisitely feminine object of use or beauty, till the very profusion was oppressive, light and graceful as every thing was.

Two of the windows were open, and their lace curtains light back, one by a marble Hebe that mingled her cold stone flowers with the less; the other by a Bacchante, whose gnarled and snow-white grapes was seen dimly through the transparent folds it gathered away from the glass.

Through these open windows came glimpses of the flower-garden, green slopes on the lawn, and farther off the wind swept up perfumes from a distant orchard, and sifted it almost imperceptibly through the delicate net-work of the curtains. Back of this boudoir was a bed-chamber, and beyond that a dressing-room. Elizabeth could see through the open door a bed with hangings of blue and white, with all the objects of luxury which could please the taste of a pampered and fanciful girl.

"Grantley chose these rooms for me long ago, before he went to Europe," said Elsie, looking around with quiet complacency. "He would not hear of my giving them up; besides I knew you would like something a little darker and more stately," she said. "Are you pleased with the house, Bessie?"

"Very, very much. I did not expect any thing so magnificent," she answered. "It overpowers me."

"I had not seen it for years," said Elsie, "till I came down with Grant to decide about the new furniture. Now you must be happy here. You ought to be! Just contrast this place with that old barn of a school; it makes one shudder to think of it! You must be happy, Bessie, for I hate discontented people."

"I trust so, dear; I believe so; we shall all be happy."

"Oh, you can't help it," pursued Elsie; "Grant is always a darling! But you must love and pet me, you know, just as he does."

"You excessive little thing" said Elizabeth, lightly.

"Yes, but you must," she urged; "you never would have had all this but for me!"

"No," answered Elizabeth; "I should never have known Grantley but for you."

"I told him the moment he came back from Europe just what I had set my heart on," pursued Elsie, shaking her curls about, and chattering in her careless, graceful way. "I said I loved you like a sister, and I should die if I was separated from you. That settled it."

Elizabeth had rested herself in a low chair, with her back towards the window; she looked up quickly at Elsie's words.

"Settled it!" she repeated, in an inquiring way.

"Yes, exactly!"

Elsie flung herself on the carpet at her sister's feet, and caught one of her hands, playing with the rings on the delicate fingers, in her caressing fashion.

"How do you mean?" asked Elizabeth, quietly, though there was a sudden change in her face to which might have struck Elsie could she have seen it. "Settled it: how do you mean?"

"Why, he never had refused me any thing in all his life," said Elsie; "it was not likely he would begin so late! Nobody ever does refuse me any thing: now, remember that, Bess."

"Yes, dear! So you told Grantley you were very fond of me—"

"And that I wanted him to marry you—of course I did."

It was only Elsie's childish nonsense; Elizabeth felt how foolish it was to heed it, and yet she could not repress her self-reproachful question.

"Then was when he first came home, Elsie?"

"Yes; I had written him all sorts of things about you; and you remember when he came to the school he said we had made you go down without telling you who was there."

"Yes—I remember."

"He praised you very highly, and I told him what a dear you were; how good you had been to me in my sickness, and how sad it was for you to have lost all your fortune and be obliged to teach."

She colored deeply deepened as Elizabeth's cheek was it possible that in the beginning Grantley Mellen had been interested in her from a feeling of pity and commiseration?

Her engagement had been a brief one; during it, the days had passed in a constant whirl of excitement and happiness, and she had found little time to question or reflect: up to the last days there had been no shadow on her enjoyment—she had resolutely swept aside every thing but her deep joy.

But it was strange that in the very first hours of her married life this conversation with Elsie should come up. She knew it was only the girl's heedlessness and pretty egotism that made her talk so, she was sure of that; still her nature was too proud and self-reliant, for the idea that Mellen had been first attracted towards her from sympathy at her lonely condition, to be at all pleasant.

But Elsie was going on with her careless revelations, playing with the rings which Mellen had put on one finger, as those delicate fingers during their engagement, making each one precious with kisses and loving words.

"So, when I saw how sorry he was for you, I knew how I could have you my own way. I longed to see this dear old house open once more; it had been given up to the servants ever since he hurried off to Europe; and I wanted you for my companion always, you darling."

It was fortunate for your wishes that Grantley's heart inclined him in the direction you had marked out," said Elizabeth.

"Oh," exclaimed Elsie, with hasty recklessness, and her usual want of thought, "Grant had no heart for any body; all his love was centred on me; after the experience he had years ago, I don't suppose he could ever love any woman again—he is just the child of character."

Elizabeth gave no sign of the blow which had struck her; she drew her hand away from Elsie, lest its sudden coldness should rouse some suspicion of the truth in the girl's mind, and asked in a singularly quiet voice—

"What experience, Elsie?"

"Oh, I don't mean to say that," she replied; "I am always letting things out by mistake; Grant would be really angry with me; don't ever mention it to him."

"I will not; but what experience has he had that prevents his giving his heart even to his own wife?"

"Dear me, I oughtn't to tell you; but you'd surely find it out some time; only promise me not to open your lips."

"I promise," replied Elizabeth, a cold, gray shadow settling over her face, out of which every trace of bloom had faded.

"He had a friend whom he was very, very fond of," pursued Elsie, "and he was engaged to be married into the bargain. This friend treated him dreadfully—ran off with the girl Grant loved, and cheated him out of a great deal of money—money that he could not afford to lose, for he was not rich then. Grant was nearly mad. I was a little thing, but I remember it perfectly. When his uncle died and left me to school, and he started in Europe; he has been there all these four long years."

And of all this grief, this disappointment, he had never told her one word. Elsie spoke the truth—he had married her that his sister might have a companion, and his house a mistress.

A prouder woman than Elizabeth Mellen never existed; and there she sat with her brief dream of happiness full crushed and broken at her feet under this revelation.

"There," cried Elsie, "that's all, so don't ever think about the thing again. What a fortunate creature you are! how happy we shall be, shan't we, dear?"

She tried to throw her arms about Elizabeth in her demonstrative way, but the woman rose quickly, pushing Elsie back.

"It is time to dress," she said; "I am going to my room."

She passed into her chamber with that dreary chill at her heart which, it seemed to her, would never leave it again: that fearful pang of humiliation and self-abasement in her soul, which would grow stronger with every proof of kindness that her husband could give.

No love—no heart to give her under all his goodness and attention. She kept repeating such words to herself—they would never cease to ring in her ears—there could be no pleasure so entrancing that they would not mar it by their whisper—no grief so deep that they would not torture her by the recollection that she was powerless to comfort or aid the man who had made her his wife.

But she would bear it all in silence; hers was one of those deep, reticent natures whose most intense pain is pushed back and carry out her determination to the very end. She would weary him with no sign of affection—some of the playful exactions of a young wife would be as much as she could bring herself to. That was the first thought upon which she settled, even while this earliest shirt of pain and trouble made her head dizzy and her heart so sick.

She heard Elsie's voice going out in a gay song: she went mechanically on with her dressing, hearing that merry song in the midst of her bewildering thoughts like a careless mockery.

If she could have sat down in the midst of her new life, and died without further trouble or pain—that became her one thought! If they could never rise from and find her dead, they might feel regret for a time, but very soon even her memory would pass away from that old house, and out of their hearts, where she had no right as a mating-place, and in the grave she should find quiet.

Then Elsie came dancing in, and exclaimed—

"Oh, you are dressed! I hear Grant on the stairs. May I open the door?"

Elizabeth was perfectly quiet and composed, but the change in her manner would have been apparent to any one less self-absorbed than Elsie.

"Open it," she answered; "I am ready."

Grantley Mellen entered the room, and led them both away down stairs to the fine dining-room prepared in his young wife's hand, the sort of shrinking from his side, and his suspicious mind caught fire instantly. He noted every change in her face, every tone in her voice, and at once there came back to him the conversation he had held with Mrs. Harrington.

Could Elizabeth have known this man? Was there a secret in her past of which he was ignorant? The bare idea made his head reel, but though he might banish it from his mind for a season, the slightest recurrence would bring it back to torture him with an inexplicable fear and dread.

So their new life began with this shadow upon it on a shadow impossible to all lookers on, but lying cold and dim on their hearts nevertheless, to slowly gather substance day by day till it should become a chill, heavy mist, through which their two souls could not look out at one another

CHAPTER VI.

GRANTLEY MELLEN was still a young man, only thirty-three, though the natural gravity of his character, increased by certain events in his life, made him appear somewhat older.

His father had died many years before, and an uncle had left him the possession of a fine property, which had increased in value, till he was now a very wealthy man.

His mother died when Elsie was a girl of about fourteen, and on her death-bed Grantley Mellen had promised to act the part of parent as well as brother to the young girl. He had never once wavered in the trust, and the love and tenderness he displayed towards her were beautiful and touching to witness.

He was never suspicious, never severe with her, though Elsie never failed in the failings of his character. Elsie was to be treated as a child; to be petted, and indulged, and allowed to live in the sunshine, whatever else might befall others.

Although her beauty was good, she had always been rather delicate in appearance, and that made him more careful of her. He was haunted with the fear that she was to be the victim of the same progress, consumption, though in reality she was one of those frail-looking creatures, who are all nerves—nerves, so, as elastic as well-tempered steel; and who always outlive the people who have watched them so carefully.

It was true Grantley Mellen had met with a multitude of disappointments in his early youth, which had embittered all his after years, and increased the natural jealousy of his disposition almost to a monomania. These were the facts of his history.

He had a college friend of his own age, whom from boyhood he had loved with all the strength and passion which made the undercurrent of his grave, reserved character. He had helped this young man in every way—befriended him in college, started him in the world after, been to him what few brothers ever are.

The time came when Mellen found the realization of those dreams which fill every youthful soul: he loved, with all the fire and intensity of a first passion. His friend was made the confident of this love; he shared Mellen's every thought, and seemed heartily to sympathize with his feelings.

It is an old story, so I need not dwell upon it. Both friend and betrothed wife proved false. There came a day when Grantley Mellen found himself alone with a terrible misery, with no faith left in humanity to give a ray of light in the darkness.

The friend whom he had trusted eloped with his affianced bride, and cheated him out of a large sum of money. With that sudden treachery and his bitter grief, Mellen's youth ended.

He left Eden at once, and went away to Europe, wandering about for years, and growing more saddened and misanthropic all the while.

He returned at last to America sixteen then. She had a school-friend, to whom she had been greatly attached; a girl older than herself, and so different in every respect, that it was a wonder Elsie's volatile character could be attracted towards her, or that her liking had been reciprocated.

This was the state of events when Mellen returned from Europe. Elsie's account of her interested him in the unfortunate girl. When he made her acquaintance, that sympathy deepened into a feeling which he had never thought to have for any woman again,—he loved her.

It was a restless, craving affection, which threatened great trouble both to himself and its object. He had no faith in human nature, but his suspicious mind was always on the alert—he was jealous even of her friends, her favorite studies—he wanted every look and thought his own, and yet he was too proud to show his feelings openly.

Elizabeth's character was not one easy to understand, nor shall I enter into its details here. The progress of my story must show her as she really was, and leave you to judge for yourselves concerning it, and the effect it had upon her life.

She was singularly reticent and reserved, but impassioned and enthusiastic in her way—not any thing that the man who loved her dreamed of. He saw her gay, brilliant, fond of society, yet apparently content with the quiet life he was determined to lead. Still there was something wanting. He felt in the depths of his heart that he was not master of her whole being. That sometimes the very kisses seemed frozen on his lips, and that she turned from his protestations of love with sad smiles, that seemed mocking him. And she, also, the woman who believes herself unloved by her husband, is always in danger—always unhappy.

The first weeks of the quiet honeymoon had passed, and Don Mellen began to gratify the chief desire of his honest soul, and rush down to the island to bewilder himself more hopelessly in the spell of Elsie's fascinations, like a great foolish moth, whirling about a dazzling light.

She had never scrupled to laugh at him and his devotion, even to Elizabeth herself, but just now she was not quite so gay. She was listless of the house and the seclusion of those weeks was not at all in unison with her taste, and she was already regretting that Mellen had not allowed her to accept Mrs. Harrington's kind drop. He knew there was a motive for this refusal of the house, and dashed it upon them with such an outpouring of confusion and delight that it might have softened anybody towards him.

"I couldn't stop away another day," he cried, swinging Mellen's hand till it ached for half an hour after.

"We are very glad to see you," replied Mellen; "very glad."

"I am much obliged, I'm sure," exclaimed Tom, "and you're just a trump, that's the truth."

"I suppose you keep him at home to keep him so carefully in your hand," interposed Elsie, laughing.

Tom was instantly covered with confusion, and let Mellen's hand drop. He knew there was a joke somewhere, but for the life of him he could not see it.

"You are beginning to laugh at me before you have even said 'How do you do?'" cried he, reproachfully.

"And am I not to laugh at you if I please?" exclaimed Elsie, with her gay, cross-grained old way, and don't begin to quarrel the moment we meet."

Tom blushed like a girl while he bent over the little hand she held to him, holding it carefully, and looking down on it with a sort of delighted wonder, as if it had been some rare rose-tinted shell that would break if he closed his fingers.

But Mellen was not looking at them; he stood there wondering if this man could have been of any consequence in Elizabeth's past. Could she have loved him, and been prevented from marrying him by the want of fortune on both sides? No, it was impossible; he felt, he knew that it was so; but the idea would not leave his mind nevertheless.

"When you have done examining my hand, Mr. Tom Fuller, please give it back," said Elsie. "It don't amount to much, but, as the Scotchwoman observed of her clergyman's head, 'it's some good to the owner.'"

Tom dropped it as if the pink fingers had burned his palm.

"I'm always the awkwardest fellow alive I'm cried he, dismally. "And how is Bessie, dear girl?"

Mellen roused himself.

"I will call her," he said; "she is quite well, and will be delighted to see you."

He went into the house in search of his wife, and Elsie began to tease her unfortunate victim, a pastime of which she never wearied. It seemed to her the funniest thing in the world, to make Tom Fuller color, stammer, and stutter, to lead him on to do all sorts of absurd things, to laugh at him, to bewilder his honest head; and as for any pain that he might suffer, she never considered it any more than she did the sorrows of a Feejee Islander, or the chirp of her canary.

"Have you come down here prepared to be agreeable?" she asked.

"Remember, I expect you to be completely at my service—to wait on me like the most devoted of knights."

"I'd stand on my head if you asked it," shouted Tom, impetuously.

"How deliciously odd you would look!" cried Elsie; "you shall try it some day; I only hope it won't leave you with a brain fever."

"You may tease me as much as you like," said Tom, "and you will only say you are glad to see me."

"Oh, you will be an invaluable resource," replied Elsie; "I was getting bored with watching other people's love-making. You can row a boat and teach me to play billiards, and be generally nice and useful?"

"Just try me, that's all!" said Tom.

"Don't be afraid that I shall put you to every use possible; you may be quite certain that your position will not be a sinecure."

"Then you'll not scorn me the happiest fellow alive?"

"You don't know what you are saying; you don't know what your words mean," cried Elsie, with one of her bewildering glances.

"Indeed I do! Oh, Miss Elsie, if you only could—"

"Here is Bessie," she interrupted, as her sister came down on the piazza, followed by Mellen.

Elizabeth was rejoiced to see honest Tom; he was the only relative she possessed, and she loved him like a brother. She was thoroughly acquainted with his character, and honored him for the sterling goodness which lay back of the eccentricities of manner which made him an open to laughter and misconception.

"I'm so glad to see you!" cried Tom, shaking hands all round again, and growing redder and redder, to Elsie's intense delight. "I've been like a cat on hot bricks ever since I came away; I just began to feel like myself again. Bessie, old girl, are you glad to see me?"

"I shall always be glad to see you, Tom," Elizabeth said, glancing at her husband.

"Indeed we shall," he said; "you will always find a room at your service, and a sincere welcome."

Tom thought no welcome could have equalled his—the idea was simply absurd—he would never think of it again, never!

"I can't tell you how much obliged I am," said Tom, twisting about as if his joints were out of order, and he was trying to set them straight.

"Your chamber is ready," said Elizabeth; "we expected you back at two."

"He doesn't need to go up now," interposed Elsie: "that checked coat is bewitching, and he is quite fit to be cut to row. Come along, Don Quixote—come this instant!"

She ran off, and he followed, obediently as a great Newfoundland dog.

Elizabeth looked after them a little sadly, and smothered a sigh of anxiety. She saw what Elsie was so heedlessly doing, and knew Tom well enough to understand how acute his sufferings would be when he was roused from his entrancing dream.

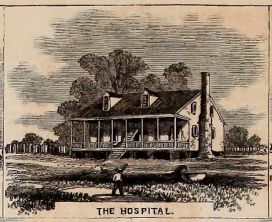
So things went on during the whole time of his visit, and there was no help for it. Tom was in a perfect slave, and Tom no more thought of disputing her wildest caprice, than if he had been some untutored fawn, made captive to the spells of a Dryad.

Elsie saw plainly enough that he loved her, but she regarded that part of the affair very lightly. She was accustomed to being loved and petted—it was her right. The idea that it could be cruel or unprincipled to encourage this young fellow as she did, never entered her head. Indeed, if the misery had been forced upon her by any one she cared not to her, she would only have laughed at it as a capital jest.

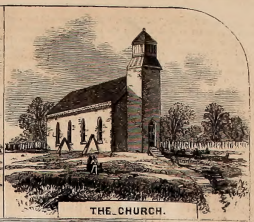
When Tom Fuller went back to town, Elsie was taken with a strong desire to visit dear Mrs. Harrington. Tom was a sort of cousin, now, and would make a capital escort. Besides, she was sure Grantley and Elizabeth would be about happier alone. Perhaps Mellen thought so too. At any rate, he made no objections, and Elsie went.

The house was quiet and lonely alone. The days were so pleasant—those long, golden, June days!—they might have been so happy in the solitude of that beautiful spot, but the cloud which lay between them grew scarcely perceptible as yet, but widening every hour

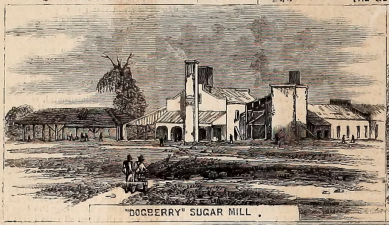
Elizabeth watched her husband incessantly. She was conscious of every change of affection into a forced kindness, an attempt on his part to hide from her his want of love; he was trying to make all the atonement in his power, to give her every thing that could make life pleasant, except the place in his heart which was her right. How her soul revolted against the thought!



She was proud, stern and grieved that he could have deceived her. If he had only spoken, only left her to decide whether she could be content to accept an outer place in his regard, to make his home happy, to guard and cherish his sister—if he had only left this decision in her hands, the matter would have worn a different aspect.



But that he should have been silent—that even now he should guard his secret, practising this daily deception, and meaning to let it lie between them all through life—was a never-ceasing thorn in her heart.



And Mellen, in turn, was watching her; watching her with that morbid suspicion which made the groundwork of his character. Observant of the change in her manner, and trying always to account for it, but only making himself restless and anxious to no purpose.

(To be continued.)

GATE AND PORTER'S LODGE.

THE HOSPITAL.

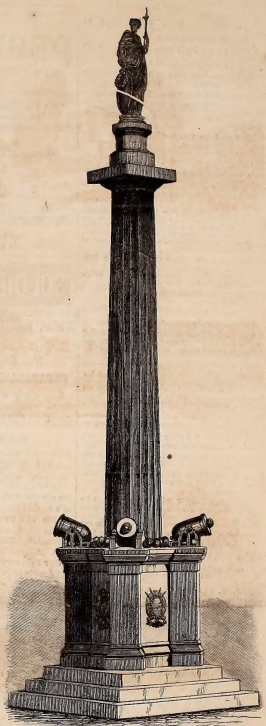
THE CHURCH.

"DOGBERRY" SUGAR MILL.

THE SAW MILL.

OAK LAWN.

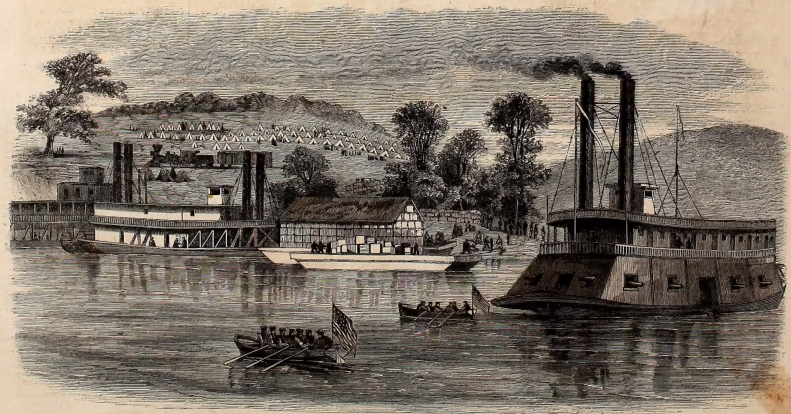
NEGRO QUARTERS.



THE RESIDENCE.

THE OVERSEERS HOUSE.

OAK LAWN, PLANTATION OF MRS. PORTER, ON THE TECHE, LA.—From Sketches by our Special Artist, C. E. H. Bowyer.



PICTURES OF SOUTHERN LIFE—THE SNUFF-DIPPERS.—FROM A DRAWING BY A GERMAN OFFICER IN THE REBEL ARMY.

THE WARS OF THE LAST CENTURY—BATTLE MONUMENT JUST ERECTED AT STE. FOYE, NEAR QUEBEC, CANADA.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY LIVERNOIS.

CURLING AT CENTRAL PARK.—FROM A PAINTING BY J. G. BROWN, N. A.

DUVALL'S BLUFFS, PRAIRIE CO., ARKANSAS—DEPOT OF SUPPLIES OF THE ARMY OF THE SOUTHWEST.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

A COBBLER'S sole support—in shoe rents he finds his awl.

"PRAY, madam, what makes you so acute?"

"Oh, I have taken a sedative."

"I trust you, wife, I have got the plan all clear in my head."

"Ah, then it is all in a nutshell."

SOME women take such delight in scolding that it would be cruel to stop them occasion for it.

THEY debate strange questions down East. The last one is: What is the difference between the Bridge of Sighs and the size of a bridge? The next is to be: The difference between a fat Sizzle and a sea family."

"SAM," said an interesting young mother to her youngest hopeful, "do you know what the difference is between body and soul? The soul, my child, is what you have when you think you've got none, and the body is what you have, though you don't think you have it. Now, Sam, you can feel it now. What is it?" Thing double, ma." And Sam, with a flush of intelligence in his eyes, "thinks my flannel shirt!"

AN old darkey was endeavoring to explain his ancestry to a colleague. "You see, my second father was, it was in dis war as far as I can remember." "Pshaw, my father died, and then my mother married again; and den my mother died, and my father agin; and somehow, I don't seem to hab no parents at all, nor no home, nor nuffin."

OUR children will have the immense tax on their heads," said an American gentleman.

"Oh, horrible!" exclaimed an elderly lady, "what a thing it is to have such children!"

"TOMMY, what does b-e-n-e-f-i spell?"

"Don't know, ma'am."

"What—you little thick-skull—what are you sitting on?"

Tommy (looking sheepish)—"Don't like to tell."

A YOUNG lady down East advertised for the young man who "embraced an opportunity," and says she has had to come over to them down to her own do better.

DEEPLY were we affected, on reading the other day of a young lady, who being told that her lover was dead, fainted away in a chair.

"Oh! that splendid gold watch of his—give me that—give me something to remember him by!" Feeling of delicacy!

To find the value of a dollar at any price—Try to borrow one when you are desperately hard up.

BE sure to pay for your pantaloons—don't get yourself charged with breeches of trust.

WOMEN love to exercise control; they are not satisfied till they have husbands to order.

ALMOST every evil has its compensations. He who has but one foot never treads on his own toes.

SCRUTINIZE a lawyer when he tells you to avoid litigation, and a doctor when he drinks your health.

VALENTINES

To the Trade.

Call or send to Headquarters. Catalogues sent free by mail. A new assortment, on entirely retail terms, than any other dealer can offer. Address

BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, 413 Broadway, N.Y.
(Store and Manufactory.)

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS

☞NOTICE—HOSTETTER'S BITTERS—SEA-SICKNESS CURED.—Let no whisper in the ears of all who are in the act in ships that HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS positively, immediately and thoroughly cure nausea at sea. Ready has been tried with, planters have been tried with—a thousand testimonials have been recommended for the most depressing and overwhelming drawback on the pleasures of a voyage. They have all failed—utterly failed. But the proprietors of HOSTETTER'S BITTERS defy their position on the efficacy of the preparation as a means of calming and strengthening the nervousness of stomach during the storms of voyage. It is certain to act in one of two ways. It may either stay the perverted stomach at once, and restore the appetite for food, or it may cause a due change of the secretions of the organs, to be followed almost instantly by an entire relief from sea sickness, and a renewed relish for the good things of life. That it will effect the desired object in one of these ways is as certain to them will follow midnight.

No landsman, and above all no lady should go to sea without a supply of HOSTETTER'S BITTERS—the purest tonic and the most powerful restorative extant.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PITTSBURGH AND NEW YORK.
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.,
DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 470 BROADWAY.

Gold! Gold!

Full instructions in Ventriloquism, and how to win the undivided love of the opposite sex, sent by mail to any person for Five Cents. Address

JAGGERS & HANDLEY, Calhoun, Ill.

Do you want to get Married?

If so, don't fail to buy

"Courtship Made Easy," a Book of 100 pages, illustrated, containing full instructions in the Art of "Psychology, Fascination," with Explanatory Charts enabling any person, of either sex to fascinate and win the undying love of any person they choose instantly, thus rendering success to courtship certain. Sent by mail for 50 cents and two red stamps.

Address E. D. LUCKE & CO.,
436-9 Box 1625, Portland, Maine.

FURNITURE,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),
No. 87 Bowery, New York.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States. They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash. Their stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work. all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $22 to $100.

TUCKER'S NEW STYLE PATENT SPRING BED,

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each. Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

SOLDIERS C° PINS & CORPS BADGES

Every Co. from A to M, and every Corps Badge worn by the Army constantly on hand. Engraved to order, and a cut for on receipt of price. Also Cavalry and Artillery Badges. A splendid list of PREMIUMS offered to Clubs. Don't fail to send for an Illustrated Catalogue. Address

C. L. HALCH & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Miss Braddon's New Novel.

UNPARALLELED ATTRACTIONS!!

Every lady should secure an early number of

FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE

FOR FEBRUARY 1864,

Containing the opening of MISS BRADDON'S new and exciting Romance,

THE DOCTOR'S WIFE,

the advanced sheets of which were obtained at a cost of $3,000.

This will be esteemed beyond all doubt her greatest and ablest work, having been secured by TEMPLE BAR at an enormous cost.

Our February number will contain a splendid double page colored Fashion plate, showing eight full dresses, a four page Fashion plate; new styles of Bonnets, Caps and Headdresses, and twelve pages of miscellaneous patterns, a number of interesting Tales, Sketches and Illustrations.

Every lady should take it for these reasons, and

1st.—Because it is the earliest chronicler of the latest Parisian Fashions.

2d.—Because it has established Agents in Paris, London and Berlin, who forward by every Steamer the latest novelties, in advance of their publication in those cities, exclusively for this Magazine.

3d.—Because, having the Largest Engraving Establishment in this country, the Publisher possesses unequalled facilities for rapidly reproducing Fashion Plates for this Magazine.

4th.—Because the Colored Steel Fashion Plate is double the size of the largest plate published in any other Magazine. It consequently contains twice the number of Models for Dresses.

5th.—Because it contains a full-sized Cut Pattern of some new garment for Lady's use, imported expressly for this Magazine.

6th.—Because it also contains a Mammoth Four Page Engraving of the latest Modes—the largest Fashion Plate ever published in any Magazine.

7th.—Because, in addition to the Fashions, a large space is devoted to choice Literary Matter, including Illustrated Tales, Biographies, etc.

8th.—Because One Hundred Dollars expended in procuring Foreign Fashion Books would give but a single volume, which can be had in Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine for $3 per annum.

9th.—Because each number contains over 100 Engravings of the latest style for Morning, Walking, Dinner and Evening Costume for Ladies and Children.

Hawkes's Diamond Pointed Gold Pen

Medium	Pen	$0 50	Commercial	Pen	$1 25
Large	"	0 63	Mammoth	"	1 50
Engraving	"	0 75	Lucian	"	2 00

Also, Fountain Pens—one filling will write eight to fifteen hours. Sent stamp for Circular.

GEO. F. HAWKES, Manufacturer,
432-6 64 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Billiard Balls!

Patent Compressed Ivory, 2¼ and 2⅜ in. $10 per set; 2⅝ Regular Balls, $8 per set; 2⅞ Regular, $7; warranted for six months. WM. M. WELLING, Agent, 48 Centre Street, New York, sign of the Golden Elephant.

FURNITURE,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),
No. 87 Bowery, New York.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States. They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash. Their stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work. all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $22 to $100.

TUCKER'S NEW STYLE PATENT SPRING BED,

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each. Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

SOLDIERS C° PINS & CORPS BADGES

Every Co. from A to M, and every Corps Badge worn by the Army constantly on hand. Engraved to order, and a cut for on receipt of price. Also Cavalry and Artillery Badges. A splendid list of PREMIUMS offered to Clubs. Don't fail to send for an Illustrated Catalogue. Address

C. L. HALCH & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Miss Braddon's New Novel.

UNPARALLELED ATTRACTIONS!!

Every lady should secure an early number of

FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE

FOR FEBRUARY 1864,

Containing the opening of MISS BRADDON'S new and exciting Romance,

THE DOCTOR'S WIFE,

the advanced sheets of which were obtained at a cost of $3,000.

This will be esteemed beyond all doubt her greatest and ablest work, having been secured by TEMPLE BAR at an enormous cost.

Our February number will contain a splendid double page colored Fashion plate, showing eight full dresses, a four page Fashion plate; new styles of Bonnets, Caps and Headdresses, and twelve pages of miscellaneous patterns, a number of interesting Tales, Sketches and Illustrations.

Every lady should take it for these reasons, and

1st.—Because it is the earliest chronicler of the latest Parisian Fashions.

2d.—Because it has established Agents in Paris, London and Berlin, who forward by every Steamer the latest novelties, in advance of their publication in those cities, exclusively for this Magazine.

3d.—Because, having the Largest Engraving Establishment in this country, the Publisher possesses unequalled facilities for rapidly reproducing Fashion Plates for this Magazine.

4th.—Because the Colored Steel Fashion Plate is double the size of the largest plate published in any other Magazine. It consequently contains twice the number of Models for Dresses.

5th.—Because it contains a full-sized Cut Pattern of some new garment for Lady's use, imported expressly for this Magazine.

6th.—Because it also contains a Mammoth Four Page Engraving of the latest Modes—the largest Fashion Plate ever published in any Magazine.

7th.—Because, in addition to the Fashions, a large space is devoted to choice Literary Matter, including Illustrated Tales, Biographies, etc.

8th.—Because One Hundred Dollars expended in procuring Foreign Fashion Books would give but a single volume, which can be had in Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine for $3 per annum.

9th.—Because each number contains over 100 Engravings of the latest style for Morning, Walking, Dinner and Evening Costume for Ladies and Children.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT
SMOKING CASE!

Most Important in its combination of the Meerschaum Case, containing Pipe and Stem, Matches and Pipe Cleaner, with a handsome Tobacco Pouch attached, all forming the Pipe by a twist without use of the fingers or waste of tobacco, the whole securing freedom from all odor, and portable as a Cigar Case. It is made for cavalry, of various and handsome styles, at $4 50, $5, $5 50, $6, $6 50 and $7; $7 50 and $8; the two latter richly Plated and Engraved. Nothing can excel the Comfort, Utility and Economy for all Smokers. A Present to Every Person making could be more acceptable.

FOR THE SOLDIER IT IS INVALUABLE.

Also

The Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco!

Of superior quality and flavor, in packing a to fill the case (about a week's smoking, $2 25 per dozen) and of various Sizes, for the general Trade. A liberal discount to Dealers. Single Cases sent by mail, paid, on receipt of price of 75 cents. Also, half pound packages of this Rare Tobacco; full weight sent (carefully put up) by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 25.

RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,
Office 429 Broadway, cor. Howard St., N. Y.

FURS!

FURS!!

FURS!!!

Ladies and Misses Fine Furs, in Sable, Mink, Ermine, Grebe, Etc.

Gents' Fur Caps, Muffers and Gauntlets, in Seal Otter, Beaver, etc.,

Sleigh Robes in variety. Retailed at Wholesale Prices.

BURKE (successor to WATKINS),
210 Broadway, corner Fulton street.

THE STANDARD
AMERICAN BILLIARD TABLE

AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

Approved and adopted by the Billiard Congress of 1863. The best and only reliable Billiard Table manufactured. Planed, not sawed, and every detail relating to Billiards, for sale by

PHELAN & COLLENDER,
434-7 Corner of Crosby and Spring Sts., N. Y.

The Home Melodist

Contains nearly One Hundred Favorite Songs. It is exceedingly convenient in size, and neat and attractive in style. This unique volume, bound in cloth, and comprising choice pieces, will be in another form every two weeks, and also will be sent, postage free, on receipt of only 25 cents by

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
277 Washington St. Boston.

ANOTHER MERCURY STORY.

BLANCHE;

OR,

THE LOST DIAMOND.

A TALE OF THE LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF LONDON.

Illustrations by DARLEY.....Price 25 Cents.

This Story, by the author of "Thy Cudot," "Mad romance Smith" "The Rich and Spicy," etc., is a Tale of universal interest and is written in the author's best style.

Mailed, free of postage, on receipt of price.

FREDERIC BRADY, Publisher,
34 Ann Street, N. Y.

W. FORSYTH & CO.,

62 and 44 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office), offer for sale the following Magnificent List of

WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.

Valued at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

	EACH
150 Gold and Silver Watches	$150 @ 100
200 Rosewood Work Boxes	3 00 @ 8 00
400 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	8 @ 15
5000 Vest and Neck Chains	2 00 @ 10 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 @ 10 00
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 @ 10 00
3000 Cameo Breastpins	4 00 @ 6 00
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 @ 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 @ 6 00
3000 Cameo Brooches	4 00 @ 6 00
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 @ 6 00
3000 Gold Pens	3 00 @ 5 00
5000 Gent's Breast Pins	2 50 @ 8 00
3000 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 @ 6 00
2500 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 @ 6 00
2500 Sets of Studs	2 00 @ 6 00
25 0 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 @ 6 00
2000 Scarf Pins	2 50 @ 6 00
5000 Stone Set Rings	3 00 @ 6 00
5000 Lockets	3 00 @ 10 00
1000 Sets of Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 @ 10 00
1000 Gold Pens, Silver Mounted in Cases	4 00 @ 6 00
5000 Gold Pens with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00

The articles in this stock of Jewelry are of the neatest and most fashionable styles. Certificates of all the various articles are put in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, thus giving all a fair chance, and sent by mail or express to all parts of the country. On receipt of a certificate you will be informed what article you have got, and may then, at your option, remit the sum named (which in no case will exceed $10) and receive the article so named by return mail or express. Our object in this popular mode of doing business is to introduce our stock of Watches, Jewelry, etc., into every section of the country, and thereby secure a large trade. Remember that in every case you will get an article worth the money you remit us, and in many cases worth FIVE TIMES the amount. Don't delay, but send your order at once. Five certificates will be sent for $1; eleven, $2; thirty, $5; sixty-five, $10; one hundred, $15; fourteen hundred, $200. Correspondence promptly answered.

AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow them ten cents on every Certificate, provided their remittance amounts to $5 or upwards. Full documents to those who buy largely. Send for Circular. Address

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
62 and 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

FUN. Send stamp to Drawer 6329, Chicago, Ill., and receive by return mail very interesting matter.

$50 per Month, and expenses paid, to good Agents. Address, with stamp,

PERRY & CO., Pittsburg, Pa.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers, Sorting Now. The Travelle's Companion, Register Proof Travellers Simplex sent by mail, 50 cents. Send stamp for Circular.
436 7 S. W. RICE & CO., 81 Nassau St., N. Y.

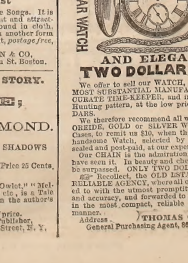
CHLOASMA, OR MOTH PATCHES!

Blemishes on the face, called Moth, are very annoying, particularly to ladies of light complexion, as it is discovered a year or two after it has shone strongly on blondes than on brunettes, but they contribute greatly in many the beauty to either; and the remedy that will remove moth patches, without injuring the skin, is considered a great desideratum. DR. DE. B. C. PERRY has a preparation in medical science. Dr. DE. B. C. PERRY has given the study of the last twenty years of his whole time and attention to Diseases of the Skin, will guarantee to remove Moth Patches, Freckles and other Discolorations of the Face without injury to either texture or color of the skin. He has made this as in other branches of his specialty—DISEASES OF THE SCALP AND SKIN—a study, and has had much skill in guaranteeing a CURE in every case. For particulars, inference, etc., address

DR. B. C. PERRY, 49 Bond Street, N. Y.

Singer & Co.'s Letter A Family Sewing Machine. Office 458 Broadway, cor. of Hammond, Bleecker, Bond, Fetter, Tucker Corder, Gathering, &c., &c., is the most perfect, and by far, most industrial of all Machines for Family sewing and light manufacturing purposes. It makes the interlocked stitch (which is alike on both sides), and has great capacity for sewing ALL KINDS of cloth, and with ALL KINDS of thread. Even leather, as well as the HEAVIEST goods, can be sewn to perfection on this machine. It will sew 2 0 spool cotton as well as No 10 linen thread—in fact it can do any thing known by sewing the machine fasted.

The Branch Offices are well supplied with silk twist, thread, needles, oil, &c., of the very best quality.



Send for a specimen of Singer & Co.'s Pamphlet.
009 I. M. SINGER & CO., 458 Broadway, N. Y.

Whiskers! Whiskers!

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Twenty cents per box. Three boxes for 50 cents, or five for $1. By mail.

Address SHAW & JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

COMPETITION DEFIED!

We offer to sell our WATCH, which is of the MOST SUBSTANTIAL MANUFACTURE, AN ACCURATE TIME-KEEPER, in sterling Cases, Hunting pattern, at the low price of TEN DOLLARS. Each ☞ Recollect, the OLD ESTABLISHED AND RELIABLE AGENCY, where all orders are attended to with the utmost promptitude, carefulness and accuracy, and forwarded to their destination in the most compact, reliable and expeditious manner.

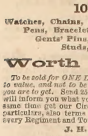
Address, THOMAS ORMSBY, &
General Purchasing Agent, 68 NASSAU St., N.Y.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000



Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and description, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Cavalry and Artillery!

Solid 18 Carat, $12. | Solid Silver, $1 25.

Solid 18 k Gold, $3 each. | Solid 18 k Gold, $6 each.

Sent by mail on receipt of price. Also, all kinds Corps, Co., Regt., Brigade Pins engraved to order, by the single one, 100 or 1,000, and sent to any part of the country. Cash, in advance. Send for a Circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewellers,
208 Broadway, N. Y.

Beauty.—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID ENAM EL, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enameler. It whitens the clith permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion, which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Moth, etc., etc., by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 129 South Seventh Street, and 41 South-Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

WANTED—WANTED.

Do You Want Splendid Whiskers or Moustaches?

HUNTER'S ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Also, on Bald Heads, in ten weeks. Two Boxes for $1. Postage free. Address C. I. BRIGGS, Milwaukee, Wis.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE LIFE AND DEATH of the proclaimer.

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.,

20 cents each, 10 for $1 00. Free by mail. Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1018, New York city. Send for circular.

J. G. SCHULL,
MERCHANT TAILOR
32 Ann Street, New York,

Has on hand a splendid assortment of French Eng lish and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings which he is prepared to make in the most fashionable style and on the most reasonable terms for cash

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,
Agents for the United States for the celebrated
ALBERTINE
EXTENSION HOLDERS & GOLD PENS

Of the most handsome and durable construction, put up in new boxes (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.

R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

DR. R. GOODALE'S
CATARRH REMEDY.

It penetrates to the very seat of this terrible disease, and exterminates it root and branch, for ever DR GOODALE is the first and only person who ever told the world what Catarrh really was—when it commenced—and what would cure it. Price $1. Send stamp for a pamphlet. 7 Dey, 521 Broadway, N. Y. NORTON & CO., Sole Agents.

Travelling Salesmen Wanted.

$75 a month, expenses paid, or a commission on sales. Apply to ISAAC HALL, Jr., & CO., 52 Jo Newburyport, Mass.

Union Playing Cards!

National American Amusement Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. 52 enamelled cards to the pack Eagles, Shields, Stars and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. Two packs mailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for Circular. Address

AMERICAN CARD CO.,
600 556 Broadway, or 16 William St., N. Y.

Headquarters for Officers' and Soldiers' Pins of Every Description!

We will send either Army Corps, Division or Company Pin, in Solid Silver, with your Name, Regiment and Co. handsomely Engraved upon it, on the receipt o $1. Also, a Kearney Cross in Fine Gold Plate for $1, or a New Style Solid Silver Cavalry Pin, Engraved as above, for $1 50.

☞ Agents sending for 10 or more at one time will be allowed 15 cents on each.

ALSO, THE EMPORIUM FOR WATCHES AND JEWELRY.

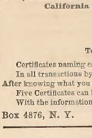
75,000 Watches, Gold Pens and Pencils,

Vest, Guard and Neck Chains, Chatelaine Chains and Pins, Engraved Bracelets, Engraved Spring Lockets, Seal Stone Rings California Rings, Chased Rings, Masonic Rings and Pins, Gents' California Diamond Pins, California Diamond Ear Drops, Beautiful Sets of Jewelry, New Styles Studs and Buttons, etc., etc., etc.,

WORTH $400,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

Certificates naming each article are put into Envelopes, Sealed and Mixed, and sent without regard to choice.



In all transactions by mail we shall charge for doing the business 25 cents each, which must be enclosed when the request is made to know what you can have After knowing what you can have, then it will be at your option to send One Dollar, take the article or not.

Five Certificates can be ordered for $1—three for $2—thirty for $5—sixty-five for $10—and one hundred for $15.

With the information of what you can have will be sent a Circular giving full instructions to Agents and a full Catalogue of articles.

Box 4876, N. Y. S. M. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway, New York.

NATIONAL BATTLE PINS.

McClellan, Grant, Rosecrans, Banks, Meade, Gillmore, Burnside, Hooker, Sigel and Foster. All on the same pattern as the cut, only differing in battle grounds and dates. Perfect photograph likeness in each pin, plated with fine gold. By enclosing One Dollar a sample will be sent by mail.

AGENTS WANTED FOR THE

ARMY. The undersigned has the exclusive right of manufacture, and the inventor of this beautiful keepsake and record of gallant acts. Also,

Cavalry and Artillery Pins!

The above cuts represent perfectly the Cavalry and Artillery Pins we have been getting out in Silver in response to the urgent inquiries from day to day, from Officers throughout each of the service so long neglected in sporgeable badges. The Cavalry and Artillery Pins are Enamelled, and for the Divisions in

Red, White and Blue,

The outer rim highly polished in Silver can be for the Name, Co. and Regiment. These Pins are Silver, and Enamelled on Sterling, Gilt and Twenty-Five Cents, Name, Co. and Regiment engraving is extra. One Dollar without engraving. If engraving is desired be sure to give Name, Co. and Regiment, Three Dollars per dozen.

Flyers will be carried.

AGENTS will be furnished at Six Dollars per dozen. The Emblems are raised and the Pin about the thickness of a two shilling piece.

UNITED STATES NAVY

Monitor Pins.

The cut is a correct copy of the Monitor Pins got up in Silver for the Officers of the Monitor and purchaser of any Monitor Engraved upon the same and furnished for $1 00 each. The Pins are very handsome, and got up expressly by desire of many officers of the Navy. Some pins got up in Gilt, Enamelled

Agents wanted. Every Monitor in the Navy represented.

LOUIS PHILIP & CO., 609 Broadway, N. Y.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Merchants, Bankers, Teachers, Amateurs, etc., etc.,

And everyone can be supplied in the best manner. Send for Circular

J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce Street, N. Y.

WEDDING CARDS.

French Note Papers, Seals and Monograms. Silver Plated Ware, Nos. 1, 2 Everdell's, 302 Broadway, cor. Duane St. For Specimens by mail, send 25 cents.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple means is in the power of all persons, securing certain and lasting success in love affairs, by the use of "Psychomancy," or the Secret of Fascination, which will be sent together with a guide to the unsurpassed of both sexes in the Matrimonial Art, free of postage. Third edition, over 100,000 copies already sold. Address 22, WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of the AMERICAN PEOPLE,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, particularized by DR. TOYNE, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes for Prostration, Imbaired Nutrition and Digestion.

☞ Fee—Just to send two red stamps and obtain the book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, 376, 96 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 436-42

Swords, Sashes, Belts.

Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords 431-56 B. KITTREDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry and why every woman should not marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. EARL, M.D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cents. Address 88 White Street, New York. 435-38

We have furnished our Wessons's Rifles as follows:

State of Kentucky	1,366
State of Indiana	760
General Ripley	150
Colonel Collins	220
Capt. Buck's Co., Chillicothe, O.
Col. Gaunt's "	Kansas.
Capt. Child's "	Athens, Ill.
Capt. Wayback's Co.,	Rolla, Mo.
Capt. McGee's "	Lexington, Mo.
Capt. Lorter's "	Sedalia, Mo.
Capt. Olds' "	Perrysville, Ind.

LEAVENWORTH, Oct. 12, 1852.

DEAR SIR—The Rifles I have got to a secret test on the 7th, at the State Fair, AND WON A PRIZE OF GOLD PEN. In contest against THREE INFANTRY COMPANIES. They were to fire in squads of ten, each two taking three shots, and to fire at the command "Fire." We were OUT-NUMBERED TWO TO ONE besides shots by the infantry; I fired 30 balls. We hit the target 45 times out of 100 shots. The number of hits made by the infantry was 15. Thus establishing the superiority of the RIFLE-MUSKET. (Wesson) Gun.

M. S. ROSS,
Col. 1st Kansas Cav.

TO MAJOR SHAW, St. Louis, Mo.

B. KITTREDGE & CO.,
435-46 Cincinnati, Ohio.

$50 FOR $20.

SOLDIERS IN THE ARMY,

For $20 we will forward by mail or express, prepaid, the following lot of the Gold Plated Jewellery: 1 Set Vest Chain; 12 Gent's Studs and Sea Rings; 1 Gold Pens and Extension Holders; 6 Vest Hooks; 1 Fancy Watch Key; 12 Bosom Studs; 1 Pair Cuff Pins; 4 pair Sleeve Buttons; 4 Sets and Gems Pins for Miniatures; 3 Double Glass Lockets; 1 Gold Plated Bosom Pins. Address

THOMAS CARPENTER & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

"Moustaches and Whiskers in 24 Days."

Use Wood's Patent Magnetic Hair Brush. The Great Secret fully explained in the BOOK OF WONDERS, 48,000 sold. Sent, with circulars, for 25 cents.

Address G. E. HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.—Superior to every other preparation for the hair in the known world. It restores gray hair to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to remove dandruff, previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp, producing dressing for whiskers.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA HAIR GLOSS,

unexcelled in keeping the hair in curl.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA CURLING CREAM

oils and colors the hair at the same time; changes light and gray hair to a rich, glossy brown or black.

HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER

imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and preserves purity of appearance. Sold everywhere.

JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place.

Straight Hair Made Wavy,

And ornamental by using the

IRVING PATENT HAIR CRIMPERS.

For Sale at Variety Stores. 434-46

Card Pictures, Photographs, &c.

K. W. BENICZKY,

HAVING ENLARGED AND IMPROVED HIS GALLERY, No. 4 Chambers Street, he has increased facilities for making Card Pictures and other Photographs. AT THE LOWEST PRICES. 609

☞ The Great Money-Making Article.

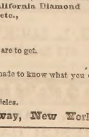
Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $5 a day. Circulars with particulars, will be sent by mail, for 25 cents. Address E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED for the NEW AND ONLY PACKAGE containing Solitaire of a Good Quality, a New Union Song, Story, Game, and the Largest Note Detector and Interest Calculator in the WORLD!! Worth many times the price to every Businessman. Accompanied, to Every Business Man, to every Soldier, to EVERYBODY!!! Call on or send for a free Circular, or 25 cents for a Sample Package, or a few Dollars for a Sample Lot, and be convinced.

J. L. G. PIERPONT,
436 Broadway, N. Y.



Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.

431-36 PIERRE BIBON, 39 Park Row, N. Y.

Watches

FOR THE

ARMY.

"Particularly valuable for officers in the army and travelling."—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 21.

"Prettiest, best and cheapest Illustrated offer I've seen."—N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 16.

"Splendidly finished Watches, the beauty of which is only equalled by their cheapness."—N. Y. Weekly, July 23.

MAGIC TIME OBSERVERS!

THE PERFECTION OF MECHANISM.

BEING A HUNTING OR OPEN FACE OR LADY'S OR GENTLEMAN'S SIZE, ENCASED, WITH PATENT SELF-WINDING IMPROVEMENT,

A MOST PLEASING NOVELTY.

One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepieces for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it, and connected with its machinery, its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The case of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being fine 16-carat gold. It has the appearance of the most heavy movement, and is warranted as accurate timepiece. Price, superbly engraved, case of half dozen, $24. Sample Watches, in neat morocco boxes, $25. By mail the postage is 30 cents registering, 30 cents.

Silver Watches!

FIRST-CLASS HUNTING TIMEPIECE

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL AND ELEGANCE OF FINISH, UNEXCELLED IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES MUST UNSURE

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation as faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of two metals, the outer one first quality Sterling Silver, while the inner one is German Silver, it cannot be surpassed by anything now manufacturing which is not only in appearance, but in durability, the best resemblance of SOLID STERLING SILVER in existence.

The sale of these Watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $25 and upwards. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single pay-day by any one of ordinary business tact.

☞ AT WHOLESALE ONLY! In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, white enamel dial, and very cut hands, to good running order, by mail, free of postage, $2 50; registering, 20 cents. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

☞ TERMS, CASH! INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE! No Agents to be employed. Buyers must deal directly with us. If money is sent us by express or mail in a registered letter, it is at our risk! Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., Bona Importers,
628 169 Broadway and 2 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

EUREKA ☞ 10,000 Agents Wanted for the NEW PRIZE COMBINATION STATIONERY AND NEEDLE PACKAGE. Warranted of the best quality and sold to everybody. Circulars free. Address J. L. G. PIERPONT, 424½ Broadway, New York, care of Miller's Post Office Box, 90.

☞ 8 Card Photographs Only $1.—All different. Sent free by mail. Address J. H. FOUNTAIN, "Photo," Hawley, Pa. 435-7

Royal Havana Lottery.

50 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

Watches Given to All our Agents!
GREAT CHANGE.
READER, delay not one moment, until you send for our New PRIZE STATIONERY PACKAGE Circular, whether you want it or not. It contains important information for everybody. Great inducement offered to Agents.
0000 WEIR & CO., 24 South-Third St., Phila.

A No1 SHIRTS
TO ORDER.
Manufacture Unsurpassed—Fitting Inimitable,
AT
CHAS. L. LOCKWOOD'S,
No. 675 Broadway, N. Y.
P. S.—Self-Measurement sent on application.

HATS!!
D. BEAUDIN,
FRENCH HATTER,
NOW WITH
CHARLES L. LOCKWOOD,
No. 675 Broadway, N. Y.
P. S.—Hats made to Order and sent per Express Directions for Self-Measurement sent on application.
0000

Shults' Unguent—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks or money refunded, sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS Troy, N. Y.

MUNN & COMPANY,
Solicitors of American & Foreign Patents,
AND PUBLISHERS OF THE ILLUSTRATED "SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN," 37 Park Row, New York.
Pamphlets of information about patents FREE.
Specimen copies of the paper FREE.

GOLD FEET!
USE THE ELECTRO METALLIC INSOLES.
They keep the feet warm in the coldest weather.
METTAM & CO., Proprietors,
849 Broadway, New York.
Price $1; prepaid, by mail, $1 30. Send for Circular.

Army Corps Pins in Fine Gold Plate, richly Enamelled and Chased. Newest and most handsome style. Mailed free only $1, by GEO. DEMERIT & CO., Jewellers, 303 Broadway, N. Y. 435-50

GOLD PENS AND CASES.
Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each Pen. Send for a Circular. Pens repointed on receipt of 38 cents.
435-470 E. S. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

STAMMERING
Cured by Bates's Patent Scientific Appliances. For Pamphlets and Drawings describing the case, address C. J. BEALE, 377 West 23d St., N. Y.
o

To Consumptives!
The Advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, etc. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he considers to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.
Parties wishing the prescription will please address
REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
Williamsburg, Kings Co., N. Y.
0000

A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts., MAGNIFYING 500 times, mailed on receipt of price. Sent to all parts of the world. Address F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

Soldiers' Timekeepers.
SPLENDID WATCHES, SILVER AND GOLD-PLATED, Hunting Case and Hunting Cases, $6, $10, $12 and $13. Sent free on receipt of price. Just the Watches for Army wear. Send for our Trade Circular of Watches, Jewelry, etc.
C. H. KIMBERLY & CO.,
Room 52, 229 Broadway,
Cor. Murray St., N. Y.
435-80

Attention of Officers and all members of the Army is called to the New Style Corps Pins in Fine Gold Plate, richly Enamelled and Chased. Mailed free for $1, by GEO. DEMERIT & CO., 303 Broadway, New York. 435-50

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both Sexes—new and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION, each sealed letter containing one of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South-Ninth Street Philadelphia, Pa. o

C. W. FRENCH,
607 Broadway, N. Y.
GENTLEMEN'S FURNISHING GOODS.

A large and complete stock of Men's Furnishing Goods for the fall and winter wear, combining all the novelties of the season as they appear in Paris and London.
FINE SHIRTS
AND COLLARS
MADE TO ORDER.
JUST RECEIVED a large stock of Genuine Shaker-wool Undershirts and Drawers, very fine. Also, a large stock of English Underclothing, warm Gloves, Carriage Blankets, etc. Call and examine our stock.

Handsomest Pin Out.—The New Style Army Corps Pin, in Heavy Gold Plate, Beautifully Enamelled and Chased. Mailed free for only $1, by GEO. DEMERIT & CO., 303 Broadway, N. Y. 435-50

UP TO THE TIKES—BROOKLYN LOYALTY.

An advertisement appeared a week or two since in a Brooklyn newspaper for "A Boarder, a gentleman of decided Union sentiments."

For Veteran, Army Corps, Cavalry and Battle Pins, send to Headquarters,
S. M. WADD & CO., 303 Broadway.
(See Notice inside.
o

GOLD WATCH FREE!
$15 Per Day Easy $15
100,000 men and women wanted to act as Agents in every Town, village and County, to sell our rapid-selling Specialties, and valuable EXTRA LARGE SIZE PRIZE PACKAGES, containing large quantities of STATIONERY, RECIPES, YANKEE NOTIONS, etc. Sells wonderfully. Only Genuine, Largest, Best and Cheapest Article manufactured. Each Package contains Cheaper, or more, articles than any half dozen more real valuable articles than any half dozen others ever sold, such as fine Writing Materials, Fine Paper, Envelopes, Pocket Pencils, Blotters, Knife Sharpeners, Parlor Fashion Plates, Designs for Needlework, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Companions, Camp Companions (for Soldiers), Parlor Amusements, Guide for Letter Writers, Many Ways to Get Rich, Likes as well as Dislikes, Games, Pocket Calendars for the Year, Union Designs, Yankee Notions of all kinds, Recipes, Games, Army Laws and Advice, Rich and Costly Presents of fashionable Jewellery, etc., etc., etc., the whole worth MANY DOLLARS, if bought separately. Price each Package ONLY 25 cents retail. Wholesale rate to Agents very low. 100 to 200 PER CENT. PROFIT ALLOWED. GOOD SETTLERS MADE AGENTS FOR ARMY SAVE. All Soldiers are allowed to Receive and Sell our Goods. A Splendid Gold or Silver Hunting Case Watch, English Movements, and Correct Timepiece, presented Free to all who act as Agents. Send for our New Circulars for 1864, with Extra Premium Inducements. Free.
S. C. HICKARDS & CO., 102 NASSAU ST., New York, the Great Original Cheap Gift Concert and Package House in the World. Beware of imposters using our Circulars.
o

$2 TO $5 PER DAY!—Agents, local and travelling, wanted everywhere, Business honorable. We will prove it or forfeit $500. Sells at sight, large profits, and alike useful to citizen or soldier, man, woman or child. Full particulars free, or box of samples by mail, 31 cents. C. J. HESTON,
435-80 221 Main Street, Hartford, Conn.

The New Bellevue, or perfected STEREOSCOPE, just patented, has a sliding focus and a sliding distance, accommodating all eyes, and is a small, prepaid, for $2 40; with 12 assorted views, $3; by HENRY CHAIS, 333 Broadway, N.Y. Liberal discount to dealers. 4350

Salesmen Wanted.—Salary Paid. Address (with stamp) to Harris Bros., Boston, Mass. 435-470
o

BALLARD PATENT BREECH-LOADING RIFLES.
Carrying the copper water-proof cartridge, and also using ordinary loose ammunition. This arm is now submitted by all competitors to be superior to any other ever offered to the public. Its simple construction and perfect workmanship are a sure guarantee against getting out of order. The great advantage of loading with either kind of loose ammunition also makes it superior to all others. These arms are made for both sporting and military purposes, and have been adopted both by the General Government and a number of States. We have the highest testimonial of their efficacy and durability.
We also offer to the public our new Cartridge and loose ammunition loading reviver. This arm has no equal as a belt or pocket weapon. No one wishing a first-class arm should be without one.
For further particulars send for descriptive circular.
P. S.—Do not forget that both Rifles and Pistols may be used with either copper cartridge or loose ammunition.
MERWIN & BRAY, Sole Agents,
o 362 Broadway, N. Y.

GREAT CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.
We want Agents everywhere to sell the most splendid
STEEL ENGRAVINGS
Ever published. We will furnish them so that a child can sell them. Address
PRIZE STATIONERY PACKETS
With which we give, as Premiums to Agents,
Gold and Silver Watches.
Full particulars in Circular.
Mailed free. Address
G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
o 36 Beekman Street, N. Y.

NEW CORPS PIN.
We can now offer to Officers and all members of the Army our New Style Corps Pin in Fine Gold Plate, richly Chased and Enamelled, with Corps designation in Fine Enamel, inlaid, Colored, to denote the Division, being the neatest, richest and finest Pin ever got up. Mailed free for $1.
GEO. DEMERIT & CO., Jewellers,
435-60 303 Broadway, N. Y.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!
ALL Articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newbern, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS No. 74 Broadway. Rates charged low rates. 4360

To all who wish to make Money!
Send your address to J. W. YALE, Syracuse, N. Y., and you will receive free a sample of YALE'S CELEBRATED FLAG OF OUR UNION AND MILITARY PRIZE STATIONERY ENVELOPE, with Circular. 435-50

WATCHES AND $8. CHAINS. $11.
A Beautiful Engraved GOLD PLATED WATCH AND CHAIN, fine Swiss Movement, handsome dial and hands, warranted a perfect timekeeper, $8.
Engraved SILVER, same as above, chain included, $8.
A very heavy HUNTING CASED SOLID SILVER WATCH, full jewelled and fine English Movement, Silver Capped, warranted a perfect timekeeper, and a handsome GOLD-PLATED CHAIN included, for $11.
We will send, on receipt of the money, one of our Watches and a Chain by mail, postage paid, to any address. These Watches are especially adapted to the Army, being heavily cased and perfect timekeepers, and in running order.
GEORGE A. ELY & CO.,
o 208 Broadway, N. Y.

VINELAND. LANDS. TO ALL WANTING FARMS!
Large and thriving Settlement; mild and healthful climate; 30 miles south of Philadelphia, by railroad. Rich Soil—produces Large Crops, which can now be seen growing; 20 and 50 Acre Tracts from $15 to $20 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings—churches, schools and good society. It's now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The best and cheapest place to land out is unimproved. Letters answered. Papers containing reports and giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland P. O., Cumberland Co., New Jersey.
From Report of Solon Robinson, Ag. Ed. Tribune:
"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position, and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."
435-370

$7 WATCHES. $7
A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED
Gold-Plated Watch,
LEVER CAP,
Small size, English Movements, perfect timekeeper Sent free by mail for only $7. A Solid Silver, same as above, $7.
$15 European Timekeeper. $15
A SUPERB "EXTRA DOUBLE GOLD-PLATED" Hunting Case Watch—Magic Spring—Genuine English Jewelled Movements—Equal Balance—Independent action—Correct Timekeeper—"Warranted one year." Exact imitation of $100 Watch used by English Army Officers, only $15. GENUINE ENGLISH PATENT LEVERS, Full Jewelled, $20. ARMY WATCHES of all descriptions Low. "We sell no poor Swiss Movement Watches." Our customers should beware of imposters who "Copy our Advertisements."
N. Y. Illustrated News says: Messrs Norton & Co., an old and reliable firm, offer a "Correct Timepiece," equal in appearance to $100 Watches, for only $15. We recommend them to our Soldiers in the field.
CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., No. 36 and 46 Ann St., Corner of Nassau, N. Y.
o

WARDS SHIRTS
SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS
Ready-Made or to Measure, at $33, $39, $45 per doz
SELF-MEASUREMENT FOR SHIRTS.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.
FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3, $3 75 and $4 50 each—all cut one yard long. A single Shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 6c cents postage for each shirt.
Send the Size of your Neck also.

STEEL COLLARS
ENAMELLED WHITE,
Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.
To military men and Travellers they are invaluable.
Price $1 each; they post to any part of the Union on the receipt of $1 10.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.
S. W. H. WARD,
No. 387 Broadway, New York.

[A CARD.]
TO PHYSICIANS AND INVALIDS.
The Rev. CHAS. E. KING, formerly Secretary of the London Evangelical Alliance, and recently connected, as resident Minister and Physician, with the Venezuelan Mission, will send GRATIS—FREE OF COST—
the PRESCRIPTION with which he successfully treated, while in charge of the large Mission Hospital, upwards of One Hundred Cases of CONSUMPTION in the first, second and third stages.
The remedy is also a SPECIFIC for the treatment of ASTHMA, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, and all affections of the LUNGS, THROAT and AIR PASSAGES; while it speedily invigorates the enfeebled NERVOUS SYSTEM, and restores the deranged functions of the STOMACH, LIVER and BOWELS. Address, with stamp,
REV. CHARLES E. KING,
Box 3,333 Philadelphia, Pa.
P. S.—Religious papers are earnestly requested to copy.
o

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, CURED and GUARANTEED. Circulars free.
435-470 CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

THE CRAIG MICROSCOPE.

This is the Best and Cheapest Microscope in the World for general use. It magnifies 500 times, or 250,000 times superficies about 100 diameters, or 10,000 times, yet is so simple that a child can use it. It is mailed, prepaid, for $2 25; or with Powerful Reading Glass, for $3; or with 24 objects $5; by HENRY CRAIG,
o 333 Broadway, N. Y.

Soldiers' Special Notice!
Do your duty to yourselves, protect your health, use HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT. Wounds, Sores, Bowel Complaints and Fevers, they are a perfect safeguard against. Directions how to use them accompany each box. Only 25 cents.

Dyspepsia Tablets.
For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by Druggists generally. 50 cents per box, sent free on the receipt of 55 cents. Depot, 207 Centre Street, second floor.
o

A Secret Worth Knowing.—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER without apples or other fruit, in 24 hours. Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

The Beard &c.
IN those cases of scanty, retarded growth, where if the person is over 18, by its remarkably nourishing and stimulating power, the Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla has been found infallible in exciting the dormant energies of the system to a speedy and vigorous growth. The history of this Balsam, with its many simple rules, will be sent sealed, on receipt of return postage.
JOHN RAWLINS, 815 Broadway, N.Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 427—Vol. XVII.] NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 13, 1864. [PRICE 8 CENTS.

POINT ISABEL, TEXAS.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. BOWELL.

SCENES IN THE WAR.—REBEL SOLDIERS AFTER BATTLE "FEELING" (I. E. STRIPPING) THE FALLEN UNION SOLDIERS.—FROM A SKETCH BY AN OFFICER.

Barnum's American Museum.

MONSIEUR JOSEPH, THE GREAT FRENCH GIANT, 8 feet 4 inches; ANNA SWAN, the GIANT GIRL, 8 feet 1 inch; GIANT BOY, 8 feet; LILLIPUTIAN KING, 14 years old, only 22 inches high; Automaton Musical Troupe, Moving Wax Figures, Enormous Serpent, &c., &c. Tom Taylor's great drama, the TICKET-OF-LEAVE MAN, every AFTERNOON AND EVENING. Admission to all, only 25 cents; Children under 10, 15 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album,

Consisting of 23 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both indoor and outdoor costumes, representing Turkish, Jewish, Armenian, Circassian, Egyptian and Druz nationalities, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's Lectures.

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every drawing-room table; and the cheapest and most acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Costs only $3. Sent free, by mail on receipt of the price, by

C. OSCANYAN,
No. 37 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 13, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 72 Duane street, between Broadway and Elm, New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, also FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR OF 1861, by GEORGE P. BEMIS & CO., Proprietors of the London American, 100 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One copy one year	$3 50
Two copies " to one address	5 00
Four " " "	9 00
Magazine and paper one year	5 00

Notice to Advertisers.

The value of our paper as an advertising medium has become so generally known, that we are compelled every week to refuse columns of advertisements. The vast increase of our circulation, penetrating as it does into the most profitable channels, renders our space doubly valuable, and justifies us in the course we have determined upon—that of increasing our rates of advertising in the following ratio:

75 cents a line on the outside or last page
40 " " on the 14th and 15th pages.

Notice to Contributors.

Our paper is beyond all others the journal that offers to the public the greatest number of American tales and poems. Great as are the numbers that constantly reach us, we are always happy to receive tales and poems of merit. If accepted they will be remunerated duly. When declined they are returned without delay.

Contributors will be good enough to write legibly, on one side only of the paper, and give their address distinctly. Comic sketches for engraving, or hints for such illustrations, are also acceptable.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

Gen. Graham made a successful raid up James river, with three transports, landed at a point on the peninsula below Fort Powhattan, captured 29 rebels, as many negroes, five Jewish traders, with large quantities of tobacco, oats, corn and pork.

A detachment of colored troops also brought in a number of prisoners and contrabands from East river.

Gen. Butler has determined so to punish the rebel mail carriers as to put a stop to this business.

Disaffection is breaking out at Richmond, the house of Jefferson Davis was set on fire, but saved; the hospital at Fort Winder was, however, set on fire, and completely destroyed with all its stores.

WESTERN VIRGINIA.

Here, as in other places, deserters come into our lines in great numbers, all reporting general dissatisfaction and a desire to get out of it as soon as possible.

On the 30th a supply train, under Col. Snyder, on their way to Petersburg, was attacked by the rebels, under Gen. Rosser, near Williamsport, but after a stubborn fight Snyder repulsed the enemy, and saved part of his train.

KENTUCKY.

A detachment of 150 men of the 48th Kentucky were attacked at Scottsville by 500 rebels, and finally compelled to surrender. The rebels then burned the Court House, robbed the place and retired.

TENNESSEE.

Longstreet, reinforced from Johnston or or Lee, or both, has assumed the offensive, and again advanced on Knoxville, where a panic at once occurred.

Gen. Sturges and Gen. Parke advanced to Danbridge, but were attacked on the 24th by Hood and Bushrod Johnson, who pressed them so hard that but for a charge of McCook's cavalry at Sevierville they would have been utterly defeated.

Sturges fell back to Knoxville, by way of Strawberry plains, losing heavily in stores and caissons. At the Holston he burned the bridge and quantities of clothing and other stores. Longstreet is at Bull's gap, six miles from Knoxville. Meanwhile much cavalry skirmishing has occurred. Col. Boone, with a force of mounted infantry, attacked and destroyed Col. Culberton's rebel camp.

7,300 deserters from Bragg's army, chiefly natives of Kentucky, have come within our lines since Oct. 20th.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The bombardment of Charleston continues, and all the lower part of the city is deserted.

GEORGIA.

Johnston has fallen back from before Grant, and had already reached Kingston 40 miles south of Dalton, covering his movement by sending detachments of cavalry into Tennessee. It is supposed that he also sent a part of his forces to Longstreet.

ALABAMA.

The rebels announce the occupation by our troops of Horn island, and their gradual approach on Mobile. In the northern part of the State the rebel Roddy, on the 26th, attempted a raid on Athens. He crossed the Tennessee with two brigades, but was engaged with our forces and defeated.

On the 9th a sharp little fight occurred between Fort Morgan and our fleet, the latter endeavoring to destroy the rebel steamer aground on the bar.

MISSISSIPPI.

A fight occurred at Bovina between the rebels and the negroes, in which the rebel papers say several hundred negroes were killed.

NAVAL.

The U. S. barque Roebuck captured the Confederate sloop Marie Louise on the 10th of January, and the English schooner Susan on the 11th. The schooners Fly, William and Minnie were also captured by our cruisers.

CONGRESS.

IN the Senate, on the 25th January, Mr. Hale's resolution, asking for an inquiry into the administration of the Navy Department, was referred to a Select Committee. The Judiciary Committee was discharged from the consideration of the resolutions to expel Mr. Davis.

In the House the bill for bestowing upon distinguished Major-Generals the rank of Lieutenant-General was referred back to the Military Committee.

In the Senate, on the 26th, Bayard of Delaware and Richardson of Illinois took the oath of allegiance, as required. Bayard made a speech in which he announced his intention of resigning his seat at an early day. Wilson's resolution to expel Mr. Davis was then resumed. Howard moved an amendment substituting censure for expulsion. Debate adjourned.

In the House the Confiscation bill was debated. Fernando Wood made a peace speech, and opposed the Government measure.

In the Senate, on the 27th, the debate on the expulsion of Mr. Davis was resumed. Senators Hale, Lane and Fessenden spoke against it as a partisan motion. They did not advocate even censure.

In the House Mr. Allen made a severe attack on Mr. Lincoln—who was defended by Mr. Arnold. The rest of the sitting was mere routine.

In the Senate, on the 28th, the bill for the payment of the claims of citizens of Peru was passed; also the Pension Appropriation bill for the fiscal year. The bill amendatory of the Homestead act was likewise passed. An amendment giving the benefits of the act to persons in the naval service was agreed to. The consideration of Mr. Wilson's resolution to expel Senator Davis, of Kentucky, was then resumed. After some debate Mr. Wilson addressed the Senate on the subject, and on the conclusion of his remarks withdrew the resolution. The bill to encourage enlistments in colored regiments was then taken up, and Mr. Johnson, of Maryland, made a speech against the clause freeing indiscriminately the wives, children and relatives of colored soldiers, as unconstitutional and unjust to loyal masters. When Mr. Johnson had finished the Senate adjourned.

In the House the vote whereby the enrollment bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole was reconsidered, and further consideration of the subject was postponed. The confiscation question was then discussed till the adjournment.

The Senate, on the 29th, did not meet.

In the House the only question of interest was the joint resolution on the French occupation of Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

THE IDLER ABOUT TOWN.

As we claim for New York the title of The Metropolitan City, thereby assuming that it is the metropolis of the United States, we, all of us New Yorkers, should be especially jealous of maintaining its supremacy on all points where a rivalry has arisen in other cities. We do not allude to mere trade and commerce, or wealth, or size, or population; Nature has settled these points so immeasurably in our favor that we fall into and recognise our position as the result of a pre-ordained state of things that was to be. We allude to the great Fair which is to take place shortly for the benefit of that noblest of institutions, the Sanitary Commission. In the West they have done nobly for the cause, though not a cent of money realised has found its way to the parent society here, all having been absorbed by the necessities of the department there. An immense amount was raised in Boston, and will be righteously expended there, to the best interest of the cause. It is now our turn to stand forward publicly in the cause. Much has been done, privately, in this city; hundreds of thousands of dollars and dollars' worth have been contributed by our citizens of all classes, unostentatiously, as the good ever do their works of charity; but the need has greatly increased, and the fund is nearly exhausted. There is, therefore, a great work on hand, and it should be taken hold of in the spirit of determination to carry it through in the most brilliant and successful manner.

It is certain that every one will joyfully assist in so noble a cause. It has nothing to do with politics. Whether it be the Union, the Republican, the Peace or War Democrats, or any other stripe or party, the cause, which is charity, help and comfort to all who are suffering in the general cause, is sacred, and appeals to the humanity and sympathy of each and all. As it is a foregone conclusion that every one will voluntarily give their assistance, the importance of organising the right kind of people to systematise that assistance is manifestly the first consideration. The cause is, of course, the first and strongest point of attraction, but all that can strengthen the means to subserve that cause should occupy the earnest consideration of the Sanitary Commission.

Among the foremost of these subsidiary attractions must be classed artists, operatic, dramatic, vocal, instrumental and the many popular and excellent lecturers. These, and their names are legion, could be used, and their services so systematised that every day and evening a performance could be given whose attractions would add tens of thousands to swell the total amount of the proceeds of the Fair. To accomplish this end, those who are accustomed to deal with artists, those who are constantly in contact with them, who understand their ways and their rules of professional etiquette in reference to artistic positions, should be selected as members of the subcommittees. It is a great mistake, and one that is often made, to entrust such duties to persons in private life, who are outside the cabalistic circle of artist-life, who know nothing of their prejudices, and are utterly ignorant of the grades of art, the knowledge of which can alone secure the advantageous and harmonious use of the many in reference to each other and the benefit of the cause. We throw out these hints to the Commission, in the spirit of prophecy and warning, in the hope that they will see the necessity of such an arrangement, and because we wish with all our heart that the great Fair may be great in its conduct and grand in its results.

The Academy of Music, the leviathan among the amusement temples of the city, once more resounds to the dulcet tones of the sweet-voiced Italians. Fashion has once more a vent to its luxurious aspirations, and the Goddess of Taste is once more invoked for her most exquisite and expensive inspirations. Maretzek has returned, flushed with the most brilliant success, and flush with the greenbacks extracted from the plethoric pockets of the modern Athenians. The artists are equally jubilant, for they have been petted and caressed by the spokes of that great "hub of creation," Boston, and are just in the cue to do their best for the first public which recognised their excellence, and which, though they let them go away now and then, is their only reliable support. The present season will consist of 16 nights, but we expect that the success will be so decided that a new season of at least double that number of nights will be commenced at its termination.

There are several concerts of interest announced for this and the ensuing week. The first is given on Saturday evening, Feb. 6th, at Irving Hall, by Mdlle. Pauline Canissa, assisted by several eminent artists. The lady is spoken of very highly. The second is given by Master Emil Mollenhauer, on Monday evening, Feb. 8th, at Niblo's Saloon. The young artist is only eight years old, and is an extraordinary performer for his age. He will be assisted by Madame Marie Abbot, Mr. Geo. Lingard, Mr. J. N. Pattison, Mr. F. Mollenhauer, Mr. Wedemeyer, Mr. Carmiencke and Mr. J. N. Abbot, conductor. On the same evening, Monday, Feb. 8th, at Dodworth's Hall, Mr. Alfred H. Pease will make his debut in America. He is by birth an American, and has just returned from Europe, where he has studied for some years, with such success that he stands as a pianist among the first performers of the age. We have not heard him yet, but we are satisfied, from authority on which we think we can rely, that he is an artist of whom Americans may well be proud. We trust he will have a large audience to welcome him.

The Harrison English Opera Company will resume their performances here, at Niblo's Saloon, this week, with the beautiful opera of "Maritana." The operatic performances will be continued at the Park Theatre, Brooklyn, from two to four nights per week, according to the patronage accorded by the Brooklynites. The dramatic company of this theatre has been broken up in consequence of the utter want of success of the undertaking, notwithstanding the excellent style in which everything was produced, and despite of the fact that the Park is the only theatre which the city of Brooklyn, with its three or four hundred thousand inhabitants, boasts of and—neglects. Mr. Harrison, while deploring the necessity which compels him to discharge his dramatic company in the dead of winter, with but little chance of getting other engagements, gives the denizens of Henry Ward Beecher's city the following gentle but well-deserved philippic: "In the opinion of the manager, this sad result is not because Brooklyn has not enough of theatre-going public, but simply from the fact that the largest proportion of such a class have got New York on the brain, and in almost every branch of business and amusements pass by better things in Brooklyn to obtain worse in New York; and until Brooklyn takes a higher interest in her own institutions and establishes something to her credit, she will never be looked upon as a great city."

Gottschalk has returned to the city, and expects in less than a week to be sufficiently "thawed out" to feel sensation in the tips of his fingers. If he should succeed in warming up, it is possible he may indulge us with a few of his brilliant concerts at Irving Hall. It is said, by-the-bye, that his English Operetta is very nearly completed.

There is also a rumor, which we believe amounts to a fact, that Robert Stoepel, the composer of one of the most beautiful cantatas extant, to wit, "Hiawatha," is hard at work upon a new opera, and that when completed it will be produced by the Harrison Opera Company.

Herr Grau's Opera Company has met with good success in Albany and Buffalo, and will shortly appear in Cleveland, Detroit and Chicago. Report speaks very highly both of the management and the company.

In a few weeks we may look for Vestvali once again. She has met with the most gratifying success wherever she has appeared, and in her new characters the critics say that she is far greater than in her first rôle of Gamea.

The city of St. Louis, being the possessor of the largest hotel in America, intends to own the largest and most magnificent opera-house in the country. Its arrangements will seat two thousand five hundred people, and will accommodate about a thousand standees. Imagine the New York Legislature doing anything for art! The idea is so preposterous that any one who suggested it would be deemed a fit subject for sanitary care. And yet the Legislature of Missouri (they must be all lunatics there!) has dared to brave the ridicule of practical and disinterested lawmakers, by a vote donating $300,000 towards assisting the enterprise! Oh! wise men of Missouri, how could you do it? The necessary amount to complete the undertaking—$500,000—is to be subscribed by the citizens of St. Louis, and of that amount $300,000 have already been subscribed.

Edwin Forrest commenced a three weeks' engagement at the Boston Theatre, on Monday, Feb. 1st. The off nights will be devoted to Mr. Bandmann, who will produce "Narcisse" as his leading attraction.

Our theatres here are running the same pieces as last week. There is no need of change, for they are all crowded night after night. Wallack's, Winter Garden and the Olympic are on that tide of success which leads on to fortune.

Barnum's four giants and their antipodes, the Lilliputian King, still continue to attract their crowds of astonished admirers. The idea of a six-foot man walking under the arms of those human wonders makes a five-feet-eight fellow feel particularly small But so it is. The deeply interesting drama "Camilla's Husband," will only be played during this week; it will then be withdrawn to make way for a new drama which is said to be the most exciting piece produced for many years. The other extraordinary attractions of the Museum remain unchanged.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The citizens of Hoboken, on the 28th Jan., held a mass meeting on the subject of ferry accommodations. Mr. Stevens, the owner of the ferries, sent them a letter explaining that the Government had taken two of his boats, and that he was now building larger and better boats to replace them. The meeting, however, adopted resolutions expressive of their indignation at the insufficient accommodations afforded them, and appointed a committee to see to it that a reform is speedily brought about.

—— Gen. Viele has gained a verdict of $8,000 for services in laying out the Central Park.

—— The Lelands gave their annual ball on the 28th Jan., at the Metropolitan Hotel. It was a brilliant success, numbering among the guests the most eminent names in fashion, wealth, rank and intellect.

—— A drunken soldier, who was arrested at Providence, R. I., one day last week, was found to have in his overcoat pocket bona-fide certificates of 30,000 shares, worth $3,000,000, in a silver mining company. As he knew nothing about them, it is supposed that they were put in his pocket by the thief who stole them from the office, when he found they couldn't be turned into cash without leading to his detection.

—— Since Col. Nugent has presided at Lafayette Hall the enlistments have very much increased; the soldiers receive their full bounty, and those pests, runners and recruiting agents, are banished from the precincts. Under the former management many enormities were committed.

—— According to the City Inspector's report, there were 526 deaths in the city during the past week—a decrease of 51 as compared with the mortality of the week previous, and 56 more than occurred during the corresponding week last year. The recapitulation table gives 3 deaths of alcoholism; 4 of diseases of the bones, joints, etc.; 84 of the brain and nerves; 12 of the generative organs; 18 of the heart and blood-vessels; 211 of the lungs, throat, etc.; 8 of old age; 42 of diseases of the skin and eruptive fevers; 6 premature births; 57 of diseases of the stomach, bowels and other digestive organs; 57 of uncertain seat and general fevers; 9 of diseases of the urinary organs; and 15 from violent causes. There were 345 natives of the United States, 118 of Ireland, 16 of England, 29 of Germany, 4 of Scotland and the balance of various foreign countries.

—— According to the annual report of the Superintendent of Lamps and Gas, the total number of public lamps in use in this city on the 31st December last was 16,117, of which 9,878 are lighted by the Manhattan Gas Company, 3,091 by the Harlem Gaslight Company and 3,178 by the New York Gaslight Company. The total cost of all these is $435 323 or nearly $500,000. It would be an interesting fact to know how much the lighting of our private dwellings, stores and places of amusement costs, in connection with the expense of public illumination.

—— At the fire, the other night, in Christie street, Ponsonby, late a member of the Hawkins's Zouaves, most heroically saved the lives of four persons.

—— On the 27th Jan. an explosion took place at a store in Maiden lane, which resulted in the death of Paul Hoffman, and the fatal injury of Mr. Pluck, his fellow-salesman. The cause of the accident was some new toy pistols, which were let off with detonating powder, falling on the floor, and consequently exploding. The unfortunate youth had that day completed his 20th year, and was on the point of joining a festive party at his father and mother's house.

Western.—In a suit at Louisville, against the Adams Express Company, to recover money seized by John Morgan, it was decided that guerillas are common enemies, and as such, common carriers are not responsible for goods seized by them.

—— Since October last, 9,000 men have volunteered in Ohio, and 12,000 veterans in Ohio regiments, who are counted on the State's quota (29,000), have reenlisted. There are thus 8,000 more men required to clear the State of a draft. A vigorous effort, it is believed, will bring the needed number before the 1st of March.

—— Brig.-Gen. John M. Corse has been relieved from duty in the Army of Tennessee, and assigned to the command of the department for drafted men at Springfield, Illinois. Gen. Corse was badly wounded at Missionary Ridge.

—— A dispatch received at Cincinnati, from Bridgeport, Ala., represents that desertions from the rebel army continue unusually large.

—— Gen. Gantt, of Arkansas, wrote to a meeting assembled in Cincinnati, on Thursday last, that in "four months Arkansas will resume her relations with the National Government, under a constitution excluding for ever negro slavery from her soil."

—— Judging from the tone of the Western papers, Gen. McClellan has lost the popularity he had, and Gen. Grant is undoubtedly the favorite.

—— The restrictions placed on the trade of Missouri and Kentucky have been removed. A pretty good proof that the Government consider them perfectly restored to the Union.

Col. Cobb, of Wisconsin, has presented to the House of Representatives two memorials asking for the impeachment of Judge Miller, of that State. The matter will be investigated by the Judiciary Committee.

—— The lower House of the Kansas Legislature has passed an amendment making St. Joseph's, Mo., the terminus of the Pacific railroad.

—— The great Slievegammon Fenian Brotherhood are to hold a grand fair in Chicago, in Easter week, to raise money for the invasion of England. Donations are requested. So says the World.

—— The Nashville Union says that President Lincoln has sent to Gov. Johnson a large number of copies of the oath of amnesty, bound in volumes for preservation, together with the necessary certificates to be issued after it has been taken by the voter. These have been received by the Governor, and of course the work of administering the oath will begin immediately.

—— A dispatch from Louisville, Jan. 28, announces the probable election of Gov. Bramlette, of Kentucky, to the United States Senate, to succeed Powell, Democrat.

—— The trial of Charles Noyes, one of the parties implicated in the robbery of the United States Express Company of $60,000, last August, has just ended at St. Louis. The evidence was clear and conclusive against him, and the jury, after an absence of only 20 minutes, returned with a verdict of guilty. The prisoner was sentenced to imprisonment in the Penitentiary for a term of ten years.

Military.—Considerable dissatisfaction has been expressed at the shabby manner in which the returning regiments have been received. The New York Herald explains it by affirming that there is already over a debt of $7,000 for music, great part of which is due to Dodworth's band. The Governor ought to see that the brave fellows had a word of cheer.

—— The Hartford Post says that a letter has been received in that city from Washington by a prominent military gentleman, which says there will be more troops called for after the 1st of March, certain. Although many of the old regiments are re-enlisting, their number has been so reduced that a call for fresh troops will be made.

—— We have received the report of L. L. Doty Esq., Chief of the State Bureau of Military Statistics. It is a concise and interesting document, full of facts concerning the efforts which the State of New York has made to aid the Government in suppressing the rebellion. The State furnished 290,602 men between April 19, 1861, and Dec. 31, 1863. Of this number 250,241 were mustered for three years; 30,131 for two years; 2,510 for nine months; 24,963 for three months. Reduced to a common term, the State has furnished the equivalent of 253,949 three years' men. The amount of bounties appropriated from the outbreak of the war to Jan. 1, 1864, is: By Boards of supervisors, exclusive of action by towns, $16,963,753 91; by Common Councils, $6,780,000; by the Legislature, $12,262,496. The total amount paid to same date is $32,227,253 88.

— The Boston Courier says that every recruit obtained for New York by the Conscription law costs the nation $1,000.

— Gen. Longstreet having objected to the circulation of Proclamation proclamations, except through his hands, Gen. Foster sent him twenty copies for distribution. The desertions from the rebel ranks have been so numerous lately, that Gen. Longstreet has personally collected officers to command the guard. One night last week 147 rebels came over in one batch. Starvation and dread of engagements are said to be the reasons.

— The considerable anxiety exists in military circles as to the result of the operations in East Tennessee. It is now said that Gen. Joe Johnston's rebel brother-in-law joined Longstreet, and we should not be surprised to hear at any minute of a serious battle in that quarter.

Naval.—A very curious correspondence has been brought to light by the arrest of Mr. Stuart Gowdy, of the Treasury Department, in whose possession it was found. It shows a very complicated but well-planned arrangement between Messrs. Gwynne, J. H. Griffith, Gen. Hunt and others, who, with reference to the construction of gunboats, and so forth, for the New Republic Navy.

— The new Navy overcoat, as adopted by U. S. Navy Department, Dec. 24, 1863, as we are informed by Messrs. Tomes, Son & Melvain, Maiden Lane, New York, is for officers in a civilian overcoat, enclosed of blue beaver or pilot cloth, lined throughout with blue flannel; skirt to extend 4 inches below the knee; cape to be 10 inches shorter; to be double-breasted, pockets in side seams; sleeves to be cut open at the end; cape made so as to remove easily at pleasure, and provided with an extra cloth cape to detach and wear for a separate garment. On each end of the collar of the overcoat shall be worn, by Commodore, one silver star; Captain, silver eagle; Commander, one silver leaf; Lieutenant-Commander, a leaf and silver star; Lieutenant, two leaves; Master, a gold loaf; Lieutenant, a gold loaf and one silver leaf; Ensign, a small gold cord on the front edge of the collar. Staff officers to wear the same as the rank of the officers to the staff. Officers of assimilated rank to wear the same designations. The overcoats of medical officers to be plain.

Personal.—Messrs. Joyce and Richardson, who were Union men in Baltimore in 1861, and were driven for their disloyal articles in the Baltimore Republican, have been appointed to the city. They are having rooms here without permission of the authorities. They ran the paper here by way of Nova Scotia and N. Y. They have been sent to Gen. Lockwood. They were on their way to Baltimore.

— Frederick Peel, the second son of the late Sir Robert Peel, has just delivered a lecture in England upon America, in which he proves by his own figures to his own satisfaction, that the United States is a perfect Paradise for the Union in restored order. He is the most perfect bit of red tape living.

— Wallace has written a letter to the Daily News of London, denying in the most indignant terms any complicity of the rebels, or knowledge of the event, to assassinate Louis Napoleon. He acknowledges to having a slight acquaintance with Greco, one of the conspirators, but it was nearly a year ago.

— George Jones, generally called Count Joannes, is an Englishman by birth. His title is genuine, having been bestowed upon him by the late King of Prussia. He is a well-educated man, rather too proud of his nobility.

Obituary.—J. B. Clay, son of the famous Henry Clay, died at Montreal last week, in his 37th year. A biographical portrait will be published in our next.

Accidents and Offences.—The Depot of the Camden and Amboy Railway Company in Jersey City was entirely destroyed by fire at six o'clock this morning. The freight cars are a total wreck. Government has three emigrant cars, one hospital car, two cars filled with hay and sheep, and a baggage car with, together with a steam fire-engine waiting transportation to New York for repairs, were destroyed.

— On the morning of the 20th of January a colored woman named Ell Brown shot a colored woman Mary Sharply, in her room in Sullivan street, from the effects of which she fell dead. Jealousy the cause.

— On the 27th January Mr. Haines shot Mr. Williams, the well-known shipmaster, for having invegigle his wife away some four years ago. The man was evidently in a morbid state.

— Mr. McKinley, whose connection with Mrs. Cora Hatch has been a peculiar scene some two Sundays ago, has had his son arrested for the disturbance. The developments were most curious and edifying.

— Some nights since two young men, who gave their names as Wadsworth and Hoswell, got into a house in Irving place, by a trick, and robbed it of the room silver and a dress. Two young ladies out of their beds and outrage them. Their screams brought the watchmen, the owner of the house, to their rescue. He severely punished the ruffians, who were arrested and taken to the police head-quarters.

Foreign.—The official annual return of the number, class, armament, state, and every particular regarding the steam and sailing ships composing the British Navy, is published in the list. The total strength of the effective ships of the navy was 926 of all classes, including a number doing duty on the various harbors at home and abroad, the whole of which would be assembly exercised into battle-ships for the defence of the coast, together with a number one feet of iron and wooden construction, laid up at Chatham. Of this number there are 72 vessels rank-ing as first-class battle ships, each mounting from 91 to 121 guns; 42 vessels of from 60 to 78 guns each; 22 screw steamers and other ships, armament of from 22 to 46 guns each, and the mag nity of which are of tonnage and equivalent to that of the battle ships; 23 screw corvettes, each carrying 24 guns, and 20 vessels of all sizes, from sloops to ships of great power and tonnage, carrying an armament from 4 guns to 16 guns each. Exclusive of the above, there is a squadron of 185 screw gunboats, each mounting one swivelling armstrong gun. The total tonnage of all classes in commission and serving in squadrons of the coast is upward of 300,000 tons. Number being attached to the reserve squadrons at various naval ports, and partially equipped in readiness to proceed to sea whenever their services may be required.

— Seventh had issued a Proclamation to the Hungarians which had created considerable excitement.

— Honay, the notorious spiritualist, had been ordered to leave Genoa.

— A conspiracy against the life of Napoleon had been discovered in Paris, and numerous arrests had taken place.

— An address to Louis Napoleon had been presented by the Corps Legislatif, in which the necessity of peace was urged to the strongest terms.

— The Queen of Exchequer had refused a new trial in the matter of the suspected rebel pirate Alexander. This may be considered as decided in favor of the rebels, but as the Attorney-General was going to carry the question into the higher courts, and finally, if necessary, to the House of Lords, the decision will have no practical effect.

— The Princess of Wales gave birth to a son on the 8th January. The accouchement of the Princess was so unexpected that she was on the ice on the afternoon of the day she was confined. We learn from the London Times that the nearly arrived Prince enjoyed the utmost health and vigor throughout her child. This event has given the greatest satisfaction to the English people.

— The imagined attitude of the German people is compelling Austria and Prussia to temporize in the matter of Schleswig and Holstein. Both these powers had wanted the smaller ones from taking immediate steps in the matter. It is said that Denmark was secretly encouraging the Germanic federates to protect the Schleswigers.

— The London Saturday Review censures Macbeth at Sadler's Wells for producing Mr. Marston's beautiful tribute to the late Robert G. Shaw, who fell before Charleston.

— The Prince of Wales is erecting a private theatre at Sandringham, where plays are to be acted by amateurs. The scheme has not taken well.

— The Duc de Morny has just purchased for 2,000 Napoleons a millinery shop called "Cupid and Psyche." At the same sale a Rembrandt was sold for 30,000f.

— The Revue et Gazette Musicale of Paris, announces, authoritatively, that the "Africaine" the opera expected new opera of Meyerbeer will be produced in October, 1864.

— From Japan the last news is that the bombardment of Kagoshima had evidently terrified the Daimios, since the Prince of Satsuma had agreed to pay £100,000 as indemnity for the Richardson murder, and also to punish the murderers if he can find them.

Chit-Chat.—One of the pleasant practices of Philadelphia is the publishing of ballads upon persons whose names may have at any time figured. We give a verse from the last of these jeux d'esprit:

Mr. Lippincott's a man of deep thought,
He puts them up when bad, sir)
He rips 'em up when he's got 'em,
As though it had been mad, sir!
And as he stands in the Row
In spite of all he preaches,
His coat is cut in the fashion
A decent pair of breeches.

— Mr. Dow, Jr., is dead. Requiescat in pace, Mr. Dow.

— Thomas Francis Meagher, in his funeral oration on Gen. Corcoran, before the Fenian Brotherhood, in Jersey City, declared that "Keep it the green, green sod, in that land with all its familiar graves, is the duty of the Irish race, and the rights and influences about him, did he wish and pray, and ask for nothing else." The members of the Fenian Brotherhood, Irishmen all, see to it that his wish, prayer, his legacy is carried out to the letter. In the meantime let him rest in the soil that is consecrated to the memory of those who died for the New Republic he so nobly served, and within sight of the flag which floated over the ramparts of the Capitol and him when living, and where his name will never be forgotten by any of those who love the cause of Montgomery and Thomas Addis Emmet are gratefully remembered.

— We are beginning to understand and practise physical education: still appended is a French anecdote illustrative of the system. Mrs. Hawley Gymnasium, 59 West 13th street, is one of the most complete establishments of the kind extant. It is under the supervision of her brother, Mr. Robinson, who has had a long experience in the art of the. His experience as a soldier, having been a captain in the 44th regt. N. Y. volunteers, and his skill as a teacher will prove invaluable.

— Napoleon has just got to a new use in Australia. At Wagga Wagga the telegraph wire broke, and there was no material on hand with which to mend for repairing it, a lady lost kindly her crinoline, which being discovered and used to do the electric wire together, enabled the operators to use the line.

— Punch in the last number has some clean over to the North, side of the Atlantic:

TRUE TO INSTINCT.
The "Times" has put forth its mouth
Praise Jeff. Davis and the South
For all things good,
Our Orangemen were not so wrong
When, in '61, they cried, "Down, down,
Linked "Popery and Slavery."

NEW CHEMICAL AGENT IN WARFARE.

CHLORIDE of nitrogen will, it is said, soon be established as a substitute for gunpowder. Engineers would seem likely to put an end to all war. Mr. Isham Baggs, an English chemist, in announcing his discovery, proposes to employ the substance in balloons, and drop it from the air in the midst of armies and fortresses. "The very mention of this compound," he goes on to say, "will cause a panic in modern warfare, may possibly provoke a similar discovery, and thus render war, which has secretly plished among their number would scarcely dare to encounter the risk. Battalions would form a cross of mustard seed, and even then at a respectful distance, and under guard at the moment of the detonation. And yet not one of those chemists will be bold enough to divulge the secret. The most terrible explosive agent of this terrible compound present in city or fortress, by a mere stroke of the electric wire, and no human us or a single drop of olive oil coming in contact with the world, in one instant, would be the ruin of the place and its inhabitants." Mr. Baggs then proceeds to explain that his discovery consists in compressing the contingent diffusibles, and that he is able to manufacture the chloride of nitrogen in safety, and used in any required quantity, and that it can be safely conveyed to its destination.

A FORTUNE IN A WOODEN LEG.—The Journal de St. Nazaire tells the following strange story: "Last week a man, about 70 years of age, a bookkeeper in a commercial house here, died suddenly from natural causes, and was buried on Sunday. A few days after, his sister, who resides at Nantes, came to this town to claim the little property which were left by her brother. Among the three wooden legs, the contents of some years before. Having disposed of such articles as she did not want, she was about to burn which were wooden legs in question, the sister examined her brother's property more minutely, and discovered that among them a letter, dated two years back, containing the following words: "In the left wooden leg, number two wooden leg, and my papers, a sum of 3,000 francs will be found." She immediately drew the attention of the Commissary of Police, who accompanied her to the residence of the deceased. The wooden legs were then mounted with leather or costumed anything. It was in the left wooden leg that the money was found, and in the wooden leg buried with the deceased. Permission having been obtained from the Commissary, the leg was disinterred, and a sum of 1,000 francs in gold was found ingeniously concealed in the cavities of the wood. As two years had elapsed since the note was written, it was probable that the deceased during that interval had either spent the money or deposited it elsewhere."

TONNAGE DISPLACEMENT.—It is calculated that an iron ship of 1,000 tons internal measurement will carry a dead-weight cargo of 1,800 tons, which, added to the weight of the ship, 778 tons, gives a displacement of 2,578 tons. A wooden ship of the same tonnage will carry 1,400 tons dead-weight, displacing 2,378 tons. This displacement, reduced by the weight of the ship itself, leaves a dead-weight capacity of 1,478 tons, being within 3 per cent. of the cargo of the iron ship.

WOULD YOU BE YOUNG AGAIN?

Would you be young again?
So would not I—
One tear to memory given,
Onward I'd hie,
Life's dark cloud could not o'ercast,
All but at rest on shore—
Say, would you plunge once more,
With home so nigh?

If you might, would you now
Retrace your way?
Wander through stormy wilds,
Faint and astray?
Night's gloomy watches fled,
Morning's lone warning red,
Hope's smiles around us shed,
Heavenward—nay.

Where, then, are those dear ones,
Our joy and delight?
Dear as most dear, though now
Hidden from sight?
Where they rejoice to be,
There is but one to be
Fly, time—fly speedily!
Come life and light!

HOW SHE DID IT.

A Tale of Legislation.

By Theodore C. Wilson.

THE course of life of an attaché to a popular daily newspaper is not only replete with the curious and interesting, but often, when he is called upon to report from abroad or a distance, marked with the decidedly adventurous.

Peter Pepperthorn was one of these attachés, and when, during the session of the Representatives of the XXXIV Th Congress was often sought after by shrewd politicians and grave legislators to publish "important information."

It was on one occasion that a short bill with a brief title came before the House. It was a special act, and had reference to a private claim. An attempt was made to suspend the rules and pass it at once, notwithstanding it authorized an appropriation of money, and should therefore be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, if only for this latter consideration. The motion to suspend the rules failed, and the bill took the regular course.

That evening, as Peter was walking down Pennsylvania avenue, he met the gentleman from ——, who had offered the bill.

"Ah! Mr. ——, good evening," said the representative, as he shook the other's hand warmly. "I am pleased to see you."

"I feel, sincerely, you that I fully reciprocate the feeling," said the reporter with a cheerful smile and winsome look.

"What do you think of that little claim which I put in this afternoon?"

"Really, I have been so engaged with Mr. So-and-So's bill, that I have been totally unable, up to this time, to attend to anything else."

"You will mention it in to-morrow's paper?"

"My dispatches are already very long."

"That's true, but I've yet put in a few words?"

"I will try to do so."

"But will not promise me that you will?"

"I cannot."

"I will pay all the expenses and make you a present beside."

"If you were to offer me a thousand dollars I should refuse it."

"Well, indeed! that is more than I ever thought a reporter would do. But before you go, you will promise me to do all you can to get it in."

Peter promised accordingly, but the arrival of next day's paper showed that the bill had not been mentioned.

According to the course of legislation, the bill remained for a long time unacted upon.

Two days after the conversation given above our veritable reporter was introduced to the legislator's daughter, by her father, as all three happened to meet in the same locality in the ladies' gallery of the House of Representatives.

The lady remarked that she had just come to Washington for the first time, and was desirous of beholding the wonders of the city, besides the "old" Senators and "pious" M. C's.

Her father remarked that he must go down on the floor for a while, but would do it better if Peter would remain with her.

We will tell so many curious incidents and interesting tales of the "halls" of Congress? As for the lady, she made herself perfectly agreeable, talked, laughed and chatted, as though it "came natural," which no doubt it did. She was a pretty girl, with bright eyes and intelligent looks, and a mode of behavior that was both graceful and elegant.

Peter could make himself very agreeable when it was necessary to do so. You may be sure he did not fall of this performance on the present occasion.

Some were in the habit of saying that Peter was cold, grave and reserved; others, that he was gay, courteous and intelligent; and others again, that he was both careless and indifferent, according to the manner in which he had treated them, or the natural or prejudiced reasons which influenced their judgments, and began to their dislikes. But that as it may, Peter's conversation and course of action evidently pleased the young lady, for when they parted she made him promise that he would be sure to visit her at the National Hotel.

For several days after this Peter's whole time was consumed in attending to business. Night and day he was kept on the qui vive, and when, as the small hours came in their course, he laid himself down to sleep, he gave his whole attention to this "business," that he might gain the most "refreshing benefit," in the least possible space of time.

As he got up one morning from one of these delightful "dozes," the servant handed him a letter. It contained an extract from the ——, denouncing the claim-bill referred to in the most unmeasured terms. Accompanying the extract was a note, requesting that "your kind friend" would publish the obnoxious article, and it all on Mr. ——, who had offered the bill, for any facts that might be wanted in the premises. The letter and its contents put Peter in a state of astonishment. "Things to be looked after hereafter," and left there to be perhaps committed to the flames at no distant day, was added to a bundle of the "miscellaneous" to New York.

That same morning, as Peter took his seat in the reporter's gallery of the House, he received a card, enclosed in a small envelope, on which was written the following:

"Miss —— would be pleased to see Peter Pepperthorn, Esq., Cor. —— at her father's room, No. —, National Hotel, at seven o'clock this evening."

"What has led her to send me this card of invitation?" thought Peter, as he put it carefully away in his vest pocket. "Can it be that I have won her?"

Well, what Peter thought I will be neither ungenerous nor indiscreet enough to detail. Let it suffice that he attended the party.

He called, as invited. The interview was a very pleasant one. Ma and pa left Peter and the daughter to their own amusements, and after both had partaken of a light supper together, Peter bore and wrote a long contradiction to the "unjust" reflections upon the bill, and which contradiction was published in full.

When the paper came to hand containing the contradiction, pa, ma and "baby" (for such was a name by which the youngest grown female parent applied to the young lady in question) were delighted. They seemed so grateful that they thanked Peter over and over again, until at the reporter though he had done the an inestimable service, and looked upon himself as one of the very dear friends of the family. He called every other time, and each succeeding interview made him more and more intimate with Miss ——. He almost learned to love her. When they sat in the streets they walked arm-in-arm. When they went to the theatre to the theatre and to private suppers, and praised and condemned as her companion did, whether the subject was worthy of it or not, according to her pleasure. So infatuated did Peter become with the fair one, that he thought he could never say too much in the paper about the claim bill. This bill he studied whenever opportunity offered. At last, when the bill did come before the house, it was passed without opposition, and a few members who had heard just the claim was, and how of a rightful necessity it was but proper they should allow it.

The next day, in the report of the bill, Miss ——, the gay, lively, intelligent, lovable woman was non est inventa.

When Peter inquired of the honorable gentleman, with whose daughter his was, Mr. —— innocent-like, said she had just left that morning for her home in the ——.

Peter was about to cast that part of the body near which his heart ought to be, and felt what can better be imagined than expressed in words.

He afterward learned that Mr. ——, the honorable gentleman from the great State of —— had "the obnoxious article" inserted in "that newspaper" to which Peter is attached, and had thus bring out the other side of the question in a paper that did circulate in all parts of the country.

Peter, of course, never more any other matters than above one, but has ever remained distrustful of the gay and fascinating daughters of "honorable" M. C.'s.

GEORGIA COLONELS.

In the Mexican war Georgia thought she would raise a regiment, and she did—but every man in the regiment was a Colonel. They bossed everything and would have to decide who should have command, and started to reinforce Scott. Previous to marching they consulted a map to see how to get there, and found that they had to march with his "left foot forward." So what did the precious regiment of Colonels but go shuffling all the way from Georgia to Mexico, shoving the left foot forward and dragging the right one after it!

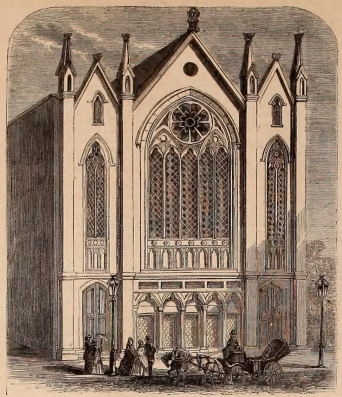
For a long time the Colonels were the pride of the plantations of the State afforded.

"Parade" was a common thing by brigades, when he saw a tremendous cloud of dust in the distance, which showed that Colonel Jones' regiment was coming with banners. Ordering his batteries into position, he awaited the approach of the enemy, but his staff was to see what the matter was.

"Why, Colonel Jones, you, where did you come from, and where are you going to?" he shouted, as the Colonel rode up to his command.

"Georgia regiment of Georgia Colonels, General," the commander answered, and the whole column struck up a tune that set all the war horses dancing, "and going to join General Winfield Scott."

"But what are you marching in that fashion and where?" asked the old veteran, as the column struck up in thundering and wondering tones.



"Why, General," returned the commander, gaily, flourishing the open pages of the book in the air, "Hardee's Tactics, left foot foremost, General."

"And 'till be blessed, gentlemen," said the old General, in telling the story, "if the whole regiment of Georgia Colonels hadn't marched all the way from Georgia to Vera Cruz with their left feet foremost, kicking up the raggedest dust you ever did see."

"LET me collect myself," as the man said when he was blown up by a powder mill.

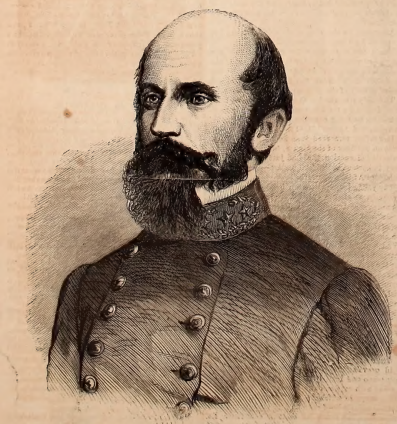
REV. O. B. FROTHINGHAM, PASTOR OF THE THIRD CONGREGATIONAL UNITARIAN CHURCH, N. Y.

THE THIRD CONGREGATIONAL UNITARIAN SOCIETY'S CHURCH, WEST FORTIETH STREET, NEW YORK.

LIEUT. BRAINE, THE PIRATE WHO SEIZED THE CHESAPEAKE. FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BERRY.

BRIG.-GEN. ALFRED PLEASANTON, U. S. A.,

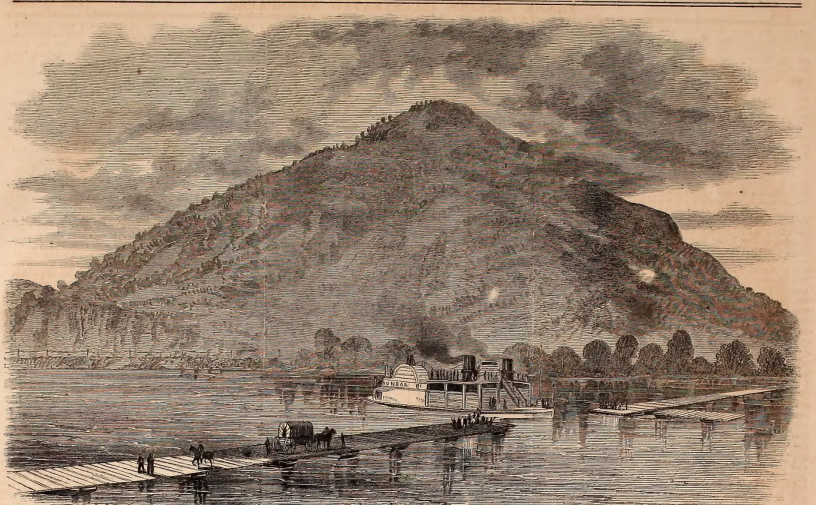
WAS born in Washington, D. C., in January, 1824, and entered the Military Academy in 1840. On graduating, in 1844, he was made Brevet Second Lieutenant in the 1st Dragoons, and won a brevet of First Lieutenant for gallantry and meritorious conduct at the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma, in the latter of which he made a splendid charge on the Mexican batteries, giving promise of a great cavalry officer. In 1849 he was sent to California, with the rank of First Lieutenant. He afterwards served in New Mexico and Texas, and in 1854 was ordered to Fort Leavenworth. In 1855 he was made Captain, and attached to the staff of Gen. Harney, first as Assistant Adjutant-General, accompanying him in the Sioux expedition, and then as Adjutant-General, in the Semi-ole campaign, from 1856 to 1860, as well as in his operations in Kansas, Oregon and Washington territories. In March, 1861, he was ordered to Utah, but was recalled in the fall of that year, and in February, 1862, appointed Major of the 2d cavalry, which he had commanded for some months. He served through McClellan's peninsular campaign with the Army of the Potomac, and on July 16th, 1862, was made Brigadier-General, taking command of Sumner's brigade. On the return of the Army of the Potomac he was actively employed, and has since been connected with the brilliant cavalry operations of the war. His ability is so well recognised that he has been spoken of as likely to succeed to the command of the Army of the Potomac.



CATHOLIC CHURCH AT OPELOUSAS, LA.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. BONWILL.

CATHOLIC CHURCH AT OPELOUSAS.

THE quaint old church at Opelousas, on the beautiful Teche, amid the lands of the descendants of the hapless Acadians, was erected some 80 years since by the Capuchin Friars, who then administered to the religious wants of the settlers. Founded when Louisiana was a Spanish colony, it has seen the banners of Spain, France, the United States and rebellion floating over it. It is at present under the pastoral care of the Rev. Messrs. Raymond, two brothers, natives of France. Near it stands the Convent of the Immaculate Conception, an Ursuline establishment, the nuns directing St. Mary's Academy, in other times a prosperous institution. But the visitation of armies has impoverished the land and many proprietors have fled.



IT is not so pleasant for nations to mingle their blood in battle as by intermarriages.

GEN. R. S. EWELL, OF THE REBEL ARMY.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.

BRIG.-GEN. ALFRED PLEASANTON, U. S. A.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY ANTHONY.

THE WAR IN TENNESSEE—BROWN'S FERRY ON THE TENNESSEE, SHOWING LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN IN THE DISTANCE.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, FRED. B. SCHELL.

"FIRE!"

BY PARK BENJAMIN.

Out upon the midnight's gloom
Peals the wild alarm of fire,
Startling as the trump of doom,
While the flames to heaven aspire.

And across the clouded sky
Fling their lurid banners wide,
Roofs and walls and pavements nigh
All in scarlet colors dyed.

Hark! the deep-toned, solemn bells
Strike their awful, signal sounds,
And their music grandly swells
In and o'er the city's bounds;
While the engines, ringing clear,
Drawn along by stalwart hands,
Rushing through the streets appear,
Guided by their chief's commands.

"Save and rescue" on their scroll
Blazoned is, in letters bright,
As the glowing axles roll
Swiftly through the murky night.
Naught care they for storm or gale,
Naught for winter's piercing frost,
They have no such word as "fail,"
And they never count the cost.

But, devoted, on they go,
Till they meet, in contest dire,
That unsparing, angry foe,
That relentless demon—fire!
Till they conquer and subdue
His rebellious rage and hate:
For such souls, so brave and true,
Soar superior to fate.

They will drown the surging flame,
They will quell the horrid rout,
While surrounding crowds exclaim,
"Thanks to God, the fire is out!"
Hushed is now the wild uproar,
Bells have ceased their loud alarm,
And the baby sleeps once more,
Cradled on its mother's arm.

SORGHUM MOLASSES.—The five principal States of the West for the production of sorghum molasses are Missouri, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio. Their estimated production last year, was 10,203,778 gallons. This year only 6,6,8,282 gallons,

The Veiled Lady and her two Husbands in the Picture Gallery.

THE VEILED LADY.

A Leaf from a Physician's Notebook.

By John B. Williams.

I AM an old man now. My hair was silvered with gray years ago. My days on earth cannot be many. My memory begins to fail me. Events which occurred in the early part of my life are fading from my mind. And yet, strange to say, every now and then recollection appears to be lighted up in my brain, as if memory were not extinct but only slept. Perhaps the vehicle for the expression of the thoughts of the soul is becoming dull, age having impaired its usefulness.

Yesterday I was reading in a French journal an account of some recent extraordinary chemical discoveries. How strange it is that a word will sometimes call up a whole flood of reminiscences which have entirely passed from the mind! It would seem as if memory is something material embedded in the brain, and that it is only reproduced when another thought enters that organ and acts upon it in some subtle manner. Of course this is purely an hypothesis, incapable of proof—but certain it is that reading about the recent chemical discoveries in France awoke in my mind the recollection of an event which transpired many years ago, and in which I acted a subordinate part.

"She comes!"

Many, many years ago I almost made up my mind to make the matter public. I remember I debated the matter for a long time, but the fear that the improbability of the history, from the extraordinary character of the events, would convey a reflection on my veracity, restrained me. With age has come obtuseness, and I care nothing about the opinion of the world now. I know what I relate is true—and this is sufficient for me—nor shall I attempt to explain the extraordinary phenomena of which I have to speak. I have no doubt a natural explanation could be given, but I am too old now to attempt it. Without further digression I will relate what I have to tell.

Thirty-five years ago I was practising as a physician in a village in the State of Virginia. It was a rustic spot, and in spring and autumn it was really beautiful. The village on all sides was surrounded by majestic trees, which had braved time for many a long year, and which every summer embedded the white cottages in a mantle of greenery. The village boasted an country tavern, its parsonage, its blacksmith shop, its country store, and other buildings usually found in such places. But the great pride of the place was a large building which went by the name of the Grange.

It was a very old mansion, having been erected in the days of the early settlers of the State. It was situated about one mile from the village in question, and was at the same time the pride and fear of the inhabitants. It was an Elizabethan structure, rambling, large and commodious. One side of it was completely embedded with ivy, and the windows, around which the evergreen had been trimmed, resembled paths cut through the foliage. The front was gray and discolored; the windows were small, gothic shaped and latticed. It was situated on a beautiful eminence, so that it was a conspicuous object for miles. The Grange was surrounded on all sides by a species of park, which extended at the back of the dwelling for several acres, and was terminated by a beautiful stream of water, which rippled gentle music over its pebbly bed all the year round, excepting a short time when it congealed under the baleful eye of Sirius, the King of Winter. The rooms were lofty, the stairs ease wide, and the oak, so plentifully used in its internal construction, was almost black with age.

When first went to live in the village of Draughton the Grange was unoccupied. The owner had never lived in it for years, but had resided most of the time in New York. One day, however, the whole village was in a state of commotion by the arrival of workmen who had come to put the Grange in a condition of thorough repair. A hundred rumors were immediately afloat, but which all eventually were absorbed into one report—namely, that Mr. Templeman was about to be married, and would bring his bride home to his family mansion. This rumor proved to be a correct one, for in a short time the house was repaired, the old-fashioned furniture was dusted, the cobwebs were removed from the picture-gallery, a bevy of black servants were installed there from one of Mr. Templeman's Southern plantations, the building was declared to be ready, and it received the owner and his bride.

The village was immediately all excitement. Who had seen the bride? Was she pretty? Was she young? Did she seem happy? These and a hundred other questions were asked, but no one could give a satisfactory reply to any one of them. The fact was no one had seen her face, for she was closely veiled when she arrived.

Days, weeks, months passed away, and Mrs. Templeman had never been seen, excepting by persons in her own household. Mr. Templeman, however, often visited the village. It was noticed when he first returned to the home of his fathers, he appeared to be in excellent—indeed it might be called robust health; but by degrees a change came over him; he grew pale and visibly declined. His eyes, too, had a strange expression about them; usually they had a dull, dreamy look, very different from the light of intelligence which shone in them when in his own house, but then again they would suddenly lighten up in the most surprising manner, and he would then seem to be bewildered, and hardly know what he was doing.

One day he called upon me at my house. I was not burdened with many patients at that time, and was generally at home.

"Doctor Maxfield," said he to me, "I wish to consult you respecting my health. I have something the matter with me which is undermining my health, and what it is I know not! All that I do know is, that I am getting weaker every day."

"What are your symptoms, Mr. Templeman?"

"Well, doctor, to tell you the truth, I don't know myself. I only am aware of the fact that I am declining every day. I cannot sleep at night; I lay awake hours for hours together; I do not suppose I get more than three or four hours sleep on an average."

"Do you ever can you ascribe this want of sleep—have you no mental trouble?"

"None at all."

"Is your mind fixed on any one particular subject?"

"I indulge a good deal in chemical experiments, and devote a considerable portion of my time in investigating this beautiful science. But this soothes rather than irritates me."

I examined my patient, and found that every organ of his body was in a normal condition. His heart and lungs were perfectly healthy; digestion was good; in fact it was impossible for me after an hour's close investigation to discover the slightest vestige of disease, and yet he was evidently failing. He was losing flesh, and if some remedy were not discovered he must ultimately die.

"Mr. Templeman," I exclaimed, after I had finished my examination, "your affection is evidently one of the nervous system. You must—"

While I was yet speaking he rose suddenly from his chair, and his eyes which before had been dull and heavy suddenly grew brilliant as two diamonds.

"Excuse me," said he, advancing towards the door, "she is calling me. I must go."

"She!" I exclaimed, "who do you mean? No one has called as yet."

"My wife!" he replied, and rushed out of the house.

I was very much astonished at this strange conduct, and was at a loss how to account for it. I immediately followed him to the door; there was not a soul in sight. My impression was that his brain was affected.

The next day I received a message from the Grange, requesting my immediate presence as Mr. Templeman was seriously ill. I obeyed the summons at once, and was shown into a very large bed chamber, the heavy old-fashioned furniture of which was most strangely out of the modern carpet with which the floor was covered. On a stately four-post bedstead reclined my patient. His eyes were wild and haggard, and his cheek was as pale as a corpse.

"Doctor," said he, as soon as he saw me, "I am glad you have come. I am sick—very sick."

I examined his pulse, and strange to say found that it was quite natural; his respiration too was easy, and had it not been for his wild gaze and pallid face, I should not have thought there was anything the matter with him. I asked him a few questions, to which he responded in a natural manner.

"You appear to be suffering very much," I exclaimed, after he had replied, to all my queries; "is there any fear oppressing your heart?"

"Doctor, your are right, you have guessed it; there is a fear oppressing my heart, one that haunts me night and day; a demon that never quits my side, riding or walking, awake or asleep; it is my constant guest; it is the demon of self-destruction."

"Self-destruction! what do you mean?"

"I mean that I am haunted day and night with the idea of suicide. I feel an almost irresistible impulse to lay violent hands upon myself."

"Have you any reason for this fear?"

"None at all. I am wealthy. I enjoy every comfort. I—"

At that moment his features assumed the same expression I had done the day before in my office.

"O God of Heaven!" he exclaimed, pointing towards the door, "she has just left her room; she advances along the corridor; she stops to adjust her hair; she comes to the door; she is here!"

With that he sank back on his pillow and died insensible. At that moment the door opened and his wife entered the room. I had not time at the moment to observe her, for my whole attention was occupied by my now unconscious patient. In a very short time I succeeded in restoring him to life, but he was raving. I was assisted by a pair of milk-white hands, which, when they touched mine, sent a strange thrill through my whole system.

After we had restored him to consciousness, he fell into a deep slumber, and Mrs. Templeman beckoned me out into another room. It was now for the first time that I had an opportunity of observing the woman about whom report had been so busy. She led the way into the picture gallery, and we sat down on a sofa. She was a tall—very tall woman. Templeman a strange feeling which I could not account for took possession of me. A mist at first appeared to rise before my eyes, through which I could see the dim form of my companion. This, however, cleared away by degrees, and I could gaze on her without emotion. She was gorgeously beautiful, such beauty as I have never seen before or since. Her hair was as black as a raven's plume; her eyes were intensely black, but had a soft and dreamy expression, shaded by gauze. They seemed to enter one's very soul, and when she looked straight at me I felt deprived of the power of speech. Her form was tall and commanding stature, but her form was gracefully moulded. Her skin was white as the purest alabaster; her features were perfect, and might have served as a model for the Titian Venus; her cheek was tinged with the hue of perfect health; and her long curling locks gave a peculiar expression to her face, which it is difficult to describe. It must not be supposed from my description of Mrs. Templeman that I experienced anything like admiration for her beauty. I was fascinated, spell-bound, and even now when I try to analyze my feelings I cannot do it. I felt at the same time attracted and repelled by her presence. I felt a shudder when she gazed on me I felt the influence much more than at other times; when she appeared to be thinking of something else I felt relieved at once, and be in her presence without the slightest emotion.

"What do you think of Mr. Templeman's case?" said she in a voice so peculiar that I could compare it to nothing else than the notes given forth by an Æolian harp.

I told her my opinion—namely, that I considered he was suffering from some nervous disorder, and that a change of scene would be more likely to restore him to health than the anything else. She fully agreed with me, and promised to exert her influence to woke him take a trip to Paris. She then left the room, and I made her fully I was attracted by the pictures, and stood up to examine them. I walked from one end of the gallery to the other, and at the end I came to a picture with a full-length portrait of Oliver Cromwell, but through the canvas was the distinct marks of two bullet holes. I thought it rather strange, and turned round to Mrs. Templeman, and made some inquiry in reference to it. I fancy she appeared confused, for she changed the subject of conversation in a short time after that I left, promising to return the next day.

The next morning I was there early, and was immediately shown into the room of my patient. I found him something better, but still very weak and nervous. I had reflected a great deal on his case since the previous day, but could only come to the conclusion that his wife's presence had a mysterious influence upon him; but how or in what way I could not imagine. After a short consultation, I resolved to converse with him on the subject.

"Mr. Templeman," I began, "Mrs. Templeman's presence appears to have a strange effect upon your nervous system."

"You are right, doctor," he replied; "she is killing me."

"Killing you! What do you mean?"

"I repeat it. She is killing me—not by poison or by any physical means, but simply by the influence of her will."

"The influence of her mind?"

"Yes; my mind is completely subjugated to hers. When she wills me to do anything I am perfectly satisfied if she were to will me to put my hand into that fire, I should be compelled to do it."

"You can scarcely be serious in what you say."

"Alas! it is only too true. Listen to me while I tell you something, for I feel to keep this matter secret any longer would be death to me. I met Mrs. Templeman in New York, for the first time, some three years ago. At that period she was married. I was introduced to her, and was struck with her superb beauty. I lost sight of her for two years, but when I met her again she was a widow. I was attracted by her magnificent appearance, and married her. I had not been married a week before I was conscious that there was some strange influence at work with my mind. Whenever my wife looked fixedly at me thoughts and feelings would arise which did not seem to emanate from myself. It was some little time before I found out the exact truth of the matter; but when I did discover it, when I did find out that I was a slave, that I had no longer a will, mind or power, a terrible feeling of desire to rid myself of life haunted me. With this feeling I have contended for months, and I find each day it becomes stronger and stronger. That it will ultimately end by my committing suicide, if this spell is not broken, I am perfectly satisfied."

"What makes you so satisfied on this point?"

"I will tell you. I find that Mrs. Templeman had been married twice before."

"Indeed!"

"Yes; and both her husbands committed suicide!"

There was something very strange and fearful in this revelation. When I remembered the influence the Grange woman had over myself I felt my very blood turn to ice.

"But does she not treat you kindly?" I asked.

"Kindly? Yes. The same kindness that a serpent shows to the victim he is sure of his prey. He does not attack him, but remains at the bottom of the tree until the bird falls directly into his mouth."

"Do you suppose this influence is voluntary on her part?"

"I know it is. When her mind is occupied with something else she loses influence over me, and for that time I feel myself a man again. It is at such moments that an irresistible desire to kill her rises up in my mind. I have thought of a thousand different ways. Sometimes it is poison, at others I will slay her while she sleeps, but she paralyses me in a moment with her eye."

"Hush, my dear sir! Such thoughts as these will lead me to suspect that your brain is disordered."

"But it is not, doctor. I thought I had effected my purpose the other night. I was in my study, reading, when I fancied I heard voices in the picture-gallery. It was near midnight, and the first idea was that robbers had broken in. I took my gun and entered the picture gallery. I saw, plainly as I see you now, my wife stretched on the ground, and the form of her late husband bending over her in a threatening attitude. Although I had a certain will power over him, I could not fire perfectly. The desire to free myself from my cursed thraldom was too powerful. I raised the gun to my shoulder and fired. What was my astonishment when there was no one to be seen, and almost immediately afterwards my wife came running into the gallery by the same door that I had entered. I was convinced that it was a hallucination. The next day I examined the spot in which I had discovered her; I fired the gun. I found the bullets had pierced a portrait of Oliver Cromwell."

"You are right in your supposition," I replied; "that must have been the optical delusion. Such things are common when the mind is disturbed."

"I suppose so. But what course do you recommend me to pursue?"

I then told him that he had better at once leave the country, and recommended Paris to him as the place where he would most likely meet with persons and events that would restore his nervous system to a healthy condition again. He agreed to the proposal, and in a week he started off to New York and left by a packet sailing from that city to Havre.

A week passed without anything occurring, when one day I received a message from the Grange requesting my immediate presence there to see Mrs. Templeman. I thought by the urgency of the message that she must be very sick. I was therefore very much surprised when I met sitting in her boudoir, apparently in perfect health.

"Doctor," said she, as soon as I entered the room, "I have sent for you professionally. I wish to consult you on another matter."

I bowed but made no reply.

"You are aware," she continued, "that my husband has devoted himself a great deal to chemical pursuits. For days together he has been at work in his laboratory with his house—especially was this the case a few days before he left for Paris. Now I will confess to you that I have an irresistible curiosity to know what he has been doing there. As the nurse of his child I feel free from a species of superstitious dread about descending into that cold, dark, damp place. Will you examine the vault for me?"

"Did Mr. Templeman express a desire that no one should enter it during his absence?"

"He gave me no instructions as to that effect, and especially begged me not to visit the vault. It is this very fact which makes me so desirous of seeing it. I am perfectly free from a species of superstitious dread about descending into that cold, dark, damp place. Will you examine the vault for me?"

I would but made no reply.

"You are aware," she continued, "that my husband has devoted himself a great deal to chemical pursuits. For days together he has been at work in his laboratory with his house—especially was this the case a few days before he left for Paris. Now I will confess to you that I have an irresistible curiosity to know what he has been doing there. As the nurse of his child I feel free from a species of superstitious dread about descending into that cold, dark, damp place. Will you examine the vault for me?"

I would but made no reply.

She tried in vain to combat my resolutions, but I was determined, and soon after left her—she was evidently not pleased with my visit.

The next evening a report was current in the village that Mrs. Templeman had suddenly disappeared. I was the first person seen since the evening before when she retired to bed. Search was immediately made in every direction for her—but it was all fruitless. It was then that I suddenly thought about the vault, and suggested that some one should search it—relating the particulars of the conversation I had had with her on the subject.

The necessary search was made, and to the horror of every one she was found on the floor of the vault stone dead. There was no wound visible, and a jury of inquest returned a verdict of "Death by the visitation of God." The result contained nothing particular, and there was certainly no evidence of any occupation followed by Mr. Templeman there. A few bottles and vials containing chemicals was all that could be found. I noticed, however, that there was a strong sulphurous smell plainly apparent.

This sad termination of the life of such a beautiful woman was a nine days' wonder, and a vast variety of opinions were given on the subject. By degrees, however, the matter died away, and in a month or two it seemed to be entirely forgotten.

It was about three months after this occurrence that I was seated in my little parlor one night, resting myself after a long country ride. I was informed by my little boy that a gentleman wished to see me. I gave orders that he should be admitted, and almost immediately afterwards Mr. Templeman entered the room. He was changed, and that I scarcely knew him. He was wasted to a perfect shadow; his arms appeared to hang helplessly by his side; his eyes were sunk deep in their sockets, but still shone with an unnatural glare; his features were pinched, and his face was as colorless as that of a corpse—in fact his whole appearance was more that of a living corpse than anything else. He sat down, and for a minute or two he did not utter a word. At last, in a hoarse whisper he exclaimed:

"She is dead!"

I proceeded to condole with him at his wife's untimely decease, but he interrupted me.

"I murdered her! I killed her! Her blood is on my soul! It has been eating into my heart ever since that fatal night. I have not slept for weeks!"

"Compose yourself, sir," I replied. "You accuse yourself wrongfully; she died while you were on the road to Paris."

"True, but I killed her, notwithstanding. Listen! I will tell you how. You are aware that I have been addicted to considerable chemical experiments. In the course of my investigations I discovered an explosive substance which would ignite by the slightest friction—more than five times more explosive than fulminating mercury; but it also possessed this property, namely, that when it exploded no report was to be heard, but it would shed as if from a stroke of lightning, and no mark or wounds would show how the person had met his death. My wife's death is that of the victim to her nervous system. I prepared some of this chemical and placed it in the vault in such a manner that any person who should open the door would explode the compound and must meet with instant death. I then told my wife on no account whatever to visit the vault, but I knew that the very fact of my telling her this would make her disobey my wishes. You know the result. I am her murderer!"

I tried to soothe him as well as I could. Suddenly he rose up in his chair—his eyes assumed a fearful expression. Stretching forth his hand, he exclaimed:

"She calls me! From the cold dark grave she calls me! I cannot resist—I must go!"

And he again fell back into the chair—dead!

REBELS PEELING THE DEAD.

AMONG the pitiable scenes of the war is the wholesale robbery of the soldiers on the battlefield, which, though at first denied, is now acknowledged, and seems to be an organized system in the armies of the Confederates. Their wretched financial condition, the difficulty of obtaining clothing, seem to be an excuse, but the whole affair is so characteristic of the South, as the examples of their want of finer feelings, that it is stamped as one of the great features of the war.

We know now that bodies of troops are kept in reserve for the purpose, and that before the smoke of battle has cleared away the main march over to their loathsome task and begin stripping the dead and dying. How far this practice is inferred from the remarks of Mr. Joseph P. Townsend, the superintendent of the National Cemetery at Gettysburg, who, in speaking of the unrecognized dead, says: "I am quite certain that there are many unknown dead (about one-fourth of the whole), but that was owing to the fact that those who fell in the first day's fight were stripped by the rebels."

JOHN C. BRAINE, THE PIRATE OF THE CHESAPEAKE.

WE give a portrait of this infamous murderer, sent by the so-called Government at Richmond here to Canada, and examined in Port to rebel sympathisers with money and arms to go on board the Chesapeake. Our readers know no doubt well how he had his pretended fellow-travellers seized the steamer and murdered poor Sheaffer, whose widow has since received also a bed of sickness, from those who aided Braine here are unmolested.

The photograph on which our portrait is based was taken by Mr. William Berry, of Amherst, N.S., a few weeks since. Braine was there in disguise under the name of Hay. He was quite popular in the place, and as we are informed by Mr. G. J. Chadwick, to whom we are indebted for the portrait, was suspected of being at all concernes in the affair. "We only found out it was Braine on Sunday last, 17th inst., when J Nollis, Esq., called to take him to Saint Mary's cemetery, followed by the Rev. Thos. Casey, D.D. and D. C. L., of King's College, Windsor. Mr. Braine, or as he called himself, Mr. Hay, was very much affected. After a search for him throughout the hotel, one of the servants informed Mr. Nollis that Mr. Hay or Braine had gone out early that morning, carrying a package seemingly very heavy, and upon examining his room only an empty trunk was to be found, Hay or Braine had left with the Halifax mail coach which Mr. Lawlor was to drive. He, Hay or Braine, after walking seven miles, met the coach, and upon engaging Mr. Stephen Gould to drive him to Fort Lawrence, about fifteen miles, he was taken there and left at the Lawrence House, kept by Stephen Boire. After taking a hearty dinner (and paying for it), he was driven in a sleigh to Cape Tourentine, by Josiah Howe, and sent across to Prince Edward's Island. All traces of him since have been lost."

THE greatest difficulty that an artist has in drawing crowds is to get them to sit.

DAY LILIES.

BY HARRIET M'EWEN KIMBALL.

O summer day,
Delay! delay!
One waving of thy brooding wing,
One stirring of thy hazy wing,
And noontide light and heat,
Will find my dewy shadow-lair,
And burn the coolness from the grasses
That swathe my feet
In rank and silowy masses;
And to this chestnut twilight bring
The sun's profanest glare.

O summer day,
Delay! delay!
Let naked hill and bare brown field
Parch in thy torrid ray,
So this dim nook be unrevealed,
Where I,
Deliciously concealed,
Among the lilies lie.
The delicate day lillies!
The white and wonderful lilies!
My dark-green haunt so still is
The wildest birdling dare not sing,
Nor insect beat a gossamer wing,
Nor sephyr lift the lightest thing—
Here, where the lustrous lilies,
The clear, resplendent lilies,
Pour out their heavenly-sweet perfume,
And with their snowiness,
In clusters chaste, illume
This dark recess.

Soft-footed Silence, royal nun!
In this thy humble, emerald cell
For ever dwell!
These flowers supernal ever shine.
Pure-flamed, before thy virgin shrine!
Here, one by one,
Tell o'er thy glistering, royal beads.
A rosary strung on tangled weeds,
And bludes and stems that interknit.
The breath of lilies be thy prayers,
Sweet-adored, wafted unawares
Up through the morning's lucent sirs
And evening's pallid mist!
The glittering stars shall o'er thee pass,
Drop-pillowed in their heavy-grass;
There bread, smooth lily-leaves shall be
A glossy coverlet for thee;
Thy prayers and penance done,
O royal nun!
By day or night,
In dark or light,
Thy fragrant shrine shall be the same.
There slender tapers, lambent still,
Nor blazing sun, nor mildew chill,
Shall quench their alabaster flame.

A gleam, as of a crystal wand!
And day pours in with curious face;
The jealous sunshine, stealing round,
Doth warily chase
The cool, dank shadows on the ground.
The cloister-walls no longer stand;
A gerish glory fills the space
And lights the lush grass, loose and long;
While startled by the wild birds' song,
Soft-footed Silence flees space;
But still serene the lillies shine,
Pure-flamed, before her ruined shrine!

Don't be too Quick!

By J. W. Watson.

I SAID this to my friend Searle, after he had been detailing to me some difficulties under which he was laboring, the first being the loss of money, and the second a suspicion that one whom he very much liked was the thief. The story was this:

Searle kept an establishment where he manufactured certain goods, and attached was an office, where sundries they were sold to transient customers who paid in cash. This cash was always entered upon a salesbook, then put in the moneydrawer, whence it was taken once every day on the closing of the office. Of late much of this money had been missing, and in spite of every effort to find out the appropriators, the thievery still went on.

"I am willing to suffer the loss of the money," said Searle, "though it is no small amount, nearly three hundred dollars to the time; but it is the idea that I have a thief about me, that is the trouble."

"And there is nobody comes about the money-drawer, or has the taking of money, you say, but Dale?"

"Not a soul could have a chance but he and myself, and ever since I took him into the office as book-keeper and confidential clerk, the money has been going on, though I had supposed it entirely lost for eight years in every way, and never found a penny wrong."

"It may be, perhaps," I answered, "that the temptation of having money always open to him has been too much of a temptation, but don't be too quick! I know you would rather lose thousands than accuse any one wrongfully."

"That is exactly what has kept me back; but still the circumstances are powerfully against him. At first when I missed the money, always in bills, the gold and silver would not be taken, though I have often marked it to see. I told him of it, and he seemed very much troubled, but afterwards I have said nothing, and have watched. I must say there is nothing to justify my suspicion, except that he has full access to the money-drawer."

"Well," I said, "I will tell you a little incident that occurred to myself some years ago, that made a wonderful impression on my mind, and will always set towards making me give the advice I am now giving, which is never to convict on circumstantial evidence, unless there is something positive to back it."

"Soon after I first commenced business I was sitting in my room one night, and counting out and sorting a large amount of money, some of which was to deposit in bank next day, and some to pay bills, etc. While I was doing this a knock came to the door, and at my response there came in an old friend and schoolmate of mine, Sam Nichols. I had always been on terms of the closest intimacy with Sam, and at that very time was thinking of giving him a confidential position in my business, having great faith in him, though he seemed to be unfortunate in his undertaking in the world, lacking the energy to push into place and position, though when he was once in, serving zealously and faithfully.

"This evening he came in to say that he had an opportunity of becoming cashier for a mercantile house of high reputation, and had come to me for a letter of recommendation. I was delighted to give it to him, for the position was much better than what I could offer, and I was sincerely desirous of seeing Sam do well. He said he was asking me this I was still busily sorting my money and laying it in different heaps about the table. Among it was one five hundred dollar bill on a New York bank, which I laid separate, intending to keep it for an especial purpose.

"I got up from the table and crossed the room to my desk, where I wrote the letter, while in the meantime Sam read one of the books that lay upon the table. When the letter was written I handed it to Sam, who, apologising for having come in on me when I was busy, and saying that he would not stop to interrupt me farther, went away, as I thought, abruptly.

"Sam was scarcely out of the house when, in putting up my money in packages, I missed the five hundred dollar bill. I supposed I had laid it, been shot, and instantly ran through my money again. It was not there! Then I searched the floor—it might have been blown under the setting of the door, for the windows were not open, and no other air could have been made. Not! Then to take everything from the table and make a thorough examination. I put the loose books up in the library and searched every paper and scrap about the office with success. At this time there was a sickening sensation about me, but I could not bear to give it up. I lighted every gasburner in the room, and examined every cranny and every crack, and everything that the most remote possibility of success, and then when morning was about dawning I sat down, and thought of Sam Nichols as a thief! I would have given a hundred five hundred dollars, but I cared very little for the money alongside of the idea that I must look out and remember my old and well-tried friend as a thief. As to prosecuting him, though my evidence would have convicted, I never thought of it; but the most fearful doubt in the world was that I was whether it was my duty to make the thing known, and to openly accuse him of the crime, or whether I had better keep my knowledge in my own bosom and be content with shaking him off abruptly, leaving his own consciences to tell him the cause.

"I went about the last course, and went about my business without mentioning my loss to any one, feeling all the time as though I had an unhealed wound in my breast. I had given my servants instructions that when Nichols called I was not to be never in, no matter how desirous he may be to see me, and at my office I issued the same orders, telling the clerks that even if he saw me in my private office he was to be told that I would not see him.

"About a week after this I was almost driven crazy to hear that Nichols had got the situation for which he had applied, and that it was my letter that got it for him. The idea was a horrible one to me. The letter was a warm one, with almost fulsome praise, and must of course have had great weight. What could I do now? I had my choice, either to see it a matter of duty to go to his employers and tell my story, or let him go on, and as a consequence rob them, as he had robbed me. After a day of confusion and misery, but determined on what I thought was a middle course, which was to get a friend, who, while being private with me, was a friend to Nichols, to the house that had employed Nichols, to go to them, and while telling the story to ask from them a suspension of opinion, and withholding every positive could be known. It was a vain idea, and I may as well have attempted to quench a burning conflagration with a drop of water. Just one week afterwards I heard of the discharge of Nichols, and within a month that he had left the city, nobody seemed to know exactly how or where.

"A year passed over, and one night I was sitting alone in my room, reading, or rather attempting to read, that I might drive away a feeling of gloom that had come over me, and an unconscious sense of the unpleasant things that happened to me in a lifetime. Among those things that came up was that of Nichols, and instantly I resolved to put from mind I could not seem to dismiss it. I tried first one book and then another, and finally took down from the shelves a volume of Browning that had become almost a stranger to me. The instant I drew it from the shelf I saw that something was upon the farther cover. I turned it to the light, and quick as thought peeled off from its varnished side my—five hundred dollar bill!

"Never shall I forget the effect of that moment! It was the most terrible shock to my nerves I ever had. I saw the whole thing in an instant. I had taken down that volume of Browning upon the very night that Nicholl was in the room, and that was the book he was reading while I was writing the letter. In his haste to receive the letter he had laid the book down upon the $500 bill, and covered it. I, not seeing the bill, had laid the book aside, and the bill had clung to the cover, and when I had put all the books upon the shelves, that I might look for the bill, I had put this among the rest.

"This night was a longer one than that upon which I was searching for the lost money. All I thought of now was to seek Sam Nichols, if he was still alive, and do him justice. This was no easy matter, and was only accomplished after a delay of about two months, for Sam had gone off South; but when it was done, and Sam Nichols once more sat in that room with me, I told him the whole story, and implored pardon for my share in it, a pardon which was freely given.

"He never knew anything about it more than he saw and heard that I avoided him, and was determined to cast him off, and he supposed the cause must be from his discharge, though he did not know for what he was discharged.

"I did the best I could for Sam Nichols, and though I could not reinstate him in his old position, I could give him the situation I originally intended for him, and gain the employers and realize the solution of the lost money. I have never forgiven myself for my want of faith in Sam, and from that day of justification until now I have never lost sight of him, but have done to do Sam Nichols some good, as a small compensation for the injury I did him."

Searle rubbed his hands over my story and went away without a word. I did not see him again for nearly three weeks, though I often thought of him, and was anxious to hear of its unravelling. At that one day he rushed into my private office, with signs of high excitement on his face, and spoke in a rapid, hurried way, said:

"It's all out! The thief is discovered! Now who do you think it was?"

I was glad to hear by his way of speaking that it was not Dale, but I did not venture to guess.

"I'll tell you the story," he said, after waiting a moment; "it will be a very short one. I found it necessary to make some alterations in the office, and I had to remove the desk, which, as you remember, connected with the wall. In so doing the drawers were taken out in removing the one next the cash drawer—which has not been open for a year before—he heard the squeak of a mouse somewhere. We could not stop, of course, for Mrs. Mouse, and the result was that, in pulling the drawer entirely out, the lady, who proved to be the mother of an interesting family of six, was executed even unto death. In one of the back compartments of the drawer she had made her nest, and was raising her family, with my money. She had stolen it piece by piece, and had only met retributive justice for the theft. I have got it all back except about fifty dollars, which has been at various times, and is impossible to put together. And now, my dear fellow, let me thank you for your story, for without it I should have been in a dreadful fright about it with a deadly hate that the Mexican never felt.

POINT ISABEL, TEXAS.

OUR ARTIST sends a sketch of a point memorable for the landing of Gen. Banks and his forces, who recalled almost from oblivion this spot so distinguished in the history of the Mexican war, as the place where Gen. Zachary Taylor kept his operations. The chimneys standing, bare and tall, mark the ruins of the headquarters of that old soldier, who, like Wolfe, dreamed, as he looked up to the flag of his country, his own dying fight against it with a deadly hate that the Mexican never felt.

BROWN'S FERRY ON THE TENNESSEE.

WE conclude our series of illustrations of the interesting scenery around Chattanooga, of the spots made for ever memorable by the gallantry of our noble armies, with a sketch of Brown's ferry, on the Tennessee. This is the one week eleven miles the river, is passing through the pontoon bridge, while in the background the Lookout mountain rears its craggy height in solemn grandeur, as though conscious of its new rank among the eternal hills.

GEN. RICHARD STODDARD EWELL, C. S. A.

THE successor of Gen. Jackson, though unequal to that capable officer, is a remarkable man; and like Lee, Joe Johnston and Magruder, another of the Virginians who sealed the doom of their States and of their own by joining the rebellion, and giving it their influence and military skill. Gen. Ewell was born in the district of Columbia, in 1820; was graduated from the West Point military school in 1840; received, like Pleasanton, a brevet for gallantry as captain of dragoons. He was made First Lieutenant in Sept., 1841; became Captain for gallantry at Contreras and Churubusco; Major in '47, and Lieut.-Col. after distinguishing himself in the Indian wars in New Mexico, resigned his commission in May, 1861, to accept a commission of Brig.-Gen. in the rebel army. He was at the battle of Hicksburg, July 16, 1861, and was soon made Major-General. He was long second in command to Stonewall Jackson. Pope's campaign was defeated by Hooker at Bristow station, August 27th, 1862, and Ewell at the second battle of Bull Run. On recovering he resumed his command, although he had to be strapped to his saddle. When Jackson was killed at Chancellorsville, Ewell succeeded him, but has not since distinguished himself.

THE INTERIOR OF THE MONITOR MONTAUK.

ALL have heard of the monitors, and are aware of their exterior appearance. The chesebox on a raft, but few have seen the vehicle in Hampton roads one morning, is now so familiar to the eye as a cheese and loaf. Few, however, have been able to descend into one, or visit the interior arrangements. The series of pictures which we give will enable all to see what they are within. The sketches of the Montauk, now off Charleston, were made with great care by our special Artist, by express permission of Admiral Dahlgren.—While without all seems smooth and clear, giving little idea of immense strength, we see within the complicated works employed to move the vessel and to protect her crew. The interior of the turret shows the two immense guns and their apparatus: the iron wood with its frequent bolts, one of which is another rivet did much fatal injury in the gallant Rodgers. The view under the turret gives a better idea than words will do of the machinery which, propelled by an engine for the purpose, revolves the immense turret on its bronze rail. A smaller one shows the system of brakes, by which these revolutions are guided. The cone-head is shown above separately, and the eight holes, at one of which Lieut. Worden was so badly injured.

The cabin and wardroom need no explanation. The anchor-well, the windlass and the pilot-house with the group of instruments complete the series of sketches. The exposure to the shelterers gives an idea of the strength of that department; but the whole interior is divided by very strong and watertight walls, in important places closing with heavy iron doors that seem to seal up the rooms hermetically.

REV. O. B. FROTHINGHAM'S CHURCH, FORTIETH STREET, NEW YORK.

THE Third Congregational Unitarian Society (Rev. O. B. Frothingham), having completed their church edifice in Fourth street, between Fifth and Sixth avenues, we give a sketch of their neat and comfortable edifice. The Rev. Mr. Frothingham is one of the most eloquent and popular of the Unitarian clergy in the city, and the congregation very select and refined.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

A WIT AT HIS CENSUS RETURN.—An eccentric wag, in answer to the question in a column which he calls a caste, gave the following answers to the marshal of his census paper. Under the heading "Domestic servants, of what visitors," he wrote:—

"Plenty of mice, and lots of rats.

A nice young dog, and two young cats."

Under the head "Age," was written:

"I will not swear that I am fifty,

Though people call me rather thirty."

His caste he describes as consisting of "one room, with winning company, and no scholars." Happy man! He is evidently a philosopher as well as a wit.

SCENE IN A POLICE COURT.—A youth named Daniel O'Brien, whose cadaverous face and cadaverous appearance, when he had passed a sleepless night, was brought before the court on a charge of stealing oysters from the shop of one Watson. The court said that a few days would be necessary for the vengeance of the law, and the sentence produced a groan of horror from the Irish blood, judge," he said, "have I not suffered enough by seeing what I ate?"

Even his stomach as he spoke, and groaned as though still under the influence of it.

The court said it was one of the penalties of sin.

"Then, your honor," he said, "if I'd suffered as I did yesterday, you would think that you had paid as well as penalties. Hereafter, oysters and me are strangers. We don't agree."

Sighs were heavily drawn with a spasm, and went off groaning.

The court didn't indulge in early vegetables, and it looked after the retreating O'Brien with a smile of compassion, beautifully blended with a pinch of snuff.

ON A PERPETUAL SINGER.

Miss Nasey sings so sweetly, oh!
'Twould almost melt your heart, I know,
To hear the varies that she makes
From her delicious lips.
I know it, for I love her sing
The livelong days her practising.
Would that each bore a heartsloed sting
His finger tips.

Miss Nancy sings more like a bird
Than any lover ever heard;
But when she is by passion stirred
She is a little croaky.
I wish she were a bird (what rage!)
And I her cruel master caged,
I'd put Miss Nancy in a cage,
And there I'd keep her.

AN IRISH PILOT.—A merchant brig got a pilot on board on the south coast of Ireland to take her into port. She was stormy, and the pilot quite lost the reckoning.

"You're a pretty pilot, truly," said the captain, "not to know where we are."

"Sir," replied the pilot, "show me the Old Head o' Kinsale and I'll tell you where we are in an instant."

AN EXCUSE FOR SMOKING.—In one of our neighboring towns the lads of a school acquired the habit of smoking, and resorted to the most ingenious methods to conceal the vice from the masters. At last they were detected, until one evening, when the master caught them at it, and was received with a woful plight.

"How now?" shouted the master to the first lad—"how dare you be smoking?"

"Sir," said the boy, "I am subject to headaches, and a pipe takes off the ache."

"And you, you rascal, and you?" inquired the pedagogue, questioning every boy in his turn.

"Sir," said the second, "I have a cough;" and the third, a "cough;" in short, they all had something.

"Then, sir," said the last one to him at the head, boy," what disorder do you smoke for?"

"Sir," said he, "my clothes were smoked; but the interrogated urchin, putting down his pipe after a hearty puff, and blowing out all his remaining fees, said in a whining, hypocritical tone, "Sir, I smoke against the devil."

The master looked at him for a moment in silence, and then ordered him down.

A CHICAGO paper gravely remarks that "the longer the present war lasts the more public opinion seems to incline to settle down to the belief that it will be a short one." The editor is quite right, we believe.

IN the story of the courtship of a loving couple, the course was arranged and matters lined up, the master-stroke

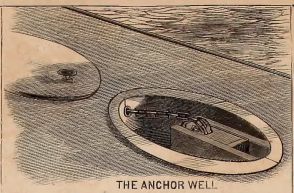
"I suppose it must be on the score of his merit, not on the merit of his score,"

IT is not in brutes that we find most brutality.

"DON'T touch me, or I'll scream!" as the engine whistle said to the stoker.

THE young lady who gives herself away shows her self-possession.

IT is often a nobler work to conquer a doubt than a redoubt.

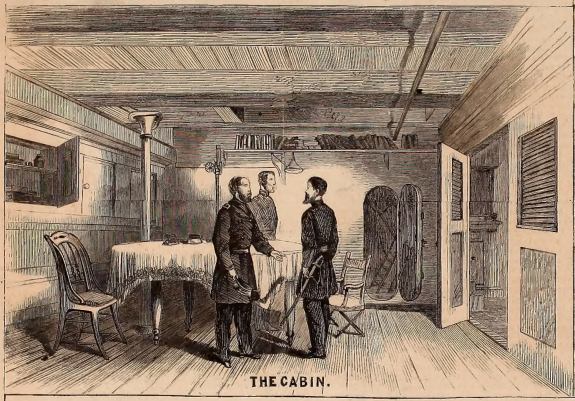


ALL our laws would seem to be bankrupt laws; they are broken every day!

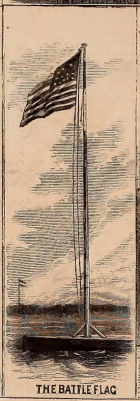
THE worst of all kinds of eyewater is a coquette's tears.

WE are never satisfied that a lady understands a kiss unless we have it from her own mouth.

REVOLVING THE TURRET



THE ANCHOR WELL

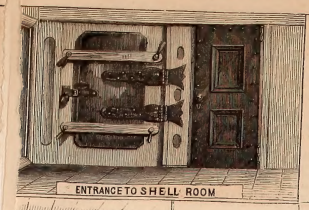


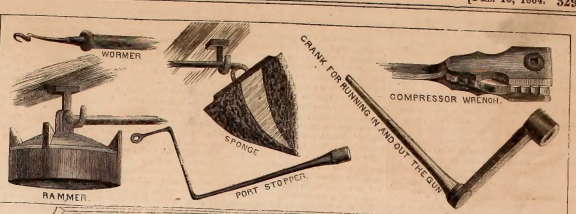
THE PILOT HOUSE

PORT HOLE AND MUZZLE OF 15-IN GUN

THE CABIN.

THE BATTLE FLAG

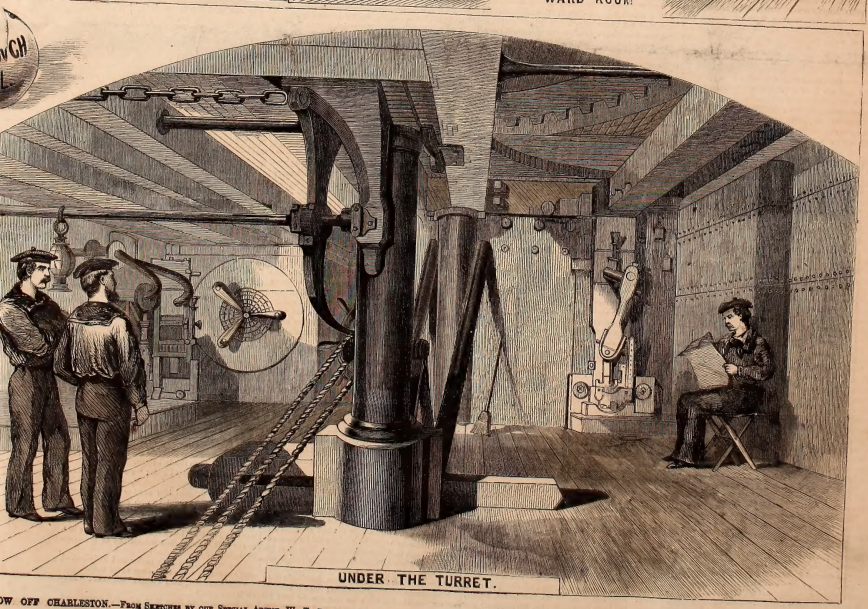




THE WIN

THE BERTH DECK.

FOUR IRONCLADS—INTERIOR VIEWS OF THE U. S. MONITOR MONTAUK, N



ENTRANCE TO SHELL ROOM

NDLASS

SIGNALING FROM THE PILOT HOUSE

WARD ROOM

UNDER THE TURRET.

OW OFF CHARLESTON.—From Sketches by our Special Artist, W. T. Crane.

THE POET BORN, NOT MADE.

A quiet thinker of sweet thoughts, I waver
Among my dreams, clothing them evermore
With form and flavor;
But Hope, who culls delight for me,
Tuned ofttimes into poesy,
Imbues with her soft light the loving lore
Of contented men before.

And though a mean-clad Fortune oft doth set her
Hard hand upon the singing robe I wear,
I deem it better;
Content with Truth she shall sing
Her shadows o'er the songs I sing;
For she and her twin children, Joy and Care,
Have lent the lute I bear.

Past hours, with all the holier thoughts I treasure,
Move onward to the unity they make,
Flowering to pleasure.
And I linked myself and these,
To love in many melodies;
And I have need to sing for singing's sake,
Until my heart should break!

Thoughts that reseek the bosom whence they flutter,
Laughter and tears that mingle as they flow,
Feelings that utter
Music my heart and soul contain,
Take form and substance in my brain,
Uttering, in sounds of sweetness evermore,
All I have been and know.

When the heart listens and the blood rejoices,
Where Beauty broodeth by herself, and sings—
When unknown voices,
Sow o'er the melancholy hours
Music that springs like grass and flowers—
When Fancy feels the sunlight on her wings—
I am the guest of kings!

Without the Titan world, its truth or error,
Like a lost brooklet, blindly I steal;
Living to mirror
My quiet nights, and house-bred days
In simple rhymes and roundelays,
Which harbor sweet sounds if they reveal
Half I have felt and feel!

THE GULF BETWEEN THEM.

BY

MRS. ANN S. STEPHENS.

(Continued from page 315.)

He had loved her, he did love her, and the only reason she was, as he supposed, ignorant of the humiliating story of his past, was because he had put it resolutely out of his mind; and it hurt his pride too much to go over the detail of the deceit…it rested very from which he had suffered, even in his own thoughts.

Stacy's absence was prolonged to a fortnight, and when she returned, Mrs. Harrington and Tom Fuller came back with her.

The girl was in more joyous spirits than ever; more bewitching and beautiful, if possible; and Elizabeth could see plainly that Mellen's love for her had filla stint of absolute idolatry.

She was jealous. Elsie had been her own sister, she could not have become more attached to her than she had grown during their years of companionship. But it was very hard to see of what love her husband was capable, and to remember that no part of it could be won to make sunshine for her; that between her soul and his rose the image of that heartless beauty, whose treachery had barred his heart to ashes.

Tom Fuller was a more hopeless lunatic than ever; but Elsie had begun to grow impatient of his devotion. She often found him cruelly now, and the poor fellow bore it all meekly, and still clung to his beautiful dream, unable to realize that it was a heedless blossom, that would soon wave away with the summer that had warmed it to its prime.

The weeks passed on with all-seeming pleasantness, and in many respects they were so to both husband and wife, though the secret thoughts in the minds of both, kept them aloof from the perfect rest and happiness to which they had looked forward during their days of courtship.

But a sudden change and a great break were nearing their lives, and unexpectedly enough it came.

Mellen received a heavy mining property in California, an immense fortune in itself, and ever since his return from Europe he had been much occupied with a lawsuit that had sprung up concerning the title. He had come out victorious of business, but things did not go on satisfactorily, and letters came for him which made his presence there appear absolutely important.

He could not take his wife and sister; the discomforts to which they would be exposed, the dreadful fears which he knew he encountered, from her apparent delicacy, entirely prevented the idea.

He informed them that he might be obliged to go; he had written other letters by the steamer; the answer he received would decide..

Elizabeth pleaded to go with him, but Elsie frankly owned that she could not even think of a sea voyage without deathly terror. Mellen pointed out to his wife the impossibility of her taking the journey, the necessity there was that she should remain with Elsie, and she submitted in silence.

"He married me to take care of her," she thought; "I will do my duty—I will stay. Perhaps this absence will change him; but no, I am mad to hope it. Elsie says he never changes. That woman's memory must always lie between his heart and mine." So she turned to her dull weary path of duty, and gave no sign.

CHAPTER VII.

OCTOBER comes, and scarcely four months after his marriage, Mellen was compelled to leave his wife and home, it might be for a year. Elizabeth grew white and cold when this certainty was forced upon her, yet she made no protestation, only uttered nothing like regret or complaint. Grantley was chilled through and through the heart by this. He had been so lonely, had longed for the warmth and happiness of love with such intense yearnings, that her calm stillness wounded him terribly. Was she of marble? Would nothing kindle affection in that proud heart? Had he married a beautiful statue?

No wonder Elizabeth was proudly cold. She did not believe in the necessity of this journey. His indifference had first given him dislike, she thought, and now, yielding to inevitable repulsion, he was going away to avoid her.

But Elsie was loud in her expressions of grief. She had floods of tears to give—protestations and caresses without end. Her sweet voice was constantly reproaching Elizabeth for want of feeling. She was forever thanking her brother in advance, in atonement, as she said, for his wife's coldness. But the roses on her cheek were always fresh, and her blue eyes never lost a gleam of their brightness, while Elizabeth grew thin and white beneath the withering ache of a famished heart.

"Oh, the desert of these months! Oh, my God, my God, I shall perish without him! Alone here —all alone with this child—what will become of me! How shall I endure, how resist this wild clamor of the heart?"

Elizabeth had flung herself upon the couch in her own room, her face was buried in the purple cushion, and she strove to smother the anguish of these words, which sprung out of a terrible pain which had no business in that young heart. As she lay, convulsed and sobbing, on the couch, the door opened, and her husband came into the room. The thick carpet smothered his footsteps, and he stood by the couch before she knew it—stood there a moment, then fell upon his knees, and softly wound his arm around her.

"Elizabeth, my wife."

She started up with a cry; her face was wet with tears; her large gray eyes wild with sorrow. He lifted her to his bosom, put back the thick waves of hair that had fallen over her face, and kissed her forehead and her lips with gentle violence.

The pride went out from her heart as she felt these passionate kisses rained on her face. She clung to him, trembling from the new joy that possessed her.

"Is it for me that you are weeping, sweet wife? are you sorry to part with me?"

"Oh, yes, yes! you are my life, my salvation."

"Why how hard you make it for me to go!"

"And you must?"

"It is inevitable; my duty to others demands it; and it is said not for the first time."

The door of Elsie's boudoir was opened, the certains held back, and the sailing young creature looked in. Elizabeth saw her, struggled out of her husband's arms, and dried the wet eyelashes with sweeping her cheek, which was hot with blushes.

"Oh, ho! one too many, am I?" she cried, entering without ceremony. "Mr. Mellen, Mrs. Harrington, I haven't seen you blush so since that day when Mrs. Harrington would insist on it that you recognized a certain person."

Elizabeth was so confused by the sudden rush of joy sweeping through her whole being, that she did not remark this speech; but her husband did, and withdrew his arm from her waist for support. She looked up, and saw that he was changed within the minute.

"I'm glad to find you looking so smiable," said Elsie, going up to the glass, and threading her curls out into a beautiful confusion of hair; "for I've thought of something that would make this place delightful, just as long as you stay, Grant. Besides," she added, looking down and coloring a little, "people will get such ideas into their heads, and say such things. I'm sure Tom Fuller will, if he then see how very happy you and Bessie are together, or they never will believe that you are not running away from her."

"Will they?" demanded Mellen almost sternly,— "What are you saying, Elsie?"

"Oh, it's dreadful; I've been crying about it half the night, but a splendid idea—something of that sort, will put every thing on velvet. Nothing like champagne and the et ceteras to stop people's mouths."

"A ball! Why, Elsie, what is your mind running on?"

"The idea is dreadful, I know; and just as you are leaving us, when every moment is precious as a grain of gold. But it's really necessary. If you go off without seeing people, Grant, they will be sure to say that you and Bessie quarrelled, and all sorts of horrid things about her being melancholy, and you—well it's no use repeating these speeches, but the ball we must have. Bessie shall entertain them like a princess; as for poor little me, I'm good for nothing but dancing."

She gave a waltzing step or two, and whirled herself before the mirror again.

"Well, who shall we invite?" she said, gazing at the pretty image that smiled back her admiration. "I've not a list this morning in my room; shall I bring it?"

She ran into her room and came out again with a handful of engraved cards, some of them already filled in.

"I knew, of course, that the ball was to be, so had the cards struck off. Tom Fuller brought them down. Just add what names you please, Bessie, and we will leave the rest to Mrs. Harrington."

"Why, Elsie!" began Mrs. Mellen.

"Well, what is it?"

"How can you think of—"

"Oh, it's settled, so don't discuss it. What! looking cross? Why, Grant dear, I—I did not think you would be offended."

"But I am, Elsie."

She dropped into a chair, pressed both hands to her side, and shrunk away into a crouch, from which little thing, that had been crushed by a single blow.

"Why, Elsie!"

Her eyes filled with tears, and she covered them with both hands.

"I am not angry, child, only surprised."

"But you will be—you will be very angry when I tell you that some of the invitations are sent out. Oh, I wish I were dead!"

Her lips quivered like those of a grieved and half-frightened child. Her cheeks were wet, and their color had left them.

"Oh, Grantley, Grantley, don't—don't look at me in that way. Dear Bessie, tell him how sorry I am."

Mellen was walking the floor in considerable agitation. He had hoped for a little peace in his own home—a few days of tranquil confidence with his wife. Now every thing was broken in upon. There would be nothing but confusion up to the very hour of his starting.

Elsie watched him furtively, and with sidelong glances. She knew how terrible his anger was when once aroused.

"Oh, if my poor mother had lived."

"Elsie, Elsie I will not have that sacred name dragged into an affair like this. Have your way, but remember it is the last time that you must venture on the sympathies of my wife."

Elsie left the room really frightened, and sobbing piteously, but the moment she found herself in her boudoir a smile broke through her tears, and she laughed out.

"Well, I don't care, we shall have the ball. I wonder if Bessie put him up to that. Hateful thing, he never scolded me so before. Her prerogatives, indeed."

As for Grantley Mellen, this untoward intrusion had broken up the happy moment which might have given him new insight into all that his wife felt and suffered. The interview which had promised such gentle confidence only ended in mutual irritation.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE evening of the ball arrived; the house was crowded with all the guests it would hold, and for the scores it was impossible to accommodate, Mellen had made arrangements in his usual lavish way to be conveyed back and forth in a steamer chartered for the occasion.

The old house was a beautiful sight that evening. The long suite of drawing-rooms were flung open, and in the far distance a noble conservatory, half greenness, half crystal, terminated the view like a second South Island fretted with moonlight.

It was not alone that these noble rooms were shaded with richly-tinted draperies, and filled with costly furniture; rare wealthy man's house may boast as much; but Mrs. Mellen had thrown her fine individual taste into the adornments of his home. Antique and modern statues gleamed out of the green perfection of the plants that made your breath come unsteadily broke up the walls, and groups of bronze gave you surprises at every turn. The works of art, scattered around in one long dreary gallery, were here scattered in nooks and corners, completing each room with their beauty.

And all this was kindled up into one brilliant whole. Gems flashed and crowding in those rooms. Each rare object had its peculiar light and appropriate space. A master mind had arranged every thing.

In these almost palatial saloons Elizabeth stood by her husband, receiving their guests as they came in.

She was in her most brilliant spirits that night, and her buoyant gayety formed a singular contrast with the quiet repose of Elizabeth's manner.

But such things as these about everywhere in spite of the cruel rebuffs he received, for he was sadly in her way that night; and when she had refused to dance with him, peremptorily ordering him away to attend to strangers, or perform any similar heavy work, he would take the post she ordered, and watch her with frantic eyes as she floated through the dance, or engaged her wiles on every man who approached, just as she had once thought it worth while to entrance him.

On that evening Tom Fuller woke to a consciousness of the truth; he understood the confusion and bewilderment which had been in his mind for weeks past; he saw that he loved this bright young creature with the whole force of his rugged nature, and he began dimly to comprehend that she cared no more for him or his sufferings than if his heart had been a flower that she trampled, and all sorts of horrid things about her being melancholy, and you—well it's no use repeating these speeches, but the ball we must have. Bessie shall entertain them like a princess; as for poor little me, I'm good for nothing but dancing."

She gave a waltzing step or two, and whirled herself before the mirror again.

"Well, who shall we invite?" she said, gazing at the pretty image that smiled back her admiration. "I've not a list this morning in my room; shall I bring it?"

She ran into her room and came out again with a handful of engraved cards, some of them already filled in.

"I knew, of course, that the ball was to be, so had the cards struck off. Tom Fuller brought them down. Just add what names you please, Bessie, and we will leave the rest to Mrs. Harrington."

"Why, Elsie!" began Mrs. Mellen.

"Well, what is it?"

"How can you think of—"

"Oh, it's settled, so don't discuss it. What! looking cross? Why, Grant dear, I—I did not think you would be offended."

"But I am, Elsie."

She dropped into a chair, pressed both hands to her side, and shrunk away into a crouch, from which little thing, that had been crushed by a single blow.

"Why, Elsie!"

Her eyes filled with tears, and she covered them with both hands.

"I am not angry, child, only surprised."

"But you will be—you will be very angry when I tell you that some of the invitations are sent out. Oh, I wish I were dead!"

Her lips quivered like those of a grieved and half-frightened child. Her cheeks were wet, and their color had left them.

"Oh, Grantley, Grantley, don't—don't look at me in that way. Dear Bessie, tell him how sorry I am."

Mellen was walking the floor in considerable agitation. He had hoped for a little peace in his own home—a few days of tranquil confidence with his wife. Now every thing was broken in upon. There would be nothing but confusion up to the very hour of his starting.

Elsie watched him furtively, and with sidelong glances. She knew how terrible his anger was when once aroused.

"Oh, if my poor mother had lived."

"Elsie, Elsie I will not have that sacred name dragged into an affair like this. Have your way, but remember it is the last time that you must venture on the sympathies of my wife."

Elsie left the room really frightened, and sobbing piteously, but the moment she found herself in her boudoir a smile broke through her tears, and she laughed out.

"Well, I don't care, we shall have the ball. I wonder if Bessie put him up to that. Hateful thing, he never scolded me so before. Her prerogatives, indeed."

As for Grantley Mellen, this untoward intrusion had broken up the happy moment which might have given him new insight into all that his wife felt and suffered. The interview which had promised such gentle confidence only ended in mutual irritation.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE evening of the ball arrived; the house was crowded with all the guests it would hold, and for the scores it was impossible to accommodate, Mellen had made arrangements in his usual lavish way to be conveyed back and forth in a steamer chartered for the occasion.

The old house was a beautiful sight that evening. The long suite of drawing-rooms were flung open, and in the far distance a noble conservatory, half greenness, half crystal, terminated the view like a second South Island fretted with moonlight.

It was not alone that these noble rooms were shaded with richly-tinted draperies, and filled with costly furniture; rare wealthy man's house may boast as much; but Mrs. Mellen had thrown her fine individual taste into the adornments of his home. Antique and modern statues gleamed out of the green perfection of the plants that made your breath come unsteadily broke up the walls, and groups of bronze gave you surprises at every turn. The works of art, scattered around in one long dreary gallery, were here scattered in nooks and corners, completing each room with their beauty.

And all this was kindled up into one brilliant whole. Gems flashed and crowding in those rooms. Each rare object had its peculiar light and appropriate space. A master mind had arranged every thing.

In these almost palatial saloons Elizabeth stood by her husband, receiving their guests as they came in.

She was in her most brilliant spirits that night, and her buoyant gayety formed a singular contrast with the quiet repose of Elizabeth's manner.

But such things as these about everywhere in spite of the cruel rebuffs he received, for he was sadly in her way that night; and when she had refused to dance with him, peremptorily ordering him away to attend to strangers, or perform any similar heavy work, he would take the post she ordered, and watch her with frantic eyes as she floated through the dance, or engaged her wiles on every man who approached, just as she had once thought it worth while to entrance him.

On that evening Tom Fuller woke to a consciousness of the truth; he understood the confusion and bewilderment which had been in his mind for weeks past; he saw that he loved this bright young creature with the whole force of his rugged nature, and he began dimly to comprehend that she cared no more for him or his sufferings than if his heart had been a flower that she trampled.

He captured Elizabeth, and there, in the midst of the lights and gayety, he told her of his wrongs, and with such energy that it required her constant effort to prevent him from attracting general attention.

"I love her," he burst out, "I do love her! She might run my heart through with a rusty bayonet, if she would only care for me."

The beginning was not at all coherent, but Elizabeth perfectly understood what he meant. Several times during the past weeks she had attempted to open his eyes to the truth, but he would neither see nor hear, and had insisted upon rushing on to his fate like a great blundering bluebottle into a spider's web.

"Do you think there's any hope, Bessie, do you? I ain't handsome, and I ain't rich; but I'll give her all my heart! I'll work for her, die for her; I'll lay my own soul down for her to walk over, only to keep her little feet dry, upon my honor I would."

Elizabeth drew him into a window recess and tried to soothe his agitation.

"Poor old Tom!" she whispered; "poor dear old Tom!"

"I know what that means," he said, choking desperately; "you don't think there is any hope. You know there is not!"

"I have tried to talk to you, Tom, but you wouldn't listen—"

"Yes, I know, I know! It's my own fault—I'll turn up Jolly in a little while—it's only the first that's hard!"

And Tom blew and whistled in his efforts to keep his composure, in a way that was irresistibly ludicrous. In the midst of his distress the poor fellow could not help being comical. Even in the suffering which was so terribly real to him he made Elizabeth smile.

"I'm a great, long fool!" he exclaimed. "Just as much in and about me like smoke, Bessie, I think it would do me good."

"Only wait till to-morrow," she said, "I will talk with you then—we shall be overheard now."

"Oh, I could bear to help if the whole world heard," he groaned; "I can't wait! The way she's going on with those dashing young fellows drives me mad! Why couldn't I have been a dashing fellow too, instead of such a great live-oak hulk! I can't stir without stumbling over somebody, and as for saying those dainty things, I can't do it. No wonder she scorns me so!"

Tom dealt his unfortunate forehead a blow that made it scarlet for several moments, and cooled him down somewhat.

"What would you advise me to do, Bessie?" he asked. "You're so sensible and so good—just give a fellow a hint."

"Dear Tom, there is nothing for it but to wait—"

"That's pretty advice!" he burst in. "You might as well tell a person in a blaze of fire to wait! No, I shan't wait—I won't, I say!"

Tom ran his hands through his hair till it stood up as if he had received an electric shock.

"Oh, you needn't look so black at me, Bessie; I know just what a hundred I am so to you."

"I wasn't looking black at you; I am very, very sorry, Tom."

"Don't pity me; I shall break right down if you do."

"I must go back, Tom," she said; "I can't stay here any longer."

"I know it; of course you can't. I'll just wait a minute and then——there, go! What a nuisance I am!"

Elizabeth went back into the ball-room, where she saw Elsie whirling through a waltz, looking as happy and unconscious as if she had not just crushed a warm, loving human heart under her pretty foot.

Mrs. Mellen stood a moment arrested; no one seemed to heed her.

She saw Mrs. Harrington facing Mellen to walk through a quadrille, and felt certain that he was as listless as herself.

"But it is for Elsie," she thought; "he will not mind so long as it is for her. None of them will miss me."

Tom Fuller stood in the bay window for some time trying to collect his scattered faculties. Any thing like rational thought was quite out of the question with him; he felt as if a great humming-top were spinning about in his ears, and his brain was in a state of palpitation that utterly defies description.

Finally he passed through the drawing-rooms where people were busy over their cards or their small-talk, and entered the hall-room from which he had rushed in such frenzy.

There was a pause in the music, and Elsie was standing surrounded by a group of gentlemen, not even seeing Tom as he approached. He managed to edge himself into the circle at last, and stood watching Elsie very much like a sheep-dog that wanted desperately to worry something, but knew that he would get himself into difficulty if he even ventured on a bark.

But speak to her he must; Tom had reached that point where his feelings must find vent or explode, and scatter mischief all around.

Finally a brilliant idea struck him, and he got near enough to whisper—

"Bessie wants to see you a moment."

Elsie turned away impatiently.

"Now, Miss Stewart," added Tom, growing very red at his own fib, but followed it up courageously.

He knew very well that the dancies were quiescing him; the fact that Elsie was provoked a little though he trembled in every joint, and his face had heat enough in it to have kept a poor family comfortably warm from the reflection, he resolutely held out his arm, and the young lady absolutely took it.

"My sister wants me," she said, in explanation to her admirers, "I presume, ma'am I'll have a no guessing when she will let me come back."

Tom led her away, but he was dreadfully frightened at the success of his own manœuvre.

"Where is Bessie?" asked Elsie, impatiently, as they walked down the ball-room.

"This way," faltered Tom; "we shall find her in a moment."

Elsie never deigned him another word; she was very angry, as she could be with anything or anybody that opposed her wishes, impulsively. Tom walked on towards one of the parlors which he knew was empty, feeling like a man about to charge a battery single handed, but determined to persevere nevertheless.

They reached the little parlor, and Elsie looked about in surprise—there was not a soul visible.

"Are you crazy, Tom Fuller?" cried she; "Bessie is not here."

"She—shall be here in a minute," stammered Tom; "just wait, please."

"Indeed I will do no such thing," returned Elsie, sharply, snatching her hand from his arm. "Did she send you for me, Tom [illegible]?"

"No," cried Tom, with sudden energy, "I told a lie! I couldn't stand it any longer; I must speak with you; I wouldn't wait."

Elsie turned on him like a little kingbird darting on a hawk.

"What do you mean by this unwarrantable liberty!" she exclaimed.

"Have you no idea of the common usages of society? Don't come near me again to-night; don't speak to me."

She was darting away, but Tom caught her hand.

"Oh, wait, Elsie, wait!" he cried.

"You ridiculous creature!" said Elsie, beginning to laugh in spite of her vexation. "What on earth do you want?"

"Laugh at me?" groaned Tom; "I deserve it—I expect; but I can't live this way any longer! You are driving me crazy. I love you, Elsie! Only speak one kind word—just say you don't hate me."

He was holding on to her two hands, and looking exceedingly energetic in his wretchedness, that Elsie burst into perfect shrieks of laughter.

"You silly old goose!" said she; "don't you know you mustn't talk in that way to me! You have no right, and it is very impertinent! There, go along—I forgive you."

Tom stared at her with his astonished eyes wide open.

"You can laugh at me?" he exclaimed. "Why all these months have let me go on loving you, and never hinted that I was so very disagreeable."

"Now, Tom, don't be tiresome!"

Tom groaned aloud.

"Why I never saw such conduct!" cried Elsie, impatiently. "It's too bad of you to behave so—you are spoiling my whole evening! You are just as disagreeable as you can be. Oh, I hate you!"

"Elsie! Elsie!"

"Let go my hand; suppose anybody should come in! Oh, you old goose of a Tom—let me go, I say."

"Just one minute, Elsie—"

"To-morrow—any time! Don't you know civilized beings never behave in this way at a ball."

"I don't know—I can't think! I only feel I love you, Elsie, and I must speak out. I will speak out."

A few weeks earlier Elsie would only have been amused at this from general lack of amusement, but now it vexed and irritated her. Girl-like she had not the slightest pity on his pain. He was keeping her away against her wishes.

"I am served right for treating you as a friend," she said; "I looked upon you as a relation, and thought you understood it, and now you are trying to make me lose my party. Bessie will be angry, and tell Grant. Oh, you ought to be ashamed."

"I won't make you my trouble," shivered Tom; "I won't distress you! There—I beg your pardon, Elsie, I am sorry! And you don't—you never can, Elsie, Elsie—"

"No, no, you silly old fellow, of course not! Now be good, and I'll forget all about this folly. Let me go, Tom, I can't stay here any longer—let me go."

Tom still held her hand.

"This is cruel!" he said.

"Yes, yes! Tom, if you don't let me go I'll scream! You are absurd—why, you ought to be put in a straight jacket."

Tom dropped her hand, and stood like a man overpowered by some sudden blow.

Elsie only saw the comical side of the matter, and began to laugh at him.

"Don't laugh," he said, passionately; "for God's sake, don't laugh!"

There was a depth of suffering in his tone which made itself felt even by that selfish creature; but it only made her begin to consider herself exceedingly ill-used, and to blame Tom for spoiling her pleasure.

"Now, you have to blame me," he said, angrily, "and I haven't done a thing to encourage you."

"No, no; I don't blame you, Elsie," he said; "it's all my own fault—all mine."

"Yes, to be sure," cried Elsie. "Who could think you would be so foolish. There, shake hands, Tom, for I'm in a hurry. You are not angry?"

"Angry—I!" said Tom, drearily.

"That's right! Good-by—you'll be wiser to-morrow."

Elsie danced away, and Tom watched her float out of the room, and realized that she was floating out of his life forever, that the dream of the past was at an end, and there he was left alone in the darkness.

Poor old Tom! It was very hard, but no one could have resisted a smile at his appearance! When Elsie had left him, he dashed out of the room, and hid himself in the most out of the way corner he could find.

As he crossed the hall, he heard Elizabeth call—

"Tom, Tom!"

He stopped, and she came towards him. One look at his face revealed the whole truth. She did not speak, but took his hand in hers, with a mute expression of sympathy which overpowered him.

"Don't I don't!" he said. "Let me go, Bessie! I'm a fool—I'm all over out! There, don't mind me—I'll be better soon! I've got a chance to go to Europe for awhile, in fact it's to Calcutta. I shall be all right when I come back."

"Oh, my poor old Tom! Elsie is a wicked girl to have trifled with you so."

"She didn't," he exclaimed, indignantly. "Don't you go to blaming her. I won't have it. There's nobody in fault but me. I deserve it all! I'm a blundering, wrong-headed donkey, as I own it!"

"But you won't go away, Tom!"

"Yes, I will. I shan't be gone but a few months. Don't try to keep me. I'll be right as a trivet when we meet again."

"Oh, Tom, Tom!" said Elizabeth.

"Now, be still; that's a good girl; I don't want to be pitied. It's of no consequence, not the slightest."

He broke abruptly away from her, and disappeared, leaving Elizabeth full of sympathy for his distress, and regret at the idea of losing her old playmate—she had depended on him so much during her husband's absence.

There had been a lull in the music, but it struck up again now, and the saloons reverberated with a stirring waltz. Elizabeth stood a moment listening to the crash of sound and the tread of light feet, but her heart was full and her eyes anxious. She went to the window and looked out. It was a lovely night, and the eternal roll and sweep of the ocean seemed to deprive the ball-room of some audible dread. In all that splendid tumult she was alone. As she stood by the window her husband came down the hall sailing upon the light wings upon his arm. He had not missed her, would not miss her. There was no fear of that. She glided away with this dreary thought in her mind. Mellen almost touched her as he turned into a little room opening upon the conservatory, but she past on unnoticed.

Tom Fuller had retreated into the conservatory, and was sitting disconsolately in an iron garden chair, sheltered by a small tree, dropping with yellow fringe-like blossoms, when a lady entered from one of the side doors, and passed out towards the gardens.

Tom started up, and called out, "Bessie! Why, Bessie, is that you? What on earth—"

The lady made no response, but walked over her shoulder, and sprang forward like a deer, causing a tumult among the plants as she rushed through them.

Tom stood motionless, lost in amazement; for over a bull dress, which seemed white, he could discover nothing more. The lady was shrouded head and person, in a black shawl, which he knew to be Elizabeth's, from a broad crimson stripe that ran across it.

After his first amazement Tom sat down again, leaving a deep sigh, and retreating further behind the flowering branches, that no one might look upon his unmanly sorrow.

"Poor Bessie, poor thing," he muttered, "I suppose she feels just as I do, like a fish out of water, in all these fine doings. I'd follow her, and we'd take a melancholy walk together in the moonlight, if it was not that Elsie might happen to get tired of dancing with those fellows, and come in here to rest a minute, when I could hide away and look at her through the plants."

Tom had in reality startled the lady shrouded in that great travelling shawl, for once out of doors she stood full half a minute listening with bated breath, and one foot advanced ready to spring away. Her sound reached her. Then she walked on with less desperate haste, bending her course through the shrubberies, and among the trees that lay between the open grounds and the shore.

It was a balmy October evening, moonlight, but shadowed by boats of white scudding clouds. There had been no freeze from the land, and scattered storms of gorgeous leaves around her as she approached the grove which was still heavy with foliage, particularly in the middle, where it made all shadows and blackness. On the edge of the grove, just under a vast old oak, whose great limbs scarcely swayed in the wind, the lady paused and uttered another sigh—a low, cautious voice.

A spark of fire flashed down among the leaves, as if some one had flung away his cigar in haste, and instantly footsteps crushed in the dead leaves. The branches of the oak beat low, and behind it was a thicket of young trees. The lady did not feel safe, even in the darkness, but moved on to meet the person who advanced in the deeper shadows, where even the edges of her white dress, which fell below the shawl, were lost to the eye.

As she stood panting in the shelter, a man's voice addressed her, and his hand was laid upon her shoulder.

"How you tremble!"

The voice sounded, in that balmy October night, sweet and mellow as the dropping of its over-ripe leaves. The female did indeed tremble violently.

"Look, look! I saw a light," she whispered.

The man stepped a pace forward, peered through the oak branches, and stole cautiously to her side again.

"It is Mellen!"

She darted away, dragging her shawl from the grasp he had fastened upon it,—away under the old oak, and along the outskirts of the grove. She paused a moment in breathless terror at the narrowest point of the lawn, then darted across it, huddling the skirt of her ball dress up with one hand, and sweeping the dead leaves in winrows after her with the fringes of her shawl. She avoided the conservatory, for Tom was still visible through its rolling waves of glass—and, turning to the servant's entrance, ran up a flight of dark stairs into the shaded lights of a chamber. She flung the heavy shawl breathlessly on a couch, where the snowy masses of her dress into decorous folds, and stole to the window-sill to see where she stood, white and panting, but breath, watching the lawn and grove, with wild, eager eyes, as if she feared her deeds in the leaves might have been detected even in the darkness.

CHAPTER IX.

THE evening was passing drearily enough to Grantley Mellen. He was in no spirits for society and the gay bustle; the lights, the music, the constraint he was forced to put upon himself, and the cheerfulness he was obliged to assume, only wearied him.

A strange and unaccountable dread of his approaching journey possessed him. It had grown stronger as the days passed on, and that night was more powerful than ever.

Sometimes he was almost ready to think it a warning; perhaps he was never to return from that voyage; some unseen danger awaited him in that distant land, and he should die there, far from the sound of every voice, the touch of every hand that was dear to him.

He was vexed with himself for indulging in these superstitious weaknesses; but, in spite of all his efforts, the thought would recur again and again, oppressing him with a dreary sense of desolation that made the brilliant scene around absolutely repulsive.

He slipped out of the lighted rooms at last, passed through the hall on to the piazza which looked over the sea.

It was a beautiful evening; the moonlight, escaping from under a bank of clouds, lay silvery and broad upon the lawn, blazed across the rippling waters, lighting them up to wonderful splendor, and trasforming every object in its rays. The air was balmy and soft as spring, the wind ripples pleasantly among the trees, but there was no melody in its tone to his ear; it seemed only a repetition of the mournful warning which had been in his thoughts.

He walked on across the lawn, anxious to get beyond the sound of the music and gayety which followed him from the house, and jarred upon his ears with deafening loudness.

He entered a little thicket of bushes and young trees, in the midst of which rose up a dark, funereal-looking cedar, whose branches waved its branches tremulously, however still the air might be, and seemed to be oppressed with a trouble which it could not utter.

As he stood there, looking into the gloom, with a sense of relief at finding some object more in unison with his dark thoughts, he saw a figure glide away from the foot of the cypress, and disappear in the shrubbery beyond.

It was a woman wrapped in some dark garment—it looked like Elizabeth—could it be his wife wandering about the grounds at that hour?

"Elizabeth!" he called; but there was no answer.

He hurried forward among the trees, but there was only a faint echo in response to the summons he repeated several times.

It might be some guest who had stolen out there for a few minutes quiet; yet that was not probable. Besides, the woman appeared to be slender form appeared familiar to him. In height and shape Elsie and Elizabeth resembled each other; it looked like one of them.

Elsie it could not be, she had a nervous dread of stirring off the piazza after nightfall. It must have been Elizabeth, then; but what was she doing there! His thoughts were in a tumult with some vague thought in his mind, to which he could have given no expression.

He was not in any of the rooms through which he passed, and he hurried into the ball-room. The music had just struck up anew; he saw Elsie whirling away through a waltz; but Elizabeth was nowhere visible.

He got near enough to Elsie to whisper—

"Where is Bessie?"

"I don't know," she answered. "I have been dancing all the while, and have not seen her for some time."

He turned away; but, just then, Mrs. Harrington captured him, and it was several moments before he could escape from her tiresome loquacity.

He hurried through the parlors and up the stairs, opened the door of Elizabeth's dressing-room, and entered. There she was, standing at the window, and looking out. She turned quickly, and in a sort of confusion let fall the window entrance,

"Is it you?" she asked.

"Yes; I have been looking for you everywhere."

"I came up here for a moment's quiet," she answered; "I am very, very tired; I wish it was all over, Grantley."

"Have you been out?" he asked.

It seemed to him that she hesitated a little, as she answered—

"Out? No; where—what do you mean?"

"I thought I saw you in the grounds a little while ago."

"I should not be likely to go out in this dress," she replied, glancing down at her point lace flounces. "Come, sit down on the stairs; our guests will think us very careless hosts."

Mellen felt and looked dissatisfied, but could not well press the matter further.

"Are you coming?" she asked.

"Yes; of course," he replied, coldly. "Don't wait for me."

She walked away without another word.

"She avoids me," he thought. "I see it more and more."

The ball was over at last. Even Elsie was completely tired out, and glad to creep away to her bed when the guests had departed.

With the next morning began preparations for Mellen's departure; and during the bustle of the following week, no one found much time for thought or reflection.

Tom Fuller came down suddenly, and opened his heart to Elizabeth. He was going to Europe; he did not ask to see Elsie; he felt that he had not the courage to meet her again for the present—once more, perhaps, he might meet away; but not yet.

Elizabeth did not reproach the girl for her share in the honest fellow's unhappiness. She merely said—

"Tom is going to Europe on business; he sails next week."

"Oh, the foolish old fellow," replied Elsie; "and he never could learn to speak a French word correctly—what fun it would be to see him."

"You will miss him," Mellen said, quietly.

"Oh," replied his wife, with a forced smile, "I must make up my mind to be lonely. I shall live through these months as I best can."

"It's horrid of you to go, Grant!" cried Elsie.

"I know it, dear; but there is no use fighting the unavoidable."

"Mind you write to me as often as you do to Bessie," she said. "If she gets one letter the most I never will forgive either of you."

She ran up to her brother, and stood leaning against his shoulder, with a playful air, while he looked down at her with such entire love and trust in his face, that Elizabeth crept quietly away, and left them together.

The few days left to Mellen passed in a tumult of preparation. Sad doubts were at his heart, vague and so formless that he could not have expressed them in words, but painful as proven realities.

Elizabeth was greatly disturbed also; her fine color had almost entirely disappeared. She trembled at all sudden sounds, and her eyes rings would turn white when she spoke of her husband's departure. She seemed stricken with a mortal terror of his going, and was unable to rouse herself to detain him. She, too, had presentiments of evil that shocked her whole system, and made her brightest smile something mournful to look upon.

But the husband and wife had little opportunity to observe or understand the feelings that tortured them both. Elsie's cries, and tears, and hysterics, spoons, kept the whole household in commotion. She should never see her brother again—never, never. Elizabeth might not be good to her. Sisters-in-law and school-friends were different creatures; she had found that out already. If she could only have died with her mother!

These cries broke out vehemently on the night before Mellen's departure. The child-wife could not allow her brother to spend one moment from her side. So all that night, Elizabeth, pale, still, and heart-sick, sat in the sweet-scented rose-garden trouble; for Elsie loved her brother dearly, and his departure agitated her more deeply than he could have supposed possible before.

How lovely she looked with the drops trembling on those long, golden lashes, and staining the warm cheek like dew-gems! One arm, from which the muslin sleeve had fallen back, lay under her head, half-buried in a tangle of curls; soba broke at intervals through her parted lips, ending in long, troubled sighs.

Mellen was deeply touched. Elizabeth bent her head against the end of the couch and wept unrestrainedly. Large drops of sympathy fell on her bosom. She shuddered visibly when the first sunbeam fell through the curtains. Only a few moments were left to them. Sick and faint, she lifted her head and looked at her husband with eyes full of [illegible]—eyes so full of yearning agony, that his heart must have leaped through all its doubts to meet them. But he only gazed on her face with coldness. The long, black lashes drooped over those grey eyes when she found their appeal disregarded, and the young wife shrunk within herself, shuddering at her own loneliness.

A servant came to the room, and by a sign announced breakfast. It was the last meal they might ever take together. She arose from the couch both, and brought their hands in contact with a thrilling sleep. He drew her arm through his, and led her down stairs. She felt his head bending against her arm, looked up, and saw that he was regarding her with glances of searching tenderness. Her eyes filled; her bosom heaved; and, but for a wild struggle, she could have burst into a passion of tears before the servant, who held the door open for them to pass into the breakfast-room.

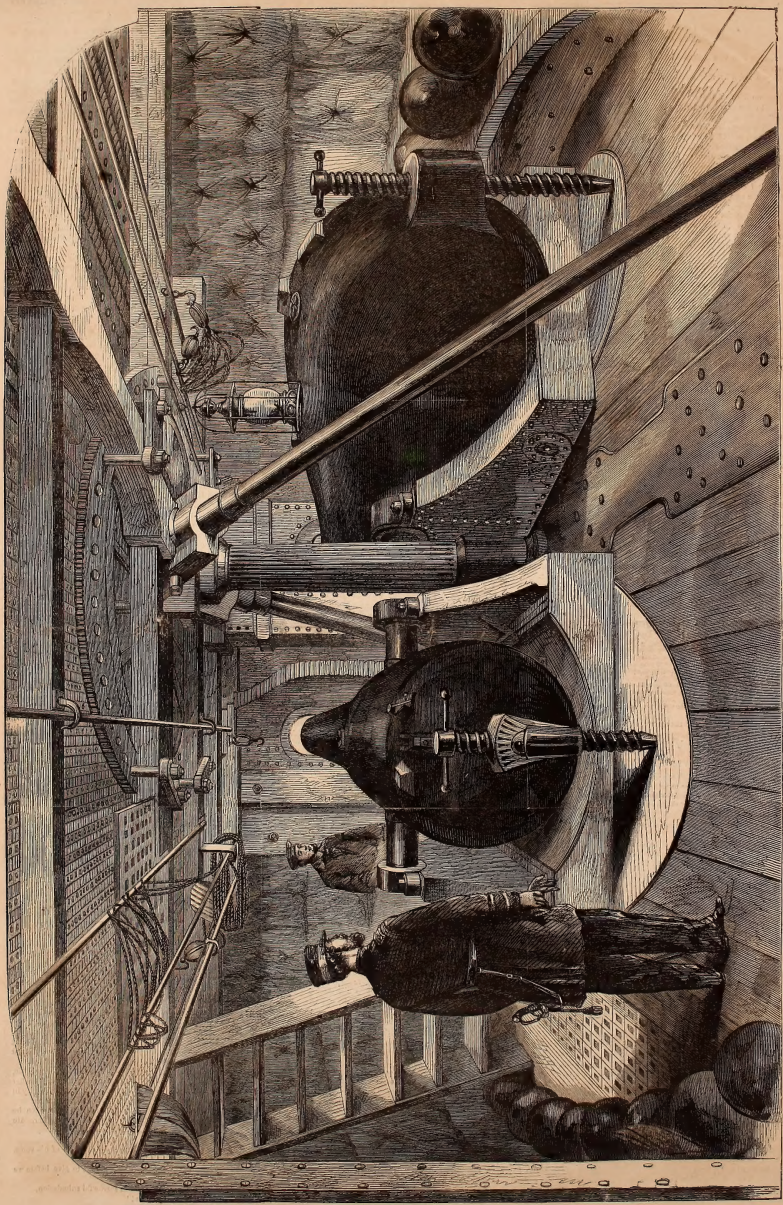
How bright and cheerful it looked—the crusted snow of the linen; the delicately chased silver, and more delicate china; and this was their last meal. She sat down and poured out his coffee. Her hand trembled so much that it sent its smile when he took the cup and praised its aroma. She drank some herself, for the child at her heart was spreading to her face and hands.

Little was said during the meal, and less was eaten. Elizabeth looked at the clock as a convict gazes on the axe that is to slay him. She counted the minutes as they swept away the brief time which was yet, given to them, while he glanced at his watch, nervously, every few minutes.

They went up stairs again. Elizabeth turned from Elsie's door and went into her own dressing-room. With all her magnanimity she could not give her husband up to his sister during the last moments of his stay. He followed her into the room, but directly lifted the curtain and went into Elsie's boudoir, where the young girl lay profoundly sleeping. Elizabeth would not follow. Her heart was swelling too painfully. She sat down, clasped both hands in her lap, and waited like a statue.

Then she had only crossed the boudoir, bent over Elsie, and pressed a cautious but most loving kiss on her forehead. She did not move, but smiled softly in her sleep, and he also went away, blessing her.

Elizabeth's heart gave a sudden leap when he came into her room again and sat down by her. He felt how cold her hand was, and kissed it.



"Elizabeth!"

She turned, frightened by the tone of his voice. It was hoarse with emotion.

"Elizabeth, I have one charge to give before we part."

She bent her head in sorrowful submission.

"Elsie, my sister!"

OUR IRONCLAD FLEET.—INTERIOR OF THE TURRET OF THE MONITOR MONTAUK.—From a Sketch by our Special Artist, W. T. Crane.

THE MONEY CRISIS IN THE SOUTH—AUCTION SALE OF A FIVE DOLLAR GOLD PIECE AT DANVILLE, NEAR THE NORTH CAROLINA BORDER.—FROM A SKETCH BY A UNION PRISONER.

AUCTION SALE OF A FIVE DOLLAR GOLD PIECE AT DANVILLE, N. C.

WE hear of extravagant coin sales here sometimes, and the hall of Messrs Bangs, Merwin & Co. often witnesses the eager contest between excited numismatists, who bid dollars on dollars for a 1793 cent or Bond Baltimore farthing, or a New York doubloon; but who ever expected to see an ordinary five dollar gold piece put up and bid for with equal if not greater eagerness? Such was actually the case at Danville, N. C., where a five dollar gold piece was, the North Carolina Times tells us, put up at auction. What a change had secession brought! Who, that had seen the ball at one of its slave sales, the scene of excited competition, would have believed that the darling theory of secession would ever bring a company together to a sale of a half eagle? The bidding was spirited, and the piece was at last knocked down for $150 Confederate money, the people deeming the old Government worth 30 of the new.

COUNTY BUILDINGS AT OPELOUSAS, LA.

OPELOUSAS is an interesting spot in Louisiana, from the fact that it was settled by some of those unfortunate Acadians who were so brutally torn from their homes in Nova Scotia, and after seeing their dwellings and farms given to the flames, driven on shipboard, without regard to family ties, and then scattered helpless and destitute in the Atlantic colonies from Massachusetts to Georgia. Longfellow, in his Evangeline, has made immortal the sorrows of two faithful betrothed; but the miseries of others remain unsung. A large number gradually reached Louisiana, where they were welcomed by the French and settled on the beautiful rolling prairies of Opelousas. Their descendants still occupy it and live a pastoral life amid their immense herds of cattle. The town contains about 2,500 inhabitants, and has a courthouse and jail, which we represent, as well as a church, founded in 1760, by the Capucin friars, and an Ursuline convent.

COUNTY BUILDINGS AT OPELOUSAS, LA.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. BONWILL.

THE DIVERS AT CHARLESTON.

THE monitors require constant care to maintain their efficiency, and the Government, among other things, employs divers to clean the bottoms and perform other subaqueous labors.

Their principal diver—appropriately named Waters—is so used to this work that he has become almost amphibious, remaining for five or six hours at a time under water. A man of herculean strength and proportions, when clad in his submarine armor he becomes monstrous in size and appearance. A more singular sight than to see him roll or tumble into the water and disappear from sight, or popping up, blowing, as the air escapes from his helmet, like a young whale, can scarcely be imagined.

Waters has his own ideas of a joke, and when he has a curious audience will wave his scraper about as he "looks around" on the water, with the air of a veritable river god. One of his best jokes—the better for being a veritable fact—is illustrated by our Artist. Whilst he was employed scraping the hull of one of the monitors, a negro from one of the up river plantations came alongside with a boatload of watermelons. Whilst busy selling his melons, the diver came up, and rested on the side of the boat. The negro stared at the extraordinary appearance thus suddenly coming out of the water with alarmed wonder, but when the diver seized one of the best melons in the boat and disappeared under the water, the gurgling of the air from the helmet mixing with his muffled laughter, the fright of the negro and his comrades reached a climax. He has not been seen in the vicinity of Station creek since. He cannot be tempted beyond the bounds of his plantation, and believes that the Yankees have brought river devils to aid them in making war.

THE DIVERS AT CHARLESTON—FRIGHT OF NEGRO FRUIT VENDORS AT THE SUDDEN APPEARANCE OF A SUPPOSED SEA MONSTER.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE.

The diver, when clothed in his armor, is weighed with 185 pounds. Besides this armor he has two leaden pads, fitting to his breast and back. The soles of his shoes are of lead, an inch and a half thick. All this weight is needed to overcome the buoyancy given by the mass of air forced into the armor and dress, the latter of indiarubber, worn by the diver. When below the surface he can instantly bring himself up by closing momentarily the aperture in the helmet for the escape of the air. His buoyancy is immediately increased, and he pops up like a cork and floats at will upon the surface.

The work of scraping the bottoms of the monitors is very arduous. The diver sits upon a spar, lashed athwart the bottom of the vessel, so arranged as to be moved as the work progresses, and with a scraper fixed to a long handle works on both sides of himself as far as he can reach. The mass of oysters that become attached to the iron hulls of one of the monitors, even during one summer here, is immense. By actual measurement it was estimated that 250 bushels of oysters, shells and seagrass were taken from the bottom of the Montauk alone.

The Author of Coningsby.—In an article on the pecuniary windfall which Mr. Disraeli has received, the Philadelphia Press says: "Coming back to Mr. Disraeli, we can state that his family certainly emigrated from Spain to Venice more than a century ago, and that the family name was Lara. Its head at that time was a wealthy merchant, who, like Shylock, had vast dealings 'on the Rialto.' In Venice, at that time, there was a greater tolerance of religious opinion than in any other part of southern Europe. No one ever heard of an auto-da-fe in Venice. Lara finally removed to London, where he formally appeared as a Christian; he had conformed to that faith soon after quitting Spain, but, proud of his ancient lineage, assumed the name of Disraeli (literally a son of Israel) to perpetuate the fact of his Hebrew descent. The son of this gentleman was the late Isaac Disraeli, well known as a man of letters, and the present representative of the family is the Right Hon. Benjamin Disraeli, Chancellor of the Exchequer—the same to whom Mrs. Brydges Willyams has bequeathed the bulk of her fortune."

One Flag or no Flag.

PATRIOTIC SONG, dedicated to the Army and Navy of the Union, by Clara M. Brinkerhoff. Published by WM. HALL & SON, 543 Broadway, N. Y. Price 30 cents.

VALENTINES

To the Trade.

Call or send to Headquarters. Catalogues sent free by mail. A better assortment, on more liberal terms, than any other dealer can offer. Address

BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, 455 Broadway, N.Y. (Store and Manufactory.)

Billiard Balls!

Patent Compressed Ivory, 2¼ and 2⅜ in., $10 per set; 2 in. Bagatelle Balls, $8 per set; 1⅞ in. Bagatelle, $7; warranted for six months. WM. M. WELLING, Agent, 207 Centre Street, New York, sign of the Golden Elephant.

Lenhart's Elements of Music.

A clear and Systematic Arrangement of Rules for the Pianoforte. To which are added Burrowes's Guide to Practice, and Czerny's Celebrated Letters on the Art of Playing on the Piano. This new hand-book of elements will be found to be the best work of the kind for beginners. Price 40 cents. Sent postpaid.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, 277 Washington St., Boston.

THE STANDARD

AMERICAN BILLIARD TABLE

AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

Approved and adopted by the Billiard Congress of 1833. The best and only reliable Billiard Table manufactured. Balls, Cues, and every article relating to Billiards, for sale by

PHELAN & COLLENDER,
434-7 Corner of Crosby and Spring Sts., N. Y.

THE GAITERETTE.

Made of Patent Leather, lined with Kid, ornamented with Pearl Agate Buttons and stitched with exceeding neatness and taste. Lady skaters and others, requiring additional support or protection for the ankle, will find the "Gaiterette" of great service.

GEORGE W. LUDLOW & CO., Sole Manufacturers, Elizabeth, N. J.

Sportsmen, Tourists, and Army and Navy Officers.

Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Portability combined with great power in Field, Marine, Tourists', Opera and general out-door day and night double perspective glasses, will show distinctly a person to know him at from 2 to 6 miles. Spectacles of the greatest transparent power to strengthen and improve the sight, without the distressing result of frequent changes. Catalogues sent by enclosing stamp.

SEMMONS, Oculists—Opticians,
0000 669½ Broadway, N. Y.

DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,

(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),

No. 87 Bowery, New York.

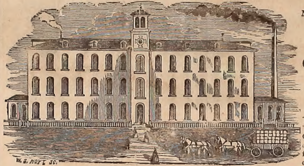
This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash. Their stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $22 to $100.



TUCKER'S NEW STYLE PATENT SPRING BED,

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each. Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

Every Co. from A to M, and every Corps Badge worn by the Army constantly on hand, Engraved to order, and sent free on receipt of price. Also Cavalry and Artillery Badges. A splendid list of Premiums offered to Clubs. Don't fail to send for an Illustrated Catalogue. Address

C. L. BALCH & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,

SOLE MANUFACTURERS of the celebrated ALBERTINE GOLD PENS AND IMPROVED EXTENSION HOLDERS

Of the most handsome and durable construction, in fancy cases, of one dozen each.

Not sold in less quantities. Will retail for $3 each.

Price, per	Dozen	$10 25.
"	3 Dozen	25 00.
"	6 Dozen	45 00.
"	12 Dozen	82 50.

Sent by mail or express, prepaid, Address

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO., Providence, R. I.

FRANK LESLIE'S

BUDGET OF FUN,

FOR MARCH,

The Only Successful Comic Paper,

IS JUST PUBLISHED.

Its large Cartoons are unequalled for their truth and satirical power.

The End of the Rebellion, or the Longest Purse wins.

Secretary Welles put upon his metal.

An American Parrot disturbing the Mexican Thieves.

How John Bull looks on the Rebels now.

And numerous other illustrations by the best living Artists—Leech, Bellew, Newman, Fisk, McLenan, &c., beside 16 pages (same size as Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper) of the best Literature, both Comic and Serious.

ONLY TEN CENTS.

FRANK LESLIE'S Publication Office, 72 Duane Street, N. Y.

Hawkes's Diamond Pointed Gold Pen

Medium	Pen	$0 50	Commercial	Pen	$1 25
Large	"	0 63	Mammoth	"	1 50
Engrossing	"	0 75	Leviathan	"	2 00

Also, Fountain Pens—one filling will write eight to fifteen hours. Send stamp for Circular.

GEO. F. HAWKES, Manufacturer,
432-6 64 Nassau Street, N. Y.

$60 A MONTH! We want Agents at $60 a month expenses paid, to sell our Everlasting Pencils, Oriental Burners, and 13 other articles. 15 Circulars free. SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Me.

Do you want to get Married?

If so, don't fail to buy "Courtship Made Easy," a Book of 100 pages, Illustrated, containing full instructions in the Art of "Psychologic Fascination," with Explanatory Charts enabling any person, of either sex to fascinate and win the undying love of any person they choose instantly, thus rendering success in courtship certain. Sent by mail for 50 cents and two red stamps.

Address E. D. LOCKE & CO.,
435-9 Box 1525, Portland, Maine.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT

SMOKING CASE!

Most ingenious in its combination of the Metallic Case, containing Pipe and Stem, Matches and Pipe Cleaner, with a handsome Tobacco Pouch attached, filling the Pipe by a valve, without use of the fingers or waste of tobacco, the whole securing freedom from all odor, and portable as a Cigar Case. It is made for service, of various and handsome styles, at $1 50, $2, $2 25, $2 50 and $3 to $3 75 and $5; the two latter richly Plated and Engraved. Nothing can excel its Comfort, Utility and Economy for all Smokers. As a Present to Friends nothing could be more acceptable.

FOR THE SOLDIER IT IS INVALUABLE.

Also

The Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco!

Of superior quality and flavor, in packages to fill the case (about a week's smoking, $2 25 per dozen), and of various Sizes for the general Trade. A liberal discount to Dealers. Single Cases sent by mail, paid, on receipt of price and 25 cents. Also, half pound packages of this fine Tobacco; full weight sent (carefully put up) by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 25.

RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO., Office 429 Broadway, cor. Howard St., N. Y.

FURS! FURS!! FURS!!!

Ladies and Misses Fine Furs, in Sable, Mink, Ermine, Siberian Squirrel, etc.

Gents' Fur Caps, Mufflers and Gauntlets, in Seal Otter, Beaver, etc.

Sleigh Robes in variety. Retailed at Wholesale Prices.

BURKE (successor to WATKINS), 210 Broadway, corner Fulton street.

GREAT TRIUMPH.

STEINWAY & SONS, Nos. 82 and 84 Walker Street, N. Y., were awarded a first prize medal at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.

The special correspondent of the New York Times says:

"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker." 0000

W. FORSYTH & CO.,

42 and 44 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office), offer for sale the following Magnificent List of

WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.

Valued at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

		Each
150	Gold and Silver Watches	$15 to $100
200	Ladies' Gold Watches	$35
500	Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	$15
2500	Vest and Neck Chains	$5 00 to $10 00
3000	Gold Band Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00
3000	Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 to 5 00
3000	Cameo Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000	Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000	Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000	Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000	Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000	Coral Ear Drops	4 00 to 8 00
5000	Gent's Breast Pins	2 50 to 8 00
3000	Watch Keys	2 00 to 6 00
2500	Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 6 00
2500	Sets of Bosom Studs	2 50 to 6 00
2500	Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 6 00
5000	Plain Rings	2 50 to 5 00
5000	Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 6 00
5000	Lockets	2 50 to 6 00
10000	Sets of Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00
10000	Gold Pens, Silver Mt'ed Holders	4 00 to 5 00
5000	Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00

The articles in this stock of Jewelry are of the neatest and most fashionable styles. Certificates of all the various articles are put in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, thus giving all a fair chance, and sent by mail for 25 cents each; and on receipt of the Certificate, it is at your option to send One Dollar and take the article named in it, or not. Five Certificates, $1; eleven, $2; thirty, $5; sixty-five, $10; one hundred, $15; Certificate money to be enclosed with order. Correspondence promptly answered.

AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow them ten cents on every Certificate, provided their remittance amounts to $1, and more liberal inducements to those who buy largely. Send for Circular. Address

W. FORSYTH & CO., 42 and 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

$100 a Month made by discharged soldiers and others with stencil tools. Don't fail to send for a free catalogue containing full particulars. Address MILLIKEN & SPENCER, Vermont Record office, Brandon, Vt. 437-40

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers, Something New. The Traveller's Companion; or, Burglar's Proof Traveller's Lock. Samples sent by mail, 50 cents. Send stamp for Circular.

436-7 S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

Miss Braddon's New Novel.

UNPARALLELED ATTRACTIONS!!

Every lady should secure an early number of

FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE

FOR MARCH, 1864,

Containing the sequel of Miss Braddon's new and exciting Romance,

THE DOCTOR'S WIFE,

the advanced sheets of which were obtained at a cost of $3,000.

This will be esteemed beyond all doubt her greatest and ablest work, having been secured by Temple Bar at an enormous cost.

Our March number will contain a splendid double page colored Fashion plate, showing eight full dresses, a four page Fashion plate; new styles of Bonnets, Caps and Head-dresses, and twelve pages of miscellaneous patterns, a number of interesting Tales, Sketches and Illustrations.

Every lady should take it for these reasons, and

1st.—Because it is the earliest chronicler of the latest Parisian Fashions.

2d.—Because it has established Agents in Paris, London and Berlin, who forward by every Steamer the latest novelties, in advance of their publication in those cities, exclusively for this Magazine.

3d.—Because, having the Largest Engraving Establishment in this country, the Publisher possesses unequalled facilities for rapidly reproducing Fashion Plates for this Magazine.

4th.—Because the Colored Steel Fashion Plate is double the size of the largest plate published in any other Magazine. It consequently contains twice the number of Models for Dresses.

5th.—Because it contains a full-sized Cut Pattern of some new garment for Lady's use, imported expressly for this Magazine.

6th.—Because it also contains a Mammoth Four Page Engraving of the latest Modes—the largest Fashion Plate ever published in any Magazine.

7th.—Because, in addition to the Fashions, a large space is devoted to choice Literary Matter, including Illustrated Tales, Biographies, etc.

8th.—Because One Hundred Dollars expended in procuring Foreign Fashion Books would give less available information than can be had in Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine for $3 per annum.

9th.—Because each number contains over 100 Engravings of the latest style for Morning, Walking, Dinner and Evening Costume for Ladies and Children.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
308 Broadway, New York.

Attention, Soldiers!

In solid 18 k. gold, $3 50.

Every soldier should have A BADGE WITH HIS NAME MARKED DISTINCTLY upon it. The Subscribers will forward to any soldier in the army a solid Silver Badge with his Name, Company and Regiment engraved upon it, on receipt of One Dollar. The above cut represents size and style of Badge furnished. It can be fastened to any garment. Address

DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewellers, Providence, R. I.

All kinds of Army Corps, Co. and Division Pins to order.

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,

Agents for the United States for the celebrated

ALBERTINE

EXTENSION HOLDERS & GOLD PENS

Of the most handsome and durable construction, put up in new fancy cases of one dozen each, and not sold in any less quantities. They will retail for $3 each.

Price, per dozen $10 25
" 3 dozen 25 00

Sent by mail or express, prepaid. Address
SALISBURY, BRO. & CO., Providence, R. I.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ORGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of money order.

R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

It penetrates to the very seat of this terrible disease, and exterminates it in a short month, for ever. DR. GOODALE is the first and only person who ever told the world what Catarrh really was—when it commenced—and what would cure it. Price $1. Send stamp for a Pamphlet. Depot, 612 Broadway, N.Y. NORTON & CO., Sole Agents.

Travelling Salesmen Wanted.

$75 a month, expenses paid, or a commission on sales. Apply to ISAAC HALE, Jr., & CO.,
433-38 Newburyport, Mass.

Union Playing Cards!

National American Amusement Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. 52 enamelled cards to the pack. Eagle, Shield, Stars and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. Two packs mailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for Circular. Address

AMERICAN CARD CO.,
000 655 Broadway, or 165 William St., N. Y.

Beauty.—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID EXAM EL, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Lady Beauty Doctor, whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a brilliant transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 123 South-Seventh Street, and 41 South-Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

WANTED! WANTED!

Do You Want Splendid Whiskers or Moustaches?

HUNTER'S ORGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Also, on Bald Heads, in ten weeks. Two Boxes for $1. Postage free. Address

C. L. BRIGGS, Milwaukee, Wis

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS FROM LIFE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.,
20 cents each. $1 50 per doz. Sent by mail. Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1016, New York city. Send for circular.

J. G. SCHULL.

MERCHANT TAILOR

38 Ann Street, New York,

Has on hand a splendid assortment of French, English and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings which he is prepared to make up in the most fashionable style and on the most reasonable terms for cash

Headquarters for Officers' and Soldiers' Pins of Every Description!

We will send either Army Corps, Division or Company Pin, in Solid Silver, with your Name, Regiment and Co. handsomely Engraved upon it, on the receipt of $1. Also, a Kearney Cross in Fine Gold Plate for $1, or a New Style Solid Silver Cavalry Pin, Engraved as above, for $1 50.

☞ Agents sending for 10 or more at one time will be allowed 15 cents on each.

ALSO, THE EMPORIUM FOR WATCHES AND JEWELRY.

75,000 Watches, Gold Pens and Pencils,

Vest, Guard and Neck Chains, Chatelains Chains and Pins, Engraved Bracelets, Engraved Spring Lockets, Seal Stone Rings California Rings, Chased Rings, Masonic Rings and Pins, Gents' California Diamond Pins, California Diamond Ear Drops, Beautiful Sets of Jewelry, New Style Studs and Buttons, etc., etc., etc.,

WORTH $400,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

Certificates naming each article are put into Envelopes, Sealed and Mixed, and sent without regard to choice.

In all instances by mail we will charge for doing the business, and no one need be ashamed when the request is made to know what you can have after knowing what you can have, then it will be at your option to send One Dollar, take the article or not.

Five Certificates can be ordered for $1—eleven for $2—thirty for $5—sixty-five for $10—and one hundred for $15.

With full information of what you can have will be sent a Circular giving full instructions to Agents and a full Catalogue of articles,

Box 4876, N. Y. . S. M. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway, New York.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO.,

ARMY WATCHES!

Solid Silver Hunting Cased Lever Watch, Jewelled, English Movements and Silver Cap, only $11,

The Great New Army Watch for Soldiers in very heavy Solid Silver Hunting Cases, fine English Lever Movement, full Ruby Jewelled, and finely finished Engine-turned, Engraved or Plain Cases, warranted a perfect timekeeper, only $15.

Gold Composite, same as above, $15.

Very fine Double Bottom, Silver, English Lever Hunting Watch, full Jewelled, Chronometer Balance, $25.

Officer's Watch.

Genuine American Lever Watch, in 4 oz. Sterling Silver Cases, full Jewelled and Double Bottom Cases, $25.

Elegant Watch same as above, with Chronometer Balance, $45

Splendid 18 karat very heavy Gold Cased American Lever Watch, $65.

Same as the above, with Chronometer Balance, $80

Ladies' Elegant Gold-Plated Watch, very small, only $16.

18 karat Gold Hunting Lever Watch, Ruby Jewelled, in every action.—M. Tobias—only $35.

Constantly on hand Watches of Every Description.

We will send, on receipt of the price, any of the above watches, free of express, to any address.

All registered letters, if properly sealed, come at our risk.

All Watches registered 20 cents extra.

☞ We give an Elegant Gold-Plated Chain with all our Watches.

GEORGE A ELY & CO., Importers,
P. O. Box 5614. 208 Broadway, New York.

Dr. C. Perry,

DERMATOLOGIST,

No. 49 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.
(Formerly of No. 29 Winter St., Boston.)

Treats successfully all

Diseases of the Scalp, Loss of Hair and Premature Blanching;

ALSO

Removes MOTH, FRECKLES, and other DISCOLORATIONS from the FACE, without injury to the texture or Color of the Skin.

☞ NO CHARGE FOR CONSULTATION. ☜

For particulars address, enclosing stamp.

DR. C. PERRY,
436tow 49 Bond Street, N. Y.

DIARIES FOR 1864.

From 25 cents to $2 each. All kinds of Writing Paper, Blank Books and Stationery. Also, Chessmen, Backgammon Boards, Dominoes, Expense Books, Envelopes, Portfolios, Pocket Books, etc., etc. Please call or send your orders to

FRANCIS & LOUTREL, Stationers,
437-49 45 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Merchants, Bankers, Teachers and Others,

Are warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular.

J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce Street, N. Y.

WEDDING CARDS.

French Note Papers, Seals and Monograms, Dies, etc., etc.
J. Iredell, 321 Broadway, cor. Jones St.
☞ Circular by mail, one 3 cent stamp.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement is within the reach of everybody, of success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cts., together with a guide to the development of both sexes —an extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition; over 20,000 sold in England. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of AMERICAN PEOPLE.

And the rapidly increasing decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by DR. STONE, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes of Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

☞ Fill out to send two red stamps and obtain the book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute;
Consultation for Diseases of Head, Throat and Lungs, No. 96 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 420-42

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD!

30,000 WATCHES, CHAINS, &c.

WORTH $150,000,

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing full list of articles and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

Six Certificates can be ordered for $1, thirteen for $2, thirty-five for $5, and one hundred for $15.

Address C. F. SHULTZ,
437-49 45 Nine Street, Troy, N. Y.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Marriage Guide and Model Adviser, by WM. EARL, M. D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cents. Address 64 White Street, New York. 435-38

We have furnished our Wesson's Rifles as follows:

State of Kentucky	1,366
State of Indiana	760
General Ripley	150
Colonel Collins	230
Capt. Hall's Co., Chillicothe, O.
Col. Grant's " Kansas.
Capt. Child's " Illinois.
Capt. Whyback's Co., Rolls, Mo.
Capt. McGee's " Lexington, Mo.
Capt. Hicks's " Sedalia, Mo.
Capt. Olds' " Perrysville, Ind.

HARTWOOD, Oct. 12, 1863.

DEAR SIR—The Rifle (No. 26) we've put to a severe test on the 7th, at the State Fair, AND WON A STAND UP COLLAR, and a certificate signed THREE INFANTRY COMPANIES. They were to fire in squads of six, each man hooking three shots, and to shoot at the command "Fire!" We were OUTNUMBERED TWO HUNDRED shots by the infantry. Distance 300 yards. We hit the target 45 times out of 100 shots. The greatest number of hits by any infantry company was 13. Thus establishing the superiority of the RIFLE OVER MUSKET.

M. S. GRANT,
Col. 1st Illinois Cav.

TO MAJOR SHAW, St. Louis, Mo.

B. KITTREDGE & CO.,
433-44 Cincinnati, Ohio.

$50 FOR $20.

SOLDIERS IN THE ARMY,

For $20 we will forward by mail or express, prepaid, the following articles: 1 Gold Plated Jewellery; 1 Vest Chains; 12 Gents' Solid and Seal Rings; 3 Gold Lockets; 1 Gold Pen and Pencil; 1 Gold Brooch; 1 Fancy Watch Keys; 1 Gleason or Scarf Pins; 4 pair Sleeve Buttons; 4 Sets of Studs; 1 Set Gentlemen's Jewellery; 3 Glass Lockets; and 3 Cluster Stone Pins. Address

THOMAS CAFFREY & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

"Moustaches and Whiskers in 42 Days." Dont be humbugged with ONGUENTS. The GREAT SECRET fully explained in the BOOK OF WONDERS, 19,000 sold. 18th Ed. Only 30 cts.; 3 for $1. Address F. E. MARSH, Troy, Rensselaer, N. Y.

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.—Superior to every other preparation for the hair in power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and natural appearance. It prevents it from falling out, to overcome effects of previous use of preparations containing mercury, regot of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for the whiskers.

HOYT'S MIZNEHAHA HAIR GLOSS, unexcelled to restore the hair to life and HOYT'S IMPERIAL COLORING CREAM Gold and more than one hundred years; changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.

HOYT'S CELEBRATED VIOLET POWDER imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and preserves youthfulness of appearance. Sold everywhere.

JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place.

Card Pictures, Photographs, &c.

K. W. BENICZKY,

HAVING ENLARGED AND IMPROVED HIS GALLERY, No. 3 ☞ NEW ☜ Chambers Street, has increased facilities for making Card Pictures and other Photographs. AT THE LOWEST PRICES.
000

The Great Money-Making Article.

Everybody wants it. Agents or Soldiers make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address

E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.
000

Straight Hair Made Wavy,

Without heating it, by using

IVIN'S PATENT HAIR CRIMPERS.

For Sale at Variety Stores. 434-46

Swords, Sashes, Belts.

Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords 431-56 B. KITTREDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

Watches

FOR THE

ARMY.

"Particularly valuable for officers in the army and travellers."—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 21.

"Prettiest, best and cheapest timepieces ever offered."—N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 16.

"Splendidly finished Watches, the beauty of which is only equalled by their cheapness."—N. Y. Weekly, July 22.

MAGIC TIME OBSERVERS!

THE PERFECTION OF MECHANISM!

BEING A HUNTING OR OPEN FACE OR LADY'S OR GENTLEMEN'S WATCH COMBINING WITH PATENT SELF-WINDING IMPROVEMENT.

A MOST PLEASING NOVELTY.

One of the neatest, most convenient, and decidedly the best ☞ chronometer timepiece for general and reliable use ☜ ever offered. It has within it, and connected with its machinery, its own winding attachment, rendering it by entirely unnecessary. The case of this Watch, the manufacture of which, for either one being fine 18-carat gold. It has the improved Patent Lever movement, and is warranted as accurate timepiece. Price, properly engraved, per case of half dozen, $36. Sample Watches, in neat morocco boxes, $3. By mail, the postage is 16 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!

FIRST-CLASS HUNTING TIMEPIECE

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES MUST ENSURE

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An institution so fruitless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of best quality, the outer case full, quality Sterling Silver, while the inner one is German Silver, it cannot corrode, and by cutting the engraving, making it not only in appearance, but in durability, the best imitation of GOLD EVER INTRODUCED in existence.

The sale of these Watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $30 and upwards. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single pay-day by any one of ordinary business tact.

☞ At WHOLESALE ONLY! In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, white enamel dial, delicacy cut hands, so good running order, by the half dozen, $66, postage, $2 36; Registered, 20 cents. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

☞ TERMS, CASH! INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE! No Agents employed; buyers must deal direct with us. If money is sent by express or mail in a registered letter, it is at our risk. Orders executed with the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., Importers,
428 160 Broadway and 3 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

Personal.—Any young Lady or Gentleman can have sent to their address a portrait of the person they will marry and be told the year in which the happy event will take place, by enclosing 25 cents and stamp, to

PROF. HUMBOLT,
P. O. Drawer, 6169, Chicago, Ill.

P. S.—All communications strictly confidential.

8 Card Photographs Only $1.—All different. Sent free by mail. Address J. H. FOUNTAIN, " Photo.," Howley, Pa. 436-7

Royal Havana Lottery.

30 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

$35. WATCHES. $35.

Genuine Full-Jewelled American Lever Watches, in 4 Ounce Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Gold Joints, for $35.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be prepaid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
o 208 Broadway, N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

For Roofs, Outside Work, Decks of Steamers, Iron Work, Railroad Bridges, etc.

E. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is mailed, prepaid, for $2 35; or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $3; with 24 Objects, $5, by

HENRY CRAIG,
203 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, prepaid, the Belle-vue, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Hold-Piece, accommodating all eyes, for $2 50; with 12 assorted views, $3. A liberal discount to the trade.

The Cheapest Watches IN AMERICA!

Especially Adapted to the Army.

Very heavy Solid Silver Hunting-cased, English and American Lever Watches, 11, 15, 25, 35 DOLLARS.

See advertisement on page 334 inside this paper, or send for Circular.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO., Importers,
o 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Watches Given to All our Agents!
A GREAT CHANGE.

ENADEL GOLD are composed, until you send for our NEW PRIZE STATIONERY PACKAGE Circular, whether you want it or not. It contains important information for everybody. Great inducement offered to Agents.
000e WM. A. CO., 24 Beekman-Third St., Phila.

ANGI SHIRTS

TO ORDER.

Manufactures Unsurpassed—Fitting Infallible,

AT

CHAS. L. LOCKWOOD'S,

No. 675 Broadway, N. Y.

P.S.—Self-Measurement sent on application.

HATS!

D. BEAUDIN,
FRENCH HATTER,
NOW WITH
CHARLES L. LOCKWOOD,
No. 675 Broadway, N. Y.

P.S.—Hats made to Order and sent per Express. Directions for Self-Measurement sent on application.

Shults' Cognect.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 30 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

MUNN & COMPANY,

Solicitors of American & Foreign Patents,

AND PUBLISHERS OF THE ILLUSTRATED SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, 37 Park Row, New York.

Pamphlets of information about patents FREE. Specimen copies of the paper FREE.

GOLD FEET!

USE THE ELECTRO METALLIC INSOLES,

They keep the feet warm in the coldest weather.

METTAM & CO., Proprietors,
429 Broadway, New York.

Price $1; prepaid, by mail, $1 35. Send for Circular.

GOLD PENS AND CASES.

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each Pen. Send for a Circular. Pens repointed on receipt of 50 cents.
432-470 E. S. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

STAMMERING

Cured by Bates's Patent Scientific Appliances. For Pamphlets and Drawings describing the same, address
o H. C. L. BATES, 277 West 43d St., N. Y.

A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts., MAGNIFYING 500 times, mailed on receipt of price. Five of different powers $1. Address F. B. BOWEN, B'x 220, Boston, Mass.

Soldiers' Timekeepers.

SPLENDID WATCHES, SILVER AND GOLD-PLATED, Open Face and Hunting Cases, $8, $9, $10 and $15. Sent free on receipt of price. Just the Watches for Soldiers to carry. Send for our Trade Circular of Watches, Jewelry, etc.
C. H. KIMBERLY & CO.,
Room 52, 209 Broadway,
455-80 Cor. Barclay St., N. Y.

1ST BROKER—"Now, then, yer know I spoke to yer first."
2ND DITTO—"Can't you let the gentleman decide for himself."
BEWILDERED MAN AND BROTHER—"You both very kind gemmin, but I'se afraid day's waiting up dere for me to finish up dat whitewashin'."

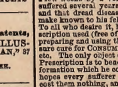
GOLD WATCH FREE!

$15 Per Day Easy $15

100,000 men and women wanted to act as Agents in every Town, village and Camp, to sell our immensely popular, unrivalled and valuable EXTRA LARGE SIZE PRIZE PACKAGES, containing large quantities of STATIONERY, RECIPES, JEWELRY, NOTIONS, etc. Sells wonderfully. Only Genuine. Largest, Best and Cheapest ever manufactured. Each Package contains over 100 valuable articles than any half dozen other ever sold, such as fine Writing Materials, Paper, Envelopes, Pens, Pencils, Pictures, Emblems, Ladies' Paris Fashion Plates, Designs Needlework, Cottage Ornaments, Household Companions, Camp Companions (for Soldiers), Parlor Amusement, Guide for Letter Writing, Many Ways to Get Rich, Likenesses of Generals, Gents' Pocket Companion for the Very Latest Jokes, LADIES' NOTIONS of all Kinds, Games, Queries, Army Laws and Advice, Rich and Costly Presents for Agents in Jewellery, etc., etc., etc., the whole worth MANY DOLLARS if bought separately from each Package. ONLY $15 cents each. Wholesale rates to Agents ONLY 100 to 200 PER CENT. PROFIT ALLOWED. GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE ARMY. All Soldiers are wanted to Receive and Sell our Goods. A Splendid Gold or Silver Hunting Case Watch, English Movements, and Costly Ornaments presented "free" to all who act as Agents. Send for our New Circulars for 1864, with Extra Premium Inducements, free.

S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., New York, the Great Original, Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World. Beware of imposters offering our Premiums.

$2 TO $5 PER DAY!—Agents, local and travelling, wanted everywhere. Business honorable, EASY and attractive. Article of quick sale, good profits, and sells useful to citizen or soldier, man, woman or child. Full particulars sent free, or box of samples by mail, 31 cents. C. J. BESTOR,
435-80 271 Main Street, Hartford, Conn.



To Consumptives!

The Advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection and that dread disease, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, etc. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address
REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
Williamsburgh, Kings Co., N. Y.
000

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both Sexes—new and valuable treatment. Reports of HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address Dr. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South—Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Salesmen Wanted.—Salary Paid. Address (with stamp) to Harris Bros., Boston, Mass. 433-470

BALLARD PATENT BREECH-LOADING RIFLES and CARBINES,

Carrying the copper water-proof cartridge, and also using ordinary loose ammunition. The Rifle recently submitted by all competitors to be superior to any other ever offered to the public. Its simple construction and perfect workmanship are a sure guarantee against getting out of order. The great advantages of loading with either fixed or loose ammunition alone makes it superior to all others, and the best arm ever made for both sporting and military purposes, and have been adopted both by the General Government and a number of States. We have the highest testimonials of their efficacy and durability.

We also offer to the public our new Cartridge and loose ammunition loading revolver. This arm is not equal as a belt or pocket weapon. No one wishing a first class arm should be without one.

For further particulars send for descriptive circular. P. S.—Gentlemen will please not ask Rifle and Pistol may be used with either copper cartridge or loose ammunition.

MERWIN & BRAY, Sole Agents,
o 262 Broadway, N. Y.

For Veteran, Army Corps, Cavalry and Battle Pins,

Send to Headquarters,

S. M. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway, o (See Notice inside)

GREAT CHANCE
TO
MAKE MONEY.

We want Agents everywhere to sell the most splendid

STEEL ENGRAVINGS

Ever published. We will furnish them so that a stock of $10 will yield $50; also,

PRIZE STATIONERY PACKETS

With which we give, as Premiums to Agents,

Gold and Silver Watches.

Full particulars in Circular.
Mailed free. Address
G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
o 36 Beekman Street, N. Y.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS!

Our Catalogue now embraces considerably over
FOUR THOUSAND
different subjects (to which additions are continually being made) of Portraits of Eminent Americans, etc., viz.:

72 Major-Generals,	525 Statesmen,
190 Brigadier-Generals,	127 Divines,
289 Colonels,	116 Authors,
64 Lieut.-Colonels,	30 Artists,
307 Other Officers,	118 Stage,
60 Officers of the Navy,	45 Prominent Women.

147 Prominent Foreign Portraits.

3,500 COPIES OF WORKS OF ART,

Including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statues, etc.

Set Catalogues sent on receipt of stamp.

An order for One Dozen PICTURES from our Catalogue will be filled on receipt of $1 80, and sent by mail, free.

Photographic Albums!

Of these we manufacture a great variety, ranging in price from 50 cents to $50 each.

Our ALBUMS have the reputation of being superior in beauty and durability to any others.

The smaller kinds can be sent safely by mail at a postage of six cents per one.

The larger sizes can be sent by express.

We also keep a large assortment of
Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views.
Our Catalogue of these will be sent to any address on receipt of stamp.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,
Manufacturers of Photograph Materials,
501 Broadway, New York.

Set Friends or relatives of prominent military men will confer a favor by sending us their likenesses to copy. They will be kept carefully, and returned uninjured.

Set FINE ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER for Congressmen to present to their Pastor, or for other purposes, with suitable inscriptions, etc.
o

$7 WATCH AND CHAIN. $7

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED

Gold-Plated Watch,

LEVER CAP,

DOUBLE Case, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Cu Hands, "English Movements," Correct Timekeeper Sent free, by mail, in a neat case, WITH A HAND-SOME GOLD-PLATED CHAIN, with Patent Bar Attached, for only $7.

A SILVER WATCH, same as above, and Chain $7, specially adapted to the ARMY.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15

A SUPERB "EXTRA DOUBLE GOLD-PLATED" Hunting Case, Watch—Maple Spring—Genuine English Jewelled Movements—Equal Balance—Independent Second, Correct Timekeeper—"Warranted one year," will stand sale, is an Exact Imitation of a $100 Gold Watch used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free, by mail, in Elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.

The Celebrated English Court Watch

For Ladies. Extra heavy Gold Plate on STERLING SILVER Hunting Cases, "Unique Escutcheon Designs," Ruby and Sapphire Jewels, Handsome Dial. Fine Cut Hands. Carved Edges, a "fac simile" of the Costly watch used by the English Ladies of "Court Circles." Warranted one year. Sent, free by mail, in rich Embossed Turkey Morocco Case, for only $16.

ENGLISH STERLING SILVER Hunting Case SVER WATCHES, Jewelled Movements, a Genuine article, only $18. Watches of all descriptions for Army use at Low Prices.

We are the Sole Importers of the above European Watches. We do not Sell the Worthless Swiss Movement Watches. Our customers benefit by our Large Purchases in imitation of us. Catalogue of Trade Prices mailed free.

N. Y. Illustrated News says: Messrs Norton & Co., in old and reliable firm, offer a "Correct Timepiece," quoted in appearance to $100 Watches, for only $15. We recommend them to our Soldiers in the field.

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO.,
o 49 Ann Street, N. Y.

Volunteers for the Army should not leave the city until supplied with HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT. For Sores, Scurvy, Wounds, Smallpox, Fevers, and Bowel Complaint, these medicines are the best in the world. Every French soldier uses them. Only 25 cents per box or pot.

To insure getting genuine, go to the Depot,
o No. 80 MAIDEN LANE, New York.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready-Made or to Measure, at $31, $30, $25 per doz

SELF-MEASUREMENT FOR SHIRTS.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices and specimens of the different styles of bosoms and collars sent free, by mail.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3, $3 75 and $4 50 each—all cut one yard long. A single Shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 6 cents postage for each shirt.

Send the Size of your Neck also.

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are easily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To military men and travellers they are invaluable.

Price $1 each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of $1 25.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,
No. 387 Broadway, New York.

Dyspepsia Tablets.

For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by S. W. WARD, 387 Broadway, New York. 50 cents per box, sent free on the receipt of 55 cents. Depot, 307 Centre Street, Philadelphia.

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, CURED and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address
435-470 CHAS. H. IVES, New Haven, Conn.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

ALL Articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Fort Penny, Newberne, Fort Royal, and all other [illegible] should be sent at half rates by HARNDEN'S SUPERIOR No. 74 Broadway. Soldiers charged low rates. 0000

TOMES, SON & MELVAIN
6 Maiden Lane, New York,

Dealers in "Fire Arms," "Cutlery," "Sporting Articles," "Fancy Goods," Perfumery, Soap, Brushes, Combs, Fountain Pens, etc., etc.
Military and Navy Equipments to every variety.
A large assortment of
RICH PRESENTATION SWORDS!
o Constantly on hand.

VINELAND, LANDS, TO ALL WANTING FARMS!

Large and thriving Settlement; mild and healthful climate; 30 miles south of Philadelphia, by railroad Rich Soil—produces Large Crops, which can now be seen growing; 80 and 40 Acre Tracts at from $15 to $20 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings—churches, schools and good society. Is it now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are getting and building. The county with which the place is said out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers containing reports and giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland, Cumberland County, New Jersey.

From Report of Solon Robinson, Ag. Ed. TRIBUNE:

"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position, and suitable cultivated with a pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 438—VOL. XVII.] NEW YORK. FEBRUARY 20, 1864. [PRICE 8 CENTS.

THE MEXICAN TROUBLES AT MATAMORAS.

THE occupation of the line of the Rio Grande by our army, under Gen. Banks, has brought us to the scene of Mexican troubles. Our Artist sends us sketches of the recent battle in Matamoras between the adherents of Cortina and Ruiz.

Cortina is the champion of Serna, whom the people have twice elected Governor; Ruiz is appointed by Juarez. Both parties took up arms, Cortina holding the cathedral, which was full of ammunition; but he at last divided this with Ruiz, and withdrew to the Plaza de Allende, of which we give a very accurate sketch, taking up his headquarters in the little house on the extreme left. The little church, from which the people usually style it Plaza de Capella, may be seen on the background.

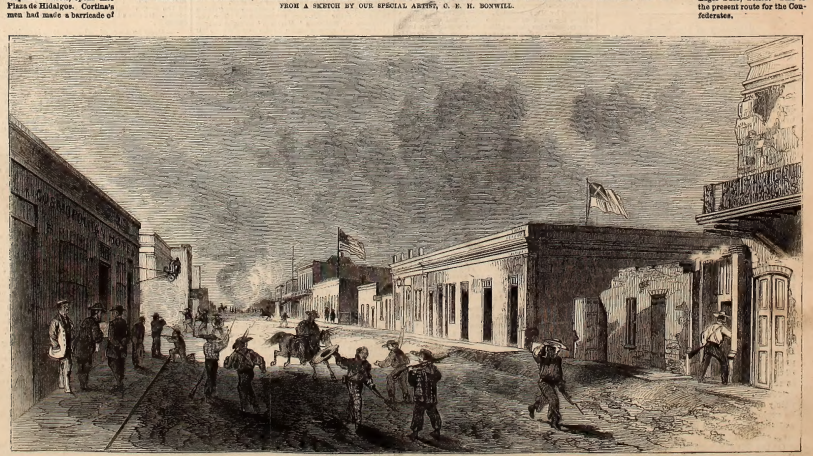
On the 12th of January hostilities began. Cardenas, second in command to Cortina, went to the palace and attempted to force the guard; but with his attendants was taken, and almost immediately Cardenas was shot.

Cortina's men at once gathered to revenge this act, and the next day the battle began. Ruiz had about 1,000 men, with two poor cannon; and Cortinas some 800 men and six old guns.

The Calle de Cesar, of which we give a sketch, showing the fight at the Cosmopolitan Hotel, opens into Plaza de Hidalgos. Cortina's men had made a barricade of bagging bales, from which they fired at every Ruiz man driving them from the street and palace balcony. They were, too, a support to the gun shown in our sketch which kept hurling old iron in every shape on the enemy. Near the Texan store stood a Texan sharpshooter, in the middle of the street, firing all day with deadly aim. He tried to get the Mexicans to roll the bales further down the street, but when they would not he gave up in disgust and walked away.

The partisans of Ruiz at last fled, and at one o'clock Cortina and his party took possession of the palace. His cavalry soon brought in a batch of prisoners, and the affair ended.

We give a fine view of the Governor's Palace, which was held by the partisans of Ruiz long after he retreated.



Our Consul, fearing a sack of the town, had applied for protection to Gen. Herron, who sent over the 20th Wisconsin, 19th Iowa and 94th Illinois.

After the fight Albino Lopez, ex-Governor of Tamaulipas, while crossing the ferry to Brownsville, was shot by a boy of 15. He was greatly regretted, and both he and Cardenas were buried at the little church shown in the sketch of the Plaza de Allende.

We give also a view in the Calle de Cesar of wagons loading for Piedras Negras, to be shipped across the river to Eagle Pass, TEXAS. This is the present route for the Confederates.

THE TROUBLES AT MATAMORAS, MEXICO—CORTINA'S MEN FIRING ON THE PALACE FROM A BARRIER ON THE PLAZA DE HIDALGOS, JAN. 13. FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. BONWILL.

THE TROUBLES AT MATAMORAS, MEXICO—FIGHT NEAR THE COSMOPOLITAN HOTEL, BETWEEN CORTINA AND RUIZ, JAN. 13.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. BONWILL.

Barnum's American Museum.

FOUR ENORMOUS GIANTS—Three men and one woman, each over eight feet high; two Dwarfs, each less than two feet high—besides a host of other Novelties. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album,

Consisting of 23 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both indoor and outdoor costumes, representing Turkish, Jewish, Armenian, Circassian, Egyptian and Druz nationalities, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's Lectures.

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every drawing room table; and the cheapest and most acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Costs only $3. Sent free, by mail on receipt of the price, by

C. OSCANYAN,
No. 37 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 20, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 72 Duane street, between Broadway and Elm, New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, also FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR OF 1861, by GEORGE P. BEMIS & CO., Proprietors of the London American, 100 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One copy one year	$3 50
Two copies " to one address	5 00
Four " " "	9 00
Magazine and paper one year	5 00

Notice to Advertisers.

The value of our paper as an advertising medium has become so generally known, that we are compelled every week to refuse columns of advertisements. The vast increase of our circulation, penetrating as it does into the most profitable channels, renders our space doubly valuable, and justifies us in the course we have determined upon—that of increasing our rates of advertising in the following ratio:

75 cents a line on the outside or last page.
40 " " on the 14th and 15th pages.

Notice to Contributors.

Our paper is beyond all others the journal that offers to the public the greatest number of American tales and poems. Great as are the numbers that constantly reach us, we are always happy to receive tales and poems of merit. If accepted they will be remunerated duly. When declined they are returned without delay.

Contributors will be good enough to write legibly, on one side only of the paper, and give their address distinctly. Comic sketches for engraving, or hints for such illustrations, are also acceptable.

DECLINED.—Amy, Hannah Bell, Miss Stanton's Ward, Under the Rod, The Angel of the Battlefield, A Night of Terror, The Ship, Little Children, Day Dreams, A Story of '76, Else Morton.

ACCEPTED.—A Race on the Mississippi, Dead.

Notice to our Readers.

WE wish to purchase a complete set of FRANK LESLIE'S NEW YORK JOURNAL. Any person desiring to dispose of the same can receive double its original cost by sending it to the office of this paper.

Summary of the Week.

WESTERN VIRGINIA.

On the 2d of February Col. Mulligan advanced up New creek and reoccupied Burlington and Moorefield junction, driving the enemy before him. A party of 500 of Rosser's cavalry reached the railroad at New creek at noon and began to destroy the bridges and telegraph wires. They were soon driven off.

On the 2d Gen. Sullivan, in endeavoring to cut off a rebel party, came on a large force in Mechanicsville gap, near Romney, and a fight ensued, in which the enemy were defeated at Moorfield and driven out of Petersburg with loss.

The steamer Levi, with Gen. Scammon and Staff on board, was captured by the rebels on the Kanawha, on the 3d, all on board being asleep at the time.

EASTERN VIRGINIA.

On the 1st of February the Union cavalry made a reconnoissance to Madison Court House. Richmond papers found there contain an address of Gen. Lee to his army, exhorting his soldiers to endure their hardships and short rations a short time longer.

An expedition from Norfolk on Jan. 31, under Gen. Graham, in the steamers Smith Briggs, Flora Temple and Long Branch, proceeded to Smithfield in order to attack Chuckatuck. Some troops landed, but were attacked by the 31st North Carolina and driven to the Smith Briggs, when unfortunately a rebel ball entered her boiler, causing an explosion. The magazine then took fire and the vessel blew up. The whole party were killed or taken.

On the 6th a reconnoitring force crossed the Rapidan and found Lee still in force in front of Meade.

NORTH CAROLINA.

On the 1st Gen. Palmer's outposts at Bachelor's creek were driven in by the enemy, 12,000 strong, and had to destroy their camps and stores. An attack on the south side of the Trent was repulsed.

The enemy took possession of the railroad between Newberne and Moorehead city, and destroyed the gunboat Underwriter. They came within hailing distance of the city, and the Union cavalry being beaten at Fort Totten, the place seemed in no little danger, but the next day they returned to Kinston.

MISSISSIPPI.

Natchez is threatened by rebel cavalry, and the enemy are straining everywhere to blockade the Mississippi.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Gen. Gillmore, who has removed his headquarters to Hilton Head, continues to fire on Charleston and Fort Sumter. At the latter place the rebels are busy converting the debris into fortifications. A good part of Charleston is deserted, the people living outside the city in tents and shanties.

Two disastrous fires occurred at Columbia on the 2d, in which 800 bales Sea island and 2,700 upland cotton, worth $3,000,000, were destroyed.

TENNESSEE.

On the 5th and 6th the rebels made an attack on Cumberland gap, but were repulsed by Col. Love.

Longstreet's headquarters are at Russellville, and he has now repaired all his railroads and bridges, and is in full communication with Richmond.

Gen. Sturges, on the 28th ult., repulsed the rebel cavalry at Fair Garden, near Sevierville, with loss, in a hand-to-hand fight.

NAVAL.

The steamer Western Metropolis, on her way to New Orleans, captured, on the 28th Jan., the blockade-runner Rosita, of Havana, 50 miles from Tortugas.

On the 18th Jan. the Stars and Stripes captured the blockade-runner Laura in St. Mark's bay, Florida, and on the 14th the supply steamer Union captured the Mayflower near Tampa bay.

The gunboat Huron, about the 1st of January, captured the British ship Sylvanus near Doboy sound.

CONGRESS.

IN the Senate on the 1st of Feb. the resignation of Mr. Bayard, of Delaware, was received, and the credentials of his successor, G. R. Biddle, were presented. Mr. Davis, Ky, explained his action on the question of the expulsion of Powell and Bright, and also his course on the Confiscation question. The death of Senator Noell, Mo, was announced.

In the House a resolution suspending the Conscription bill was defeated by 84 to 42; also, a vote recommending Gen. Grant to the position of Lieutenant-General was passed, 96 to 41. A resolution recommending a more vigorous enlisting of colored troops was passed by 80 to 46.

In the Senate on the 2d of Feb., the amendments of the Finance Committee to the Internal Revenue were reported by Mr. Fessenden. They strike out the provision for a tax of 20 cents additional on rectified spirits, and also that which taxes whiskey on hand after Jan. 12. They increase the tax on whiskey after July 1 and prior to Jan. next to 70 cents, and after Jan. 1, 1865, to 80 cents. The duty on imported whiskey after July and prior to Jan. next, is increased from 40 to 50 cents, and after Jan. next to 60 cents. The House bill reviving the grade of Lieutenant-General was received and referred to the Military Committee. A long and interesting debate on the corruptions and expenditures of the Navy Department arose during the consideration of the resolution requiring the attendance of agents of departments before investigating committees. The bill to encourage the enlistment of colored troops was taken up, and Mr. Sherman, of Ohio, delivered a radical speech on slavery and the war.

In the House the Army Appropriation bill for $529,500,000 was reported. A resolution calling for information as to whether the supplies for the navy are obtained by contract or purchased in open market was adopted. Mr. Freeman Clark offered a resolution, which was agreed to, instructing the Committee of Ways and Means to inquire into the expediency of raising, by tax on imports and domestic manufactures, the sum of $350,000,000, to pay the interest on the national debt and defray the ordinary and extraordinary expenditures of the Government; also as to restricting the amount of bank circulation, etc.

In the Senate on the 3d Feb. there was no business of the slightest public interest performed.

In the House the Senate's amendment fixing commutation at $400 was reduced to its former sum, $300, and the clause providing that if any drafted men shall pay money for the procuration of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to relieve such person from the draft in filling that quota, and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future quotas, was struck out by a vote of 79 to 49.

In the Senate, Feb. 4, no business of public importance, and on its rising adjourned to the 8th of Feb.

In the House the Fortifications Appropriation bill of $5,000,000 was reported, of which $720,000 are for New York. There was nothing else transacted of any moment.

In the House on the 5th Feb. the Confiscation Act was discussed, many amendments calculated to weaken its force were made, but defeated by majorities varying from 80 to 70. Frank Blair (Mo.) made a strong speech against it; it was finally passed by 82 to 74. The House then adjourned till Monday.

BOOK NOTICES.

CUDJO'S CAVE. By J. T. TROWBRIDGE. Boston: Tilton & Co.

An exciting story of Eastern Tennessee, in which the sufferings of the patriots are graphically depicted. The novel is well written, full of interest, and the characters are well drawn and lifelike. It is certainly one of the best war novels that has yet appeared.

THE INDIAN CHIEF. By GUSTAVE AIMARD. Philadelphia: Peterson & Brothers.

Aimard, who resided many years among the Indians, writes of them from actual knowledge. His romances are well conceived, true to nature, in depicting character. The Indian Chief fully sustains the reputation acquired by his previous works.

THE PERFECT GENTLEMAN; OR, ETIQUETTE AND ELOQUENCE, &c., containing Model Speeches for all occasions, 500 Toasts, Etiquette, &c. New York: Dick and Fitzgerald. 12mo.

This is one of Dick and Fitzgerald's popular works, which in the variety of its matter and its general usefulness cannot fail to meet with a large and merited sale.

THE IDLER ABOUT TOWN.

THERE can be no question about the success of the present Italian opera season, for there seems to be, among all classes, an enthusiasm on the subject rarely if ever exhibited before. The first night, Monday, Feb. 1st, was an old-fashioned miserable night, one of the most wretched in the category of abominations, and yet the house was handsomely filled by a fashionable and appreciative audience. The opera announced was "Ione," but in consequence of the sickness of Biachi "Il Trovatore" was obliged to be substituted. The audience took the change with perfect goodhumor, and indeed the opera was so well performed that one must have been very exigeant in his demands to have required more excellence than was then displayed. The second opera, "Don Giovanni," attracted an overflowing and brilliant audience on Wednesday evening. It was a subject of general remark that the front of the house never before wore so brilliant an appearance. Diamonds flashed in every bosom, and the toilettes were of the most gorgeous description. If all were not in the most perfect taste, and they certainly were not, there was enough of richness and costliness to produce a general effect of unequalled brilliancy. The performance was of unusual excellence. The character of Donna Anna's music assimilates with the grand, broad style of Medori, and her passionate declamation and energetic acting filled out the perfect idea of the rôle. The Zerlina of Miss Kellogg was a charming and unaffected impersonation, and her singing of the exquisite music allotted the part was worthy of the distinguished applause bestowed upon her efforts. Bellini rendered full justice to the dashing libertine, Don Giovanni, but among the male artists Biachi's Leporello carried off the palm of successful excellence. It was a racy, spirited impersonation, admirable both in the singing and the acting. The orchestra was one of the most enjoyable features of the performance. The exquisite orchestration was done full justice to in delicacy and force and the due observance of light and shade. The performance of this opera throughout reflects great credit upon the conductor, Max Maretzek. On Tuesday evening that delicious work "Faust" was produced before an audience densely packed into every available place. The music grows upon the public love with mighty strides. Its beauty, felt at first but not clearly understood, becomes a perfect fascination after a few hearings, and it may now be said that it is perfectly appreciated by our public, who testify their admiration by crowding the house each night of its representation. Of Miss Kellogg's Margueritta we have spoken before in terms of the warmest admiration, and we can only add to what we then expressed that she made the character her own by her exquisite conception and execution, not only of its broad but of its most delicate and poetic points. Mazzoleni has got the character of Faust more clearly defined than during the few first performances, and now brings out in full relief all its subtleties. Neither in his acting or his singing can we discover a want unsatisfied. Biachi's Mephistopheles is an artistic picture from the beginning to the end. Every intonation of his voice is a sneer and a mockery, and all must recognise in him a choice fiend, imported direct from where he belongs, with a fine brimstone flavor oozing out at every pore. The other characters were ably sustained, and the chorus and orchestra were deserving of all the admiration expressed of them. On Friday evening "I Due Foscari" was performed, and on Saturday an immense gathering of the beauty and the fashion of the city witnessed the performance of "Martha" at the matinée. The opera was charmingly rendered. The nights of performance are Monday, Tuesday and Friday, and a matinée on Saturday morning.

The Harrison English Opera Company are gaining in public favor with each performance. The performance of Wallace's "Maritana" brought out the strength and artistic value of the company to far greater advantage than the "Bohemian Girl," which, while replete with most charming music, is shockingly and ludicrously disfigured by the terrible balderdash put into the mouths of the singers by the poet Bunn. The "Maritana" music is more adapted to Madame Borchard's breadth and force of style than that of the "Bohemian Girl," and, consequently, she feels her power and produces a proportionate effect. Miss Myers, a debutante, made a very favorable impression as the Page. She promises to be a valuable member of the company. Messrs. Castle and Campbell are rapidly acquiring that stage ease which is a point of the first importance, as, no matter how admirable the singing, personal awkwardness or unrest will destroy all its best effects. They have every requisite to win a splendid position in their new line of art, and ninety-nine points in their favor, namely, a decided popularity with the public. The choral department is much improved, and the orchestra works very smoothly. Mr. Theodore Thomas is indefatigable, and with a clear field, without favor, he will bring the standard of English opera up to a higher standard than has yet been reached in this country. "Maritana" will be given at Niblo's Saloon on Wednesday and Friday evenings of this week.

The Artists' Reception at the Studio Building in Tenth street, on Thursday evening, was as brilliant and as crowded a jam as usual. The company chatted and laughed, and tried their best to get a full view of the many beautiful pictures presented for observation, and roved from room to room in a genial spirit of goodhumored gratification. A large number of fine specimens from the easels of many of our best artists were visible on the walls, and excited the admiration of all who were fortunate enough to get a chance of close inspection. Leutze, Gifford, Gignoux, Hays, Hart, De Haas, Wier, Bierstadt, Brown, Kensett and a host of others contributed gems of art, which of themselves would form a gallery of note. We must not omit to mention some fine things in sculpture by Launt Thompson.

All the theatres are doing a "rushing" business. The managers are all making fortunes, and with but very little trouble. The past week presented no novelty anywhere, but the present week will bring forth a new play at Wallack's Theatre from the pen of Westland Marston, called "Pure Gold," and at the Olympic Mrs. John Wood produces Byron's witty and laughable burlesque, called the "Ill-treated Il Trovatore, or the Maiden, the Mother and the Musicianer," in which the whole strength of the company will appear. At Winter Garden "The Ticket-of-Leave-Man" still attracts overflowing audiences, and will, we suppose, until the close of the Florences' engagement.

Barnum produces this week at his Museum a new, startling and magnificent drama, called "Halvei; or, the Galley Slave of Toulon." It will be put on the stage in the most superb manner, and will call into requisition all the talent of the company. The four giants still exhibit their stupenduous proportions, making the smallest possible dwarfs appear still more small. The moving wax figures and a countless number of other curiosities on view make a man ashamed that he has only paid a quarter for such a plentiful banquet of wonder, entertainment and instruction. We forgot to mention the educated seal, which plays on a musical instrument, probably the violoncello.

Intelligence of the artistic successes of Adelina Patti come to us fresh every day. The city of Madrid has gone mad about her, and hardly knows if it rests upon its base, or on the inverted point of its highest steeple. We should not be surprised if the delicate and spirituelle Patti became pursy with riches, so readily does the gold fall into her coffers. The Queen of Spain, besides presenting her with a gold medallion surrounded with sapphires and diamonds, has made Maurice Strakosh a chevalier of the Order of Charles III.

They will not allow actors to desecrate the Sabbath in Sacramento, consequently they made an example of Kean Buchanan, Ada Isaacs Menken, T. Maguire, and other members of the company, by fining each and every one $50 for performing on a Sunday.

The "Ticket-of-Leave Man" has become epidemic, and has seized hold of half the theatrical cities and towns, North, East and West. It would be a good thing if the distinguished author, Tom Taylor, could make something out of the work of his brain, at the same time that brainless managers and actors are making fortunes out of it everywhere. By-the-bye, we see it announced, that Mrs. Barrow is about to produce in Boston the "Ticket-of-Leave Woman," a companion piece to the other—let us hope his wife.

Miss Laura Keene will shortly open the Washington (D. C.) Theatre, with a company of varied talent and excellence.

We forgot to notice in our last the receipt of a new and spirited patriotic song, entitled "One Flag or No Flag," published by William Hall and Son; the music composed by Madame Clara M. Brinkerhoff. It is a stirring melody, and contains the well-known element of popularity. We should not be surprised if it meets with great success all over the country.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The vestrymen of Christ Church, Elizabeth, New Jersey, have been improving the property under their charge, and at the same time realising a considerable sum of money by a neat financial arrangement. Finding the pew cushions stuffed with cotton, they had that precious material removed and sold, and the cushions refilled with hair. The net profits to the church by the transaction amounted to $800.

—— The exports of domestic produce and miscellaneous merchandise, including foreign articles re-exported from New York, from 1st July to 1st Dec., 1863, were $79,049,000.

—— The Eastern papers state that never, in the memory of the oldest inhabitant, has there been such a demand for operatives as there is now at Lawrence and other manufacturing cities.

—— It is conjectured that the cost of rations alone furnished unproductive contrabands at all the various camps is over $100,000 a day; estimating the daily rations at 50 cents each. In addition to this must be added the salaries of Republican superintendents or overseers.

—— The Springfield armory turned out 25,700 muskets last month, the largest number ever fabricated in a single month. There are 200,000 on hand.

—— A man fell overboard from the Fulton ferry-boat, at New York, Jan. 30, and a man, who nobly threw off his coat and jumped in to save him, found, on his return, that some scamp had meanwhile made way with his coat and $56 in money which was in it. The citizens of Brooklyn promptly subscribed the amount for the gallant fellow.

Western.—The quota of Ohio has been filled to within 8,000; 9,000 volunteers and 12,000 veterans have been obtained in that State since October.

—— The Legislature of Wisconsin has ordered the Governor's Message to be printed in the German, Norwegian, Irish, Welsh, Holland and Bohemian languages.

—— The recent strike of the employés on the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago railroad was organised by an association of locomotive engineers calling themselves the "Brotherhood of the Footboard," and was the largest and most powerful trade organization of mechanics in the country. The railroad company claim to have crushed out the "Brotherhood" completely so far as their business is concerned, although at a cost of $100,000.

—— A railroad track was laid on the ice of the Upper Mississippi during the late cold snap, for the transportation of freight from one shore to the other.

—— Abel Stearns, of Los Angelos, California, lost about 7,000 head of cattle through want of food during the last few months. That gentleman is believed to be the largest stock and landowner in the United States. He owns this year 48,000 cattle, besides 9,000 calves.

—— Great numbers of refugees are daily arriving in Kentucky, to escape the new rebel conscription.

—— Columbus county, Ohio, is among the first counties in the United States in the product of wool. The clip this year will, it is stated, reach about 550,000 pounds. About one-half of it has been sold at prices averaging nearly 75 cents per pound. The remainder is held for higher prices.

Southern.—The Richmond Whig has a synopsis of the report of the rebel Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a resolution of the Senate. The funded debt is $297,871,000; call certificates, $89,000,000; interest-bearing treasury notes, $102,000,000; non interest-bearing treasury notes, $720,000,000—less the number of treasury notes on hand, $297,000,000.

—— Peach trees are in blossom at St. Augustine, Florida; garden flowers are in full bloom, and bouquets grace the officers' tables.

—— The Richmond Examiner sets the question at rest as to the authenticity of the Jeff Davis butler—whose escape from his master, the rebel President, has been duly chronicled in the Northern papers—by lamenting the ingratitude of the man in running away just as he had received a new suit of livery and a sum of money from his benevolent master. What makes the matter worse, being another man's slave, Jeff Davis is responsible for the absconding chattel.

—— The following schedule of prices for making and repairing boots and shoes is charged at the establishment in Richmond, which is generally overrun with orders: "For making boots, $225; for footing boots, $140; for ordinary cavalry boots, $250; for gaiters, $110; for high laced shoes, $100; for Oxford ties, $90; for fixing, half-soling and heeling boots, $62; for half-soling and heeling boots, $20; ditto shoes, $18; for new gores to gaiters, $10; for half-soling boots or shoes, $12; for heeling ditto, $8. If calf-skins are furnished, the charge will be for making boots, $120; shoes, $60. Where it will not be possible to fill an order in the course of four weeks from the time it is taken, no price will be set, but the price will be fixed at the time of delivery."

—— Lieut.-Gen. Polk has issued a circular notifying all paroled men belonging to the garrisons of Vicksburg and Port Hudson to report at Enterprise, Miss., for duty within 15 days, or be treated as deserters.

—— The Mayor of Wilmington has requested the heads of families to have all under their charge vaccinated at an early day, in consequence of the spread of smallpox in that city.

—— The Montgomery (Ala.) Mail says that Gen. Bragg proposes living in that city. A dinner has been tendered him, to come off in a few days, at the Exchange Hotel.

—— The sum of $107,590 has been appropriated by the County Court of Mecklenburg, North Carolina, for the support of soldiers' families, with authority to borrow $25,000 more if necessary.

Military.—A major wearing the U. S. uniform was recently turned out of the Washington and Georgetown cars because he was a colored man. The outrage has been brought before Gen. Martindale.

—Up to the middle of last May our armies had lost only 50 per 1,000 a year of the whole forces. The English army, stationed in the Peninsula campaign as small loss of 255 per 1,000, and during three months in the Crimea 511 out of 1,000 perished, mostly by disease.

—A visit to the Pension Office reveals the consequences of this terrible war. The claims for pensions already filed by widows and mothers exceed 100,000. Every anticipated case is not about to die, but every case have been presented. The claims already presented and allowed amount to over $16,000,000 per annum. Suppose, then, but half that exist at the present moment, and it leaves a fair inference that there will be quite $25,000,000 per annum to pay our pensioned slain for a few years that we survive. In the case of widows the pension ceases if the party marries.

—Mr. Buchanan has declined to accept Gen. McClernand's resignation and has assigned him to duty. He has been ordered to report to Gen. Banks.

—Gov. Brough, of Ohio, recently observed a case, written on the streets of Columbus property exhilarated. He telegraphed to the Secretary of War for his services, and by the next day the young man covered his sobriety he found his commission awaited; nor could the persuasions of influential friends change the determination of the Governor, who declared that, as President of a rebellious company, he had used his rule to dismiss any employé subject to intoxication, and no one must deviate from that rule in a case where the offender was entrusted with the care of men.

—The Ladies National Army Relief Association is making great efforts to extend its usefulness. The Executive Committee of New York is composed of Mrs. Rowena, 51st street; Mrs Trow, Cooper Institute; Mrs. Hall, 14 Clinton Place. The object of this Association are—1st. To supply this most important service with an organized corps of good and capable women, to co-operate with surgeons and stewards in the knowledge-ship arrangements of the sick and in the care of the sick and wounded of our army. 2d. To put the expenses of such as are carried on outside of the service now recognised by Government, and give such support and protection as may be necessary to render them efficient.

—Great donations are now being made in New Jersey to rear in that State's contribution to the great Sanitary Fair about to be held in New York in honor of her ancient reputation on. Hoboken is already stirring to do its share, and a good work and a meeting are to be held on Friday in Oddfellows Hall to concert measures to find out the many patriotic persons, both German and American, have promised to attend, and Mayor Zabriskie declares that every will be one of the largest ever held in Hoboken, Miss Isabella Stevens, the Lady Regent of the village, has taken the most interest in this most praiseworthy undertaking. A Jersey woman herself, she is jealous of the honor of her State, and as usual, when any good work is in progress, has put her shoulder bravely to the wheel.

Personal.—Fernando Wood was indebted to Mrs. Lincoln for the flowers and the Grand Ball that added their strictions to his entertainment in Washington last week. Only Republicans were present, and quite a number of the better class of Democrats stayed away.

—Rev. Dr. Tyng, the rector of St. George's church, New York, will visit Europe next spring and pass the summer abroad. He makes the journey in search of his health.

—Joseph Quincey, of Boston, entered upon his 93d year, on the 4th of February.

Obituary.—Gov. Gamble, of Missouri, died on the 30th January, in St. Louis.

—The only child of Gen. Kilpatrick died on the 30th January, at West Point.

—The Rev. Mr. Staples, a well-known Unitarian clergyman of Providence, died in that city on the 8th of February. He was universally respected for his many virtues.

—Capt. George Wallack, of the New York Volunteers, nephew of the manager, died on the 2d of February, at Jersey Branch, after a few days' illness.

—Samuel G. Capewell, the eminent steel plate engraver, died at Hudson City, on the 4th of February, aged 38. He was a kind, genial man, and is much regretted by a host of friends.

Accidents and Offences.—On the morning of the 5th ult., February, a fire broke out in Colt's Arm Manufactory, Hartford, Conn., which destroyed nearly one-half of the entire building, and inflicting a loss of $100,000.

—A mulatto named Daniel Brooks went into a Grocery store in Sixth street, on the 20 February, in company with two other negroes, and upon William S. Hill, the proprietor, refusing to supply them with liquor, Brooks drew a pistol, and shot him, from which wound he died on the 8th. The murderer was arrested.

—Hartgen, the negro, who shot Kane, an Irishman, who invaded his home, has been acquitted, the evidence plainly showing that he did it in self-defence.

Foreign.—One of the leading doctors of Paris, and, in a business way, also, has been making a large fortune by getting the lives of his patients insured, and then poisoning them—a very French way of doing business. But he has been found out, and now he humbles in jail.

—The Halifax Chronicle says, that what with the expense of watching and guarding, the charge of Government officers in collecting the goods and dues of, warehousing there, &c., and the frequent meeting of the Vice Admiralty Court, there will not be a cent dear left of the Chesapeake and cargo to dispute about before long.

—The British Government has awarded an annual pension of £75 to Gerald Massey, the poet.

—Quite an excitement reigns at Paris among sporting classes in regard to the fight or fights which, on account of the impecuniosities of the Scientists, are supposed to be imminent between the two Confederate pugilists, the Florida and Alabama, now lying at Brest and Cherbourg, and the Federal gunboats which are watching them. We are being very kind, and gentlemen have even gone to the pains in questioning us for us to see the fight. But there is no intention of fighting on the part of the Confederate boats, and it is hardly probable that, when they make up their minds to run out, the Federal boats can stop them.

Art, Science and Literature.—Modern science is truly "making the desert to blossom as the rose." In the great desert of Sahara, in 1856, irrigation thrives have been opened, around which vegetation grew with great vitality; 30,000 palm trees soon attained their stature, and two thriving villages established. But the depth of Lake Melrir, in the lowest part of the basin, was struck, and from two of these wells 800 litres per second flow up, showing that there is a large body of water underneath.

—The Evening Progress publishes the following curious details: "Alexander Dumas, the novelist, is in the city, not for the first time, but by the Yes! the Sun Police, which is now being published, is paid for at the rate of a certime a letter. We can guarantee the exactitude of the rate."

—The trial of Bishop Colenso for false and erroneous teaching commenced at Cape Town on the 17th of Nov., before the Metropolitan Bishop and two suffragans.

—Thackeray has left each of his daughters £500 a year, his den £5,000 with when they are married. He has also left his mother a comfortable annuity. In addition to these bequests he has left a good house in Kensington, as a home to all. This is to be sold on the marriage of his daughters and the death of his mother. He has made all the money since 1851.

—The public are not generally aware that the valuable collection of Egyptian antiquities, known as Abbott's, is now to be seen at the Historical Society's building, 11th street and 2d avenue. The rooms are also a fine collection of pictures, which renders a visit very agreeable to the lovers of art. Mr. Moore, the librarian, and his obliging assistants deserve the thanks of the dilettanti for their admirable arrangement of these famous curiosities.

—A series of lectures has lately been delivered in Hoboken, for the benefit of the Widows and Orphans of Hoboken Firemen. The two were upon Bad Books, by John Harvey Lyons, one of the head pursers of the Bureau of Medicine, and Sea on the Majesty of Man, by Justice Whitley. They are both gentlemen of considerable ability, displaying the characteristics of its author. Mr. Lyons's lecture was very appropriate, as the pernicious and sensational literature is as destructive to mind as morals are sandy to the health and digestion.

Chit-Chat.—A gentleman, whose wife is away on a visit, protracted long beyond the promised return, writes to inquire "if he would call on Spence conquers lore, but the longer you stay away the better I like you." He expected to be left a widower.

—The Great Barrington Courier describes a culture of Governor Andrew on his shooting excursion with clothing, engaged in shooting an arrow into a target, in which he struck the centre.

—Erra Cornell, of Ithaca, N.Y., had an idea that women could do more with their needles if they did it as with their tongues, and by request of the "Old Soldiers' And Society of the village if it women could be found who would sew all day without stopping, if its candidates presented themselves, and, suitably dress, 16 of them, and started in quest of "sewing." They were sorely tempted by various lookers-on, but only two yielded, Cornell.

—The Portland Argus asserts that an old lady who was visiting a friend in that city, upon the news of "Saved!" remarked, "It's no wonder that the poor child fainted after pulling that great dog out of the water!"

—In Paris, not long since, an artist painted a portrait of the Emperor, and received from Napoleon donations. The artist invited the gentleman's friends to see it, and they invited it and pronounced it a perfect. One of them, who was rather nearsighted, complained that the Emperor's left shoulder was higher than his position, when the artist exclaimed, "Don't touch it; it is just right." "Oh," said the friend, "I beg pardon, I mistook the gentleman," "it can't be my friend Napoleon."

—The courteous style of official correspondence on which Gen. Butler has been severely criticised illustrated by the closing sentences of one of his letters to Secretary Stanton, dated Fortress Monroe, Va., 1863: "If I have this army now, I tell you plainly that I cannot answer for its safety if any other persons in Washington You have done your duty, and I will do mine."

—It is an interesting fact that the sale of confederated states sealed at Montgomery, Ala., consisted entirely of the remnants of the Edmund Ruffin House, where more than two years ago the Secession Ball had been given over by the very men whose estates now pass under the hammer. At the Secession Ball, the Chairman of the Tax Commission, Dr. William Henry Brisbane, the man who has charge of the sale of the estates of traitors from the State because he would liberate his slaves.

—In 1791 there were four houses where the city of Buffalo—the greatest city in the West—now stands, with its 100,000 inhabitants—now stands.

—Wooden weather vanes have taken the place of tin weddings. The Union Herald states that one came off recently in Lewisburg, Pa., when the presents—rockers, clothespins, bootjacks, washtubs and rolling-pins, piano-stashers and pails, with the customary salt and matchesafes, sugar-boxes and washboards, wooden nutmegs, shingle-nails, brooms, woodden shoes and corn wood, etc.

—A writer in Once a Week says: "During a residence of some months in Vienna, I never saw a duel between officers or persons of the realm in circulation. You pay your cabman or your omnibus conductor with a two-penny piece, and the omnibus conductor with a twopenny banknote; you get a penny change, and you have two pence more than before after 10 o'clock; you throw a banknote to the driver of a hackney coach, and you have two pence women counting up their paper money when they have finished counting; you see people in the act of stopping it into the crimson collection-box in the church; on every hand you see evidences of the critical state of Austrian finance."

—A Yankee editor thus defines Some surprise is manifested here at the course of British journals in supporting the cause, showing that they are Traitors to the French Government in regard to the exportation to the Southern States. Government, however, is not aware that the concession was made at the request of the French Government, instigated by the express request of the British Government.!!

BARNUM ENDORSES OSCANYAN.

MR. BARNUM, in his lecture last Wednesday evening at the Cooper Institute, "How to Make Money," observed that:

"The rubble will not be humbugged twice. No man ever deceived the public twice. It is the advertising presented to them must be worthy of their confidence. Oscanyan must possess something to support illustration of this, I am happy to observe among the audience the face of an intelligent man who has the largest the patronage of the public—I mean Mr. Oscanyan (applause). I myself had the pleasure of hearing one of his lectures, and witnessing his unique and exceptional illustrations of Eastern characters, and I must say that I was highly delighted with it. And one of the audience, because it possessed the charm of novelty, and originality and truthfulness. I am happy to say Though it is evident that he was not born a showman, he possesses that most precious talent to exhibit himself aside from a liberal offer, but for some reason or other he declined it. Mr. Oscanyan, I am told, does not have already observed about public patronage, and is far better than the ordinary run of lecturers, fully, though doubtless unexpected by him. (Applause.)"

We find Madame C. Mears still at her residence, No. 21 Madison avenue, where she has long been unable to accept all the patronage offered her. She has now secured more spacious and convenient accommodations to receive pupils. Meantime we congratulate ourselves on having so able and accomplished an instructress among us.

AMBOLINE.—This is an admirable preparation for the hair, producing a luxuriant growth, a rich profusion, and possessing in an eminent degree those distinguishing qualities of the best article. It will also promote and its beauty increased. It will always be found beneficial to those who require a healthy action of a gentle stimulant. As it is a compound from the Florida balm of the Everglades, it is entirely free from its use. It is put up in larger quantity than any similar article.—Civil Service Progress.

CURIOUS FACTS IN THE HISTORY OF THE POPES.—Of the 258 Popes, not one has reigned 25 years; the longest reign is that of Pius VI., which lacked six months of that time. Most of the Popes died before the 16th year; only 9 have exceeded 20 years. Thirty-two occupied the Holy See only one year, and 18 scarcely a month. Pius III. reigned only 27 days.

The man who went for Southern measures has not returned. It is suspected that he may have fallen into one of them.

PARTING.

AN OLD GERMAN FOLK-SONG.

Morrow must I forth from here,
Forth at dawn to-morrow;
All too soon doth morning come,
Seems it wings to borrow.
Home to leave is sad I find,
But my Love to leave behind.
This is saddest sorrow!

When two folks are right good friends,
They will quarrel never;
Sun and moon would first fall out,
Ere such friends dissever.
How much worse is then the smart,
When two loving hearts must part,
Part perhaps forever!

Kiss thee on the hands or cheeks:
Little breezes playing;
Think that these are sighs of mine,
Out strong lands here straying.
Thousands send I daily o'er
Which go float the house about,
Where my Love is staying.

MY PLAIN LOVER.

I WAS a coquette. Many a lover's heart I had lacerated by refusing their offers of marriage before I had found them on to a "declaration." My last victim was a young man of fortune. He was frank, awkward, homely and ungainly man, but his heart was as true as steel. I respected him highly, and felt pained that I should be his anguish at my rejection of him. But the fact was, I had myself fallen in love with Edward Elliott, who had been accustoming in his devotions to me.

Mr. James Fraser warned me against Elliott; but I had myself penetration enough to see his warnings as an insult.

Time and days afterwards Elliott and I were engaged, and my dream of romantic love seemed to be in a way of realization. I had a week of happiness. Many were the visits that Elliott made to me. Away was from the bright, short dream to find themselves in lifelong duties, and bondage from which there is no escape. Thank God, I was not yet miserable as they!

My mother was a widow in opulent circumstances, but hardly rich enough to be above the use of an easy, listless, credulous nature, hating trouble, and willing to take things just as they might happen to present themselves. She was pleased with my inquiries about Captain Elliott—but fondly believed that inasmuch as he was rich and distinguished apparently as a man of honor also, especially as he had served in the Crimea and in India, and wore medals. His regiment was quartered in the neighborhood, and he had the reputation of being one of the wealthiest, as he was certainly the handsomest officer in it.

I remember as well as possible the day we became engaged; he was an coty, but had managed to ride down to our house on horseback, and while we were walking in the garden he made the tender avowal. I remember I said:

"Oh, mamma!" he hastened to her—returned in three minutes—and I had to her presence to receive the assurance that the maternal consent had been obtained. "Now, I am free. To be sure! My dear mother hated trouble, as I have shown and her moreover loved me tenderly; so that she was well pleased to find a husband for me possessing such a form and manner apparently so eligible for her beloved child as Elliott.

Well, a week passed quite delightfully, as I have said; and at the expiration of this brief period there was to be given a grand ball and supper, a dancing party winding through our old Devonshire woods and quiet country roads, and I had the cavalcade.

I rode my own beautiful brown Bess. Elliott also was mounted on the handsome black horse that had been sent him from Constantinople. Following us was a bevy of merry girls and their cavaliers; and among the last I recall, awkward and silent James Fraser. His presence has marred the pleasure of my visit, and I was glad to be in advance of them all that I might not see him.

And so we rode on through the woods, and I listened, well pleased, to the low but animated words of the gallant Elliott, my affianced knight and lord. A fairy lady of the olden time, that he might go forth to do battle for her, could not all seem to recognise the claims of his peerless love. Very eloquently he spoke of the inspiration of love, of the brave deeds and perilous adventures of chivalry, wishing again and again that he might thus prostrate and maintain his faith before the lady. I pleased me to listen to this and to believe it sincere, though I surely had no wish to put my lover to such a test.

A hot sunlight streamed through the still woods, and a wounded bird, darting past, fluttered and fell at the feet of brown Bess. With a bound and a spring that nearly unseated me, she was off.

Struggling to regain my seat, I had no power to restrain her, and away I flew, in the fear and madness of the moment grew upon her. I could only cling breathlessly to mane and bridle, and wonder helplessly whether I should be killed or saved. She swerved from a passing wagon, and turned into a by-road. Here I felt that I could soothe moreover increased her pace then term from my hands and I could not regain them. I clung to the mane and closed my eyes that I might not see the trees by which we passed. How sweet was life in those precious moments that I thought had gone! And all its joys, its affections, its last crowning love rose up before me. I remembered the pang that would rend Elliott's heart as he saw my lifeless body borne home; and then the thought would come if he were pursuing and trying to save me, even as he had said, at the risk of life and limb.

I remembered no more. I felt a sudden shock, a fearful rushing through the air, and knew no more until days afterwards, I awoke to a faint, weak sensiblness of life in my chamber at home.

I never saw Captain Elliott again. The last words I ever heard were those of sympathy and delighted daring. The last act of his life, in connection with which was he not the author of frightened youths who rode after me, to contemplate the consequences of, and as soon as he saw me lifted from the shallow bed of the river, into which I had been thrown when my frightened horse stopped suddenly on its bank, to ride hastily off. That evening he sent to make inquiries, and learning that I was severely but it was hoped not fatally injured, he thenceforth contented himself with such tidings of my condition and improvement as could be gained from more rumor.

At last it was announced that I would never recover entirely from the effects of my injury, and that very day Captain Elliott departed suddenly from the neighborhood. He made no attempt to see me, nor sent me any farewell. When I was once more abroad, and beginning, though with much unalloyed bitterness, to learn the lesson of patience and resignation that awaited me, I received a letter from him, in which he merely said that he presumed my own judgment had taught me that, in my altered circumstances, our engagement must be at an end, but to satisfy his own sense of honor (his honor!) he must tell me that, while I entertaining the highest respect for me, he declared a former engagement of my claim.

Writing at the bottom of this letter, "Let it be as you wish." I returned it to him at once, and thus ended my first dream of a romantic love.

I had heard ere this of Elliott's cowardly conduct on that day; and now that I had brought me to inquire who had rescued me from that imminent peril, and then I learned that James Fraser, his arm already broken by the fall of his horse, had received my letter from him as he caught at her bridle, had ridden after me and risen me from the fire. Many times daily he made inquiries concerning me, but had been the hand that sent the rare flowers that decked my room; his were the last that brought words of comfort and hope to my poor mother; his were the books I read to me in my lingering days of convalescence; and his, now, was the arm that supported me as, slowly and painfully, I paced the garden walks.

I have loved him for many a year. I have forgotten that he is not handsome—or rather he is beautiful to me, because I see his grand and loving spirit shining through his plain features and animating his awkward figure. I have long since laid aside as useless the "declaration," kept by myself, beautiful spirits dwell only in lovely bodies. It may be a presumptuous supposition that, in denying physical perfection, I am not myself deficient or distorted—but I am more brighter that it is not marred by petty vanity or love of the world's praise.

FOREIGNERS AND THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

THE English language must appear fearfully and wonderfully made to a foreigner. One of them, looking at the collective of a number of vessels, said,

"See what a flock of ships."

He was told that a flock of ships was called a fleet, but that a fleet of sheep was called a flock. And it would have been just as reasonable to call a collection of cattle a flock, as that of a flock of girls is called a bevy, that a company of soldiers is called a horde, and a host of worshippers is called a congregation. A congregation of rogues is called a corps, and a corps of robbers is called a band, and a band of musicians is called a swarm, and a swarm of people is called a crowd, and a crowd of gentlefolks is called a throng, and a throng of rogues and rascals are called the roughs, and the miscellaneous people are called the mob, and the community or the public, according as they are spoken of by the rich or by the poor, is called society.

Now, again, the Hudson River is fast when the ice is fast, and it is open when the ice is not open very fast, for it was loose. A clock is called fast when it is right, and a horse is fast when he can run fast, and when he is secured to remain stationary. People fast when they have nothing to eat, and eat fast, consequently, when opportunity offers.

A friend of a German student attempted to court in English, with the aid of a dictionary. Having occasion to address a lady in an English party, he having recently lost her husband, must be open to new offers, and must be addressed accordingly.

"Highborn madam, since your husband have kicked the bucket—"

"Sir!" interrupted the lady, astonished and displeased.

"Oh, pardon—sine, ten thousand pardon! Now I make the application, madam, then the ice cream?" Madam, since your husband have cut his stick—"

The lady rose from her seat in a state of mettle, and reading as much in the lady's countenance, he hastened to add, "Madam, since your husband have passed away—"

"Madam, since your husband, your most respected husband, have stepped de cross—"

This was his shoe-horn, and as this also "came home," the lady left the room more incensed than ever. It turned out that the dictionary he had used had put the finishing touch to the list with the following worthy series of equivalents:

To die—To kick the bucket.

To cut one's stick.

To be off—To step the cross.

To hop the twig; to hop off the perch into kingdom come.

A French translator of Coopers "Spy" in which the word "whip-poor-will" occurred, thought the bird in question family is called "The Locus a," found the term expressive, and called it "La Soutterelle." The Grasshoppers." But in one place even the dragoons are represented as "whipping" to one of the locusts in the lawn. The translator, not to be confounded the dragoons, gravely informs his readers that the dragoons fastened the bridle of their horses to a huge grasshopper standing before the door of the house.

"Since your husband have departed," a dog one day, remarked, "I love de dogs, de cats, de sheeps, de cows, de horses, de everything but de wolves."

Of course, we make as funny mistakes in other languages as they do in ours.

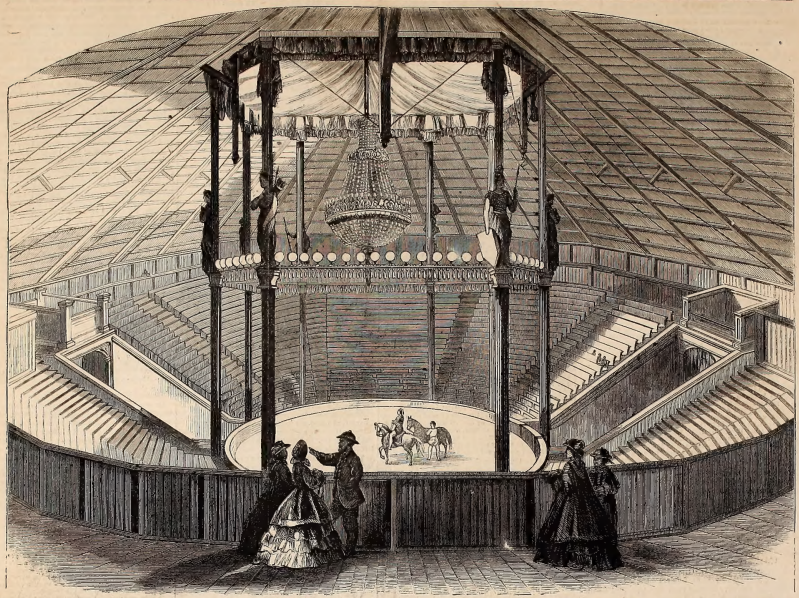
"Miss Blank, it is known," "I—" seemed to say

Many very queer things—and this queer way.

But all of these are the slips of the tongue and pen Occurred when she called a French modiste modest."

NORTH CAROLINA LEGISLATION.

A LIST of bills taken up in the Legislature of North Carolina is suggestive:



A bill to amend an act authorizing the Governor to impress negroes for the Confederate service, so as to owners for not furnishing their negroes as requisition.

A bill to fix the price of salt to be sold by each county was taken up. Mr. Hoke and he wanted the price put up so as to exclude the concern from the State.

A bill to prevent aliens from trafficking or trading in this State.

Mr. Ellis thought the speculating foreigners should either be put in the army or out of the country.

However, we must give North Carolina the credit of one great act in times like these. Among the bills before their Legislature is one for the establishment of graded schools in North Carolina." If, after this, the State is tolerated in the Confederacy, we cannot understand it.

THE HIPPOTHEATRON AND NEW YORK CIRQUE, FOURTEENTH STREET, OPPOSITE THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, N. Y.

THE DANISH-GERMAN WAR—ENTRY OF THE FEDERAL TROOPS INTO ALTONA, BY THE NORIS THOR.—FROM A SKETCH BY AN AMERICAN RESIDENT.

OH! WILL THEY HEAR OF THIS AT HOME?

The battle trembled in the scale!
Charge followed charge through smoke and fire.
Strong men stood deathly still and pale,
To see the rebel lines grow nigher!
Our colonel, brave as brave could be,
Rode down our line through showers of flame,
And shouted, "Comrades, will you see
Your well-worn colors blush with shame?"

His voice closed up the broken line,
And from our ranks a stripling flew,
He said, "The task alone be mine
To plant our honored flag anew!"
Then with a cheer he sped away,
He seemed to spurn the ground beneath,
And like a hunted stag at bay,
He waved it in the traitors' teeth.

A storm of bullets round him rained,
As with a shout we onward pressed,
But ere our patriot guide we gained
The lifeblood stained his gallant breast.
We raised him from the shell-ploughed sod,
His white lips full with bloody foam,
And heard amid his prayers to God,
"Oh! will they hear of this at home?"

A MIDNIGHT RACE

On the Mississippi.

"GOOD-BYE, Harry! Good-bye, Frank! Take care of yourselves, and try to bring old Thompson to terms. Leave of absence two weeks sharp. Don't forget."

And as the kind old merchant uttered this parting injunction the huge steamboat, with her living freight, moved slowly through the crowd of floating palaces that environs the levee of St. Louis.

A long standing debt in Memphis, which the firm thought would require the skill of its two most diplomatic clerks to collect, brought us both from the dust of the counting-room on the Rue Main of the Mississippi. Leaning over the bulwark I watched the busy levee recede in the distance, until a slap on the shoulder and Frank's cheery voice aroused me.

"Hallo, mate! what attractions has the old Father of Waters' muddy face, or what griefs do you endure, torn away from your beloved ledger and journal, that you won't condescend to notice your fellow-passengers?"

"Why, have you met any acquaintance on board?" I asked.

"Yes. I have made better use of my eyes than you. You know my cousin, Nellie, that I introduced you to at the last ball?"

"Oh! I remember. A little fairy with sunny curls and laughing eyes, a compendium of all kinds of mischief; a regular——"

"Spare yourself the rest, Mr. Weldon," interrupted the individual in question, emerging from the cabin behind me; "thank you for that flattering description and enviable character."

"Oh! pardon me," I replied, with a bow, while Frank burst out laughing; "the mischief I referred to consists of the havoc made among tender hearts by those charming attributes I mentioned."

"Saved by a close shave," cried my mischievous companion; "of course yours and mine included. But, say, Harry, my cousin here with the sunny curls, &c., is going to Memphis. Now, suppose we constitute ourselves her guardians, ready to annihilate any reasonable number of men who may venture to insinuate by thought, word or deed that she's not the prettiest girl in Uncle Sam's dominions."

"Fully endorsed by me; and for my part I shall be most happy to receive the precious consignment."

"Even if it is a compendium of mischief, and a regular——. Well, then, I hereby consign and entrust myself to your care, and look out for Uncle Nathan if you suffer any one to spirit away his precious niece."

"I'll insure you, lady of the sunny curls and laughing eyes," said the irrepressible Frank, "against all dangers visible and invisible, except my grave friend there, who in a very, very dangerous customer, quiet as he looks. But there is the gong, Miss Nellie, and, as one of your constituted guardians, allow me to call your attention to that most important duty of the day—our dinner."

Nellie Hyatt was a complete antidote against care or ennui, and in her society time flew fast.

After she retired to her stateroom Frank tried to ingratiate himself with two elderly females, hailing from the classical regions of Arkansas. He succeeded very well for some time, but while endeavoring to convince them that they were perfect specimens of female loveliness, received an intimation in no dulcet tone, "to shut up and stop chattering like a monkey in a cage."

At this delicate hint, and certain belligerent demonstrations of the backwoods beauties, we arose and went forward to the clerk's office, to take a look at the male portion of our fellow-passengers.

Around the table near the bar were a number of men, as usual, playing cards. Among them was the unmistakable face of that wiest of all harpies, the Mississippi gambler.

What an enigma is man!

Who would think that venerable old gentleman opposite, with his Puritanic face and clerical dress, or the innocent, baby-faced rustic beside him, were professional blacklegs and sharpers?

Yet watch their countenances well for a few minutes, and in spite of their schooled features a gleam of their real character will ever and anon betray itself. One of them looked up.

I started involuntarily, for I knew the meaning of his fierce scowl when our eyes met.

Some years before he was a confidential clerk in the St. Louis firm of ——, where I was then employed. Notwithstanding his long connection with the firm and their trust in him, yet as soon as I laid eyes on him I disliked and suspected him. Certain mysterious disappearances of cheques and unaccountable increase of bills payable made me watch him closely, and after months of patient vigilance, which even a detective might envy, I found that my estimate of his character was correct, and placed the proofs thereof in the hands of the authorities.

Well, Jonas Oakley was accommodated with State lodgings, and allowed sufficient time to ruminate on the evil of his ways in the Penitentiary. He was a sullen, hard-looking fellow, and although I feared him not, yet I felt a natural chill at the heart when his dark, evil eye glared up from the table at me. Whispering to Frank, I brought him up on the hurricane deck, to escape the undesirable company below. The setting sun just sank below the trees when we passed the little village or landing of St. Genevieve.

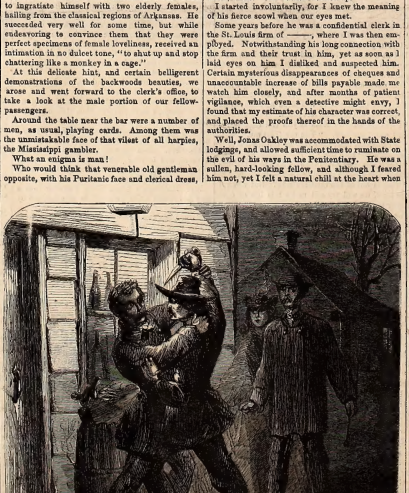
The air was unnaturally still and close, and the progressive motion of the boat failed to create the faintest breeze.

From the wharf of St. Genevieve a boat was heading down the river as we passed, and as she pushed out further from shore we recognised her at once. It was the renowned Hiawatha, of Memphis, an opposition boat, and reputed the fastest on the river.

Knowing the rivalry existing between both companies, I remarked to Frank that we were in for a race. The captain's voice shouting to the engineer, "to chip on more steam, and show those Memphis fellows what legs the old Ben Lewis had!" confirmed my conjecture.

An angry puff of steam as a challenge, and the increased speed of the boat as an answer, quickly brought out the passengers until the decks were crowded with eager spectators.

As we ran past, a challenge, in the peculiar dialect of the Mississippi, with the usual amount of oaths, passed between the captains on the fronts of their respective boats. A deep gloom below us on the river, and the ominous stillness of the air, broken at intervals by the distant moan of the wind, foreboded one of those sudden tornadoes so frequent on the Western rivers.



Rounding the next bend, we came in sight of the picturesque town of Cape Girardeau, on the first Chickasaw bluff. Both boats simultaneously directed their course to the wharf boat, to shelter themselves from the tornado, which we now plainly heard crashing its way through the Missouri woods. Scarcely had they done so when it swept across the river immediately below us, and amid the pitchy darkness that ensued we heard the crash of trees and unearthly shrieks of the wind in its mad career.

Had it crossed the river higher up, no one could calculate the consequences to town or boats, for destruction marks the path of a Western tornado As it was, even on the outskirts, our boat trembled violently, and the tall chimneys shook and strained at their iron stays.

But the storm was soon over, and it left a refreshing breeze that the former stifling air made us appreciate. The boats were delayed at Cape Girardeau taking in freight, until far in the night.

HON. E. G. SQUIER, UNITED STATES COMMISSIONER TO PERU.

The Assassin foiled

Fate of the Mississippi Steamer.

Nellie, Frank and I strolled up on the bluff and visited the beautiful little college at the south side of the town. We returned by a narrow street that led down to the wharf and was destitute of houses, except a few drinking-saloons near the river. I noticed, as we passed one of these, a fellow, whose features were concealed beneath a slouched hat, follow us with a noiseless, catlike tread that I didn't like. Telling my companions to walk on faster, I fell back a little and confronted the intruder, when I thought he had overtaken me. Well, for me I turned in time. The glare of a lamp from one of the saloons near us fell on the features of Oakley, as, with uplifted knife, he stood beside me.

"Well met, Harry Weldon! Have you forgotten an old acquaintance? If you have, then by—I have not, and I have an old score, and a long one too, to settle with you this very night. It's owing long enough."

I caught the descending arm by the wrist, and calling for assistance—I had left my revolver in my stateroom—I struggled desperately with him for the knife. How long the contest would have continued was not a difficult matter to decide, for he was my superior in physical strength; but it was suddenly terminated by a gentle tap on my adversary's pericranium from Frank's loaded cane, and he lay stunned at my feet. Leaving him to pick himself up the best way he could, we hastened on board, to avoid the attentions of any of Oakley's ruffian friends. Half an hour after we started.

As the boats moved out together in the stream, the captains seemed by no means forgetful of the trial of speed interrupted by the storm, and soon we were cleaving the dark waters at maximum speed.

I can conceive no grander or more exciting sight than these two monster antagonists, rushing through the pitchy darkness, side by side, the flames leaping over and over, high above the tall chimneys, and the woods resounding with the strokes of the ponderous machinery.

The hurricane and cabin decks were crowded with passengers, cheering, fighting, betting, with all their attention given to the exciting scene.

Nellie, who sat with us outside her stateroom, got alarmed at the violent jarring of the boats, and although we tried to laugh off her fears, I felt secret misgivings myself, knowing the recklessness of many of the Mississippi captains and engineers. I excused myself for a short absence, and leaving my companions, descended the gangway to the lower deck.

The sight there was not qualified to allay my apprehensions. The fire, fed by nearly the entire force of hands, glowed like the tornado, the boiler trembled beneath the tremendous force of the imprisoned giant, and the engineer, eager only for victory, paused to disregard the warning hand that indicated an alarming increase of power on the dial before him.

I hurried to my companions, and noticing a lifebelt hung over the gangway, I took it with me almost instinctively. Although I tried to laugh away Nellie's fears, Frank saw by my hurried manner and uneasiness that something was the matter.

"What's the matter, Mr. Weldon?" said Nellie, with an anxious tremor in her voice, "and what's that you have in your hand?"

"An article I want to show you how to use in case you should ever need it."

"Oh! a lifebelt! But is there any danger?"

"Oh, no! but it is always better to know how to save yourself if ever you should be in danger on a steamboat."

"Thank God!" cried Frank, springing up, and pointing to a distant light to the left of us, "there's the lights of Cairo, and the race is nearly at an end."

"In a few minutes more we shall take leave of our friends yonder," I answered, pointing to the Hiswatha shead, "and then, Miss Nellie, you may dismiss your fears."

Rounding the point of Illinois, washed alike by the Ohio and Mississippi, we neared the Cairo wharfboat, and our rival continued her course with abated speed down the Mississippi.

"There's the St. Charles and the Illinois Central," said Frank, as we passed them, "and see, yonder is——"

The rest of his speech was drowned in a crash beneath us like an earthquake; the entire deck heaved inward, the lifebelt around Nellie, and the next instant was struggling in the dark waters of the Ohio amidst a perfect Pandemonium of cries, groans and other deafening noises.

The hissing giant below had burst in one bound from his metal prison, and converted the stately Ben Lewis steamer into a floating wreck.

The plunge of huge fragments of the cabin beside me, and the vision of the tall chimneys, like comets, in the air above me, succeeded, and for some moments I could not collect my senses farther than instinctively clutching a passing spar. When I opened my eyes and recovered partially from my sudden immersion, I looked round anxiously for my late companions.

The white face of Nellie rose beside me, and as the lifebelt, though small, buoyed her up, I tried to cheer her with the hope of speedy rescue.

The levee was soon crowded, and skiffs, dugouts, rafts and yawls of every description were on their way towards the numerous forms struggling in the Ohio.

The burning hull now drifted by, covered with people running to and fro in the flames, evidently afraid to commit themselves to the more merciful river. The wind, setting across the waters by the blazing wreck reached us, when a skiff shot into relief from the darkness beyond, and I felt my collar grasped by a stout arm.

Calling to the sturdy occupant to attend first to my companion, I helped her into the boat and swam around to the stern to get in myself. Suddenly a pair of arms encircled my neck, and as I turned round a sickly feeling of terror came over me when the features of Oakley, distorted by every hellish passion, swung beside me.

"Mct again, Harry Weldon, never to part! We'll find the cattish together to-night at the bottom of the Ohio!"

I clung with both hands to the stern of the skiff; I felt my breath leaving me and my throat writhe beneath the pressure of his fingers; I saw the uplifted oar of the boatman and heard his exclamation, "Oakley, by ——;" then followed a shriek from Nellie, a sprinkling of the fingers round my throat, and consciousness forsook me.

When it returned I found myself on the levee, supported by Frank and the boatman that saved me, and as my eyes wandered from one object to another it seemed as if I was in some frightful dream.

The glare of a passing torch fell on a body just dragged in from the river, and I relapsed into insensibility when I recognised the features of Oakley, so dreadfully mutilated with blood and a hideous wound that almost divided his skull.

RAGS.—It is a curious fact that nearly two thirds of the rags annually imported into the United States from all other countries come from Italy. The circumstance is due to two causes. 1st. Italy is in fact the receiving of all the old rags in the Levant. The Turks, the Greeks and Syrians use vast quantities of cotton cloth; and the Archipelago and the whole Levant is swept by Greek and Italian coasting vessels, and the size of boats that bring cloaks to Harford, was made for rags which country produce exclusively. These rags ultimately get to Genoa, Trieste, &c., and are subject to America. 2d. There being no low priced cotton books printed, there is no home demand to work the rags up into paper. The population can neither read nor write, and of course the statistary correspondence is rare. No country where the mass of the population read and write can afford to export rags. Hence rags and customs house returns yield a clue to the actual state of society.

ONE of our Southern exchanges announces, with considerable flourish, that the editor has a fine boy, a promising son, whom he hopes may live to inherit the fortune his father makes by publishing a newspaper.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

DAYDREAMS.

BY JULIE LEONARD.

FAR from the sound of distant rushing battle,
Far from that sound!
Yet do I dream of fort and steel-beat's rattle
Over the ground;
Seeing the starry flag its folds out-flinging
Upon the breeze,
Hearing the sound of martial voices ringing
Among the trees.

The clattering tramp of many chargers prancing
This heavy tread;
The glittering light of shining bayonets glancing
Above the dead.
The shouts, the shrieks, the groans of deadly anguish
Break on the ear;
While on the ground the face of dead and dying
The sun shines clear.

I do not love to read the dark dim future,
Even in dreams;
Above the clouds that rather hover o'er our country
The light still gleams.
And in the hand of Him who yet reigns o'er us
I rest in peace,
Trusting that this but a distant time before us
This war will cease.

The Gulf Between Them.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.

CHAPTER IX.—CONTINUED.

He did not notice the red flame that shot up to her cheek, or the shrinking of her whole frame, but went on.

"The child is so precious to me. The dearest human being I have on earth—" He hesitated a moment, and added, "Except—except you, my wife."

She was grateful even for this. Was it that she was conscious of deserving nothing more, or did, in the hungry yearning of her heart, seize on this sweet ailment with thankfulness after the famine of her recent life?

He saw the tears spring into her eyes, and drew her closer to his side.

"Be careful of her for my sake, Elizabeth. She was given me in solemn charge at my mother's death-bed. She has been the sweetest object of my barren life. Let no harm come near her—no evil thing taint the mind which I leave in your hands pure as snow. Guard her, love her, and give her back to me, gentle, guileless, and good, as she lies now, in the sweetest and most innocent sleep I ever witnessed."

"I will! I will!" answered Elizabeth, conquering a sharp spasm of pain with the spirit of a martyr. "If human care, or my sacrifice can insure her welfare, She has both to bestow."

Grantley bent down and kissed his wife gratefully.

"Remember, Elizabeth, my happiness and honor are left in your keeping."

Did he mean her honor and happiness both were bound up in Elsie, or had he really thought of her rightful share in his life?

This question burned through the young wife's mind, but she would not accept it in a bitter sense then. The parting, hour was close at hand. She trembled as each moment left them.

"I will be kind to Elsie as you can desire; indeed I will," she said. "You can trust me."

"If I doubted that, harassing as the voyage is, I would take her with me."

"Oh, if you only could take us both! It terrifies me to be left alone, surrounded with—"

A shock on the main-deck cut short the hour of his departure. On the instant Dolf knocked at the door.

Elizabeth started up, trembling like a wounded bird that struggles away from a second shot.

"So soon! so soon!" she cried, wringing her hands. "I had so much to ask; every thing to say, and now there is no time."

Grantley took her in his arms, and kissed her very hurriedly, for the servant was standing in sight.

"God bless you, Elizabeth, I must go!"

She flung her arms wildly around him. Her pale face was lifted to his in mute appeal. Was it for pardon of some unknown offence, or the deep moaning of a true heart for love?

Grantley put her away, and went hurriedly into Elsie's room. Her face was pale and troubled. Elizabeth stood by the door grasping for breath; he wrung the hand she held forth to stop him, and was gone. She heard his steps as they went down the main-staircase, and they fell upon her like distinct blows. The great hall-door closed with a sharp noise, that made her start and almost cry out. Then came the sound of carriage-wheels grinding through gravel, and the beat of hoofs that seemed trampling down the heart in her bosom. As these sounds died off, she attempted to reach the window and look out, but only reached the couch which stood near it, sunk down, and fainted without a moan.

CHAPTER X.

A DAY or two after Mellen's departure Elizabeth, who was taking her solitary promenade on the verandah, was surprised by a visit from Mrs. Harrington, who came fluttering across the lawn between two gentlemen, with whom she seemed carrying on a right-and-left flirtation as she walked. She came up the steps with her innumerable flounces all in commotion, and her face wreathed with insipid smiles.

"I knew that you would be moping yourself to death," she cried, floating down upon Elizabeth with both hands extended; "so I gave up everything and came down in the train. Now do acknowledge that I am the kindest friend in the world."

Elizabeth made an effort to receive her cordially, and with a great effort shook off the gloomy thoughts that had oppressed her all the morning. Mrs. Harrington did not heed this, she was always ready to welcome herself and in haste to secure her full share of the conversation, and before Elizabeth could thank her rather large attempts at a compliment she presented her companions.

Elizabeth had hardly glanced at the gentlemen till then, but now she recognised the elder and more stately of the two as the person who had probably saved her life on the Bloomingdale road.

"I need not welcome you for this gentleman, I am sure," said Mrs. Harrington, clasping both hands over Mr. North's arm, and leaning coquettishly upon him. He is our preserver, Mrs. Mellen, our hero."

North smiled, but rejected these compliments with an impatient flirt of his hand.

"Pray allow Mrs. Mellen to forget that this is not our first meeting," he said; "so small a service is not even mentioning."

He looked steadily at Elizabeth as he spoke. She seemed to shrink into herself, and only faltered out:

"No, no; it was a service I can never forget—never hope to repay."

"Now let me beg a welcome for my other friend," interposed Mrs. Harrington. "Mr. Hawkins. I told him it was quite a charity to come with me and rouse you up a little, because he is dying to see your lovely face again."

Mr. Hawkins, a very young man, was leaning against a pillar of the verandah in an attitude intended to display his every stylish dress to the best possible advantage. He appeared mildly conscious that he had performed a solemn duty in making a perambulating tailor's block of himself, and ready to receive any amount of feminine admiration without resistance. He came forward half a step and fell back again.

"Such a charming place you have here—quite a paradise," he drawled, caressing the head of his cane, which was constantly between his lips. "I trust—you—the other angel of this retreat is visible?"

Elizabeth replied with a little shudder and a faint smile. She had received many similar affectations from Mrs. Harrington's friends, but it was too much that they should be forced upon her just now.

"Where is Elsie?" cried the widow, in her vivacious way, shaking her gay plumage like a peacock in the sun.

"In her own room," replied Elizabeth. "Pray walk in, and I will call her."

"Oh, never mind, I'll go!" said Mrs. Harrington. "Gentlemen, Elizabeth will excuse Mrs. Mellen; but no flirtation, remember that!"

She giggled and fluttered, while the very young man said "Oh!" as if he seemed shocked in the scenery. Then away she flew, kissing her hand to them, and leaving Elizabeth to gather up her weary thoughts and make an effort at entertaining these unwelcome guests.

Mrs. Harrington found Elsie yawning over a new novel, and quite prepared to be enlivened by the prospect of company.

"But I can't go down such a figure," she said; "I must wait a minute. One gets so careless in a house without gentlemen."

"Poor dear! I am sure you are moped."

"Oh, to death. It's dreadful!" sighed Elsie. "I feel this so acutely. If I only had a little of Bessie's stoicism!"

"Yes, it's all very well; but you are made up of sensibility," said the widow. "Change your dress, dear. Oh, you've made a conquest of a certain gentleman."

"What, that Hawkins! He's a perfect idiot!" cried Elsie. "But he'll do, for want of a better."

She had quite forgotten her low spirits, dressed herself in the most becoming morning attire possible, and floated down to greet the guests and quite bewilder them with her loveliness. Hawkins had been mortally afraid of Mrs. Mellen, but with Elsie he could talk, and Elizabeth was left quite stunned by the flood of frivolous nonsense and the peals of senseless laughter which went on about her.

She managed to escape unseen, on the plea that household duties required her presence, and stole up to her room for a little quiet. While she was there she heard Tom Fuller's voice in the hall; she opened her dressing-room door, and there he stood in his usual disordered state.

"I've come to say good-bye," were his first words.

"Then you are really going, Tom?" she said, sorrowfully, taking his hand and leading him into the chamber.

"Yes, I'm off to-morrow," he said, resolutely, withdrawing his hand through his hair and trying to keep his courage up. "A trip to Europe is a splendid thing, Bess—I'm a lucky fellow to get it."

"I shall be all alone," she said, mournfully.

"Oh," cried Tom, it's good of you to miss me—nobody else will! But there, Bessie, don't you set me off! I wanted to say good-bye—I—I—well, I'm a confounded fool, but I thought I'd like to see her just once more."

"And those tiresome people are here," said Elizabeth.

"Who do you mean?"

"Oh, Mrs. Harrington and two men she has brought to spend the day—one of them is the person who checked our horses that day."

"I thought I heard the widow's pipe as I came through the hall," said Tom. "Well, well, it's better so! You see I don't want to make a gooney of myself."

"Tom, you are the best creature in the world,' cried Elizabeth.

"Don't you bless you, no," said Tom, rubbing his forehead in a disconsolate way; "I ain't good a bit! 'Pon my word, I'm quite shocked lately to see what an envious, bad-hearted old toad I'm getting to be."

"We won't go downstairs yet," said Elizabeth; "sit down here and let's have a comfortable talk, like old times, Tom."

"Well, no, I guess not, thank you—it's very kind of you," returned Tom, getting very red. "You see I can't stay but an hour—I must take the next train, for I've lots of things to do."

"Oh, I thought you would spend the day."

"Now, don't ask me—I can't—it wouldn't be wise if I could," cried Tom, giving his hair an unmerciful combing with his fingers.

"No," she replied, pityingly; "perhaps not. And you would like to go downstairs?"

"I'm a fool to wish it," he groaned; "those fine people will only laugh at me, and I know that I see that magnifico and his popiejay friend about Elsie I shall want to wring their conceited necks. But I'll go—no, it's no use telling that! You understand just what a fool I am—I came because I feel as if I must see her once more!"

Tom was twisting his hat in hands, his features worked in a dreadful way in the attempt he made to control his agitation; but Elizabeth loved him too well for any exhibition of his odd manliness—she was entirely absorbed in sympathy for his trouble.

"Oh, Tom, Tom!" she said, "I do hope absence—the change—will do you good."

"Yes," he replied, with a struggled whistle that began as a groan; "yes, of course, thank you—oh, no doubt! You see, there's no knowing one good thing from another. But there you, Bess, if the old ship would only sink and land me safe as many fathoms under salt water as was convenient, it would be about the best thing that could happen to me."

"Don't talk so, Tom; you don't know how you pain me."

"Well, I won't—there, I'm all right now! Tirol-de-rol!" and Tom actually tried to sing. "I say, Bessie, she never—she don't seem, you know——"

"What, Tom?"

"To be sorry I was going, you know?"

"Elsie? She has been so engrossed with her brother's journey——"

"Yes, of course," Tom broke in; "oh, it's not to be expected—and then that other—founder ever would have asked! Ri-tol-de-rol! I'm a little hearse this morning, but it's no matter—I only want to say I'm not put about, you know—that is, not much."

He shuffled uneasily about the chamber, upset light articles, committed disasters generally; but all the while he looked as resolute as possible, and kept up his attempt at a song in a mournful quaver.

"Well, I can't stay," he said; "I mustn't lose this train! Now, don't feel uncomfortable, Bessie; I'm going to be a man! Good sense to all right—sensible ness is good for my disease, you know," and Tom tried to laugh, but it was a dismal failure compared with his former lighthearteduess.

Elizabeth saw that he was restless to get once more into Elsie's presence, painful as the interview must be to him, so she smoothed his hair, straightened his cravat and led him downstairs.

"Oh, you dear, delightful Tom Fuller!" cried Mrs. Harrington, pleased to see any masculine novice, for Elsie had carried off both her victims into the window-seat, and was making them dizzy with her smiles and brilliant nonsense.

"I am delighted to see you," cried Tom, frantically, thrusting his hat in her face, in a wild delusion that he was offering his hand, so upset was he with all that he had to do as if rapidly going up in an unmanageable balloon.

"I'll just say good-bye as the same time," pursued Tom; "for I'm rather in a hurry, thank you."

"Why, you're not going away directly!" cried the widow. "Oh, you must stay and entertain me."

"Thank you; it's of no importance; I'm not quite on my sea legs yet," gasped Tom, growing so dizzy that he was guessed of a mad idea he was already on shipboard.

"Why, you look quite white and ill," said the widow.

"Ah! oh, not any, thank you," cried Tom, with an insane attempt at a giggle, stepping on the widow's dress, dancing off it and dealing Elizabeth a blow with his hat.

Mrs. Mellen felt herself grow sick at heart; she glanced at Elsie; the girl was laughing gaily, and chatting away with young Hawkins, regardless of Tom's presence. North stood by, looking at her with his deep, earnest eyes, as if searching her inmost soul for the hidden guilt. Elizabeth felt bitterly indignant, and exclaimed—

"Elsie, my cousin has come to wish us good-bye, if you can spare him a moment."

"So you are really going?" called Elsie. "You oughn't to run away so. It's so unkind of you."

Tom spun round like a teetotum, and only preserved his balance by a miracle.

"My lap is so full of flowers," cried Elsie, glancing down at a mass of roses that glowed in the the folds of her morning dress, "I can't possibly get up; come and shake hands with me."

It was well for Tom that Mrs. Harrington seized hold of him, and afforded him a few instants to regain his composure, while she asked all sorts of questions about his journey and its object.

"Mary Harrington," said Elsie, "just let Mr. Fuller come here; you mustn't assault peaceable men in that way."

"La, dear, what odd things you do say! I was just talking with Mr. Fuller about his journey."

Elsie glanced at North and whispered to his companion, who tittered in a very polite way. Tom knew it was at him, and grew more awkward and insane. Elizabeth recognized the silly laugh, and darted a look of such indignation towards the offender that the youth was quite subdued, although he had no effect whatever on Miss

She rose, dropping her flowers over the carpet, as she did so, put her hand in Mr. North's arm, left Harrington to follow, and across his cane in peace, and moved towards the group.

Good-bye, Tom Fuller," said she, touching his shoulder with the tips of her fingers. "If you bring me a beautiful lava bracelet perhaps I'll forgive you for going away, and some pink coral, don't forget."

Tom was a sight to behold between his confusion, his distress and his superhuman efforts to be calm.

"I'll bring you twenty," said he, recklessly.

"Oh, that would be overpowering," laughed Elsie. "Good-bye. I'm sure you'll look very odd when you are seasick."

"He! he!" giggled Hawkins, as well as he could for the cane.

Tom turned on him like a tiger

"You'll ruin your digestion if you laugh so much while eating," said he, and for once Tom had the laugh on his side.

"Good-bye, Miss Elsie," he continued, determined to get away while he could still preserve a decent show of composure; "good-bye."

"Good-bye, Tom Fuller, good-bye!"

She flung some of the flowers she was holding at him, Tom caught them and rushed out of the room, pressing the fragrant blossoms against his waistcoat, and smothering a mortal pang.

Elizabeth followed him into the hall, but their parting was a brief one, spoken amid bursts of laughter from within, which neither noticed them.

"Good-bye, Bessie—God bless you."

"You'll write to me, Tom? I shall miss you so."

"Oh, don't; it ain't worth while! I'll write of course; good-bye."

Tom dashed down the steps and fled along the avenue in mad haste, and Elizabeth returned to her guests.

It seemed to her that the day would never come to an end. Mrs. Harrington and Elsie scarcely heeded her, but fluttered from room to room with the two guests, doing the honors with great spirit, and urging them to remain some days. Elizabeth was offended at the reckless offer of hospitality; Elsie saw her displeasure and said, "It wasn't my fault; don't blame me, dear; Grant is gone, and if you are cross I shall die."

So Elizabeth controlled herself; perhaps the girl had done all this harm unconsciously. She must believe so, at least; no cloud must come between them and her vow. Three almost strange men were invited, and must remain if they so decided.

As if she had not enough to bear already, Elizabeth's infictions were increased towards the dinner hour by the arrival of a Mr. Rhodes and his daughter, who lived at a easy distance, and had thought it a neighborly and kind thing for them to drop into dinner with Mrs. Mellen, and console her in her loneliness.

THE ROSE'S DEATH.

WHEN the west is burnt away,
All but one long crimson ray;
When the warm dew on the vine
Is distilled to fairy wine;
When the birds sleep in their nest,
And the cattle, brooding, rest;
When night looms in darkening sky,—
Then the rose prepares to die.

When the flowers have fairy dreams,
And white moths sit o'er glooming streams;
When elm branches sway and feather,
Boding of rude autumn weather;
When the warbirds are quite done
Of all the children of the sun!
And a hush comes on the mirth
Of all creatures of this earth;
When that gold light quits the sky—
Then the rose prepares to die.

WHAT CAME OF A VALENTINE.

By Charles F. Preston.

On the evening of the 13th of February, 1850, two young men sat in a comfortably furnished room in a large New York boarding-house. A bright fire glowed in the grate, well-chosen segravings adorned the walls, and a bright light was diffused about the room from an Argand burner.

Let me introduce the occupants of the apartment as Tom Stacy and John Wilbur, young men of twenty-five or thereabouts, who were known in business circles as Stacy & Wilbur, retail drygoods dealers, No. — Broadway. They had not been in business long, but were already doing unusually well. They had taken apartments together, one of which is now presented to the reader.

"Has it occurred to you, Wilbur," asked his partner, removing his cigar and knocking away the ashes, "that to-morrow is St. Valentine's day?"

"Yes, I thought of it this afternoon, as I was walking up from the store."

"So did I, and to some purpose too, as I will show you."

Tom Stacy went to a drawer and drew out a gorgeous valentine, an elaborate combination of hearts, doves, etc.

"What do you think I gave for that?" he asked

"I don't know, I'm sure. It appears to be very elegant."

"It cost me ten dollars."

"Whew!" whistled Wilbur. "It strikes me you are either very extravagant or very devoted. May I know what fair damsel is to be made glad by the receipt of this elegant missive?"

"That's my secret," said Tom, laughing. "I don't mind telling you, however. It's to go to Edith Castleton."

"I presume you feel particularly interested in the young lady?"

"Not at all. But I told her I would send her valentine, et in vain! Snan't you conform to the custom of the day?"

"I had not thought of it," said John, thoughtfully, "but I believe I will."

"And what fair lady will you select as the recipient?"

"You remember the poor seamstress who occupies an attic in the house."

"Yes, I have met her on the stairs two or three times."

"She looks as if times were hard with her. I think I'll send her a valentine."

"And what good do you think it will do her?" asked Stacy, in surprise.

"Wait till you see the kind of valentine I will send."

Wilbur went to his desk, and taking out a sheet of foreign paper, drew from its portemonnaie a ten dollar bill, wrapped it in the paper, on which he had previously written, "From St. Valentine," and placed the whole in an envelope.

"There," said he, "a valentine has cost as much as yours, and I venture to say it will be as welcome."

"You are right. I wish now I had not bought this costly trifle. However, as it is purchased, I will send it."

The next day dawned clear and frosty. It was lively enough for those who sat by comfortable fires and dined at luxurious tables, but for the poor who shared none of these advantages it was indeed a bitter day.

In an attic room, meanly furnished, sat a young girl, shivering and thin. She was covering over a scanty wood fire, the best she could afford, which heated the room very insufficiently. She was sewing diligently, shivering from time to time as the cold blast shook the windows and found its way through crevices.

Poorly clad! Life had a very black aspect for her on that winter day. She was alone in the world. There was absolutely no one on whom she could call for assistance, though she needed it sorely just then. Starvation was the end which she saw in her discomfort, "Is it worth while living any longer?" But she recalled from the sin of suicide. She might starve, but, at least, she would not take the life which God had given her.

Plunged in gloomy thought, she continued her work. All at once a step was heard ascending the narrow staircase which led to her room. Then there was a knock at the door. She arose in some surprise and opened it, thinking it must be the landlady or one of the servants.

She was right. It was a servant.

"Here's a letter for you that the postboy just brought, Miss Morris."

"A letter for me!" repeated Helen Morris, in surprise, taking it from the servant's hand. "Who can have written to me?"

"Maybe it's a valentine, miss," said the girl, laughing. "You know this is Valentine's day. More by token, I've got two myself this morning. One's a karakter (caricature ?), so mistress calls it. Just look at it."

Bridget displayed a highly embellished pictorial representation of a female hard at work at the washtub, the cast of beauty being decidedly Hibernian.

Helen Morris laughed absently, but did not open her letter while Bridget remained—a little to the disappointment of that curious damsel.

Helen slowly opened the envelope. A banknote for ten dollars dropped from it to the floor.

She eagerly read the few words on the paper—"From St. Valentine."

"Heaven be praised!" she said, folding her hands gratefully. "This sum will enable me to, carry out the plan I had in view."

Eight years passed away. Eight years with their lights and shadows, their joys and sorrows. They brought with them the merry voices of children—they brought with them the sounds graves—happiness to some and grief to others.

Towards the last they brought the great commercial crisis of '57, which busses that seemed built upon a rock tottered all at once like a house of cards. Do not many remember that time all too well? Many merchants, with anxious faces, ran frantically from one to another to solicit help, and met only averted faces and distrustful looks?

And how was it in that time of universal famine with our friends—Stacy and Wilbur?

Up to 1857 they had been doing an excellent business; they had gradually enlarged the sphere of their operations as it were rapidly growing rich, when this crash came.

They immediately took in sail. Both were prudent, and both felt that this was the time when this quality was urgently needed.

By great efforts they had succeeded in keeping up till the 16th of February, 1858. On that morning a note of two thousand dollars came due. This was their last point. That surmounted they would be able to go on in assured confidence.

But, alas! this was the rock of which they had most apprehension. They had taxed their resources to the utmost. They had called upon their friends, but their friends were employed in taking care of themselves, and the selfish policy was the one required then.

"Look out for number one" superseded the golden rule for the time being.

As I have said, two thousand dollars were due on the 1st of February.

"How much have you got towards it?" asked Wilbur, as Stacy came in at half-past eleven.

"Three hundred and seventy-five dollars," was the dispirited reply.

"Was that all you could raise?" inquired his partner, turning pale.

"Yes."

"Are you sure you thought of everybody?"

"I have been everywhere. I'm fagged to death," was the weary reply of Stacy, as he sank exhausted into a chair.

"Then the crash must come," said Wilbur, with gloomy resignation.

"I suppose it must."

There was a silence. Neither felt inclined to speak hopefully. For six months they had been struggling with debt. What could are shore, but in sight of it they must go down.

At this moment a note was brought in by a boy. There was no postmark. Evidently he was a special messenger.

It was opened at once by Mr. Wilbur, to whom it was directed. It contained these few words only:

"If Mr. John Wilbur will call immediately at No. — Pine Street, he will learn something to his great advantage."

There was no signature.

John Wilbur looked in much surprise, and passed it to his partner. "What does it mean, do you think?"

"I don't know," was the reply, "but I advise you to go at once."

"It seems to be in a feminine handwriting," said Wilbur, thoughtfully.

"Yes. Don't you know any lady on Fifth Avenue?"

"None."

"Well, it is worth noticing. We have met with so little to our advantage lately that it will be a refreshing variety."

In five minutes John Wilbur jumped into a horsecar, and was on his way to No. — Fifth Avenue.

He walked up to the door of a magnificent brown stone house, and rang the bell. He was instantly admitted and shown into the drawing-room, quickly footed by a servant.

He did not have to wait long. An elegantly dressed lady, scarcely thirty, entered, and bowing, said, "You do not remember me, Mr. Wilbur?"

"No, madam," with his politest politeness.

"We will waive that, then, and proceed to business. How has your house borne the crisis, in which so many of our large firms have gone down?"

John Wilbur smiled bitterly.

"Here's a question unusually till to-day," he answered. But the end has come. Unless we can raise a certain sum of money by five, we are bankrupt."

"What sum will save you?" was the lady's question.

"Two note due is two thousand dollars. Towards this we have but three hundred and seventyfive."

"Excuse me a moment," said his hostess. She left the room, but quickly returned.

"There," said she, handing a small strip of paper to John Wilbur, "is my cheque for two thousand dollars, which you can repay it at your convenience. If you should require more, come to me again."

"Madam, you have saved us," exclaimed Wilbur, springing to his feet in delight. "What can have inspired in you such a benevolent interest in our prosperity?"

"Do you remember, Mr. Wilbur," said the lady, "a certain valentine, containing a ten dollar note, which you sent to a poor girl occupying an attic room in your lodging-house, at 8 years since?"

"I do distinctly. I have often wondered what became of the young girl. I think her name was Helen Morris."

"She stands before you," was the quiet response.

"You, Helen Morris!" exclaimed Wilbur, starting back in amazement. "You, surrounded with luxury!"

"No wonder you are surprised. Life has strange vicissitudes which you seem not to have anticipated. I have not forgotten you, however. I resolved, if fortune put it in my power, I would befriend you as you befriended me. That time has come. I have paid the first instalment of my debt. Helen Eustace remembers the obligations of Helen Morris."

John Wilbur advanced, and respectfully took her hand. "You have nobly repaid me," he said. "Will you also permit me the privilege of occasionally calling upon you?"

"I shall be most happy," said Mrs. Eustace, cordially.

John took a hurried leave, and returned to his store as the clock struck one. He showed his delighted partner the cheque which he had just received. "I haven't time to explain," he said, "this must at once be cashed."

Two o'clock came and the firm were saved—saved from their last peril. Henceforth they met with nothing but prosperous gales.

What more?

Helen Eustace has again changed her name. She is now Helen Wilbur, and her husband now lives at No. — Fifth Avenue.

And all this came of a valentine.

THE HIPPOTHEATRON AND NEW YORK CIRQUE.

THE new iron circus, which has just been completed, in Four-teenth street, directly opposite the Academy of Music, is one of the most complete and admirable buildings of the class in the world. It combines elegance with safety, and the amplest space with the most enlarged ideas of comfort. Such an establishment has long been wanted in New York, for the rickety, dingy, uncomfortable tents, pitched only for short times to time, by perambulating circus companies, might do very well for small country towns and villages, but were entirely unworthy the patronage of the citizens of New York. The Hippotheatron is an establishment that will reflect credit upon the city, and will afford a class of amusement, produced in the best style, that was needed to complete the circle of amusements of the metropolitan city.

The following description will give a full idea of the magnificence and beauty of the Hippotheatron and New York Cirque:

The building is constructed of corrugated and ridge iron, and is fire-proof and of pretty strong. It will not only be fire-proof, but combine the essential elements of durability, stability, and handsome and substantial. It is by far the largest, and will be the most elegant circus in the country, of any of the kind ever built in this or any other country, throwing the Niblo's Saloon all the light and air it needs, and Mr. Frank Vivona, Sterling, etc., the seating exactly alone affords a much greater number than the space does, each having a full and uninterrupted view of the entire arena.

The hippodrome proper, or main building, in which the performances will be given, is a square of 120 by 100 feet diameter, the outer iron walls of which are 53 feet high, and the roof rises from these walls in a circle to a height of 70 feet, and is surmounted by a lantern 30 feet in diameter. The roof is of heavy ironed timber, all the most salient supports being of iron. The roof is light, but massive, and is so constructed as to combine both elegance and safety. It is unique and classic-looking also outside, and adds a fine feature to the general effect, to the beauty of the building.

Within the outer mammoth circle there is an inner circle of 42 feet diameter, surrounded by a circle of elegant slender columns, surmounted by a handsomely executed cornice. The interior circle forms the arena or ring, on which several feet of sawdust are strewed for the performances.

From this exterior circle of columns the seats rise, like those of the ancient Roman amphitheatre, gradually to the height of the exterior walls, and extend from the ring to the street on the building, all the dead weight being placed on the solid earth beneath.

One hall of the circle is devoted to the boxes, the parquet, and the orchestra seats to the amphitheatre, as it is styled, a spacious promenade gallery, entered from the box side, encircling the entire building; the amphitheatre has a standing gallery in front of it, and a range of private entrances to the seats, facing each other; these are approached from the outside by spacious and stabling for 10 horses, the latter intended to be used for the performance. The entrances to the seats will be cushioned and covered with scarlet cloth.

The principal entrance will be by an Italian arched passage, with ornamental iron gates, and opening into a spacious cake of iron—this leads down to interior vestibules, which are connected with the boxes and parquet, and also to the box seats—this vestibule has niches for statues, busts, etc.

The building will be heated throughout with steam, and lighted by the most approved methods, by gas and candles; and a separate ring of burners encircling the inner circle of columns 42 feet in diameter, and sufficiently bright, &c.

The principal feature of the decorations is a ground tone of pale pink, picked out in panels with light waved scroll work of gold; the interior domes over the stands are to be hung with rich scarlet cloth, festooned with heavy bullion fringe; eight private exit doors are provided in case of any unforeseen emergency.

The architect is Mr. Laurence B. Valk, who is associated with Mr. C. G. Lord as superintendent of the building, the entire work being under the constant supervision of the proprietor, Mr. James Cooke.

It will be seen by the above description that the building is complete in every department, and that it combines many of the most important points for the comfort of its audience—namely, that every individual who pays for his or her admission to any part of the house can see all that is to be seen. The Hippotheatron will open on Monday, the 22d inst., next February 8th, with a company complete in every department, and with a management which has both the determination and the means to carry on the enterprise brilliantly and successfully.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

A GENTLEMAN, a few days since, on his way to Bank's, to have a picture taken, went into Shute's fur rooms, which are on the same floor, and thinking the gentleman in charge of the desk a white head of the house before he discovered that he had mistaken the porter.

A PHOTOGRAPH taker assures his customers that he can take excellent likenesses of their deceased friends.

A NEW sign for a tavern has recently been invented—Drinking in the dining room.

A CELEBRATED philosopher used to say—"The lovers of fortune are like steep rocks—only cupids and goats can find enough moss to nourish them."

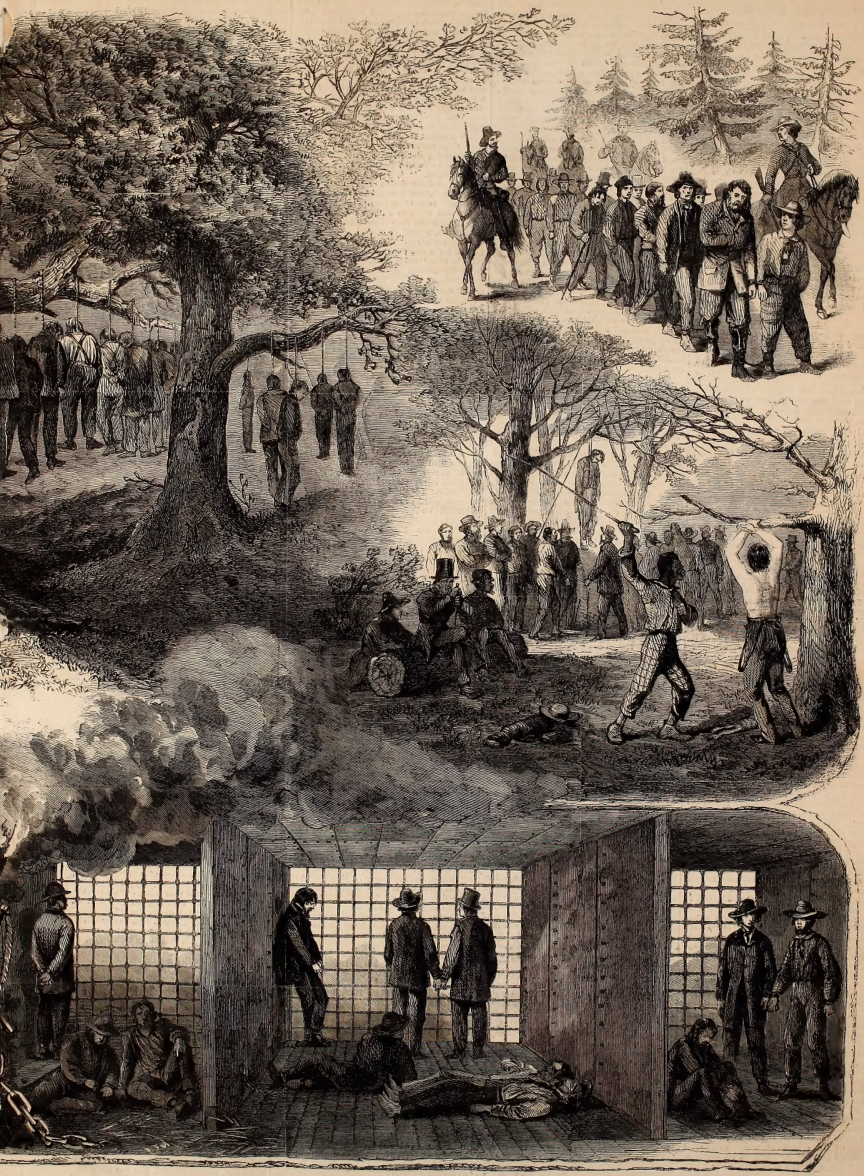
"ABRAH, me darlint," cried Jamie O'Flanigan to his loquacious sweetheart, who had given him the mitten, "don't be tearing the heart out of a two bourse ride behind the little bay nage in his oyster cart, simply because you've taken to the divarsion yourself, and are like my noniest friend?"

"Shure, and I suppose they're red, is it?" quoth the blushing bridget.

"Faith and a better reason than that, mavourneen. Because there is one of them each side of a waggin' tongue!"

A LADY residing in the city, who, by the way, was one of the strictest of evangelical church members, recently remarked that she was afraid to let her little boy wash a dancer. On the first Sunday after his birth, a little son of her brother's came running into the house with a couple of eggs, which he had just found in the hen's nest.

"See, aunt," he exclaimed, "what our hens have laid to-day!"



"What!" exclaimed the lady, lifting up her eyes in horror, "is it possible that your father, a grown man and a deacon, allows his hens to lay on Sunday?"

MR. QUIRES, when asked if he ever sleeps talks, she doesn't hurt herself? The desire of Mr. Query for practical knowledge and things is only equalled by his humanity.

1. Hanging of Mrs. Hillier by Men in Disguise. 2. The Stocks. 3. Cages at Little Rock Penitentiary. 4. Hanging

REBEL BARBARITIES IN TEXAS.—Fr

ng of 30 Union Men. 5. Bringing in Union Men. 6. Hanging and Flogging. 7. Prison at Little Rock.
FROM SKETCHES BY FRED. SUDDER.

THE THREE BROTHERS.

BY WILLIAM WIRT SIKES.

[The following lines are based on a coincidence which is portrayed in the three pictures of the group. The men alluded to are brothers of the Hon. F. W. Ferry, of Michigan, who contributed $500 to the recent Northwestern Fair.]

I.—WITH RIVER.

The nation's birthday came. The starry flag,
Kissed by the morning breezes, to the sun
Flung out its folds; the morning gun spoke loud
The people's loyal heart and spirit proud.
Here rose the voice of Edward—youngest son.

He speaks to firemen, on the natal day
When cannon thunder wedded liberty,
In words that burn he thrills those listening souls,
He does not hear this sound of strife that rolls
From the far battle-plain where soldiers die!

II.—VICKSBURG.

The nation's birthday. O'er a vanquished foe
Our army marches into Vicksburg's streets.
Victorious!—sounding music's grandest strains,
Drowning the memory of all battle-pain.
High the strong pulse of loyal triumph beats.

There William—eldest brother—role in pride,
One of the conquering army of the West;
His younger brother's voice he does not hear—
Peans of triumph in the air appear,
And pride and hope swell in his happy breast.

III.—GETTYSBURG.

The nation's birthday dawned upon a scene
Of blood and anguish, where the battle-ground
Of Gettysburg stretched out its soldiers dead
And wounded; for the hour those brave men shed,
Though agony dwelt burning in each wound.

At the same hour when Edward's voice arose—
At the same hour when William with his men
Marched into Vicksburg—soldiers knelt in prayer
Above a river of earth, their idol calmly there
Slept the deep sleep that wakens not again.

'Tis Noah—brother third—that slept the sleep!
In Gettysburg's fierce fight he fighting fell,
Leading his charge, and shouting, "Rally, men!"
What a striking home for native land again,
And there God struck his young life's parting knell!

CLARA.

A Story of Life in Africa.

By John B. Williams, M. D.

CHAPTER I.—NO FOR AFRICA!

Charles Norton was the son of a wealthy New York merchant. Mr. Norton, sen., worked much, spent little and saved money. His son worked little, spent much and squandered debts. This system of balancing his books did not please the old man. One fine day he put an end to it, and Charles found himself his own master at twenty-one years of age, with a small fortune.

He was a handsome young fellow, five feet six inches high, fresh-colored, with a thick beard and solid muscles. He could drink a good deal without getting intoxicated, and strike very hard. In less than three years, what with the expenses of supper parties, cards, &c., he found his fortune singularly reduced. An intimate friend of two weeks' standing advised him to speculate in the stocks with what remained. This friend naturally took upon himself the management of the funds. He managed them so well that young Norton was compelled to look out for some occupation by which he could live. Like many other persons, he desired a large salary and little work. The contrary is generally offered. He was difficult to please, and refused many fine opportunities.

Having nothing to do, and no money to spend, Charles passed the greater portion of his days reading. Records of travels and the sea more charmed him more than anything else. The expeditions of Gordon Cumming and other adventurous hunters had a peculiar charm to the young man. He soon had only one idea, and that was to go to Africa, bury himself in the desert, and live by the produce of the rifle—that is, kill elephants, deal in ivory and amass a fortune.

On the 18th of June, 1845, he sailed for the Cape of Good Hope, with a personal outfit of arms and a large quantity of ammunition. Three months afterwards a Boer (a Dutch colonist who was returning to his own country, situated at the limits of the colony) left the young American in the midst of an immense forest, accompanied by a Hottentot servant. After having paid the Dutchman the cost of the journey, Norton found that he only had five dollars left. But he possessed two guns, a pair of pistols and plenty of ammunition. Christopher, the Hottentot, who had carried all these things, thought they were decidedly more than necessary.

In two days our hero had killed eight serpents, a porcupine and several antelopes. Finding that the serpents were more numerous than the antelopes, and that his master's kitchen was very badly furnished, Christopher quietly stole away while Norton was asleep. He naturally took one of the guns, as all probability as a souvenir of his master, but he had the delicacy to leave almost all the ammunition behind.

Charles found himself alone in an unknown country. In default of other qualities he possessed courage. He continued his course in a direct line, and hunted as he went.

Overcome with fatigue, half-nourished, and with no shelter but the leaves of the trees, Norton grew thin and careworn. To put a climax to his grief, he did not meet a single elephant. A black rhinoceros that he had wounded knocked him down and his fall was so severe that he fainted. Both remained extended on the ground, the rhinoceros dead, and the huntsman unconscious. When he opened his eyes Norton perceived around him fifty hideous little beings, almost naked, with hair resembling sheep's wool. These frightful creatures were armed with bows and arrows of small size. Five or six of them carried javelins. They were Bushmen, a savage race who lived by pillage. They commenced by stripping the unfortunate American, whom they left almost naked. Knowing that the tips of their arrows were poisoned, Norton took care to make no resistance. They then began to cut up the rhinoceros. Their intention in the first place had been to kill the huntsman, but they thought afterwards they would first of all employ him to assist in transporting the rhinoceros to their retreat. At the moment a detachment of Boors from the neighborhood came in search of the Bushmen, who had stolen their cattle. They surrounded, massacred the poor savages, and shot them without pity. Seven or eight Bushmen only escaped by flight.

They carried off the rhinoceros and neither his weapons, clothes, nor money. For the want of anything better he was compelled to use the clothes a gigantic Hollander, killed in the fight.

The chief of the Dutch colonists was named Adam Roschoff. He was a rich proprietor in the neighborhood. He questioned Norton, first in Dutch, then in French. Fortunately the young man comprehended a little of this last language. He told the Hollander a portion of his history, and confessed that he did not know what would become of him. Roschoff listened to him very quietly, refilled his pipe, and offered to the American his services. Norton looked with indignation and refused. The Dutchman sleepily lighted his pipe and retired.

"What will become of me?" asked Norton, when he was left by himself.

At the moment of separating from the Dutchman he had put this terrible question to himself. Not being able to reply to it in a satisfactory manner, he summoned up his courage, and running after Adam Roschoff, he told him that he accepted his proposition.

They arrived at Weisberg, where Roschoff lived. A tall girl with fair hair and blue eyes came to meet the Hollanders. It was Clara, Roschoff's only daughter. She embraced her father, and cast a look of astonishment at the young man who dressed in the fashion belonging to the gigantic Boer. Clara was a spoiled child, badly brought up, as are nine-tenths of the daughters of the Dutch colonists. When she saw Norton's grotesque appearance she laughed heartily. The Boers responded in the same manner; even the Hottentots joined in the peal. He believed that this insulting him on account of his sad condition. In this he was wrong—the Boers laughed from want of amusement—but they had no idea of wounding his feelings.

A tall and handsome young man, named Serous Bergiter, almost split his sides with mirth at the rest by this loud peals of laughter. He conversed with Clara, and pointed with his finger to the poor American. If the latter had been a man weak and irresolute he would have attacked them with his fists. He hung down his head and tears came into his eyes. The Boors, astonished at this emotion of a stranger, looked at each other, the reason for which they could not understand.

Dinner was soon afterwards served. Norton was placed between Roschoff and his daughter. On a glass after glass of wine, as if to make up for their mirth.

About the same evening the stranger Boors left Weisberg. Serous Bergiter alone remained, for five or six days. The young Hollander was evidently deeply smitten with Clara's charms. Norton had taken a great dislike to him. His loud laugh made a disagreeable impression on him. Nor did the Hollander regard the American with any favorable eye. He never lost an opportunity to remark to Roschoff and his daughter the young man's awkwardness.

It must be confessed that Charles made a poor servant; more accustomed to command than obey, he could not get reconciled to his new position. He had hinted at proposing to Clara that he should have been useful to him, Norton, exasperated by his reception at Weisberg, wrapped himself up in his dignity, and occupied himself in cleaning most mechanically the duties ascribed to him. It would have been very easy to have acquired Clara's good graces, instead of which he succeeded in excite peals of laughter, and never addressed a word to her.

Chance came to his aid. One day Charles wrote a letter to his friends in America, and Roschoff ordered him to send several beautiful hands. He was then charged to keep the accounts of the house. They were very simple.

By degrees the young man, a sort of overseer or superintendent, but still Roschoff did not allow him to forget that he was only a servant. Accustomed as Clara was to humor every caprice of her father, she was very much dissatisfied with the want of respect shown her by her father's new servant.

One day Serous Bergiter arrived at Weisberg. Clara received him with charming grace. It was especially the case when Norton was present that Clara showed herself amiable to the Hollander. The latter received Clara's attentions with the greatest calmness, as if it were quite a natural thing. As for Norton, he did not even appear to perceive it.

Whilst Bergiter was still at Weisberg, an English colonist who lived in the neighborhood, that is to say about sixty miles more or less distant, came to invite Roschoff to the wedding of one of his daughters. The guests at Weisberg were naturally included in the invitation, as also was Norton, for he had once or twice done some little services in the way of writing for his neighbors, and he began to be noticed by them all.

On the following Monday, Roschoff, his daughter, Bergiter, Norton and some others left for New Garden, where the bride and bridegroom lived. The travellers left in couples, in immense carriages, each drawn by four horses. They had to travel over frightful roads, but owing to the extraordinary skill of the Hottentot drivers they reached New Garden without any accident.

On leaving the Cape of Good Hope, Norton had left behind him a trunk containing clothes which were useless to him in his expeditions in the forests. A Hollander living in the neighborhood had been kind enough to bring this trunk to the young American. Delighted to possess this souvenir of happy times, Norton loaded the trunk with him to New Garden. He dressed himself like a gentleman. Clara had never seen him excepting in his coarse working clothes. She scarcely recognized him when he entered the room where the guests were assembled.

Norton's appearance made a great sensation. The young girls regarded with curiosity the servant better dressed than his master. The young men sneered and began to criticise the new comer. Clara's elegance drew from Clara a thousand compliments, ironical or sincere. Charles, however, did not pay the slightest attention to her. He put on a cold, grave manner, and like a spoiled child she complained to her father. The old man only laughed at her.

After dinner they had dancing. Their only orchestra consisted of a miserable Hottentot, who played the violin. He had drank so much at dinner that he soon was intoxicated to the play. While they were endeavoring to sober him, Norton, who saw the young girls' despair, took the violin and played several airs. It is true he was not a virtuoso à la Paganini, and that he sometimes played false notes, but African colonists are not so exacting as opera-goers.

Norton's talent put the climax to his success with the girls, and increased the ill-will of the men. Excited by Clara, Bergiter did everything he could to insult the young American. He knocked against him every moment. Naturally endowed with but little patience, Charles soon paid him back, and at last, quite irritated, he pushed Bergiter down by a vigorous blow from his elbow. The Hollander replied by another blow, and then, when Norton raised his fist to strike, Bergiter seized him by his cravat and the waistband of his pantaloons, and raised him from the ground as if he had been a child. The guests began to laugh. Norton, who was fearfully furious, profited by his position to inflict two powerful blows on his adversary's face. The Dutchman released him and struck at him with his fist. Bergiter was a great deal strong er than his rival, and although the latter was more agile, the result of the combat did not seem to be doubtful. But the blows not the only talent that Norton possessed. During his youth he had studied boxing, and he inflicted a deluge of blows on the face and head of unfortunate Dutchman, without the latter being able to return a single blow.

Clary with rage and his face covered with blood, the Boor threw himself on the American, for the purpose of getting him in his grasp, but a well directed knock-down blow sent Sis or seven of the Dutchman's friends surrounded Norton; others interposed. A reaction in favor of the American took place. The men at that moment detested the lieutenants. No sooner had Bergiter got on his feet than he seized a musket and pointed it at his adversary. Roschoff turned away the muzzle. Norton's face was bleeding profusely, and the dancing commenced. In that half savage country a quarrel is such a common thing that it is very quickly forgotten.

CHAPTER II.—JEALOUSY.

The honor of the victory remained, however, with Norton. As a physical strength and skill are the qualities which the colonists most esteem, the young American's conquest brought him much increasing glory.

Norton's favorite partner was the sister of the bride, a young and pretty English girl of seventeen years, named Miss Susan. At the moment that Charles was about to dance with her for the fifth or sixth time, Clara approached him and said, in a supplicating tone:

"Charles, I was to dance with Bergiter. As you are the cause of his not coming, you must place him and dance with him."

"I am engaged," said Norton.

"That is not true," murmured the young girl. "You were about to ask Miss Susan for the seventh time! really believe. But you shall ask her by-and-bye—but come—come!"

Norton followed her, grumbling. The three first couples were already placed without his grasping his lips. It is true that most of the other dancers acted the same, but Clara, who had seen Charles conversing with Miss Susan for the last hour sister, was very much dissatisfied with his silence.

"Really," said she, "I should like to know why you have engaged me to dance except me. It seems to me that you ought to have commenced with your master's daughter."

"Miss Roschoff," replied Charles, "your father pays me to keep his accounts—my duties extend no further, I believe."

Clara beat her foot on the floor with the impatience of a spoiled child.

"So it was your intention not to have asked me," said she.

"I did not dare," said Charles, with a shade of raillery in his tone. "A servant ask his mistress to dance with him!"

"You know that is the custom here," she returned. "That is not your reason. You did not want to dance with me. And the proof is that you do not speak a word to me, although you converse with all the others you danced with. Why do you hate me so much?"

"I hate you!—what can you mean?" returned Norton.

"Yes, you do. At Weisberg everybody tries to be agreeable to me—you, on the contrary, are civil to every one else excepting me. Whenever I approach you always move away."

"That is but natural," replied Norton. "You do nothing but scold or make your father scold me."

"Because you always treat me as naughtily."

"I am melancholy—that is all."

"Why did you not make me the confidant of your griefs the first day you arrived?"

"Your welcome was not of a nature to encourage me to do it."

"How would one of your own countrywomen have received you?"

"On the arrival of the unfortunate stranger, exhausted by fatigue, misery and hunger, an American girl would have spoken a few words of consolation to him, instead of laughing in his face, as you and Bergiter did."

Clara bent down her eyes and blushed. In spite of her want of education in politeness, a secret instinct told her that perhaps Norton was right. She became pensive. Absorbed by these new reflections, the young girl allowed the dance to conclude without uttering a word. When just about to leave Norton, she pressed his hand, and, with tears in her eyes, said:

"Charles, I think I was wrong. I am very sorry to have given you pain, but I assure you I had no intention of wounding your feelings."

Touched by the emotion the young girl showed in the utterance of these words, Norton remained too much embarrassed to reply. A species of self-pride prevented him from showing how much he was affected.

"Can I say anything more?" said Clara, who misunderstood the cause of his silence.

"Certainly not," he replied.

"Really?"

"On my honor."

"And now you will dance and converse with me?"

"With all my heart, Clara. Will you be disengaged for the quadrille after the next?"

"What can do you dance the next? With Susan, I suppose?"

"Yes."

"She pleases you very much, does she not?"

"I think her charming."

Clara was silent for a moment or two.

"I hope we shall leave to-morrow," said she, at last.

"So soon?" said Norton.

"Yes, I am tired of being here. And——"

She paused abruptly, noticing that Charles had turned away his head.

"Go to your partner," said she, making an impatient movement. "Do you not see that Susan is looking for you everywhere? How I hate these English!" she murmured, when Norton had left her side.

Clara wished to leave the next day. Her father opposed her. He signified to her that he expected the arrival of Bergiter at New Garden. The poor girl, whose heart had suddenly awakened, followed Norton like his shadow. The evening of the day after the ball Clara perceived that Susan and the young American and Susan had disappeared. She found them sitting under a large tree a short distance off. Norton was explaining to the mechanical genius, was making a little box for Susan.

"What is the matter, Clara?" said Susan, as the former reached the place where they were sitting.

"Nothing—nothing!" murmured Clara. "I came here—I want—— Charles, the carriages must be got ready."

"Presently," replied Norton; "I must first finish this."

"No, directly," she returned; "father is waiting for you."

"I shall be done in two minutes," replied Norton, going on with his occupation.

Clara stamped her foot. Susan began to laugh. The daughter of Adam Roschoff thought they were mocking her. In her jealous anger she seized the little box from Norton's hands, and throwing it violently on the ground, broke it into a hundred pieces.

"How wicked you are, Clara," cried Susan.

"What shall I ask to Weisberg I will make you a handsomer one, Miss Susan," said Norton. "I will send it to you or bring it myself, if I can."

"Do you intend ever doing so," replied the young English girl, regarding her rival with a mocking glance. "Is it not so, Clara?"

"Yes," replied Miss Roschoff, more exasperated by Susan's provoking tone. "If my father pays Charles his wages, it is not to work for others, but us."

Norton blushed with anger and confusion.

"My engagement with Adam Roschoff expires in four months," said he, making an effort to restrain himself. "Even though I should die with hunger, I will not renew it. I can promise you at least that at that time, Miss Susan, you shall have a new box."

"Do not fear you will not find a situation," returned Susan. "My father, as well as my uncle Henry, wants a man sure, like to take you into their employment."

"Come, Charles!" said Clara, impatiently.

Norton went away with her. They reached the carriage without the young American having uttered a single word. Already repenting of her anger, Clara made many efforts to appease Charles's resentment. Norton silently assisted in getting the carriages ready, and only replied by monosyllables to the indirect questions by which Clara sought to engage him in conversation.

The next day, during the whole journey, he remained somber and mute. Roschoff slept or conversed with another colonist, who was going the same road as they were.

Several days elapsed. The little excursion which Norton had made had had effect on him, for it awakened in his mind recollections and desires which m it had be all occup

When h servant,
but he
Norton
shaky sp quitted of withn with Cla
him.
Not da
tracted h
most abs
Americ
than mo trifling tact wil society. said, a s and the Norton perfectly could t tinsling
One morning
Norton
him that Americ
the ever disturbe minutes began t
Norton
sufficie storm.
She re
menced
him.
She bet wrench effort.
"Yo who co
This girl.
"A embarr when same
"W
"I
This had ev time, in the his im
"R
then
"H confus it—yo
"I
cried
If I w speaki mente your Hen
"H
his fo
Norton
Dis
to the to by was ov
the vi on the entere hersel
"W astoni
Roscho
He lo
cance
—you
Aft sugges sensat dresse
Hotte
Clara strike which his h hewe vant's
Th
com
Exac to th
the in the k kind
I wou shape on t
Ont shall
A
Wes

which made his situation more bitter to him than it had been hitherto. At New Garden, free from all occupation, he had lived like a gentleman. When he returned to Weizberg he again became a servant. Roschoff was certainly not a wicked man, but he was violent and exacting.

Norton's greatest happiness was to retire to some shady spot, to dream of his native land, that he had quitted with so much joy and which he now thought of without ceasing. He was very much annoyed with Clara, who came every moment to disturb him.

Not daring to confess the true motive which attracted her to Charles's presence, she invented the most absurd pretexts to converse with the young American. She had, however, more intelligence than most of the colonists, but she was lazy and trifling. She wanted, especially, that particular tact which can only be developed by mixing in society. She was, moreover, as we have before said, a spoiled child, and her jealousy every now and then betrayed itself by impatience and anger. Norton completely misunderstood her. He felt perfectly convinced that she did everything she could to annoy him. The young girl's awkward timidity served to strengthen him in his error.

One day Roschoff left on horseback early in the morning, for the purpose of inspecting his cattle. Norton hastened to finish the task which the Dutchman had set him when he left. Then taking some American newspapers which a trader had sold him the evening before, he took refuge in a wood near, situated not very far from the dwelling. Ten minutes afterwards he was seated near a spring, and began eagerly to peruse the papers which spoke to him of his country. The weather was of that hot, suffocating character which announces a coming storm, and which influences the least impressionable organizations. Charles had scarcely commenced to read when a human form rose up before him. He raised his eyes and recognised Clara. She held in her hand a brass knob, which she had wrenched from her closet door after much laborious effort.

"What do you want with me?" asked Norton, who could not restrain a gesture of impatience.

This brusque reception disconcerted the poor girl.

"A little while ago," said she, concealing her embarrassment by assuming an abrupt tone, "when I was opening my closet door, the knob came off."

"Well?"

"I have come to ask you to mend it for me."

This was the fiftieth time in eight days that she had exacted some similar service of him. This time, pushed to extremity by this persecution which was incomprehensible to him, he could not restrain his impatience.

"Really, Clara," said he, "you are determined then to torment me and give me no peace."

"But, Charles," murmured Clara, very much confused, "I assure you that this knob—look at it—you can see——"

"The deuce take your closet and the knob," cried the poor boy, completely exasperated. "Clara, if I were not sustained by the recollection that my engagement with your father ceases in three months, and that then I shall be at liberty to leave your infernal country, I think that I should blow out my brains, for you render my life so wretched by your conduct."

He turned his back on the young girl, and clasped his forehead with his two hands, according to the habitual pantomime of exasperated people.

Disconcerted by this rude reception, and struck to the heart by Charles's replies, and perhaps more so by the announcement of his departure, Clara was overwhelmed and could not find a word to reply. When she opened her lips to speak, her tears prevented her uttering a sound, and she precipitately retired. She had scarcely gone fifty yards than she burst into a violent fit of sobbing.

This little scene had an invisible witness in Jacob Oubana, one of the Hottentot servants at Weizberg. Without hearing Norton's words, he had easily comprehended the meaning of his gestures, and the violence with which Charles had cast the knob on the ground. Jacob followed Clara at a distance.

At the moment the young girl, bathed in tears, entered the path leading to the house, she found herself face to face with her father.

"What is the matter, my poor child?" cried he, astonished at the young girl's grief.

Instead of replying, Clara re-entered the wood. Roschoff being on horseback could not follow her. He looked around him, and saw Jacob a short distance off.

"Oubana, do you know what is the matter with my daughter!" he asked of the servant.

A prattler like all Hottentots, and jealous of the superior servant, Jacob related, with much exaggeration, the particulars of the scene he had witnessed. Adam, furious, threw his bridle to the Hottentot and ran to find Norton. It was a wonder in the first impulse of his rage that he did not strike the young American. A sort of respect with which Charles inspired the Dutchman alone stayed his hand; he did not spare reproaches and insults, however, which he heaped on his unfortunate servant's head.

Tears of anger and humiliation came into Norton's eyes, but he did not reply a single word. Exasperated by this silence, Roschoff determined to inflict a punishment on his domestic.

"Charles," said he, after he had exhausted all the invectives and curses, which we cannot detail to the reader, "I told the laborers at the kraal (a kind of encampment for cattle) at Om-Steny, that I would send them implements. Take from the shop the implements you will find ready laid out on the bench, and convey them immediately to Om-Steny. You will make the journey on foot. I shall expect you will be back by seven o'clock to supper."

A distance of at least fourteen miles separated Weizberg from the place mentioned by Roschoff. It was now noon. Norton had then to make a journey of twenty-eight miles in the fearful heat and under an enormous burden. It was enough to kill anybody. Yet Norton made no complaint. He went to the shop, took the implements, and started off for Om-Steny.

WALKS IN PARADISE.

BY ERNEST TREVOR.

THE air was clear and keen, before us flowed
The lordly Hudson, silvered by the light
Of the pale moon, which glid through silent night
As one who treads a sorrow-touched abode
And fears to wake the sleepers. Why did this Mute world, which I a thousand times had seen
Before without emotion, wear a mien
Which steeped my soul in soft entrancing bliss?
Because I wandered with my heart's true queen,
And she, all loving, leant upon my arm,
Gazed in my eyes, and, with a smile serene,
Looked those sweet thoughts which triumph over speech.
From thee, my darling, came that wondrous charm,
No thought can compass and no art can reach.

THE DANISH-GERMAN WAR.

WE present a fine view of the entrance of the Federal troops into Altona, the initiatory step which may lead to a general war in Europe. The advance of the troops of the Federal Diet into the Duchy of Holstein, has been followed and neutralized by the entrance of Prussian and Austrian troops into Schleswig. At any moment we may hear of an actual collision, the step of the Federal Diet having led to others which link by link develop events.

THE MARKET-HOUSE, BROWNSVILLE, TEXAS.

THE town of Brownsville bears a Mexican rather than an American look, and was at one time one of the most attractive spots in Texas for the healthiness of the climate, and the low price of all necessaries of life, as well as for the facilities afforded for enterprise.

Our Artist gives a sketch of the Market-House and the groups habitually seen around it. The signs, Spanish and English, no less than the costumes, show the meeting of the Anglo-Saxon and Latin races. The man hauling his water cask around, to sell the pure liquid, is one of the institutions of the place. The jackdaws, black as night, with bright green eyes, are a peculiarity of the place. They are about the size of a blackbird and very tame.

FALL OF THE SUSPENSION BRIDGE OVER THE NIAGARA.

THE elegant Suspension Bridge thrown across the Niagara at Lewiston was one of the most stupendous works of our time. We must speak of it, however, as past, for it now lies a wreck, most of it having fallen.

Its span was 1,045 feet, and it was carried over large towers of cut stone and secured by anchors firmly sunk into the solid rock. It was supported by five cables on each side, each cable composed of 250 strands of number 10 wire. It was erected in 1850 under the superintendence of E. M. Serrell, Esq.

The great jam of ice in the Niagara at Lewiston carried away the guys, leaving the bridge without adequate support, and the heavy gale of the 1st of February and the preceding night, caused so great an oscillation that at nine o'clock in the morning the floor of the bridge, except about 100 feet, fell with a crash into the Niagara river.

The towers and cables yet remain, and immediate steps will be taken to restore the bridge.

LIEUT. JOHN F. NICKELS,

The Recapturer of the Chesapeake.

VOL. LIEUT. JOHN F. NICKELS, of the U. S. Navy, was born at Transport, Maine, in 1832. He has followed the sea from the age of 15, and at 23 was in command of a fine ship of 1,100 tons. He continued in the merchant service until Aug. 26, 1861, when, placing another master in a barque which he owned, he entered the Naval service as Lieutenant, and was ordered to the command of the U. S. sailing ship Onward, of 900 tons, attached to the North Atlantic Blockading Squadron, under Com. Dupont. He was at the attack on Fort Clinch; was off Fernandina and ran into the harbor with the French flag flying and decoyed on board his ship the rebel Col. Holland (formerly Adjt.-Gen. of Florida) and six men, whom he held until the fleet took possession of the place. He was subsequently on the blockade off Ball's bay, which he entered without a pilot, in a sailing ship drawing 15½ feet of water where there was but 16 feet, and driving the rebel troops from Ball's island, took possession of the harbor and island.

While on the Charleston blockade he was the first man to board the rebel steamer Planter, brought out by negroes. He was next ordered to cruise in search of the pirate Alabama, after which steamer he made two cruises. When at Bahia he blockaded two supply vessels having on board powder, shot and shell, and coals for the Alabama and Florida, compelling them to sell their cargoes.

In Sept., 1863, he was detached from the Onward and ordered to the command of the steamer Cherokee. On advices being received of the capture of the steamer Chesapeake by her passengers, orders were received at the Charlestown Navy Yard to dispatch all the available vessels in pursuit, and Lieut. Nickels was ordered to the temporary command of the prize steamer Ella and Anna, in which steamer he sailed on the 1st of Dec., 1863, proceeding to Eastport, arriving there on the 12th, after a stormy passage. After remaining there one hour he sailed for Halifax, in a heavy snowstorm—experienced great difficulty, from the fact that their compasses were affected, the steamer being of iron, but making fortunate calculations and narrowly escaping shipwreck. On the 15th they entered Halifax, being nearly destitute of coal. By the courtesy of the Messrs. Cunard he was supplied with 136 tons of coal, which was put on board in five hours. When learning that the Chesapeake was at La Hève, 70 miles to the westward of Halifax, he at once started, in a heavy gale from the westward—the gale being so severe that their steamer made but 10 miles in seven hours, the weather being intensely cold.

On the next day at 3 P. M. they entered La Hève and found that the bird had flown. Ascertaining that she was at Lunenburg, 25 miles distant, he immediately started, and at 6:30 P. M. ascertained that she had entered Tambro harbor. He immediately got under weigh and at daylight was off the harbor, at once entered, and at about half-past seven boarded her, striking her on the port boom—found that the crew had all fled on his appearance. He could, in fact, see them landing on the beach. He also took from a schooner which had been supplying the Chesapeake with coals several persons belonging to the Chesapeake, among them one of the original captors of the steamer. The Chesapeake was all steamed up, and had they been two hours later she would have been at sea.

He put on board a prize crew and sufficient coal, and then towed her to sea, where he fell in with the U. S. steamer Dacotah, and was ordered by her commander to Halifax.

REBEL OUTRAGES IN TEXAS.

THE people of the North have been loth to believe the tales of the cruelty and barbarism of our enemies from the very beginning of this armed contest. It has been said that many years must elapse before we can have a true history of this war. For the sake of humanity, we could wish that a true history of it might never be written. The atrocities of the French Revolution, in its worst days, are not exceeded in number and entirely surpassed in brutality by those perpetrated in many parts on Union men. When our troops entered Brownsville they found, still hanging on a tree, the body of Capt. Montgomery, who was seized in Matamoras, carried over and hung.

In Texas they do not pretend to deny the fact. The editor of the Fort Brown Flag, speaking of the hanging of a Union man, remarked: "Timely notice was given all who did not indorse the war for Southern independence to leave the State and go beyond the lines of the Confederacy. It is no fault of our people if they have not availed themselves of the opportunity. We cannot fully endorse such stringent measures, but the lesson must be taught that traitors cannot be tolerated among us."

We give in this week's paper a series of views, illustrating the barbarities of the rebels, from sketches by Mr. Frederick Sumner, himself a victim of their cruelty and oppression. Mr. Sumner was a leader among the Union men at Sherman, Grayson county, and when the troubles began these brave loyal men defied the Secessionists and kept a fine American flag, presented by Mr. Sumner, floating over their court house. The fire-eaters were violent. They had already, in 1859, hung a northern clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Bula, at Dalton, on suspicion of being an abolitionist. Yet, on the question of secession, Grayson county gave 280 majority against a separation. But after the war opened the case of the Union men began to grow desperate. Twiggs had betrayed the United States troops into the hands of the rebels, and but little hope remained of immediate help from the Government. The murder of Mrs. Hillier showed them what was coming. Her husband had been brought before the Vigilance Committee of Park county, and ordered to enlist or prepare to be hung; but though he submitted, an incautious remark of his wife led to her arrest. Six of the Vigilance Committee, dressed in women's clothes, went to her house, dragged her out to the nearest tree, and, regardless of her cries for mercy and deaf to the pleadings of her children, hung her. The poor children remained there till next day watching the lifeless remains, when some neighbors came and took the body down to inter it.

The loyal men then formed a secret Union League, but on the 1st Oct., 1862, the president, Jacob Lock, of Cook county, was arrested. A number assembled to rescue him, but the mob was so powerful that they durst not attempt it. Lock, with five companions, were hung the next day. The League had been betrayed and all the leaders suddenly seized. Thirty more were arrested and hung, and in a short time over 100 perished in this way. One night, as Boland and Young, the leaders in these cruelties, were riding near Gainesville, a party of Union men fired on them and Young fell dead. His son, a Captain in the rebel army, in revenge, caused 20 men to be hung the next day before breakfast.

Mr. Sumner, finding it useless to remain, attempted to escape, and though followed for over 300 miles, reached Northern Arkansas safely, and was exulting in his escape when he was arrested on suspicion and sent to Little Rock. Here he was confined in a filthy and sickly prison, in a cage made of iron, the top and bottom being boiler-plates, the sides bar iron. A corn husk mattress and a few ragged blankets were his only covering. His food was of the most wretched description.

He had been here about three months, when, on Jan. 20, 1863, 19 more Union men were marched in, heavily ironed hand and foot, and added to those already confined. To these new comers nothing was given for bedding. As may be supposed, death relieved some from the cruelty of these fiends. They steadily refused to enlist, which was offered constantly as a means of escape, but on the 20th of August were set free, their jailors being themselves anxious to escape from the advancing army of Justice and Right.

The sufferings of the Union men in the Penitentiary at Little Rock were very great. They were dressed like the convicts and placed among them. At the least murmur or violation of rule the poor man, whose only crime was loyalty, would be stretched on the ground, stripped and flogged by a negro with a raw hide. Others were put in the stocks, the cross piece of which weighed 40 pounds. From the small size of the whole, this rested on the back of the neck and nearly suffocated the sufferer. They often became black in the face, and when released fell senseless to the ground. The mode of rousing the victim was a liberal application of the whip.

The sick fared worse than the well. Death was their only comfort. A son of Mr. Payne, of Horsehead county, was seen to shed tears on learning of his father's death in his cell; for this he was taken out and received 75 lashes.

Sixty-six of the prisoners had their legs and feet frozen one night, although there were blankets in sight of them. Many of these had to undergo amputation. This frightful case, with the deaths that followed, seems to have reached the conscience of even an Arkansas Legislature, and an act was passed to prevent men being sent to the Penitentiary, unless convicted by law.

HON. E. G. SQUIER,

United States Commissioner to Peru.

To turn awhile from the many who have by military deeds achieved renown, and occupy almost exclusively the public mind, we could scarcely select one more fitted to represent the true American character than Mr. Squier, who has just completed his labors as United States Commissioner in Peru.

E. George Squier, is of the old Puritan stock, his ancestors, after praying and fighting in the battles of the English Civil War, having come to settle in New England, and finally obtained, with others, a grant of Ashford in Connecticut, that rugged spot which gave a Knowlton to the Revolution and a Lyon to our war for existence. Ephraim Squier, his grandfather, was one of the sturdy band at the fence on Bunker Hill, who alone form as noble a stock as any titled grandee can boast of.

E. George Squier was born at Bethlehem, Albany County, New York, in 1821, on the 17th June, the anniversary of that glorious battle of freedom. His father, a devoted Methodist clergyman, gave his son a common school education, and fitted him for a career which his native powers could not but crown with success. He early turned his attentions to literature and to the great modern engine of power, the press. At Albany he was, in 1841, a contributor to the Northern Light, edited by Gen. Dix, and other periodicals, as well as associate in the editorship of the New York State Mechanic. This led him to take a prominent part in mechanics' movements of the time; he lectured frequently, and was one of the committee that visited the State prisons, and reported on the labor of convicts.

He next appears in 1843 as editor of the Hartford Daily Journal, but soon turned his eyes westward and took charge of the Scioto Gazette at Chillicothe, the oldest paper west of the Alleghanies.

A taste for antiquarian and historic research here developed itself. Ohio, a marvellous land for its ancient works, relics of tribes that have left no written history, inspired him. He traversed much of the State, examining, excavating, questioning the mounds of an extinct race, and published, under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institution, an elaborate work on the subject, full of accurate data, plates and descriptions, solid reasoning and careful and well weighed arguments. The work at once took rank as the most valuable archæological work ever issued in the country.

Having returned to his native State, in the commercial capital of which he has since resided, he made in 1858 an exploration of its Aboriginal monuments, and drew up a full and accurate report, which was also published by the Smithsonian Institution.

His reputation as an antiquarian was made by these works, which for the first time began in a true spirit and with sound critical research the study of American antiquities.

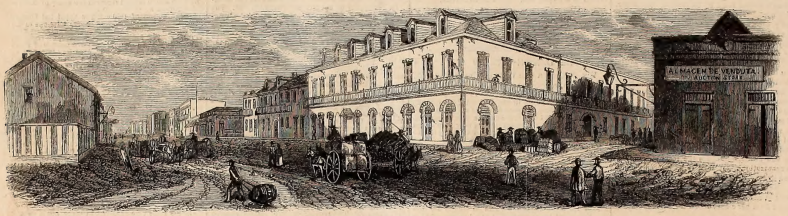
In the spring of 1849 he was appointed Chargé d'Affaires to Guatemala, with special missions to the other Central American States. In the difficult field of diplomacy, his great native powers, his complete appreciation of the people and governments of those States, of English views and American interests, as evinced in his controversy with Mr. Chatfield and Sir Henry Bulwer, made his services of the highest value. His visit to Central America was not without its fruits in literary, antiquarian and commercial points. His pen rapidly gave to the public, "Nicaragua, its People, Scenery and Monuments," a noble work that appeared in 1861, "The Proposed Interoceanic Canal," "Outline of the Political History of Central America," and "Aborigines of Nicaragua," besides a number of elaborate reviews, sketches and articles. His diplomatic correspondence, published by Government, contains the most valuable material we possess as to those parts. To recruit his health he visited Europe, and was warmly received in every scientific and literary circle from London to Naples, having enjoyed the hospitality of the King of Prussia for several weeks, and made the friendship of the illustrious Humboldt, was elected member of the Society of Antiquaries of France, of the Royal Society of Antiquarians of Denmark, Fellow of the Society of Antiquarians of London, and of the Royal Society of Literature.

On his return he resolved to carry out a project which he had conceived, of establishing a railway through Honduras, from Puerto Cabello, on the Atlantic, to the Bay of Fonseca, on the Pacific. In April 1853, he proceeded to the spot with an engineering expedition, explored a feasible route, obtained a charter from the Honduras Government, and returned to organise a company.

The moment was inauspicious, as the Schuyler frauds had thrown suspicion on such investments; but Mr. Squier visited Europe and secured the co-operation of capitalists in England and France, the Government of those countries giving special guarantees for the road. While there he drew up the treaty between England and Honduras for the retrocession of the Bay islands.

Mr. Squier then superintended the final survey of the road, and published "Notes on Central America" (1854), "Waikna" (1855), "Question Anglo-Americaine" (Paris, 1857), "Report of the Survey of the Honduras Interoceanic Railway" (London, 1859), "The State of Central America" (1857).

His last public appointment was that of Commissioner to Peru. One of the leading inducements with Mr. Squier for accepting the Commissionership to Peru was the opportunity it would afford him to prosecute his archæological studies in that wide and interesting field, in which are comprised some of the most remarkable aboriginal monuments of the Continent. He would thus be able to connect the ancient remains of the United States, Central and South America in a comprehensive whole, with exact data, and a judgment formed from personal study on the spot. No sooner, therefore, had his labors as Commissioner ended, in November last, than he started on his cherished scheme of exploration, directing his steps to the central and most important seats of Inca power, the islands of Lake Titicaca, the classic city of Cuzco, Huanuco and Cajamarca, where shadowed over by the two great mountain ranges, the Cordilleras and the Andes, exist some of the grandest results of aboriginal art. From Mr. Squier's observations and explorations, the world may expect a work as elaborate and exact, in regard to Peru, as those which have inseparably identified his name with the monuments of the United States and with the States of Central America. The aspiration of Prescott that some competent hand, without credulity and with a judgment supported by scientific zeal, should illustrate the antiquities of Peru seems now on the point of realization.



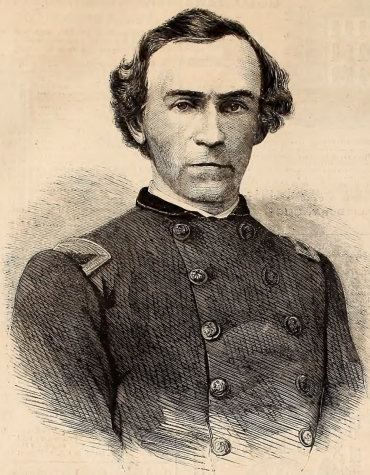
Besides the works already mentioned, Mr. Squier has written "The Serpent Symbol; or, Worship of the Reciprocal Principles of Nature in America" 8vo., "A Monograph of Authors who have Written on the Aboriginal Languages of Central America" (1861); "Letter of Don Diego de Palacios to the Crown of Spain, in 1857, on Guatemala, San Salvador, etc., with a Translation and elaborate Notes;" "Tropical Fibres and their Economical Extraction (1861);" a "History of the War of 1861." His minor articles, contributions to the "British Cyclopædia," to "Appleton's New Cyclopædia," as well as to reviews and other periodicals, and papers read before learned and scientific bodies, are of great number and no less importance.

NORTON & CO., 102 Nassau street, have lately introduced in this country a useful and convenient novelty in the form of a reliable watch for army use. It is an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British Army officers, and is calculated to meet the wants of our soldiers in the field. The name adopted for this watch is the European Timekeeper, and its low price, only $15, places it within the reach of all.

PUNISHMENT OF IDLE HUSBANDS IN NEW ZEALAND.—The head chief often interferes in minor matters of a domestic nature. For instance, if a lazy fellow has a wife or two and a few children, and, through his love for fishing, dancing and loitering idly about, neglects to bring in the necessary supplies for his family, a complaint is made; the chief visits the house in person, and if he sees just cause for punishment, he orders out the population of the village. Men, women and children arm themselves with a stiff birch made of small canes, then form a long double line, about six feet apart, and await with anxious glee the approach of the delinquent. At last he is placed at one end of the line, amidst a shower of yells, screams, jibes, etc. The word is given by the chief, and away he darts at his utmost speed through the ranks, every one endeavoring to hit him as he passes. According to his deserts, he may get off with running the line once, or he may have to do so twice or thrice; but he is skilled in cunning and fleetness that can run the line even once without having his skin tickled for him by the application of the birch, wielded by some strong woman. As the punishment is not of a fatal kind, the whole affair creates unrestricted merriment. If the victim is a smart fellow, he may escape with few blows, but if he is sulky, heavy and dogged, he pays for it. For one month afterwards the families of victims are provided for by the public at large, under the fatherly superintendence of the chief. At the expiration of that time, if he has all his domestic matters in perfect order, as a good father and provident husband ought to have, he again resumes his place in society, and shortly afterwards helps, an experienced hand, to flagellate some one else.

THE PLAZA DE ALLENDE, MATAMORAS, HEADQUARTERS OF GEN. CORTINA.

THE GOVERNOR'S PALACE, MATAMORAS.



LOADING WAGONS ON THE CALLE DE CESAR, MATAMORAS, FOR PIEDRAS NEGRAS.

THE MARKET HOUSE, BROWNSVILLE, TEXAS.

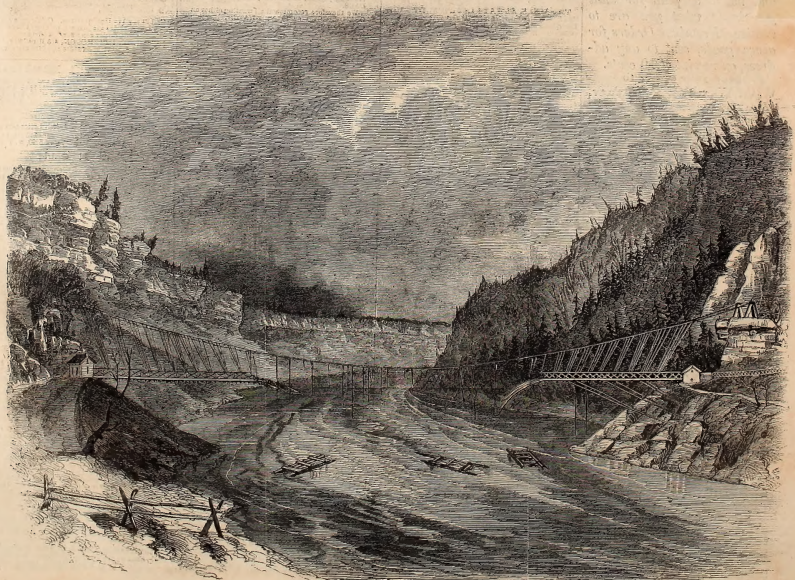
SCENES ON THE RIO GRANDE.—FROM SKETCHES BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. BOSWELL.

COL. JOHN M. MIZNER, THIRD MICHIGAN CAVALRY (CAPT. 4TH U. S. A.)

LIEUT. JOHN F. NICKELS, THE BLOCKADE-RUNNER OF THE CHESAPEAKE.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.

ACTING BRIG.-GEN. J. K. MIZNER,

Col. 3d Michigan Veteran Cavalry, Chief of Cavalry, Left Wing 16th Army Corps.



COL. MIZNER was born in the State of New York, but while he was young his parents removed to Michigan, from which State he entered the Military Academy at West Point.

He graduated with honor, and received the appointment of Brevet Second Lieutenant in the United States Army, July 1st, 1856. Was promoted to Captain in the 4th United States Cavalry, and was appointed Colonel of the 3d Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, March 1st, 1862.

During the siege of Corinth he was placed in command of a brigade, and soon after the evacuation was made Chief of Cavalry on Gen. Rosecrans's staff, and acted as such during the memorable campaigning which ended so gloriously in the battles of Iuka and Corinth. The 3d Michigan Cavalry was recruited in the fall of 1861 at the Grand Rapids, by the influence of Hon. T. W. Kellogg, and left that place, Nov. 28th, 1861, with 1,162 men, and under the command of Col. Mizner has participated in the following engagements: New Madrid, March 10, 1862; Farmington, June 5; Iuka, September 19; Corinth, October 3 and 4; Hatchie, October 5; Spangler's Mills, July 26; Bay Springs, September 16; Holly Springs, November 7; Lumkin's Mills, November 30; Oxford, December 2; Coffeeville, December 5; Jackson, July 13, 1863; also in the sieges of Island No. 10 and Corinth, besides a great number of skirmishes.

The regiment has captured, besides what have been taken while co-operating with other commands, 2 colonels, 5 lieutenant-colonels, 5 majors, 22 captains, 37 lieutenants and 1,048 privates. The aggregate strength of the regiment, after having been two years in the service, is 944 men, 795 of whom are now in the field doing duty.

Col. Mizner is Chief of Cavalry Left Wing 16th Army Corps, and commander of all the forces on the WRECK OF THE SUSPENSION BRIDGE OVER THE NIAGARA AT LEWISTON.—FROM A SKETCH BY A. W. B. H.

Memphis and Charleston Railroad, from Germantown to Grand Junction.

He is now about 28 years of age, and as a brave and energetic and able executive officer no one stands higher in the Army or the South.—W. W.

His regiment has re-enlisted for the war.

CURIOUS FREAK OF A CANNON BALL.—While the columns of Sedgwick and a portion of Gen. Sykes's command were lying down, awaiting the order to charge the enemy's works at Mine run, on the recent advance, the artillery on both sides were heavily engaged, and the shot and shell came uncomfortably near our position. One, a solid shot, about eight inches in front of and on a direct line with a soldier's head, came with the full force to the ground, passed compact, the entire length of the soldier, entering by the waist and striking off the top of his cranium! He was taken to the hospital insensible, but soon recovered from the shock.

LEAP YEAR.—The year of our Lord 1864 is Bissextile or leap year. It is so called because it leaps over a day every common year—that is, instead of 365 days there are 366 days, in leap year 1864. It is the day in this year more than any other year, for John matrimony thus is any other year. The fact that the ladies will have "by the day question" when their lovers are too timid is the reason perhaps, but caring not what reasons for which one "pops the question," we hope the ball will commence rolling early in the year, and continue till Humanity at Scandicia shall be able to say, in the language of Shakespeare:

"She is mine own;
And I as rich in having such a jewel
As twenty seas, if all their sands were pearl,
And waters nectar, and the rocks pure gold."

See New York Monthly

FOR DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL MATTER, and a host of other good things. Send a 3 cent Currency Stamp and 10 cents a copy. Office, 83 Nassau Street, New York.

Ten years in the Business.

Patrons counted by thousands in every State of the Union.

A Premium for all!

Evans' New Enterprise, 1864, $500,000 worth of New Goods,

consisting of

Gold and Silver Watches, Jewelry, Vest and Guard Chains, Gold Pens, Pencils, Lockets, Medallions, Setts of Jewelry, &c., &c.,

together with a large line of goods especially adapted to the wants of our Soldiers, Army and Navy, to be sold in lots at One Dollar Each, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive. Premium Orders for above goods, sent to any address, on receipt of 10 cents.

Send your orders to

G. G. EVANS, Publisher, 630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

N. B. A classified Catalogue, of Books with Price Lists of Photograph Card Pictures and Albums, sent on receipt of 5 cents.

Address, G. G. EVANS, Philadelphia, Pa.

Economy, Durability & Convenience

The Star No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil Lamps. Patented Aug. 11, 1863. Gives a brilliant light, free from smoke, or smell. It can be turned and handled freely without being extinguished. The latest and acknowledged the best invention of the kind. Warranted as represented. Sample, post paid, for 30 cents. Agents wanted.

PETER ESSIG & CO., Manufacturers, No. 2 Platt St., N. Y.

Dr. B. C. Perry,

DERMATOLOGIST,

No. 49 BOND STREET, NEW YORK, (Formerly of No. 29 Winter St., Boston.)

Treats successfully all

Diseases of the Scalp, Loss of Hair and Premature Bleaching;

ALSO

Removes MOTH, FRECKLES, and other DISCOLORATIONS from the FACE, without injury to the texture or Color of the Skin.

☞NO CHARGE FOR CONSULTATION.☜

For particulars address, enclosing stamp,

DR. B. C. PERRY,
49 Bond Street, N. Y.

Turkey Morocco Photograph Albums, for 50 Pictures, for $1. (Usual price is $2.) Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address

H. C. F. KENNEDY, Alleghany, Pa.

How to tell Fortunes by Cards.—Sent to any one for 25 cents. Address G. E. KNOWLTON, Hamilton, Mass. 438-41

We are now offering our celebrated

GOLD PENS AND EXTENSION SILVER-PLATED HOLDERS

At the following low prices for Cash:

No. 1. Magic Gold Pens and Holders per dozen..... $ 2 50
No. 2. " " " " " 3 00
No. 1. Albertine Fine Gold Pens and Holders..... 5 00
No. 2. " " " " " 7 00
No. 1. Always Ready..... 11 50
No. 2. " " 14 00

Three Pens and Holders are all Warranted and will retail from $2 to $3 each.

A deduction of 10 per cent. will be made on all sums of $10 and upwards.

Holders have a nice Fancy Cases containing One Dozen each, and are not sold in less quantities. Sent by mail or express prepaid. Address

SALISBURY, BROS. & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

ARTILLERY BADGES.

Agreeable to a fair simile design of our Newest Style ARTILLERY BADGES. Sent free to any address on receipt of price, with name, Co. and Regiment hand somely Engraved thereon.

Solid Silver (without bullion) $1 50. Solid Silver, letters in Gold Relief (without bullion) $2. Solid Gold (without bullion) $5.

Bullion, 20 cents each, extra.

Also New Style CAVALRY BADGE, and every style Co. Pins and Corps Badges worn by the Army.

Our Illustrated Catalogue sent free. Address

C. L. BALCH & CO.,
208 BROADWAY, N. Y.

COMPETITION DEFIED!

AND ELEGANT

TWO DOLLAR CHAIN

We offer to sell our WATCH, which is of the MOST SUBSTANTIAL MANUFACTURE, AN ACCURATE TIME-KEEPER, and in sterling Case, Hunting pattern, at the low price of TEN DOLLARS.

We therefore recommend all wanting either an ORIENTAL GOLD or SILVER WATCH, Hunting Cases, to remit us $10, when they will receive a handsome Watch, carefully put by ourselves, sent sealed and postpaid, at our expense.

Our CHAIN is a beautiful imitation of all those who have seen it, in beauty and cheapness is unsurpassed. ONLY TWO DOLLARS!

☞Recollect, the OLD ESTABLISHED AND RELIABLE AGENCY, where all orders are attended to with the utmost promptitude, carefulness and accuracy, and forwarded to their destination in the most compact, reliable and expeditious manner.

Address THOMAS ORMSBY,
General Purchasing Agent, 86 Nassau St., N.Y.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS

THE WEAK ALWAYS IN JEOPARDY.—Much this! When sickness prevail the feeble fall first. It requires stamina to resist the assaults that cause sickness. But remember, that it is just as easy to strengthen the body as to improve the condition of the mind. It would be as rational to say that the mental constitution cannot be invigorated by instruction, as that the physical constitution cannot be fortified and sustained by artificial means. The system has been provided by science. In HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS we have a Tonic perfectly harmless, and possessing qualities which render it the most potent preventive of epidemic complaints that has ever been administered to man. In all atmospheres there is more or less a deleterious principle, and this principle is most powerfully developed towards the close of the summer and the fall of the year. Now, therefore, in the time when the frame and the constitution should be braced up to resist it. Then the stomach, the liver and the bowels with HOSTETTER'S BITTERS, and so far as human means can afford protection, you will be safe from Bilious Attacks, Intermittent Fevers, Dysentery, Diarrhœa and all the maladies which prevail more or less everywhere in the summer and autumn.

Sold by all Druggists and Dealers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 630 BROADWAY.

Remington's

Army and Navy

REVOLVER!

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Pistols. Sold by first Trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion, N. Y.

438-50

ARMY BADGES,

Watches, Gold Pens and Cases. Jewellery of all kinds at reduced rates. Send for a Circular.

R. KEITH, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

$60 A MONTH! We want Agents at $60 a month to introduce our new and wonderful Inventions. Sewing Machines, Shuttle Spring Skirts, and 13 other articles. 15 Circulars free. SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Me.

Do you want to get Married?

If so, don't fail to buy

"Courtship Made Easy"—Book of 100 pages. Illustrated, containing full instructions in the Art of "Psychologic Fascination," with Explanatory Charts enabling any person, of either sex to fascinate and win the undying love of any person they choose instantly, thus rendering marriage inevitable. Sent by mail for 25 cents and two 3 cent stamps.

Address R. L. LOCKE & CO.,
Box 1536, Portland, Maine.

435-9

$2,000 A YEAR can be made by the use of the Instruction I send for 50 cents.

Address SHELDON LEAVITT,
Grand Rapids, Mich.

438-9

10,000 Agents Wanted

Both in and out of the Army, for

THE NEW ARMY FLAG PACKAGE.

Circulars free. Call on or address

438-41 J. L. G. PIERPONT, 355 Broadway, N. Y.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT

SMOKING CASE!

Most ingenious in its combination of the Meerschaum Case, containing Pipe and Stem, Matches and Pipe Cleaner, with a handsome Tobacco Pouch attached, filling the Pipe by a screw, without use of the fingers or waste of tobacco, the whole securing freedom from all odor, and portable as a Cigar Case. It is made for service, of various and handsome styles, at $1 50, $2, $2 25, $2 50 and $3 to $5 and $6; the two latter richly Plated and Engraved. Nothing can excel its Quality, Beauty and Economy for all Smokers. As a PRESENT TO FRIENDS nothing could be more acceptable.

FOR THE SOLDIER IT IS INVALUABLE. Also

The Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco!

Of superior quality and flavor, in packages to fill the case (about a week's smoking), $1 25 per dozen; and of various sizes for general Trade. A liberal discount to Dealers.

Single Cases, put by mail, paid, on receipt of price, and 25 cents. Also, half pound packages of the fine Tobacco; full weight sent (carefully put up) by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $2.

RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,
Office 429 Broadway, cor. Howard St., N. Y.

Address

438-9

W. FORSYTH & CO.,

42 and 44 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office), offer for sale the following Magnificent List of

WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.

Valued at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

		EACH
150	Gold and Silver Watches	$15 to $100
150	Ladies' Gold Watches	$15
150	Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	$15
1000	Vest and Neck Chains	$5 00 to $10 00
1000	Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 to 5 00
1000	Gold Hunting Bracelets	3 00 to 5 00
1000	Jasper Bracelets	3 00 to 5 00
1000	Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
1000	Leontine and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
1000	Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
1000	Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
1000	Coral Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
1000	Gold Band Rings	2 00 to 4 00
1000	Watch Keys	2 00 to 4 00
1000	Fob Seals and Slides	2 00 to 4 00
1000	Sets of Bosom Studs	2 00 to 4 00
1000	Sets of Sleeve Buttons	2 00 to 4 00
5000	Plain Rings	2 00 to 6 00
5000	Fancy Rings	2 00 to 6 00
5000	Lockets	2 00 to 6 00
1000	Sets of Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00
1000	Gold Pens, Silver Mtvd Holders	4 00 to 6 00
1000	Gold Pens, with Patent Extension Cases and Pencils	6 00 to 8 00

The articles in this scale of drawing are of the handsomest and most fashionable styles, Certificates of all the various articles put up in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, thus giving all a fair chance, and sent by mail (or 25 cents each), and on receipt of the Certificate, it is at your option to send ONE DOLLAR and take the article named in it, or any one of the following: $1; eleven, $5; thirty, $15; sixty-five, $30; one hundred $45; One Thousand, $300. Sent to be opened and sold. Correspondence promptly answered.

AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow them ten cents on every Certificate, provided their remittance amounts to $5 or upwards. Liberal Inducements to those who buy largely. Send for Circular. Address

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

$100 a Month made by discharged soldiers and others with small tools. Don't fail to send for a free catalogue containing full particulars. Address MILLIKEN & SPENCER, Vermont Record office, Brandon, Vt. 437 49

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers, Something New. The Traveller's Companion; or, Burglar's Proof Traveller's Lock. Samples sent by mail, 10 cents. Send stamp for Circular.

S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

Card Pictures, Photographs, &c.

K. W. PENICZKY,

HAVING ENLARGED AND IMPROVED HIS GALLERY, No. 3 ☞NEW☜ Chambers Street, has increased facilities for making Card Pictures and other Photographs. AT THE LOWEST PRICES. 000

Straight Hair Made Wavy,

Without heating it, by using

JYE'S PATENT HAIR CRIMPERS.

For Sale at Variety Stores. 434-46

VALENTINES

To the Trade.

Call or send to Headquarters. Catalogues sent free by mail. A better assortment, or more liberal terms, than we offer cannot be found.

BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, 455 Broadway, N.Y.
(store and Manufactory.)

Billiard Balls!

Patent Compressed Ivory, 2¼ and 2⅜ in., $10 per set; 2⅝ in., $12 per set; 2¾ in., $14 per set; 2⅞ in., $17; warranted for six months. WM. M. WELLING, Agent, Astor House, New York, sign of the Golden Elephant.

1,500 Copies Sold.—A rich Letter taken from a captured Secesh Mailbag. Sent by mail for 25 cts. to LIBERTY BROWN, Box 3109, N. Y. city.

Gold! Gold!

Full instructions in Ventriloquism, and how to win the undying love of the opposite sex, sent by mail to any person for Five Cents. Address

JAGGERS & HANDLEY, Calhoun, Ill

New Catalogue of Jewelry sent free. Address CHAS. CAFFIN & CO., Providence, R. I.

438-41

Hawkes's Diamond Pointed Gold Pen

Medium	Pen	$6 50	Commercial Pen $1 25
Large	"	7 63	Mammoth 1 50
Engraving	"	9 75	Leviathan 2 00

Sent free of postage. Silver Pens will write equally well after 6 months use. Send stamp for Circular.

Address GEO. F. HAWKES, Manufacturer,
432 6 94 Nassau Street, N. Y.

FURS!

FURS!! FURS!!!

Ladies and Misses Fine Furs, in Sable, Mink, Ermine, Siberian Squirrel, &c.

Gents' Fur Caps, Mufflers and Gauntlets, in Seal Otter, Beaver, &c.

Sleigh Robes in variety. Retailed at Wholesale Prices.

BURKE (successor to WATKINS),
216 Broadway, corner Fulton street.

Just What Every Family Wants!

SAVAGE & CO'S NO CHIMNEY LIGHTER for Hand Lamps and Lanterns, burns Kerosene oil without chimney, smoke or odor. Saves 75 per cent. 479 Pearl & 66 Union Street, N. Y. Agents wanted. Send for Circular. Liberal terms and sample sent free for 50 cents. American Substitute awarded First Premium and Medal, 1863.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.

PIERRE RIBON, 23 Ann St., N. Y.

Stammering Cured in two hours by any one. Send $2 and receive directions. Address

J. T. MACOMBER, Grand Isle, Vt.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also our Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Cavalry and Artillery!

Solid Silver, $1 25. | Solid Silver, $1 25.

Solid 18 k Gold, $5 each. | Solid 18 k Gold, $5 each.

Sent by mail on receipt of price. Also, all kinds Corps, Cap, and Division Pins engraved to order, by the single one, 100 or 1,000, and sent to any part of the country. Terms cash, in advance. Send for a Circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewellers,
208 Broadway, N. Y.

Beauty.—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID ENAMEL, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enamelor. It whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 193 South Seventh Street, and 81 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

WANTED! WANTED!

Do You Want Splendid Whiskers or Moustaches ?

HUNTER'S ONQUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Also, on Bald Heads, in ten weeks. Two Boxes for $1. Postage free. Address C. L. BRIGGS, Milwaukee, Wis.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PHOTOGRAPHS FROM LIFE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.,

20 cents each, $1 50 per doz. Sent by mail. Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1016, New York city. Send for circular.

J. G. SCHULL,
MERCHANT TAILOR
33 Ann Street, New York.

Has on hand a splendid assortment of French, English and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings which he is prepared to make up in the most fashionable style and on the most reasonable terms for cash.

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.
Agents for the United States for the celebrated
ALBERTINE
EXTENSION HOLDERS & GOLD PENS

Of the most handsome and durable construction, put up in new fancy cases, suitable for presents, and not sold in any less quantities. They will retail for 25 each.

Price per dozen.....$2 50
Sent by mail, free of postage. Address
SALISBURY, BRO. & CO., Providence, R. I.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches ?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of order.

M. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

DR. R. GOODALE'S CATARRH REMEDY.

It penetrates to the very seat of this terrible disease, and exterminates it, root and branch, for ever. DR. GOODALE is the first and only person who ever told the world what Catarrh really was—where it commenced—and what would cure it. Price $1. Send stamp for a Pamphlet. Depot, 616 Broadway, N. Y. NORTON & CO., Sole Agents.

Travelling Salesmen Wanted.

$75 a month, expenses paid, or a commission on sales. Apply to ISAAC HALE, Jr., & CO.,
Newburyport, Mass.

Union Playing Cards!

National American Amusement Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. 52 emameled cards to the pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. Two packs mailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for Circular. Address

AMERICAN CARD CO.,
000 455 Broadway, or 105 William St., N. Y.

Headquarters for Officers' and Soldiers' Pins of Every Description!

We will send either Army Corps, Division or Company Pin, in Solid Silver, with your Name, Regiment and Co. handsomely Engraved upon it, on the receipt of $1. Also, a Kearney Cross in Fine Gold Plate for $1, or a New Style Solid Silver Cavalry Pin, Engraved as above, for $1 50.

☞Agents sending for 10 or more at one time will be allowed 15 cents on each.

ALSO, THE EMPORIUM FOR WATCHES AND JEWELRY.

75,000 Watches, Gold Pens and Pencils,

Vest, Guard and Neck Chains, Chatelaine Chains and Pins, Engraved Bracelets, Engraved Spring Lockets, Seal Stone Rings California Rings, Chased Rings, Masonic Rings and Pins, Gents' Cameo Pins, Diamond Pins, California Diamond Ear Drops, Beautiful Sets of Jewelry, New Style Studs and Buttons, etc., etc., etc.,

WORTH $400,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

Certificates naming each article are put into Envelopes, Sealed and Mixed, and sent without regard to choice.

To all transactions by mail we shall charge for the business 25 cents, which must be enclosed when the request is made to know what you are to get.

After knowing what you can have, then it will be at your option to send One Dollar, take the article or not.

Five Certificates can be ordered for $1—eleven for $2—thirty for $5—sixty-five for $10—and one hundred for $15.

With the information of what you can have will be sent a Circular giving full instructions to Agents and a full Catalogue of articles.

Box 4876, N. Y. S. M. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway, New York.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO.,
ARMY WATCHES!

Solid Silver Hunting Cased Lever Watch, Jewelled, English Movement and Silver Cap, only $11.

The Great New Army Watch for Soldiers is very heavy Solid Silver Hunting Cases, fine English Lever Movement fully Jewelled, and fine Enamel Engine-turned, Engraved or Plain Cases, warranted a perfect timekeeper, only $15.

Gold Composite, same as above, $18.

Very fine Double Bottom, Silver, English Lever Hunting Watch, full Jewelled, Chronometer Balance, $25.

Officer's Watch.

Genuine American Lever Watch, in 4 Oz. Sterling Silver Cases; full Jewelled and Double Bottom Cases, $35.

Elegant Watch same as above, with Chronometer Balance, $45.

Splendid 18 Karat very heavy Gold Cased Watch, full Jewelled, $75.

Same as the above, with Chronometer Balance, $90.

Ladies' Elegant Gold-Plated Watch, very small, only $16.

18 karat Gold Hunting Lever Watch, Ruby Jewelled, in every article.—M. J. Tobias—only $38.

Constantly on hand Watches of Every Description.

We will send, on receipt of the price, any of the above Watches, free of charge, to any address.

All registered letters, if properly sealed, come at our risk.

All Watches registered 20 cents extra.

☞We give an Elegant Gold-Plated Chain with all our Watches.

GEORGE A ELY & CO., Importers,
208 Broadway, New York.

Attention, Company!

VOLUNTEERS who expect to retain their health unimpaired during the campaign must see to it themselves to not trust to the Army Surgeons, supply yourselves with HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT. Every English Colonist's Knapsack contains them.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT are now retailed, owing to the high price of Drugs, &c., at 70 cts., 70 cts., and $1 10 per Box or Pot.

BALLARD PATENT BREECH-LOADING RIFLES and CARBINES,

Carrying the copper water-proof cartridge, and also using ordinary loose ammunition. This arm is now admitted by all competitors to be superior to any other now offered to the public. Its simple construction and perfect workmanship are a sure guarantee against getting out of order. The great advantage of loading with either fixed or loose ammunition alone makes it superior to all others. These arms are made for both sporting and military purposes, and have been adopted both by the General Government and in number of States. We have the highest testimonials of their efficiency and value.

We also offer to the public our new Cartridge and new ammunition boxes for pistols. The pistol has no equal as a belt or pocket weapon. No one wishing a first-class pistol should be without it.

For further particulars send for descriptive circular, &c.—Do not forget that both Rifle and Pistol may be used with either copper cartridge or loose ammunition.

MERWIN & BRAY, Sole Agents,
482 Broadway, N. Y.

DIARIES FOR 1864.

From 25 cents to $2 each. Also, Blank Writing Paper, Blank Books and Stationery. Cards, Chessmen, Backgammon Boards, Dominoes, Express Books, Envelopes, Portfolios, Desks, Pocket Books, etc., etc. Please call or send your order to

FRANCIS & LOUTREL, Stationers,
437-40 45 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office
FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Merchants, Bankers, Teachers Amateurs, etc., etc.,

Are warned to call and see the best manner. Send for Circular

J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce Street, N. Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail. Send this together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes (a sealed volume), and 25 cents (silver). Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD!

30,000 WATCHES, CHAINS, &c.

WORTH $150,000,

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing full list of articles and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

Six Certificates can be sent for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $12.

Address C. F. SHULTZ,
437-49 180 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to happy effect. Read the New Book, Marriage Guide, and Medical Adviser, by W. M. EARL, M. D., 200 pages. Mailed to any address on receipt of 25 cents. Address 68 White Street, New York. 435-38

We have furnished our Weston's Rifles as follows:

State of Kentucky	1,366
State of Nebraska	700
General Ripley	150
Colonel Collins	200
Capt. Buck's Co.	Chillicothe, O.
Col. Grant's "	Kansas.
Capt. Child's "	Ithaca, Ill.
Capt. Whybark's Co.	Rolla, Mo.
Capt. McGee's "	Lexington, Mo.
Capt. Hughes's "	Sedalia, Mo.
Capt. Olds' "	Perrysville, Ind.

LEAVENWORTH, Oct. 12, 1863.

DEAR SIR,—The Rifle (No. 2) we put to a severe test on the 7th at the State Fair, AND WON A PRIZE OF $75 COLORS, in a competitive match between INFANTRY COMPANIES. They were to fire in squads of ten, each man having three shots, and to shoot at the command "Fire." We were OUR NUMBERED AND ROUNDED from 25 the infantry. It came 300 yards. We hit the target 85 rounds out of 100 with the greatest number of hits by any infantry company was 13. Thus establishing the superiority of the KITTREDGE (Weston) Gun.

M. S. GRANT,
Co. (A) KANSAS CAV.

TO MAJOR SHAW, St. Louis, Mo.

B. KITTREDGE & CO.,
437-44 Cincinnati, Ohio.

$50 FOR $20.

SOLDIERS IN THE ARMY,

For $20 we will forward, by mail or express, prepaid, the following: 1 Solid Silver Gent's Patent Lever Watch; 4 Vest Chains; 12 Gents' Seals and Seal Rings; 3 Gold Pens and Pencils; 1 Gent's Gold Hooks; 4 Fancy Watch Keys; 12 Boxes or Scent Paper; 4 pair Sleeve Buttons; 2 Solid Silver Thimbles; 1 Gent's Dressing Glass Locket; and 3 Custer Stone Pins. Address

THOMAS CAFFERTEY & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

"Moustaches and Whiskers in 42 Days." Dent be bamboozled with ONGUENTS. The GREAT FRENCH REMEDY, fully explained in BOOK OF MYSTERIES 12,000 sold. 25th Ed. Only 20 cts.; 3 for $1. Address C. E. HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative—Superior to any other preparation for the hair in its power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and luxuriance. It prevents the hair falling out, to overcome effects of previous use of preparations containing sugar, sugar of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp, leaving the dressing in a healthy state.

HOYT'S MINNEHAHA HAIR GLOSS, unexcelled in forming the hair in curl.

HOYT'S IMPERIAL COLORING CREAM oils and colors the hair the same time; changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.

HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and preserves youthfulness of appearance. Sold everywhere.

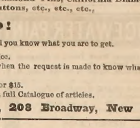
JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of AMERICAN PEOPLE,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by DR. STONE, Physician to the Troy Lunatic and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Mercurial and Consumptive; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes of Pulpitation, Impotency, Dyspepsia and Diseases.

☞Fail not to send two red stamps that obtain this book. Address



DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 96 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 426-52

The Great Money-Making Article.

Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Circulars and Specimens, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address

000 E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

Watches
FOR THE
ARMY.

"Particularly valuable for officers in the army and navy."—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 27.

"Prettiest, best and cheapest thing we ever offered."—N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 16.

"Splendidly finished Watches, the beauty of which can be enjoyed by their cheapness."—N. Y. Weekly, July 11.

MAGIC TIME OBSERVERS!

THE PERFECTION OF MECHANISM!

BEING A HUNTING OR OPEN FACE OR LADIES OR GENTLEMEN'S WATCH, COMBINING, WITH A PATENT SELF-WINDING IMPROVEMENT,

A MOST PLEASING NOVELTY.

One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it, and connected with its machinery, its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The owner of this Watch is never annoyed with having to order one being fine 16-carat gold. It has the improved stem winding lever movement, and is made in accurate timepiece. Price, expressly outwardly in case of Half Dozen, $36. Single Watches, in Morocco boxes, $35. By mail the postage is 25 cents registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!

FIRST-CLASS HUNTING TIMEPIECES

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES MUST ENSURE

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation or fac-simile of this it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material is that of two metals, the outer one first quality Sterling Silver, while the inner one is German Silver, in order to be recognized by cutting or heavy engraving; and it is not only in appearance, but in durability, the true resemblance of SOLID STERLING SILVER is maintained.

The sale of these Watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $20 and upwards. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single pay-day by any one of ordinary business tact.

☞AT WHOLESALE ONLY. In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, white enamel dials, and fancy cut hands, in good running order, by the half-dozen, $60; single, $12 50; registering, 20 cents. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

☞TIME CLAIMS INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE! No Agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. Money is safe to be sent by express or registered letter, it is at our risk! Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., SOLE IMPORTERS,
438 189 Broadway and 3 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

Personal.—Any young Lady or Gentleman can have sent to their address a portrait of the person they will marry and be told the year in which the happy event will take place, by enclosing 25 cents and stamp, to PROF. HUMBOLT,
P. O. Drawer, 6586, Cologne, Ill.
F. S.—All communications strictly confidential.

Swords, Sashes, Belts.

Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords
431-56 B. KITTRIDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

Royal Havana Lottery.

20 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 12 Wall Street, N.

$35. WATCHES. $35.

Genuine Full-Jewelled American Lever Watches, in 4 Ounce Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Gold Joints, for $35.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be prepaid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
o 208 Broadway, N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

For Roofs, Outside Work, Decks of Steamers, Iron Work, Railroad Bridges, etc.
R. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is mailed, prepaid, for $2 35; or with a beautiful Mounted Objects for $3; with 24 Objects, $5, by

HENRY CRAIG,
335 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, prepaid, the Belle-vue, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Field-Piece, accommodating all eyes, for $2 50; with 12 assorted views, $3. A liberal discount to the trade.

$10 worth of Fun for 20 Cents.

Enclose, with stamp, to Box 725, Washington, D. C.

13 More Agents Wanted.

Business Light and Respectable! No Capital required! Salary, according to Capacities, $75 to $200 per Month, besides expenses. For Agents Instructions, samples of Goods, etc., address ROSSA & CARTER & CO., Inventor's Exchange, Boston, Mass.

Wheeler & Wilson's Highest Premium

LOCK STITCH

Sewing Machines

438-470 No. 505 BROADWAY, N. Y.

500 Wonders of the World!—Whiskers and Moustaches—Gold and Silver—Love, Courtship, etc. The Hunter's Secret—Angler's Secret—and a host of other Secrets and money making matters worth a fortune to any one, all sent free for 25 cents. Also, Agents wanted in a new business in which they can clear $10 a day. Address

586o W. STEPHENS, Morristown, N. J.

DISTILLED DEW

FOR THE SKIN AND COMPLEXION.

This delightful and elegant toilette preparation beautifies the Complexion, removes Tan, Freckles and Discolorations, and renders the skin beautifully White, Clear, Soft and Smooth. It combines no Mineral Substance, Chalk or Powder; is perfectly innocent, delicious and refreshing. Sold by Druggists generally.

D. D. GRIFFIN, General Agent,
4380 779 Broadway, N. Y.

Watches Given to All our Agents!

A GREAT CHANGE.

READER, delay not one moment, until you send for our New PRIZE STATIONERY PACKAGE Circular, wherever you want it or not. It contains important information for everybody. Great inducement offered to Agents.

000o WEIS & CO., 34 South-Third St., Phila.

Shults' Onguent.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 30 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS Troy, N. Y.

A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts., MAGNIFYING 500 times, mailed on receipt of price. Five of different powers, $1. Address F. S. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass. o

GOLD PENS AND CASES.

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each Pen. Send for a Circular. Pens reported on receipt of 38 cents.

585-87o S. S. JOHNSON, 18 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

C. W. FRENCH,
607 Broadway, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN'S FURNISHING GOODS.

A large and complete stock of Men's Furnishing Goods for the fall and winter wear, combining all the novelties of the season as they appear in Paris and London.

FINE SHIRTS
AND COLLARS
MADE TO ORDER.

JUST RECEIVED a large stock of Genuine Shaker Wool Undershirts and Drawers, very fine. Also, a large stock of English Underclothing, warm Overcoats, Carriage Blankets, etc. Call and examine our stock

FRENCH FLANNEL ARMY SHIRTS

Dress Shirts
TO MEASURE,
SIX SHIRTS
$12, $15 & $18.

Dress Shirts,
TO ORDER,
are made a Perfect Fit, Superior Work and are Unequaled in Quality for the Prices.

An extensive assortment of newly imported SCARFS, TIES, SUSPENDERS, GLOVES and HDKERCHIEFS.

JAMES PAGRISH, 323 Canal Street, New York
626

A PECULIAR CASE OF HARDSHIP.

MR. MICHAEL MURPHY—"Indade, Mrs. Molloney, things has come to a pretty pass when we can't git a few thousand dollars on our bit ov real estate widout putting stamps on the mortgage."

GOLD WATCH FREE!

$15 Per Day Easy $15

100,000 men and women wanted to act as Agents in every Town, Village and Camp, to sell our enormously popular, unrivalled and valuable EXTRA LARGE $15 PRIZE PACKAGES, containing large quantities of STATIONERY, RECIPES, YANKEE NOTIONS, etc. Sells wonderfully. Only Genuine. Largest, Best and Cheapest ever manufactured. Each Package contains more real valuable articles than any half dozen other ever sold, such as fine Writing Materials, Paper, Envelopes, Pens, Pencils, Blotters, Emblems, Ladies' Fancy Fashion Pieces, Designs for Needlework, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Companions, Camp Companions (for Soldiers), Parlor Amusements, Guide for Letter Writers, Many Ways to Get Rich, Directory of Genteel Living, Comic Pocket Calendars for the Year, Union Designs, YANKEE INVENTIONS of all Kinds, Household, Army Laws and Advice, Rich and Costly Presents of fashionable Jewellery, etc., etc., etc., the whole worth MANY DOLLARS, if bought separately. Price each Package ONLY 25 cents retail. Wholesale rates to Agents very low, 100 to 200 PER CENT. PROFIT ALLOWED. GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE ARMY SAFE. All Soldiers are allowed to Receive and Sell our Goods. A Splendid Gold or Silver Hunting Case Watch, English Movements, and Correct Timepiece, presented Free to all who act as Agents. Send for our New Circulars for 1864, with Extra Premium Inducements; free.

S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., New York, the Great Original, Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World. Beware of impostors offering our Premiums.

$20 TO $5 PER DAY!—Agents, local and traveling, wanted everywhere. Business honorable, easy and attractive. Articles of quick sale, good profits, and alike useful to citizen or soldier, man, woman or child. Full particulars sent free, or box of samples by mail, 31 cents. C. J. BESTOR, 435-8o 271 Main Street, Hartford, Conn.

To Consumptives!

The Advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection and that dread disease, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, etc. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address REV. EDWARD WILSON,
Williamsburg, King's Co., N. Y.
000o

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both Sexes—new and reliable treatment. Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South-Fifth Street Philadelphia.

Salesmen Wanted.—Salary Paid. Address (with stamp) to Harris Bros., Boston, Mass. 435-470

BALLOU'S
Patented
FrenchYoke
SHIRTS.
Warranted to FIT, and to be
CHEAPER
for the same qualities and make than those of any other Shirt House in this city.
Circular containing drawings and prices sent free.

For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.

BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, New York.

For Veteran, Army Corps, Cavalry and Battle Pins,

Send to Headquarters,
o S. M. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway.
(See Notice inside.

GREAT CHANCE
TO
MAKE MONEY.

We want Agents everywhere to sell the most splendid

STEEL ENGRAVINGS

Ever published. We will furnish them so that a stock of $10 will yield $50; also,

PRIZE STATIONERY PACKETS

With which we give, as Premiums to Agents,

Gold and Silver Watches.

Full particulars in Circular.
Mailed free, Address
o G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
36 Beekman Street, N. Y.

COLLARS

LOCKWOOD'S CLOTH LINED

Paper Collars!

ALSO,

LADIES' COLLARS AND CUFFS,

AT

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

BY

CHAS. L. LOCKWOOD,
No. 675 Broadway, N. Y.

The Cheapest Watches
IN AMERICA!

THE GREAT NEW ARMY WATCH,

Especially for Soldiers. Solid Silver Heavy Hunting Cased Lever Watch. Perfect Timekeeper, $15.

See our advertisement on page 351 inside this paper for Watches of Every Description.

Send for our Circular.
GEORGE A. ELY & CO., Importers,
o 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Soldiers' Timekeepers!

SPLENDID WATCHES, SILVER AND GOLD-PLATED, Open Face and Hunting Cases, $8, $9, $10 and $12. Sent free on receipt of price. Just the Watches for Soldiers' wear. Send for our Trade Circular of Watches, Jewelry, etc.

C. H. KIMBERLY & CO.,
229 Broadway, Cor. Barclay St., N. Y.

VINELAND, LANDS. TO ALL WANTING FARMS!

Large and thriving Settlement; mild and healthful climate; 30 miles south of Philadelphia, by railroad. Rich Soil—produces Large Crops, which can now be seen growing; 30 and 40 Acre Tracts at from $10 to $20 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings—churches, schools and good society. This is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers containing reports and giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland P. O., Cumberland Co., New Jersey.

From Report of Solon Robinson:—At p. 76. Trubune:
"It is one of the most extensive rectic tracts, in an almost level position, and suited to consumption, for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Lever Cap, Double Case, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Ox Hands, "English Movements," Correct Timekeeper, Sent free, by mail, in a neat case, for only $7.

A SILVER WATCH, same as above, only $7.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15

A SUPERB "EXTRA DOUBLE GOLD-PLATED" Hunting Case Watch—Magic Spring—Genuine English Jewelled Movements—Equal Balance—Independent action—Correct Timekeeper—"Warranted one year," will stand acid, is an Exact Imitation of a $100 Gold Watch used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free, by mail, in Elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.

The Celebrated English Court Watch

For Ladies, Extra heavy Gold Plate on STERLING SILVER Hunting Cases, "Unique Escutcheon Designs." Ruby Movements, Carved Edges, a "fac simile" of the Costly article used by the English Ladies at "Court Levees." Warranted one year. Sent, free by mail, in Rich Embossed Turkey Morocco Case, for only $16.

ENGLISH STERLING SILVER Hunting Cases LEVER WATCHES, Jewelled Movements, a Genuine article, only $15.

ENGLISH DUPLEX WATCHES. Fine Article, in Heavy Gold or Silver Cases, from $45 to $100 each. Watches of all descriptions for army use at Low Prices.

We are the Sole Importers of the above European Watches.

N. Y. Illustrated News says: Messrs Norton & Co., an old and reliable firm, offer a "Correct Timepiece," equal in appearance to $100 Watches, for only $15. We recommend them to our Soldiers in the Field.

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers,
o 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS
SENT EVERYWHERE
BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready-Made or to Measure, at $21, $20, $45 per doz

SELF-MEASUREMENT FOR SHIRTS.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars sent free everywhere.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3, $3 75 and $4 50 each—all cut one yard long. A single Shirt by mail on receipt of price in cash and 63 cents postage for each shirt.

Send the Size of your Neck also.

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any Paper Collar, as they are easily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To military men, Travellers they are invaluable.

Price $1 each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of $1 25.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,
No. 387 Broadway, New York.

Dyspepsia Tablets.

FOR INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by Druggists generally. Price 50 cents a box; sent free on the receipt of 65 cents. Depot, 307 Centre Street, second floor.
o

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, CURED and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address
435-470 CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

ALL Articles for Soldiers at Baltimore Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newberne, Port Royal, and all other places, always be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS No. 74 Broadway. Sutler charged low rates. 000o

TOMES, SON & MELVAIN.
6 Maiden Lane, New York,

Dealers in "Fire Arms," "Cutlery," "Sporting Articles," "Military Goods," Fishing Tackle, Brushes, Horseshaun Pipes, etc., etc.

Military and Navy Equipments in every variety.

A large assortment of

RICH PRESERVATION SWORDS,
34-7o Constantly on hand.

MUNN & COMPANY,

Solicitors of American & Foreign Patents,

AND PUBLISHERS OF THE ILLUSTRATED "SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN," 37 Park Row, New York.

Pamphlets of information about patents FREE. Specimen copies of the paper FREE.

COLD FEET!

USE THE ELECTRO METALLIC INSOLES.

They keep the feet warm in the coldest weather.

METTAM & CO., Proprietors,
439 Broadway, New York.

Price $1; prepaid, by mail, $1 30. Send for Circular.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 439—Vol. XVII.] NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 27, 1864. [PRICE 8 CENTS

THE LATE ATTACK ON NEWBERNE.

FEW attempts of the rebels have] shown more boldness or been more nearly crowned with success than the recent attack on Newberne. A force of no less than 10,000 was selected for the expedition, and barges were brought on from Savannah, with picked crews, who were to capture the gunboat Underwriter and with her destroy the Navy Yard and command the town.

The land attack began on the afternoon of the 1st, at Batchelor's creek, eight miles west of Newberne, on the railroad, where two blockhouses and some slight defences were held by the 132d N. Y. volunteers, Col. Closeen. The latter held the bridge on the creek stubbornly, but after four hours' fight were flanked and fell back, and being reinforced by the 17th Massachusetts, Lieut.-Col. Fellows, made another stand, but being outflanked, after a short fight retired to the fortifications near the city on the morning of the 2d. Adjutant H. C. Cheever was mortally wounded, Lieut.-Col. Fellows, several other officers and 50 men missing.

The gunboat Underwriter had passed up the Neuse, near Fort Stephenson, throwing out her anchors and placing all her guns on the port side. About one o'clock at night the rebels approached in their boats, and before the sentinel could alarm the crew boarded the vessel. A short contest ensued, but the crew were only 40, the rebels 200. Fortunately for the nation, the Underwriter was aground, and while the rebels were endeavoring to get her off Fort Stephenson sent one shell through their boat, and another exploded on deck, setting their boat on fire. The attacking party, with their prisoners, poured into the small boats in such haste that 15 of the boat's crew, and some of the captors, got into our boat. This fact soon became known among them, and the boat landed near Fort Stephenson, making the captain a captive. Thus, under the shadow of the guns in the fort, and in sight of the sgrards and the breastworks, a gunboat is wrested from us and must be destroyed. Certainly a handsome thing for the rebels, but bad for us. All the officers, except Engineer Allen, are missing. The captain is a prisoner. Besides those escaping in the boat are a few seamen. Engineer Allen was taken, but recaptured himself and took the rebel officer and his barge.

Notwithstanding this brilliant stroke, the enemy failed in their main object. Newberne was too well defended, and they finally drew off.

Our view of the capture of the Underwriter, will bring the matter vividly before our readers. During the excitement caused by the attack the citizens, white and black, were enrolled and marched to the front. After the enemy retired to Kinston the city was loud in its exultation, and one of the strange sights was the negro volunteers marching down Broad street, singing the John Brown song and other melodies of the kind, just at all by the direction of some original secessionists still residing in the town.

THE WAR IN NORTH CAROLINA—NEGRO VOLUNTEERS PASSING THE BROAD STREET EPISCOPAL CHURCH, NEWBERNE.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, F. H. SCHELL.

Barnum's American Museum.

FOUR ENORMOUS GIANTS—Three men and a woman, each over eight feet high; two Dwarfs, both less than two feet high—besides a host of other Novelties. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album.

Consisting of 21 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both indoor and outdoor costumes, representing Turk, Jew, Jewish Armenian, Circassian, Egyptian and Druz nationalities, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's Lectures.

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every drawing room table; and the cheapest and most acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Price only $3. Sent free, by mail on receipt of the price, by

C. OSCANYAN,
No. 37 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 27, 1864.

All Communications, Book for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 22 Duane street, between Broadway and Elm. New York.

Dealers supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, also FRANK LESLIE'S POPULAR HISTORY OF THE WAR OF 1861, by GEORGE P. BEMIS & CO., Proprietors of the London American, 103 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One copy one year	$3 50
Two copies " to one address	6 00
Four " "	9 00
Magazine and paper one year	5 00

Notice to Advertisers.

The value of our paper as an advertising medium has become so generally known, that we are compelled every week to refuse columns of advertisements. The rapid increase of our circulation, demanding as it does into the most profitable channels, renders our space doubly valuable, and justifies us in the course we have determined upon—that of increasing our rates of advertising in the following ratio:

75 cents a line on the outside or last page.
50 " " on the 14th and 15th pages.

Notice to Contributors.

Our paper is beyond all others the journal that offers to the public the greatest number of American tales and stories. Great as are the numbers that constantly reach us, we are always happy to receive tales and poems of merit. If accepted they will be remunerated duly. When declined they are returned without delay.

Contributors will be good enough to write legibly, on one side only of the paper, and give their address distinctly. Comic sketches for engraving, or hints for such illustrations, are also acceptable.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

A well-concerted plan for dashing into Richmond was on the point of success. Gen. Butler sent out an expedition, under Gen. Wistar, to proceed by way of Bottom's bridge, the attention of the rebels being diverted by raids on the James river. To prevent Lee from sending any troops back the second army corps, under command of Gen. Caldwell, temporarily, moved to the river at Morton's ford, where the third division, under Gen. Hayes, crossed over, under cover of Capt. Arnold's Rhode Island battery. A rebel picket post was surprised and captured in the works on the bank. After a short advance the rebels were met in large force, when they made two attacks on our troops, both of which were gallantly repulsed. During one of these fights, one of our regiments—the 14th Connecticut—composed largely of conscripts, got thrown into disorder, and suffered quite severely from the rebel fire. Night coming on, our forces were ordered back to the north side of the river, it having been demonstrated that the rebel army was still in large force on the south side of the Rapidan. Our loss was about 200 killed and wounded, of whom only six were known to be killed.

This movement left the field open for Butler's attempt, but a deserter reached the enemy in time to warn them, and Gen. Wistar, on reaching Bottom's bridge, finding the way impeded by trees which had been cut down, fell back without making the attempt.

Richmond on the 6th and 7th inst. was in a state of the most feverish excitement, from midnight on Saturday up to the time they left on Sunday afternoon.

At midnight on Saturday the bells of the city were rung, and men were rushing through the streets crying, "To arms! to arms! the Yankees are coming! the Yankees are coming!"

During the remainder of the night there was an intense commotion everywhere visible. The Home Guard was called out, and the tramp of armed men could be heard in all directions.

Cannon were hauled through the streets; women and children were hurrying to and fro, and there were all the evidences of such a panic as has seldom been witnessed in Richmond.

On Sunday there was no abatement in the excitement. The guards were all marched out of the city to defences, and the armed citizens were placed on guard over the prisoners.

The prisoners in Libby and Belle Isle were filled with exultant hope, to be however soon damped.

The Montgomery (Ala.) Mail (rebel paper) of no specified date is reported to have said: "Rumors of an evacuation of Richmond are gaining credit. There is a movement on foot which will create more consternation at Richmond than anything that has occurred during the war."

It is certain that they are hurrying prisoners to the South.

A very disgraceful affair occurred in Gen. Butler's department, Lieut.-Col. Wead, of 98th N. Y., wishing to free a Secession lady, held as a hostage in Fort Monroe, by N. C., lured him to his post by a false message, and violently rescued his chere amie, calling out his whole force to resist Draper, who was brutally treated, beaten and disarmed. Wead has been arrested.

The railroad train at Kearneysville depot was recently robbed by a band of guerillas, but a sharp pursuit succeeded in capturing 10 of the 15 and the robbers prove to be chiefly Baltimoreans and sons of well-to-do persons in the neighborhood, chiefly in Jefferson and Berkeley counties, Va.

A report reaches us that Gen. Streight and 106 other American officers fled by rapids from Libby; some were recaptured, but the great number were still at large.

NORTH CAROLINA.

After Gen. Picket's failure to take Newberne he hung one of our men, who had been recognised as having killed a rebel Colonel. The rebel ironclad, which lies 25 miles above Newberne, on Neuse river, at Kinston, is supposed to be prepared for a communication with the land forces threatening Newberne. She is regarded as a very formidable engine of war.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

All efforts of the rebels to relieve their garrison in Fort Sumter now prove abortive. They cannot do it by day, as our guns have the range to a nicety, and the use of calcium lights gives us the same advantage at night. A rebel ram and a torpedo boat tried to come out in the rear of Sullivan's island on the 11th of Feb., but the torpedo craft went down with eight of her crew.

TENNESSEE.

The only movement here seems to be that of rebel deserters. Those who left their homes in Kentucky and Tennessee to fight for the oligarchy of the cotton lords, are beginning to open their eyes to their fatal choice, and gladly escape when they can. 1,000 came into the Union lines in this State in January.

An expedition, organised by Gen. Paine, commanding at Gallatin, Tenn., recently left that place in pursuit of several bands of troublesome guerillas, and made a successful raid into Putnam, Overton, White and Jackson counties. It was out nearly 14 days, and travelled about 300 miles, killed 36 guerillas, took 102 prisoners and captured some 100 horses and mules, and a considerable quantity of stolen property. Among the captured is Col. Mercury, of the rebel army, and among the killed is Capt. Brown and two lieutenants.

GEORGIA.

The rebel army is still at Dalton, although Border State troops are sent back to Rome, the ardor of those for the Southern cause often carrying them too near our lines. The rebel papers are very boastful of their holding Atlanta. It is a strange result of the three years war. They who were going to lay New York, Philadelphia and Boston in ashes, are now only able to boast that they can hold a town in the interior of Georgia!

MISSISSIPPI.

Gen. Sherman's army left Vicksburg about two weeks since, on the expedition southward. The 16th and 17th army corps composed it, under the command respectively of Gen. Hulbut and Gen. McPherson, the latter having the advance. On the 3d inst. Gen. Smith's cavalry expedition left Memphis for Corinth, to operate in the interior of Mississippi and Alabama.

Porter and Sherman were attacked, Feb. 5, by a force of Texans, but they were dislodged and driven from their position by the gunboats and by some of our black horse and foot.

The enemy were also driven from Meachanicsville. A sick negro soldier, of Colwood's command, was taken by the rebels and murdered. His assassins, a lieutenant and two privates, were captured, and shot, by Colwood, on the body of their victim.

ARKANSAS.

Gen. Steele's Union force in Arkansas are also preparing for early more southward, which will put the rebel Magruder between them and the forces of Gen. Banks.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, twice occupied and twice abandoned our troops, was again occupied on the 8th by three brigades, under Brig.-Gen. Truman Smith.

NAVAL.

An Anglo-rebel steamer passed our blockading squadron off Charleston, and began to unload near Fort Moultrie, when she was ridded by our gunners.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 8th February, Senator Sumner introduced a bill for the repeal of all laws for the rendition of fugitive slaves. Also a series of resolutions to amend the Constitution, so as to secure the extinguishment of slavery from the land.

In the House, an amendment was moved to the Enrollment act, providing that any drafted man finding a substitute should be exempt from draft as long as the substitute's term of service.

In the Senate, on the 9th, Mr. Sumner presented several numerously signed petitions in favor of the entire abolition of slavery, which gave rise to an interesting debate on the Government compromise proposition. The bill reviving the grade of Lieutenant-General was reported, with the clauses making said office forever cease, and requiring and recommending Gen. Grant for the position struck out. A bill prohibiting speculation in coin and foreign exchange was introduced by Mr. Sherman and referred to the Finance Committee. Mr. Powell introduced a bill amending the Constitution so as to provide for the method of electing the President of the United States; it was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

In the House there was much matter of interest. In discussing the Enrollment act, the clause exempting clergymen was stricken out.

In the Senate, on the 10th, Mr. Trumbull reported from the Judiciary Committee a joint resolut on, proposing amendments to the Constitution prohibiting for the abolition of slavery. A report from the same committee, adverse to Mr. Sumner's proposed amendment, making all persons the law to be free who a man can hold another as a slave, was also presented by Mr. Trumbull. Mr. Sumner's bill for the repeal of the Expatriation Proclamation and giving that bill the force of a law, was reported back from the Committee on Slavery and Freedom. The case of the colored woman Jenny Scott, who colored woman Jenny Scott, who was ejected from a railroad car because of his color, was brought up by Mr. Sumner, who offered a resolution directing inquiry as to the expediency of passing a law giving the colored people the right to the cars of Washington. Considerable argument ensued, but finally the resolution was adopted, by 29 to 10. The bill prohibiting members of Congress, heads of bureaus and clerks from getting a commission or fee on purely judicial cases before civil courts, was taken up and the House amendment to Congressional pay struck by a vote of 30 against 14. The fuel so much the pay of cole to soldiers' wives as the 3d session of the 37th was then discussed, and after an executive session the Senate adjourned. About 200 army nominations were sent to the Senate, making 1,000 now awaiting confirmation.

In the House, Mr. Stevens offered an amendment that persons of African descent between 20 and 45 years of age, residing within the United States or not, shall be enrolled and form part of the National forces; and that they shall be drafted and mustered into the service, the master shall receive a certificate for $300, which shall be a charge on the State. This was opposed by Messrs. Clay and Mallory, of Kentucky, and Cravens and Harris, of Maryland; Davis, of Kentucky, and Harris, of Maryland; Davis, of New York, and Pendleton, of Ohio, were members; but the House adjourned without taking a vote on the amendment.

In the Senate, on the 11th, there was an animated discussion on the resolution reviving the grade of Lieutenant-General, and the appointment of Lieut.-Gen. Grant for that honor. Without coming to a vote the Senate adjourned over.

In the House, Mr. Wood made a speech, in which he said he was in favor of the Union as it was, and peace, the North can Congress was violating the Constitution. He did not believe in the draft.

In the Senate, on the 12th, a motion to print 10,000 extra copies of Gen. McClellan's report, without the maps, was defeated by a considerable majority. The House bill making appropriations for deficiencies, amounting to $50,000,000, was passed, with a number of amendments proposed by the Finance Committee appended. The resolution proposing the surplus in the Senate went into executive session, and shortly after adjourned.

The House spent the entire day on the Enrollment bill, which was finally passed by 114 votes in favor of the Whole. The vote stood 95 yeas against 81 nays. The bill now goes to the Senate, for concurrence in the House amendments.

In the Senate, on the 13th, the consideration of the bill increasing the pay of colored soldiers to the same amount given to white troops was then resumed. Mr. Wilson, of Massachusetts, moved a clause in the bill of the committee giving colored troops the same pay, etc., except bounties, as white troops. The motion has been in the service, and insert "after the 1st day of January, 1864." The amendment was supported by Mr. Doolittle, providing that from the monthly pay of colored troops $10 per month be deducted, in insurrectionary districts, the sum of three dollars per month shall be reserved, to reimburse the expenses incurred by the United States in feeding and clothing their widows, children and parents of those whose troops was rejected after some debate. Mr. Gowan offered a substitute for the bill as amended, that from and after the passage of this act all soldiers of the United States of African descent shall receive like compensation." Mr. Gowan supported the amendment at considerable length, claiming that the negro must be regarded as a citizen under the Constitution, as he received the protection of the laws. Pending the question on the substitute the Senate adjourned.

"AUNT," inquired a medical prodigy of 15, fresh from a lecture on surgery, "which do you think the most difficult operation in surgery?"

"Don't know, Charley—what?"

"Taking the jaw off a woman," answered the hopeful youth.

THE IDLER ABOUT TOWN.

THE Arion Society's Ball was an institution from the first year of its existence, for it differed from all other balls in its thoroughly Teutonic characteristics of fun, good humor and social abandon. Year by year it has been growing more and more popular, until this year it became a craze. Fond a fight to procure admission, and many thousands, after all their exertions, were doomed to be disappointed and to stay at home as they had been many times before. We never miss the Arion ball, if but for one reason—our passion for music! We love to study that noble organ, and there we meet with a greater variety than all the rest of the world can afford. What a fund of genius has been wasted in the production of those multiform and feat ons of the nasal adornment, and how piquant, saucy and intelligent they all are! In the Arion Ball Room one never sees so much illustrated as while talking to an impossible nose, and receiving in any of those noses the least bit of attention from a celebrated music, and came from lips that could not possibly belong to that nose. We ourselves have assumed a nose, leaving all the rest of the face undisturbed, and have talked to our most intimate friends unrecognised. That nose gave us a seat in the vis a vis one way, and made us squint on the other; it made our mouth awry, broadened our cheeks, and seemed to lengthen our ears! There is all disguise equal to a nose that does not belong to you. Although as few tickets as possible were sold, yet by evening every part of the Academy of Music was thronged to overflowing on Thursday evening. There was, of course, plenty of dancing, but in the form of a subsidiary occupation; for, still, as every one seemed to expect to be jostled or rolled against, no one complained, but bore every inconvenience with perfect good humor. What gigantic Germans were there! How they swelled out with the music! How fat-eared they had the spirit of the thing; and how their fair companions looked more than bashful! What a variety in the beautiful dress-es, what coquetting, what laughter, what a display of flowers! Ices rejoiced on every hand everywhere! We can imagine how the elegantes who had their boxes in the Opera House drove away from upon the fun, wished they had taken their chance tickets and had gone in for amusement. How well they got up that light in the amphitheatre! How new and sparkling it looked, and fit to put to shame the botanists! and how every head had a different coiffure! Every square inch there was a third already Toutes elses over the amphitheatre into the parquette, and how the latter, in their turn, looked up to astrides of boughter as the figures, instead of falling into the quadrilles, performed their evolutions by the seat of its pantaloons! Rough fun perhaps, but it is the sort of rough fun that we like, and invite—which we are invited to double—be certainly all out of town on the 22d of March—and was crowned in triumphant manner by an ignis fatuus representation of the Arion Society's Ball! Who was sent by our Artistic friends to be Mr. Lyd'ate. The procession round the ball room was as quiet, boisterous and as musical as of old, conducted by the same Marshal and Marshal's aids, which were heartily relished by every one in the house.

What the masks were with brave there was a display of beauty not rarely seen assembled together in one assemblage. After that the dancing went on all night with great vivacity, and when we left, which was away in the small hours of the morning, there was no diminution in the spirit of the proceedings.

Notwithstanding the change in the Opera nights, in the Lenten season of Lent, the Opera season has been, if possible, more brilliant and elegant than ever, and Mr. Ullman has given the greatest of all pieces of public amusement until very lately. Now, however, full three of the Operas in active list are to the exception, and this is a deference to the magnificent holiness of the Lenten season. Of the new singers, There has been nothing new produced since our last. Bell' sini" does not appear to have made a sensation and drew overflowing audiences. "Il Poliuto" will be produced this week, and we are delighted to have to record the first appearance of Signor Brignoli this week, who has been suffering from a bad cold, shown by appearances, the season which has commenced with Gounod's "Faust" will be the last of the range of new excitements.

Concerts and concerts commence next week, at Niblo's Saloon, a place altogether too small for his numerous friends, but as large as Mr. Jullien's, which was no other resource. The names of the artists who will appear, and the programmes of each of the concerts are announced as his farewell concerts before going to England, but we suspect that we shall see him back to bachelordom; that, in fact, Gotts'chalk is about to be married. We do not know the lady in question, but which he will retire from public life. If this rum r be true, Gottschalk's friends will look forward to his giving concerts to the ladies of America, for if there ever was an artist who made love to the public, appreciation of the beautiful of the world, Gottschalk is that man. We remember that Madame Parepa's first appearance was a great success at Niblo's Saloon on Monday last. The audience was very large and very select, and the corner of the young violinist must be looked upon as the corner stone of success.

Mr. Alfred H. Pease, the American pianist, who has recently returned from Germany, gave a farewell concert at Dodworth's Saloon, on Monday evening last week, which was numerously attended. Mr. Pease played several pieces, each of which was encored, a result which must have been extremely gratifying to that artist. Industrious audience, but he did not impress us very favorably. We think that Mr. Pease relies too much for his playing is devoid of character. He seems painstaking, and overcomes all the difficulties he meets, and once hand scenes ever to wait upon the other, as though deserted of his wife, and the result is a performance which he played by Liszt, his want of style was not so apparent. But he gives us no heart in his music, he has become familiarized with his audiences, we may find him more successful on a small hall over which we cannot place him among our first-class players in New York.

A Grand Testimonial Concert is to be given, on the 29th inst., to Mr. Jacob Le P. Kunkhead, at Irving Hall. We call especial attention to this fact because, although we are fond of this effort to do honor to merit, it is in the case of Mr. Harrison. To him the public owe a debt of gratitude for the many pleasant hours of his liberality, enterprise and untiring energy he has, in the amusement of the first, and into existence whole series of entertainments which but for him would never have been thought of, and for the next he has opened new avenues for the display of their talents, and for the enjoyment of the public at large. Of course, the list of performing artists will be overwhelming; the list of Mr. Harrison's friends is very large, but, as the committee is a distinguished and most influential one, we have no doubt that we shall see the most brilliant programme of the season. We trust that Mr. Harrison will have an overwhelming house, as only such a result will be worthy the merits of the object of the testimonial.

Mr. J. N. Pattison gives his first grand concert at Irving Hall on the 27th inst. He will be assisted by some first class artists. Our readers are so familiar with the high abilities of Mr. Pattison and of his claims to the support of the musical public, that we have no need to advance anything in his favor; yet we will say, that never in our experience has a young pianist risen so steadily and so rapidly to the first position in his profession, by the acclamation of the public, as in the case of Mr. Pattison. He has won his position by consecutive study, and by aiming at the goal which his perseverance has gained.

Westland Marston's play "Pure Gold," the hero of which is a convict, the present pet weakness of society, has made a success at Wallack's. It is quite interesting, finely acted, and is put on the stage in the most perfect manner. It will be alternated with "Rosedale" for some time to come.

Byron's burlesque on "Il Trovatore" was played at the Olympic, for one week, to overflowing houses; but for some reason or other it has been withdrawn to make way for "The Pride of the Market," in which Mrs. John Wood appears as Marton, and Mr. Frank Drew as Isadore.

"The Ticket-of-Leave Man" still continues to crowd Winter Garden night after night.

The Harrison English Opera Company will appear at Niblo's Saloon on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Mr. J. R. Thomas is engaged, and will add greatly to the strength of the company.

At Barnum's Museum the Giants and the Dwarfs continue to attract crowds of curiosity-seekers in connection with the countless wonders of creation with which the place abounds. The new drama, "Helvei; or, the Galley Slave of Toulon," is the attraction of the Lecture Room, and is pronounced a great success. A visit to Barnum's is always worth double the money charged.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—Trinity School, a well-known Protestant Episcopal Educational Institution in this city, has just come into the possession of property (real estate and funded) to the value of $3,000,000, through the fortunate termination of a lawsuit. The litigation has been a bitterly contested and long one, extending through a period of over thirty years.

—— Some physicians have given it as their opinion that diphtheria is a new disease, caused by the prevalent use of kerosene oil.

—— A lady took her niece lately to a country photographer, to have her portrait taken. While the aunt was engaged with the operator, the niece swallowed some of the preparations and died in a few minutes from the effects of the poison.

—— Gen. Butler has expelled Mr. Shore, the Fortress Monroe correspondent of the World and News, for what he terms disloyal articles. Mr. Shore denies the charge, and says that he was merely the agent for sending on the Richmond papers to New York when they arrived by a boat of truce.

—— A teacher in a Catholic Sunday School in Boston has been arrested for striking one of the pupils so violently as to endanger her life.

—— There are 8,192 children in the public schools of Jersey City, and 2,103 in those of Hoboken.

—— A bill is to be introduced in the New Jersey Legislature, at the present session for the creation of a new county, to be composed of the city of Newark and a portion of Harrison township, the latter being in Hudson county.

—— A butcher in Grand street has hit upon a very ingenious way to attract custom. He arranges with his assistant to get up a bogus row, the excuse being the wickedness of his man selling meat so cheap that he only realises the prime cost. The consequence is that quite a crowd is created, and the butcher manages to sell half a dozen joints by this ingenious dodge.

—— The British authorities at Halifax have decided upon returning the Cheaspeake to her owners.

—— The price of gold has remained at the average of 158.

—— A meeting was held at the Oddfellows' Hall, Hoboken, on the 12th of February, in behalf of the Sanitary Fair. It was very enthusiastic, although one speaker did his best to clear the hall by a remarkably dull speech. Gen. Wright, however, came to the rescue, and wound up the meeting with great éclat.

Southern.—It appears from the Richmond papers that two rebel cavaliers, named Davis and Reynolds, captured four negroes belonging to the Home Guard of Fairfax county, and took them towards Dumfries. The captors fell asleep on the way, and the prisoners, in order to avoid the fate that might befal them in Dixie, clove the skulls of the rebels with some sharp instrument and made good their escape —— In Ware county, Ga., on the night of Jan. 23d a negro entered the house of a lady where there were no males and violated her person. He was recognised, and the next day pursued by dogs, caught, condemned by a jury of citizens, and burned to death

—— A gentleman occupying a high position, says that Jeff Davis's son, by his slave girl Catharine, was in the Federal service on board of one of our gunboats in the Mississippi for several months—a likely mulatto. Among the letters of Jeff taken at his house by our Illinois troops, there was a batch of queer epistles between Jeff and Mrs. Davis, touching this old flame Catharine.

—— The Montgomery Mail, Ala., says the idea is prevalent that the rebel Government is about to move to Columbia, S. C., to which place the arsenal was transferred over a month ago.

—— Gen. Magruder, the well-known Bacchanalian rebel, has arrived at Southampton, Eng., from Texas, in the English steamer Atrato, on his way to Richmond.

Military.—One of Gen. Grant's staff writes that such is the wonderful change in the sentiments of the people in Alabama, Tennessee and Mississippi, that an officer of the Union army can travel in those States without being insulted, and can obtain refreshments in the farmhouses.

—— The work on the soldiers' cemetery at Chattanooga is going rapidly on; 24 bodies have already been interred.

—— We omitted to state in our notice of the Ladies' National Army Relief Association, that Mr. Bull, 177 Water street, New York, is the treasurer: and Mr. Blunt, of 179 Water street, one of the directors. Those who wish to alleviate the sufferings of our wounded and sick soldiers are invited to send their contributions to those gentlemen The distribution is made by experienced and competent persons.

Personal.—Mrs. Gen. Tom Thumb gave birth to a son on the 12th inst. So the New York Sun says.

—— Brignoli has sued an impressario for salary not forthcoming. The "silver-voiced" tenor was to receive $1,600 a month.

—— The Queen of Bohemia, Ada Clare, has left New York for California. She is one of the brightest quilldrivers that ever wore crinoline.

—— The late Mrs. Willyams, who left £40,000 sterling to Mr. Disraeli, was a Jewess—Sarah, daughter and heiress of Nunez de Costa.

—— Berger, the great billiard-player, has now settled in Lyons, where he has become the proprietor of the Café du XIXe. Siècle, which he re-opened on Christmas Day.

—— An English writer describes the Duke of Augustenburg, about whose succession to the Government of Holstein Europe is threatened with war, as a tall man, over six feet high, with hazel hair, blue eyes, light eyebrows, good complexion, manner somewhat slow but stately, and speech sedate, with a slight "peculiarity." He talked "affably," and seems altogether a well-intentioned but somewhat slow and heavy person, who will govern Holstein without many blunders, without being a very dangerous personage in Europe. The English writer is evidently a wag.

—— The St. Louis Republican, of the 9th inst., editorially refers to the connection of Gen. Grant's name with the Presidency, and with an air of authority says: "Gen. Grant is not going to trouble himself much concerning these movements of politicians. It is not to his taste. His intention is to close the war as soon as possible, and he wants to be foot-loose, not hampered by political entanglements. He asks no other duty now. He is not, and will not be, a candidate for the Presidency at the forthcoming election, and politicians may trim their sails accordingly."

—— Rossini, the celebrated composer, will complete his 72d year on the 29th February. He consequently has a birthday anniversary only once in every four years. The 29th February is an excellent day to marry on, since a man is thus spared three-fourths the agony of being reminded of it.

—— Fernando Wood's ball, in Washington, was a grand success; the ladies of the diplomatic corps attended, wearing their court jewels. What an honor!

Obituary.—Com. Wm. J. McCluny, U. S. N., died at his residence, in Brooklyn, Feb. 11. At the time of his death he had been in the service 52 years. He entered the navy in 1812, and was an acting Lieutenant in the fight between the Wasp and Frolic. He was attached to the Japan expedition under Com. Perry. From 1858 to 1860 he commanded the home squadron. He had seen 21 years' sea-service, and spent considerable of his time on shore and other duty. He was universally beloved and respected, and his loss will be severely felt among a large circle of friends.

—— William Behnes, the sculptor, died lately. A few years ago he was in good practice, especially as a modeller of busts, and he possessed natural talents sufficient to have raised him to one of the highest places of his noble calling. But he fell into troubles about money and other things, which preyed on his spirits. The best judges, however, thought very highly of his works. Of late he lived much alone. He died in the Middlesex Hospital, London.

—— The Duke of Cleveland died at Raby Castle, England, Jan. 18, betweeen three and four P.M. His grace had been seriously ill for a few days.

Accidents and Offences.—At Eastport, Me., last week a robber entered the house of Rev. T. P. Adams, and took $800 from the desk in his study. In four days afterwards, the thief appears to have been conscience-stricken, as all the money, except $10, was placed in a package upon Mr. Adams's doorstep.

—— The mystery of the Malden Bank murder has been solved. The culprit turns out to be Mr. Greene, the Postmaster of the town, a man who till now had borne an irreproachable character. It appears that, seeing young Converse alone in the bank, the temptation was too much for him, so he drew his revolver, and taking him unawares, shot him twice through the head.

—— A verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree has been given against Walters, a returned soldier. It appears that on his return from the war he found his mistress, Nancy Vincent, living in a disreputable house in Centre street. This so incensed him that he attacked her with a knife and killed her, after inflicting 18 wounds. His counsel's defence was that he was insane.

—— A woman, named Mary Creed, has been indicted in Brooklyn for being a common scold.

Foreign.—A painful rumor has reached England of the murder of Dr. Livingstone by the natives, on Lake Nyassa in Africa. It adds to the pain of this occurrence to know that the reported murder was instigated by white men—Portuguese—interested in the slave trade. A less well-authenticated report represents that Dr. Livingstone, though attacked and desperately wounded, was not yet dead.

—— It is said by the Observer that Queen Victoria has declared herself against Denmark very decidedly in the Schleswig-Holstein imbroglio, but fortunately Sovereigns have little influence in England.

—— The London Times, in an article on the American war, frankly owns that the chief reason why it, in common with all Englishmen (which is a slander upon the body of the people), wished the Union to be broken up was, that if its growth was not checked it would become so powerful as to endanger the supremacy of England. This has the rare merit of great candor.

—— The immense number of French officers and engineers sent from France to Mexico during the last two months leads to the belief that a change has been made in Napoleon's programme, and that it is now his intention to convert that splendid country into a French province, like Algiers. As the chances of an European war decrease, so will his leaning increase towards a protectorate.

—— The winter in Turkey is the severest known for very many years.

—— An English papers remarks upon the anomalous appearance of Queen Victoria in deep widow's weeds and her daughters in the liveliest colors.

—— John Bright has made two speeches in England which have given great offence to the ruling classes. Punch satirises both Bright and Cobden as men who wish to transfer the legislation of England to the ignorant and depraved classes.

—— The great divorce scandal case of O'Kane against Lord Palmerston has made another step, as Mrs. O'Kane has put in her answer to her husband's accusation. She declares that she is not the wife of O'Kane, and that she is not guilty of the crime charged against her. The "injured husband" claims £20,000 for the injury he has sustained through the gallant and venerable Lothario, Lord Palmerston. It is an evident attempt at extortion, and will doubtless end by the accused and his abettors being prosecuted and punished Some time ago it was stated that proceedings to that end had been taken against O'Kane and his lawyers.

—— The Paris Presse computes the population of the globe at 1,000,000,000, speaking 3,064 languages, and having 1,100 different forms of religion.

Art, Literature and Science.—William S. Mount, the comic painter of American life, has provided himself, at his residence in the country, with a movable studio. It can be drawn from place to place on wheels by a pair of horses, and when stationary can be turned about from one point of view to another, so as to allow the artist, sitting comfortably within, to make, not merely sketches, but the most deliberate and finished studies from nature On one side of the room the wall is formed by a large parallelogram of strong plate glass, like those used in the more sumptuous shops in Broadway, but of the most perfect and aerial transparency, and through this the artist has his view of the objects he chooses to delineate. Within is every convenience which the painter requires—easels, tables, drawers for the paints, and a stove for keeping the room warm in cold weather. The ventilation of the room is also provided for. By means of the accommodation afforded by this studio a winter landscape may be transferred to the canvas, at the artist's perfect leisure, when the mercury in Fahrenheit's thermometer is below zero.

—— Mrs. Henry C. Watson's second private recitations, at Chickering's elegant piano-rooms, was attended by a brilliant and fashionable audience, and was even more successful than her first. These recitations have none of the dryness of ordinary readings. They are efforts of memory, and have all the spontaneity of impromptu elocution. The introduction of vocal illustrations, artistically managed and beautifully rendered, add greatly to the interest, and lighten up the programme wonderfully. Mrs. Watson has a voice capable of the most exquisite modulations, and she uses it with a skill which, from its perfect naturalness, would seem to be intuitive. It is capable of the expression of every passion, and we doubt if any elocutionary effort ever exceeded her rendering of Poe's "Bells," than which no poem demands so wonderful a variety of intonation to picture it correctly. Mrs. H. C. Watson will give her first public recitation early in the ensuing month, and will, we believe, create an artistic excitement.

—— Mr. Bernard, the Secretary of the Dramatic Fund Association, informs us that on the 23d of April next (on which day, had he lived, Shakespeare would have completed his third century), the managers of the U. S. theatres will give a performance for the benefit of the Dramatic Fund. Wallack, Wheatley, Stuart and the principal New York managers were very prompt in their answers.

—— A sculptor thus describes how statues are made: The sculptor, having designed a figure, first makes a sketch of it in clay a few inches only in height When he has satisfied himself with the general attitude a cast is taken of his sketch, and from it a model in clay is prepared of the full size he designs for his statue, whether half the natural height, or life-size, or colossal. The process of building the clay, as it is called, upon the strong iron armatura or skeleton on which it stands on its pedestal, and the bending and fixing this armatura into the form of the limbs, constitute a work of vast labor of a purely manual sort, for whose performance all artists able to afford it employ the skilled workmen to be obtained in Rome. The rough clay, rudely assuming the shape of the intended statue, then passes into the sculptor's hands and undergoes his most elaborate manipulation, by which it is reduced (generally after the labor of several months) to the precise and perfectly finished form he desires should hereafter appear in marble. This done, the formatore takes a cast of the whole, and the clay is destroyed. From this last plaster, cast again in due time, the marble is hewn by three successive workmen. The first gives it rough outline, the second brings it by rule and compass to close resemblance with the cast, and the third finishes it to perfection.

Chit-Chat.—A London pantomime thus satirises the condition of our country: "The scene opening shows two shops, very Cheapsidy in appearance, over the larger one of which is the sign, 'A. B. Lincoln & Co., hardware men and general dealers.' On the next is, 'J. Davis & Co., cotton brokers.' On the former doors and windows are notices, informing all interested that paper was wanted, and just beneath that greenbacks might be had in any quantity. There was also a large placard, 'This shop one and the same with that next door.' On the shop of J. D. & Co., the most prominent placard is, 'No connection with the concern next door.' In the window is a large Confederate flag, on which is printed, 'Two rams wanted immediately.' Another is, 'A few horses, sheep, women and other cattle for sale.' Then comes on the fight, which is, of course, a prizefight. Davis and our worthy president are characteristically dressed, and the fight goes on until they both get into a box; which box Harlequin strikes and Columbine dances about, and it flies open in front, revealing the symbol of our American future in the two large heads and tails of the Kilkenny cats."

—— It is a singular fact that the statue of Freedom which now surmounts the capital of Washington was cast by slaves. The work was done by the slaves of Clark Mills, the artist, before they were emancipated by the act of Congress removing slavery from the District of Columbia.

—— Who can doubt the sensibility of the Southern chivalry after reading the statement of an "intelligent contraband," that his old master had five sons in the army, but never grieved so much at parting with all of them as him?

—— In Mayence, on the Rhine, where the annual consumption of wine is 360 bottles per adult, "gout, delirium tremens and liver complaints are quite unknown." The use of the wine is proof enough that there are good livers there.

—— Mr. Alexander Hugh Baring, M. P., was recently married to the Hon. Leonora Caroline Digby, a daughter of Lord Digby. The wedding-dress of the bride is thus described in an English journal: "The bride was attired in a dress of the richest white gros antique, trimmed with ruches covered with bouillons of tulle, with a tunic of magnificent Brussels point lace, looped up with bouquets of orange flowers, the body and sleeves covered with Brussels point lace to correspond, wreath of orange flowers and veil of Brussels point lace to match the tunic, with diamond necklace and ear-rings."

—— Some wags took a drunken fellow, put him in a coffin with the lid left so as he could easily raise it, placed him in a graveyard, and waited to see the effect. After a short time the fumes of the liquor left him, and his position being rather confined, he burst off the lid, sat bolt upright, and, after looking around, exclaimed, "Well, I'm the first that's riz! or else I'm much belated!"

—— There is an Abraham Lincoln Club in New Orleans and the chairman is a large slave owner. Wonders are becoming common.

—— Henri Drayton, the musician and actor, is dangerously ill.

—— Artemus Ward (Brown) is lying seriously ill at Salt Lake City, of typhoid fever.

—— During the recent operations on the Rapidan a company of volunteers was deployed as skirmishers in front of the enemy's works. While under a sharp fire from their skirmishers a wounded private went to the rear, leaving his gun on the field. An unarmed soldier belonging to another regiment picked up the gun and was moving away when a lieutenant hailed him with, "Hold on there; drop that gun. How do you suppose I can settle my ordnance accounts?"

—— A young man recently presented himself for examination as Assistant-Engineer in the navy. Among other questions, the following was asked of him: "Suppose you had built an engine yourself, performed every part of the work without assistance, and knew that it was in complete order, but when put into a vessel the pump would not draw water, what would you do?" The young man promptly replied: "I should go to the side of the vessel and ascertain if there was any water in the river."

CAPT. DICK'S WHALE.

"BY jingo! sir!" says the captain, "I've followed the sea for forty years, and I never was really frightened but that once!"

I saw that Capt. Dick Robbins had a story upon his mind, and was anxious to get it off, and I was equally anxious to indulge him, therefore I said,

"How was that, captain? Can't you tell us the story?"

"Well!" responded the captain, "it's nigh on to fifteen years ago, and I haven't as good memory as I once had, but I'll give the thing as near as I can.

"You must understand that I was once in the whaling line, and that I sailed out from New York in command of one of the finest ships in the trade, the Mary Plummer, of which I held a half share. We were bound to the North Atlantic, and my crew had been shipped upon shares, that is, instead of wages they were each to receive a portion of the fishing as payment. Many of them were men that had been out with me before, and with whom I was immensely popular. It was this popularity, I suppose, that led to a resolve on the part of the men that each should forego his share, and that the first whale taken should be wholly mine. After this resolve a bright lookout was kept, and I believe truly that every man was as anxious to see the first fish, as though it was to be his own property. 'Capt. Dick's whale' was common talk with them, and its estimated value as freely discussed as though we already had him aboard in oil.

"At last, one day, the lookout at the masthead shouted 'There she blows!' and in an instant the before lazy ship was a scene of life and bustle. The larboard and starboard boats were lowered away, and into one of them I sprang, determined to have a hand in killing the first fish.

"'Now then, boys, pull away for Captain Dick's whale!' shouted the steersman of my boat, and the boys, with a cheer, struck out heartily for the fish, which was somewhat less than five miles away. We were soon up with it, and I acted as harpooner with great applause, striking the iron deep into the fish, and getting a hold not easy shaken off. Away he went like a flash, but to our great astonishment, instead of following up his rapidity of movement, stopped not more than four hundred yards off, and lay perfectly still. We hesitated for an instant, and then stretching to our oars, pulled towards him. Scarcely had we made half a dozen strokes when we were horrified to see the monster turn, and with a fearful speed bear directly down upon the boat There was no time to think, for almost before a minute had elapsed he was upon us with wide stretched jaws, and barely leaving the twelve men, who were in it time to throw themselves into the sea, he crunched the boat into atoms, scarce leaving a piece floating as large as a water bucket. The other boat came directly to our aid, and the whale swimming leisurely away, we were picked up without the loss of a man.

"All this had been seen by the lookouts on board the ship, and another boat was instantly dispatched to our relief. We waited quietly for its coming up, for though some of my men were rather scared at the demonstration of the monster, yet I had determined to tackle him again, feeling as though he was my own property, and I had a right to him on board ship in the shape of oil. Therefore when the boat came up we started for a second attack, and soon reached within about a hundred yards, and tried to get round at his side for another blow. This the whale was determined we should not do, and each effort that we made only ended in finding him presented in full front to us. There was nothing for it, therefore, but to pull straight on, which no sooner did he perceive than, with a dash the same as before, he came at the leading boat. This time we had not even warning enough to throw ourselves overboard, and before we could even think the boat was cracked like a nut, and two of my men were crushed in the monster's jaws so fearfully that they sank into the waves like stones. As before, we were picked up by the other boat, and now with three boat's crews in one, we were compelled to return to the ship, though every one of us was full of the desire for vengeance, and to find in the death of the whale some satisfaction for the destruction of our comrades.

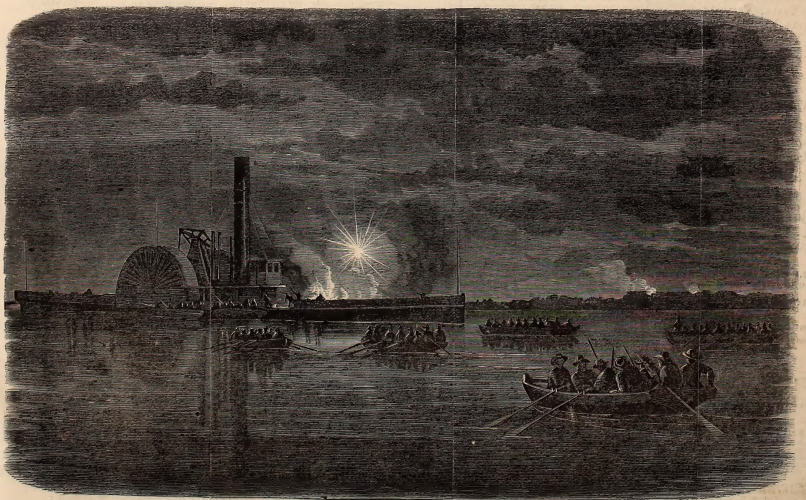
"We pulled steadily on, and were soon on board, but nothing would satisfy the men less than a fitting out of the other boats, and a determined chase of the monster to the death. I would not at once yield, because I wanted to get the ship nearer to the scene of action, and a fresh breeze springing up just then from the westward, we were soon speeding towards the spot of our disaster. We had scarcely gone a mile when I saw the whale directly making towards the ship. I knew him in an instant, there was no mistaking his wicked look or his open jaws, to say nothing of my harpoon sticking prominently out from his side. He came within fifty yards of the ship, leisurely swimming all around us and stretching his vast jaws occasionally, as though calculating his capacity to swallow us whole. I must confess that my eyes followed him with some sickening misgiving, and even when he swam in a direct line away I was not satisfied, and good cause I had; for, before I could realise the fact, I saw the great fish turn suddenly, and with the speed of a steamer under full way bear directly down upon the ship. He struck us about midships with a force that I can liken to nothing but the shock of an earthquake. Every timber in the ship cracked, and the foretopmast snapped short off as I came upon deck. I was terrified beyond all description, for I knew that the blow had destroyed the ship, and that in less than an hour all hands would be at the mercy of the fierce destroyer. I only waited long enough to see it swim once more away from us, possibly for another attack, and then ran below. It was just as I thought, there was a hole big enough to admit the body of a man a few feet below the water-line, and the ship was sinking.

"There was nothing for it but to get out the remaining boats and, securing such provisions as we could, leave the ship to its fate, and meet our own with the monster, who undoubtedly awaited us. We had hardly time to lower away and save what few things we could get hold of when the good ship went down, and our crew were upon the broad ocean in three frail boats.

"My story ends here, for the whale was satisfied with his destruction of the ship and did not show himself again, and the third day after we were picked up by an English brig and landed at Liverpool.

"It is a good while ago, but I'll be bound that not one man that was aboard the good ship Mary Plummer will ever forget Captain Dick's whale."

THE NEW BELLEVUE STEREOSCOPE.—Few families now are ignorant of the stereoscope and its use. There are various kinds, but certainly we can honestly recommend as superior to all others the Bellevue. In the ordinary stereoscope the picture remains at a fixed distance from the lens, and therefore is not suited to the eyes of different individuals. In this instrument the picture can be changed to suit the eye of every person, so that the picture is brought to view with a beautiful and lifelike distinctness. Many have failed to appreciate the stereoscope for want of this very feature, simply because the focus as fixed was not right for their eyes. But we think no one can fail to admire the Bellevue Stereoscope; pictures viewed in it appear as if living. The instrument, when folded up, occupies a space only six inches by two, and one and a quarter inch high, and can be carried in the pocket without inconvenience The beauty and the low price—only $2—make the Belleve Stereoscope an article which cannot fail to be popular. They are supplied by Henry Craig, 335 Broadway.



OUR FANCY DRESS BALLS—MASQUERADE OF THE LIEDERKRANZ VOCAL SOCIE

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE FACTORY OF COLT'S AMERICAN ARMS COMPANY, AT HARTFORD, CONN., FEB. 5.—FROM A SKETCH BY J. B. RUSSELL, JR.

VOCAL SOCIETY, AT THE CITY ASSEMBLY ROOMS, NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 3.

THE WAR IN NORTH CAROLINA—CAPTURE OF THE GUNBOAT UNDERWRITER AT NEWBERNE BY THE REBELS, FEB. 1.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

A CHARLESTON (S. C.) paper claims that if Gen Bragg was near the gates of Heaven, and invited in, at once the assault he would fall back.

SAID a testy lawyer: "I believe the jury have been inoculated for stupidity."

"That may be," replied his opponent, "but the bar and the court are of the opinion that you had it the natural way."

PEOPLE often wonder at the most natural things in the world. "I say, Digby," said Quilp to an acquaintance, "you look sober this morning." "And for a very obvious reason," said Digby, "I am sober."

A POOR jilted blade says:

Woman's love is like Scotch snuff,
Too fine to keep up with that's enough.
Whereupon a darkey of more sense, as well as soul, responds:
Woman's lub like ingy-rubber,
It stretch de more you lub her.

BOOKS FOR CAMP AND HOME.—JAMES REDPATH announces a series of ten cent Books for the Camp, of a size and a higher character than the dime publications now in the market. They will contain from 60 to 112 pages, new type, good paper—"neatly bound in greenbacks." No. 1 is—"On Picket Duty and Other Tales," by Miss L. M. Alcott, whose Hospital Sketches has been one of the most popular books of the season. No. 2 is—"Chiselle, a Tale of the South," with five fine illustrations, by Jo—. The "Stories of the Balzac's best tales, translated for the publisher. No. 4 is—Guilvera's Travels in Lilliput. No. 5 is—Victor Hugo's eloquent description of the Battle of Waterloo. Each number is complete in itself and unabridged. Ten cents sent to the publisher will secure a specimen copy, prepaid. Clubs of one dime or camp editors—or fifty cents for the last above announced. No. 1 is out, and the five will be published before the close of February.—Boston Journal.

No. 1 and 2 out for sale by all newsdealers.
JAMES REDPATH, Publisher, Boston.

Sce New York Monthly

FOR DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL MATTER, and a host of other good things. Sent a 3 cent Currency Stamp and procure a copy. Office, 83 Nassau Street, New York.

Economy, Durability & Convenience

The Star No Chimney Burner

For Kerosene Oil Lamps. Patented Aug. 11, 1863. Gives a brilliant light, free from smoke or smell. It can be carried and handled freely without being extinguished. The latest and acknowledged the best invention of the kind. Warranted as represented. Sample sent, postp.id, for 38 cents. Agents wanted.

PETER ESSIG & CO., Manufacturers, No. 2 Platt St., N. Y.

How to tell Fortunes by Cards.—Sent to any address for 10 cents Address G. K. KNOWLTON, Utica, Mass. 438-41

Ten years the Business.

Patrons counted by thousands in every State of the Union.

A Premium for all!

Evans' New Enterprise, 1864, $500,000 worth of New Goods,

consisting of

Gold and Silver Watches, Jewelry, Vest and Guard Chains, Gold Pens, Pencils, Lockets, Medallions, Setts of Jewelry, &c., &c.,

together with a large line of goods especially adapted to the wants of our Soldiers, Army and Navy, to be sold in lots at One Dollar Each, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive. Premium Orders for above goods, sent to any address, on receipt of 10 cents.

Send your orders to

G. G. EVANS, Publisher, 630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

N. B. A classified Catalogue, of Books with Price Lists of Photograph Card Pictures and Albums, sent on receipt of 5 cents. Address, G. G. EVANS, Philadelphia, Pa.

ARMY BADGES,

Watches, Gold Pens and Cases. Jewelry of all kinds at reduced prices. Send for Circular. E. KEITH, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Do you want to get Married?

If so, don't fail to buy
"Courtship Made Easy"! a Book of 100 pages, Illustrated containing full instructions in the Art of "Psychologic Fascination," with Explanatory Charts enabling any person, of either sex to fascinate and win the undying love of any person they choose instantly thus rendering success in courtship certain. Sent by mail for 50 cents and two red stamps.
Address Dr. D. LUCE & Co.,
438-9 a Box 1559, Portland, Maine.

We are now offering on celebrated

GOLD PENS

AND EXTENSION

SILVER-PLATED

HOLDERS

At the following low prices for Cash:

No. 1. Magic Gold Pens and Holders per dozen	$ 5 00
No. 2. " " "	7 00
No. 1. Albertine Pens Gold Pens and Holders	8 00
No. 2. " " "	9 00
No. 1. Always Ready	11 00
No. 2. " "	15 00

These Pens and Holders are all Warranted and will retail from $2 to $5 each.

A deduction of 10 per cent. will be made on all sums of $30 and upwards. Our Pens and Holders have no Fancy Boxes, but containing One Dozen each, and are not sold in less quantities Sent by mail or express prepaid. Address

SALISBURY, BROS. & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

ARTILLERY BADGES.

Annexed is a fine simile design of our Newest Style ARTILLERY BADGE, which we send free to any address on receipt of price, with Cap and Regimental hardsomely Engraved thereon.

Solid Silver (without bottle) $1 50. Solid Silver, letters in Gold Relief (without bottle set) $2. Solid Gold (without bottles) $5.

Size, 20 Lines, 20 cts in cash, extra.

Also New Style CAVALRY BADGE, and every style Co. Pins and Corps Badges now in the Army.

Our Illustrated Catalogue sent free. Address

C. L. BALCH & CO.,
378 BROADWAY, N. Y.

NATIONAL BATTLE PINS.

McClellan, Grant, Rosecrans, Burnside, Gillmore, Burnside, Hooker, Sigel and Foster. All are the same pattern and size, only differing in buttle grounds and dates. Perfect photogram likeness in a high polished fine Gold. By enclosing One Dollar a single will be sent by mail

AGENTS WANTED in EVERY REGIMENT in the ARMY. The encouraged has the exclusive right of manufacture, and is sole owner of this beautiful keepsake and record of gallant acts. Also,

Cavalry and Artillery Pins!

The above cuts represent perfectly the Cavalry and Artillery pins we have been getting up in Silver to answer the urgent inquiries from day to day, from the Imperishable Patriot of the service so long neglected in appropriate badges. The Cavalry and Artillery Pins are Enamelled for the Divisions in

Red, White and Blue,

The outer rim highly polished as Silver can be had for the Name, Co. and Regiment. These Pins are Silver, and cost One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents, with the Name, Co. and Regiment engraved in them, or One Dollar without engraving. Engraving is desired beyond the Name, Co. and Regiment. Three Cents per Letter or Figures will be charged.

AGENTS will be furnished at Six Dollars per dozen. The Emblems are Solid, and the Pin about the thickness of a two shilling piece.

UNITED STATES NAVY

Monitor Pins.

The cut is a correct copy of the Monitor Pins got up in Silver. The name of the Monitor and purchaser of Pins will be Engraved upon the same and furnished for $1 00 each. The Pins are very beautiful and got up expressly by desire of many officers of the Navy. Same pins got up in Solid Gold.

Agents wanted. Every Monitor in the Navy represented.

LOUIS PHILIP & CO., 629 Broadway, N. Y.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS

THE VALUE OF HEALTH IS NEVER REALIZED till it is lost; but how is the precious gift to be retained? At any hour and day he may be numbered with the stricken, or in the wilderness; it may be drawn in with the air; it may be imbibed in a draught of water; it may enter the system through the lungs, pores of the stomach. But as we guard against whatever is dire, so may the peril of disease be guarded against. The virulent stricken repair and recover; still, as a rule, might resort a thief or an assassin less powerful or active than himself. The best protection against disease, whether generated by city filth, or decomposing vegetation and steamed water south and west, is HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS. They run the round of the whole earth, and all that nature requires to conquer malaria is sufficient remaining power. Like spring, in the neither hemisphere, summer, of malignant Remittent Fever or chill, progresses, and soon does no more of the inhabitants who has learn or even of the preventive properties of HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS preserves the article. It is a certified fact that not one of the individuals who took this precaution died the Fever. At last the preparation has been introduced into our hospitals, civil and military. It ought to have been the standard Tonic of the faculty years ago; but better late than never.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.,
DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 470 BROADWAY.

A Secret Worth Knowing.—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER without apples or cider. Price $1 25 by mail. Circular sent every where for 25 cents. Address
F. B. BOWER, Box 290, Boston, Mass.

Stereoscopic Views and Carte de Visites. 1,000 different sizes. Send for a Catalogue.
000 VICTOR DELSARTE, 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

Gold! Gold!

Full instructions in Ventriloquism, and how to win the undying love of the opposite sex, sent by mail to any person for Five Cents. Address
JAGGERS & HANDLEY, Calhoun, Ill

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers, Something New. The Traveller's Companion; or, Burglar's Proof Traveller's Lock. Samples sent by mail, 50 cents. Small 25 cts. Send stamp for Circular.
439-41 S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

$60 A MONTH! I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell our Patent Lightning Pencils, Pens, Oriental Burners, and 13 other articles. 15 Circulars free. Address J. WORTH, Bridgeport, Ct.

DIARIES FOR 1864.

From 25 cents to $2 each. All kinds of Writing Paper, Blank Books and Stationery. Cards, Chessmen, Backgammon Boards, Dominoes, Expense Books, Envelopes, Portfolios, Desks, Pocket Books, etc., etc. Please call or send for catalogue to
FRANCIS & LOUTREL, Stationers,
437-40 46 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Wonderful.—Wanted your address, so I may know where to send you something that will please you. Send stamp to B. & O., Gansevoort, Ill.

W. FORSYTH & CO.,

42 and 44 Nassau Street (adjoining the Post Office), offer for sale the following Magnificent List of

WATCHES, CHAINS, JEWELRY, ETC.

Valued at $300,000!

Each Article One Dollar, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

		EACH
150	Gold and Silver Watches	$15 to $100
200	Ladies' Gold Watches	15
500	Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	8 to 15
3000	Vest and Guard Chains	$5 to $10 00
3000	Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 to 10 00
3000	Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 to 6 00
3000	Cameo Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000	Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000	Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
2000	Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
3000	Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
2,000	Coral Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00
5000	Gents's Breast Pins	2 50 to 5 00
3000	Gents's Scarf Pins	2 50 to 5 00
2500	Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 4 00
2500	Sets of Breast Studs	2 50 to 4 00
2500	Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 4 00
5000	Pencil Cases	2 50 to 4 00
5000	Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 4 00
5000	Lockets	2 50 to 4 00
10000	Sets of Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00
10000	Gold Band Medal Hollow Bracelets	3 00 to 6 00
5000	Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Holders and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00

The articles in this stock of Jewelry are of the neatest and most fashionable styles. Certificates of all the various articles are put up in Sealed Envelopes and mixed, thus giving all a fair chance, and sent by mail for 25 cents each. On receipt of one of these Certificate, it is at your option to send OUR DOLLAR and take the article named in it, or send Five Certificates, $1 each, $1 sixty, $5; sixty-five, $10; one hundred $15; Certificates may be sent in one letter by order.

Correspondence promptly answered.

AGENTS wanted in every town and regiment. We allow them ten cents on every Certificate, provided their remittances amount to $1 at one time. Send for Inducements to those who buy largely. Send for Circular. Address

W. FORSYTH & CO.,
42 and 44 Nassau St., N. Y.

$100 a Month made by discharged soldiers and others with small tools. Don't fail to send for a free prize containing full particulars. Address MILLIKEN & SPENCER, Vermont Record office, Brandon, Vt. 437 40

Do You Want TO GET MARRIED ?

"Courtship Made Easy !"

A Book of 103 pages, Illustrated. Treating on

"PSYCHOMANCY."

Plainly showing how either sex can fascinate, win the undying love, and marry whoever they wish, irrespective of age or position. Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cents and two red stamps.
Address E. D. LUCE & CO.,
Box 1525,
439-43 Portland, Maine.

Broker's Stock of unredeemed goods for sale at 25 to 75 cents on the dollar, consisting of a variety of rich and valuable gold watches worth from 25 cents to $500 each. Any person sending $1 will receive by return mail a list containing what articles they will receive. Ten Certificates giving choice of articles worth from $1 00 to $20 for $3, 40 for $5, 50 for $10. Address
ANDERSON & CO.,
438-40 198 Sudbury St., Boston, Mass.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Gold Pens, etc., WORTH $500,000!

TO BE SOLD FOR ONE DOLLAR EACH, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send for a list and get a premium certificate, which will inform you what you are to have for a dollar. At the same time get circular, with full list of articles, and particulars; also, to see an agent in your town. Wanted in every regiment and town in the country. $50 per month paid.
Address H. LEROY & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

Fifty Methods of Employment.—Aris Secrets, Wayside Make Money, etc., etc. Sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address 439 90 W. FRITZELL, Baltimore, Md.

"Im going to Fight mit Sigel."

Look out for him. Sent free. Now out. Also mailed free for only Six Cents. Address 439-40 O. HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

Baker's Rheumatic Balm,

BAKER'S FEVER DOCTOR.
BAKER'S COUGH MIXTURE.
BAKER'S CURE OF ALL LIVER,
are four remedies which no family should be ever without. Price $1 per bottle each.
BAKER'S KIDNEY AND GRAVEL REMEDIES, are the most invaluable. Price $3.
Principal Depot—No. 154 TENTH STREET, near Seventh avenue. Remedies sent to any address on receipt of price.

$2,000 A YEAR can be made by the use of the Instruction I send for 30 cents.
Address SHELDON LEAVITT,
438-9 Grand Rapids, Mich.

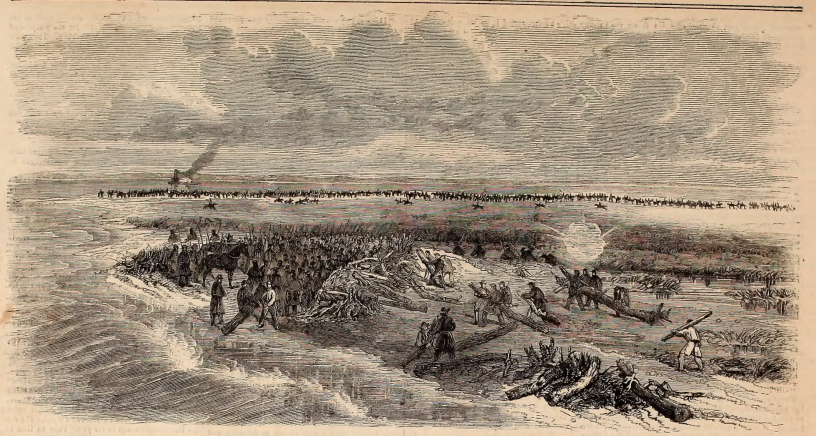
10,000 Agents Wanted

in all parts of the Army and Navy, for
THE NEW ARMY PACKAGE.
Circulars free. Call on or address
438-41 J. L. G. PIERPONT, 338 Broadway, N. Y.

Card Pictures, Photographs, &c

K. W. BENICZKY,

HAVING ENLARGED AND IMPROVED HIS GALLERY, No. 9 BROADWAY, Chambers Street, has increased facilities for making Card Pictures and other Photographs. AT THE LOWEST PRICES.
000



Straight Hair Made Wavy.

Without heating or burning
IRVING PATENT HAIR CRIMPERS.
For Sale at Variety Stores. 434-46

Billiard Balls!

Patent Compressed Ivory, 2¼ and 2⅜ ins., $10 per set; 2¾ Bagatelle Balls, $8 per set; 1¾ in. Bagatelles, $5; warranted for six months. WM. H. WELLING, Agent, 307 Canal Street, New York, sign of the Golden Elephant.

New Catalogue of Jewelry sent free.
Address J. HOS. CAFFERY & CO.,
438-41 Providence, R. I.

THE WAR IN TEXAS—ATTACK OF THE REBEL CAVALRY ON A DETACHMENT OF THE 13TH MAINE, AT MATAGORDA BAY.—FROM A SKETCH BY CAPT. AMOS G. GOODWIN, 13TH M. V.

IN THE HOSPITAL.

BY J. W. WATSON.

Down the long row of narrow beds
The fair-faced nurse in silence treads,
Laying her hand on aching heads,
And soothing with a touch.
And many a dim and sunken eye
Lights up to see her form go by,
And prays unto the Power on High
For more of such.

At one the tones of prayer are heard,
Another claims a kindly word,
While softly by a moaning third
She stands the minister to pain.
A bandage, drawn a thread too tight,
Needs but the touch of fingers light,
To make the lips that once were white
Now red again.

Beside a soldier's couch she stands,
And holds his nerveless, shrunken hands,
And were he lord of many lands
No brighter face could smile
Into the woful, wearied breast,
His pallid palms in silence prest,
Seeking to calm its sad unrest
By every wile.

He whispers in her lowered ear
Some words that thrill our hearts to hear:
"My mother! oh, my mother dear!
Fair lady, let me write."
She took from out his powerless hand
The pen, and wrote at his command
The words that here recorded stand,
A saddening sight.

"Oh, mother! mourn not for your son,
His wounds have been full nobly won,
But still his lifework is not done.
Dear mother, hear me tell
How strong my heart and limbs have grown;
To-morrow I shall walk alone,
And then once more you'll see your own;
I'm getting well!

"To-morrow I will turn my face
To thee, and to that much-loved place
Where all my inner life I trace;
My long deserted home.
The surgeon says, my arm no more
Can bridle hold, or broadsword draw;
That I must leave the clash of war,
And cease to roam!

"And so, dear mother, ill to me
Brings life anew, I know, to thee.
Well! though 'tis hard, so let it be;
And I will fondly try
To win away this woful pain,
And be once more a boy again,
God grant the trying not in vain.
And so—good-bye!"

The soldier closed his sunken eyes,
And murmured still his sad "Good-byes!"
Until the sound in murmuring dies.
The nurse, with folded scroll,
And tearful eyes, bent low her head;
The soul immortal swiftly fled,
To walt among the countless dead
For the long roll.

Then stoops the lady young and fair,
And severs one bright lock of hair,
And with a tear, enfolds it where
The mother's eye shall see.
She writes upon the tear-wet scroll,
"Thy son has reached his earthly goal,
God grant full mercy to his soul,
And peace to thee!"

To-morrow! and to-morrow still!
Oh, mother! how those words will fill
Your sadly aching heart, until
The last, long bugle sounds;
When on the day of grand review,
Among the loyal and the true,
Your boy steps forth to welcome you
To Heavenly grounds.

Clara's Grief at Charles's refusing Assistance.

CLARA;

A Story of Life in Africa.

By John B. Williams, M. D.

CHAPTER III.—EXPLANATIONS.

THE hot sun darted his rays on the young man's head, and made him suffer much. He had scarcely proceeded three miles before he was bathed in perspiration and could scarcely breathe, and was compelled to stay a moment to rest under the shade of a clump of trees. He threw himself on the ground, and pressing his two hands to his burning forehead, prayed to God that he might die. Suddenly he heard the gallop of two horses, he hurriedly arose, but had scarcely got on his feet when he saw Clara Roschoff appear in sight. She rode one horse and held another by the bridle.

"At last I have found you, Charles!" she cried, leaping, to the ground. "Heavens! how hot you are and how you must suffer! I have brought you a horse. Father knows nothing about it."

The Colonist's Generous Offer.

Norton thought she was merely insulting him, for he ascribed his present punishment to her. He picked up his heavy package of implements, and without uttering a word resumed his journey.

The young girl, very much confused, followed him with a sad step. She could no longer resist her feelings, but burst into sobs.

"Charles," she cried, "what have I done that you should treat me thus?"

He looked at her with an air of stupefaction as she stood in the middle of the road, with her hands joined together and with the tears streaming down her cheeks. In spite of his anger, he was moved.

"I really cannot understand your grief, Clara," said he. "It seems to me that it should be in my place to ask you what I have done that you always try to render my melancholy position more odious to me."

"I!" cried Clara, in a tone of astonishment. "Oh, Charles, how can you say that? I, who would give all the world to save you a single annoyance."

"Really," he replied, in a tone of bitterness, "I do not know what you mean. Was it not you who excited your father's anger against me, on account of what passed between us a little while ago?"

"Oh, heavens!" cried the poor girl, joining her hands together, "can you believe me so wicked? I assure you that I did not say a single word to my father. It was Jacob, who no doubt overheard us. I beseech you to believe me, Charles. It was really not I——"

Her tears interrupted her. She fell on the grass and sobbed bitterly. This time, in spite of appearances, Norton felt that she told the truth. He regretted his unjust reproaches. He threw the package of implements on the ground, and kneeling by Clara's side, who still continued to weep, he did his best to console her. A few words which escaped her lips at last revealed the whole truth to the young American.

"Come, Clara," said he, "calm yourself. I see that I was wrong to regard you as my enemy."

"I, your enemy!" she cried. "I, who think only of you. And yet how you treat me! Every time that I come near you or address a word to you, you receive me so harshly. I know that I am not so handsome as the girls of your country, that I have neither their mind nor education; but it is not my fault, and you will never find any one that loves you more than I do."

Ashamed of the confession that had escaped her lips, poor Clara hid her face between her hands and wept.

Charles sat beside her and gently removed the young girl's hands, and by a motion full of gratitude and tenderness carried them to his lips. Clara blushed and then turned pale. She timidly glanced at the young man, and then let her head fall on his shoulder.

"Dear Clara, how unjust I have been towards you!" said the young American, in an affectionate tone.

"Then you do not hate me as I thought?" she murmured.

"Hate you! Certainly not; on the contrary, I love you with all my heart."

"As much as Susan?" said she, with anxiety, which she vainly endeavored to conceal under a smile.

"Much more than Susan."

"Really?"

"On my honor."

"Oh, how happy I am!" she cried.

There was something, however, wanting to render her happiness complete. Although unaccustomed to penetrate the secrets of the heart, she felt confusedly, and by a sort of instinct, the difference between the affection that Charles showed and the love that she experienced for him. At that moment, it is true, the young American's heart, so long isolated and chilled, overflowed with gratitude and affection, but his feeling for Clara was no stronger than this. If ideas of love and marriage came into his mind it was only as a dream, the realization of which he never thought about. His hesitation could not be attributed to interest or ambition. The fortune of Clara's father was very considerable compared to that of Charles, who possessed nothing in the world. His misfortunes, however, had given Norton the habit of reflecting, and he seriously reviewed his situation. At that moment he asked himself if he were capable of renouncing America for ever, and of loving Clara so much that he should never repent of his marriage with her.

Clara fancied that the young man's silence proceeded from indifference, and she began to weep again. Perceiving that she misunderstood his feelings with respect to herself, Charles opened his whole heart to her. The poor girl thanked him for his frankness with so much tenderness that Norton's eyes filled with tears. At the moment that he was about to reply to her the sound of horses' feet galloping in the distance was heard. Clara concealed herself behind a bush, but she had not time to remove the two horses that she had brought with her. In a few moments three Hottentots arrived at the spot on horseback. One of them was Jacob Oubana. He approached the young American.

"What do you want?" said Norton.

"The master discovered that two horses were missing," said the Hottentot, in an insolent tone. "He thought that you might have taken them with you, in spite of his having forbidden it. He sent me and my comrades to take them back to Weizberg."

"There they are," replied Charles, pointing to them. "I did not mount either of them."

"What did you take them for, then?" said Jacob, proud of his mission.

Norton turned abruptly round; the Hottentot made a bound backwards.

"Scoundrel!" cried the young American, his eyes sparkling with rage. "Who gave you the right to question me? Take them and begone."

The Hottentots took the two horses and started off. As soon as they had disappeared, Clara came from her hiding-place.

"What shall we do now?" said she, in an anxious tone.

"My dear Clara, there is only one course for us to follow," replied Charles; "you to return leisurely to Weizberg, and for me to continue my journey on to Om-Steny."

"Under this burning sun and burdened as you are? It will kill you," she replied.

"I am stronger than you think," he returned, affecting a gaiety he did not feel. Adieu, dear Clara; I am happy that we have had an explanation, and I love you with all my heart."

"I will accompany you to Om-Steny," said Clara, rising up. "It was I who caused you this cruel punishment, and I will partake of it."

It was in vain that Charles scolded and supplicated, the young girl persisted in her resolution. Norton was at last compelled to allow her to walk by his side. By-and-bye she wanted to take a portion of the implements. This, however, he would not allow.

Although Roschoff's dwelling was situated in the middle of a wood, there was but little shade between Weizberg and Om-Steny. In spite of the suffering occasioned by the burning sun, the two young people walked along with a sort of gaiety. Charles did his best to amuse poor Clara, whose devotion touched him deeply. As for Clara, she laughed and cried by turns. Love, and perhaps suffering, had completely changed her. The poor girl betrayed the secret thoughts of her heart by her words and touching attentions, and Norton was moved to his very soul. He frequently seized the young girl's hand, pressed it in his, and conveyed it to his lips. This mute token of affection and gratitude filled her heart with happiness.

In spite of the diligence they used, they did not reach Weizberg until half-past seven. Roschoff, whose anger had time to be appeased, already regretted the punishment he had inflicted on the young American. Pride prevented him from confessing his remorse, but he vented his bad temper on Jacob. The absence of his daughter at supper rendered the Hollander very uneasy.

A servant at last announced the fact that Norton was approaching. Roschoff was very much surprised to find his daughter Clara in company with the young American, and to perceive that her limbs trembled and that her face gave evidence of great fatigue.

"Do not scold Charles," said she to her father, who met her in the hall. "It was I who delayed him. I will tell you all."

She fell into a seat and fainted.

In spite of his apathetic character and violent temper, Roschoff loved his daughter. Clara's condition made him forget all about Norton. Perhaps he was not sorry to find a pretext which prevented him from taking any notice of Charles's delay. When Miss Roschoff was restored to consciousness she was conveyed to her chamber and put to bed. She awoke the next morning in a violent fever, brought about in all probability more by her excited feelings than by the heat and fatigue. In spite of the delirium that seized her, the poor girl was able to tell her father all that had occurred. But before doing so she made him swear on the Bible that he would not scold Charles. In her delirium, which happily lasted only two days, she repeated every moment—

"Father, do not scold Charles, it was I who was the cause of all."

Thanks to the girl's robust constitution, her illness did not last long. Norton was less fortunate. He had been imprudent enough to drink several glasses of cold water when he returned to Weizberg. He fell seriously ill.

Tormented by his daughter and yielding also to secret remorse, Roschoff called in the nearest physician. It was necessary to send ninety miles for him. After having dined and examined the invalid, the disciple of Esculapius mounted his horse and shook his head in a significant manner. Time, however, proved that the doctor's sinister forbodings were not to be realised. Norton suddenly got better at the moment that everybody believed him dying. The first person he recognised when he recovered his consciousness was Clara, seated by his bedside. In his delirium the invalid had spoken of America. He had also repeated continually the name of a favorite sister of his who had died quiet young, and whose name was Sarah.

Clara fancied this Sarah was the young girl he loved. This thought was almost a deathblow to to the poor girl. When Norton, touched by her devotion, gratefully thanked her, she smiled sadly, and turned away her head to hide her tears.

Charles was soon able to get up and take short walks. One day he was seated under the shade of a tree in the garden, when Roschoff came and sat down by his side. The colonist seemed to be very much embarrassed. Ten times he opened his lips to commence a conversation, and ten times he closed them again without uttering a word.

"Charles," said he at last, "I think the climate of our colony is not good for you. And then you are not fitted for a servant. This life will kill you sooner or later. You must return to your own country."

"America is a long distance off," replied Charles, "and the voyage is very expensive."

"That is true," replied Roschoff, "but I will furnish you the means to reach your country. When you leave Weizberg I will make you a present of a hundred head of cattle. At Grahamtown or Beaufort you can sell them for three thousand rix-dollars. With this sum you can pay your passage and live in America until you can find some employment."

Charles cast his eyes to the ground; he guessed the real motive which made Roschoff urge his departure.

"I thank you for your generous proposition, but it is my duty to inform you that I have no resources in America. It will probably be impossible for me ever to repay you the money you offer me."

"Never mind," replied Roschoff; "you can take as much as you like. After all, I shall only lose three thousand rix-dollars. It is agreed, then?"

"When shall I leave?" asked Norton, his mind so agitated by contradictory feelings that he did not know whether to rejoice or be sorry at Roschoff's wish.

"In a few days. As soon as you are well enough—next week for instance."

While the young man was reflecting silently a Hottentot approached.

"Mynheer Bergiter has just arrived, and asks to see you," said the Hottentot to Roschoff.

Happy at having made the proposition, which had cost him so much, Roschoff hastened to follow the servant. Norton was left alone.

Until then he had longed for the time to come when he could return to America. Now, when he had the means to realise his desire, he felt oppressed by vague melancholy. Whilst he sat there with his forehead leaning against the trunk of the tree, Clara's voice made him start. The young girl approached slowly and sat down by his side.

CHAPTER IV.—THE DUEL—CONCLUSION.

WHEN Charles saw Clara's gentle and affectionate glance, he experienced a feeling of relief. He took the young girl's hand and pressed it to his lips in a manner which showed his gratitude and tenderness. She blushed and sighed.

"Do you know what your father has proposed to me, Clara?" said he.

"Yes," she replied, "he mentioned it to me yesterday evening. So you are about to return to America?"

"Probably!" he returned, stifling a sigh.

"You must be very happy?"

He made no reply.

"You will see your parents again?"

"I have none."

"Your friends."

"A ruined man possesses none."

"You will make a fortune; father told you he would give you two hundred head of cattle, did he not!"

"Yes—that is to say—one hundred," replied Charles mechanically, at the same time earnestly regarding Clara, and thinking of something else beside the cattle offered him by Roschoff.

"He promised me it should be two hundred," murmured the young girl. "But I can lend you some money, Charles. I have eight thousand rix-dollars which I received from my mother. I will give them to you."

He made a gesture of refusal.

"Of what use is this to me?" she replied. "You will return it to me when you have made a fortune. This will compel you to think of me sometimes, even when you have married her whom you love."

"Who is that?" said the young man very much surprised.

"Miss Sarah."

"Sarah!"

"She whom you mentioned in your delirium."

Norton fixed his eyes on the young girl. He perceived that her eyes were filled with tears. He seized her hand.

"Why do you weep?" he asked.

"I do not weep," she returned, turning away her head.

Large tears rolled down the poor girl's cheeks, which she furtively dried.

"So," said Charles, "you consent to give me your fortune that I may return to America, and marry her whom I love?"

"Yes, Charles, most willingly."

"But your father will not consent to it."

"When he finds it out you will be far away."

"Then he will scold you."

"What matters that?"

"Suppose if you were to marry?" said Norton.

"I shall not marry."

"Never?"

"Never!" she repeated in a tone of the strongest conviction.

The poor girl had reached the limit of her strength. She bit her lips to prevent her from crying out. Tears coursed each other down her cheeks. Charles fell on his knees before her.

"Clara," said he in a gentle tone, "I love no one in America; no one is waiting for me there; Sarah is the name of a dearly loved sister who died years ago. I should like to remain here. I love a young girl in this country, and whom I wish to marry."

"Susan?" asked Clara, her bosom heaving, for her heart felt the tenderness vibrating in Norton's voice.

"No, Clara, I have never been Susan's lover. She whom I love, and whom I shall love for ever, is you, Clara. You appeared a short time ago to desire that I should be happy. That now depends on you alone. Will you be my beloved wife?"

The poor girl threw her arms around the young American's neck. She still doubted. She removed Charles's head away to look into his eyes. It was evident that the expression of Norton's face completely reassured her, for her anxious look entirely disappeared.

"How happy I am!" she murmured. "Oh! if my poor mother were only here! You really love me, Charles?"

"Yes; I love you with all my heart and soul. And you——"

"You know I love you. If you had gone away, Charles, I must have died of grief. Oh! Charles, I love you so much, and I will make you so happy that you shall never long for your country again."

A scornful laugh was heard close by them. They turned their heads and perceived Seroas Bergiter. Although he still continued it, it could easily be perceived that he was furious.

"Well, dancing-master," said he, in an insolent tone, "is it customary in your country for men to make love on their knees? Do you know you look awfully soft in that position."

"Bergiter!" replied Charles, his eyes sparkling with anger, "it is a custom in my country to chastise insolence."

"Do you mean that for an insult?"

"As you like to take it."

Clara had disappeared; Bergiter, stifling with anger and rage, only sought for a pretext to quarrel. He first of all gave utterance to a torrent of insults too gross for us to repeat. From insults he passed to threats, and from threats he was nearly arriving to blows, when his hand was stayed by Roschoff, who had made his appearance, followed by his daughter and five or six servants. While Clara spoke to Norton, Roschoff endeavored to calm his neighbor, and reproached him for his violence to an invalid. Carried away by anger and jealousy, Bergiter received the remarks of the master of Weizberg with a very bad grace.

"This is all your fault," said he to the old man. "Why do you harbor such vagabonds? Although your hair is white, you are nothing better than an old fool!"

"That's what you say, is it?" replied Roschoff; "you want to be master here. Well, then, I begin by telling you that I consent to the marriage of my daughter to Charles. Now, if you are not satisfied, remember that, old as I am, I am able to fire a musket as well if not better than you."

Clara threw her arms around her father's neck, and Charles seized the old man's hand and pressed it affectionately. But Adam, carried away by his anger, pushed them on one side for the purpose of continuing his quarrel with Bergiter. They both carried their muskets to their shoulders when Norton interposed.

"If there is shooting to be done it is I who am concerned," said he, "and as I have been insulted I have the choice of weapons."

"Stuff and nonsense," interrupted Bergiter. "We want none of your American practices here. We are at the Cape, and you must fight with the musket as we do."

"Very well," said Norton; "lend me your musket, Mynheer Roschoff."

After a long debate between the young American and the old colonist, the latter was obliged to yield.

"Kill that rascal," said he to Norton, "and Clara shall be yours as sure as my name is Adam Roschoff."

"We will take our places two hundred yards distant," said Bergiter; "we will then advance and each shall fire when he pleases."

"No," cried Roschoff. "I know Bergiter—if you only give him time to take aim he is the best shot in the country. We must equalise the chances."

"Let us take our places fifty yards distant, with our guns at our feet. We will fire at a given signal. He will be most fortunate who fires the quickest and takes the surest aim."

It was Bergiter's turn to object.

"And supposing that we should both be killed?"

"So much the worse for us."

"I won't agree to those conditions," said the Hollander.

"Well, then, let us say a hundred yards."

After another debate Bergiter finished by agreeing to this last arrangement. Whilst he was loading his gun, and Roschoff was doing the same thing for Norton, the young American approached Clara.

"My beloved Clara," said he, "I do not know what Providence has in reserve for me. If I die my last thoughts will be for you. Pray to God to save me, for I have never desired to live so much as at this moment. God bless you, darling!"

She threw herself weeping in his arms. Her father separated them.

"You will make his arm tremble," cried the old man. "If you love him, remain perfectly quiet. He needs all his coolness."

While leading Charles to his place the old man gave him a few words of advice. The hundred yards were measured off. Bergiter whistled. Charles had forgotten his illness and walked with a firm step.

At last Roschoff gave the signal by throwing his hat in the air. Norton fired first and struck the young Hollander in the shoulder. The involuntary movement the latter made when he received the ball deranged his aim. Instead of hitting Charles full in the chest, which he would undoubtedly have done had it not been for this accident, Bergiter's bullet only grazed Norton's forehead.

"Since there has been no result we must try again," said Norton.

"The deuce take me if I do," replied the Hollander. "I am not such a fool as to risk my life a second time for a girl who cares nothing about me. You may marry her if you like, for aught I care."

While he spoke he removed his coat. It was then perceived that he was wounded. Clara ran to him. He repulsed her in a brutal manner at first, but she returned to the charge. He finished by allowing her to staunch the wound, which was not at all dangerous.

Dissatisfied and humiliated, the young colonist wished immediately to return home, and it was with the greatest difficulty that they could persuade him to remain at Weizberg. Bergiter was not really at heart a bad man, and he soon became reconciled. He even witnessed the marriage ceremony between Charles and Clara, which took place a few weeks afterwards. Every now and then he visited them at Weizberg; still he did not like Roschoff to jest with him as to his matrimonial prospects. They were, however, good friends, and often hunted together.

Adam Roschoff, still robust and vigorous, has now four grandchildren. He tells everybody who will listen to him that his son-in-law, Norton, is the smartest man in the colony, and if the English Government had their senses about them they would immediately appoint him Governor of the Cape of Good Hope. Clara is of the same opinion. They also try to persuade Norton, but he is contented to live happily and tranquilly with his wife and children.

A GREAT WATERFALL.—A detachment of troops, recently scouting in the valley of the Snake or Lewis fork of the Columbia, discovered a waterfall which is doubtless justly entitled to the distinction of being called the greatest in the world. The entire volume of Snake river pours over a sheer precipice, 198 feet high—38 feet higher than Niagara. Snake river is full as large as the Niagara, and the cascade is in one solid sheet or body. The locality of this immense waterfall is near the point heretofore designated as the Great Shoshone, or Salmon Falls of that river, but they have always been enveloped in mystery. Almost a dozen years ago the writer passed along the Snake river road. For two days we heard the roaring of these falls, but learned no more respecting them than if they had been in the moon. It was said that there were a series of falls and rapids, making a descent of 700 feet in seven miles, and the sound gave color to the report. For hundreds of miles across that great plain, Snake river flows through a canon, with vertical walls, hundreds of feet high. It is only at long intervals that salient points are found by which the river can be reached. The road crosses from point to point of the bends, only approaching close to the river where there is a chance to descend for water. From these facts very few, if any, of the tens of thousands of adventurers who have crossed the plains ever looked upon the Great Falls. The late discoverers report, besides the main cataract, many other of less height, varying from 20 to 50 feet each, near by. Some day they will be visited by the tourist and pleasure-seeker, and be looked upon as frequently and familiarly as Niagara is to day; and it will be admitted that, with the stupendous grandeur of their surroundings, they are as far beyond Niagara as Niagara now excels the balance of the world.

IN MEMORIAM

Of C. K., Killed 17th October—Charleston.

BY ADA VROOMAN.

Oh, fair October! not for me
Your golden glories now are born,
Tear-blinded eyes can never see
The beauty of the night and morn.

In rain for me the misty shine
Of autumn sunlight softly falls,
Across the day I thought divine—
In vain the far-off brooklet calls.

I only think of mournful rains
That beat upon a brave young head—
I only dream of battle pains,
And fields of conquest strewn with dead.

Through all the night I see the gleam—
The sunpinioned light of dying eyes,
And in a wild and broken dream
See gory fields and wrathful skies.

Once more with tears I kneel beside
A bleeding form, that, lying low,
Shall never more to battle ride,
Nor smile a bold and traitrous foe.

Once more I take a mute farewell
From sad pale lips, that never more
Shall tale of love or sorrow tell,
This side the near and shining shore.

Oh, lamented martyr! thou shalt be
A potent presence through the years:
In hours of gloom, the thought of thee
Shall quell all craven doubts and fears!

The early violets o'er thy grave
Shall whisper low thy precious name;
And weep bright tears, that one so brave
Should have no grander requiem.

Yet in the hearts of those who mourn
Thy vanished presence, there shall be Perpetual grief though fame adorn,
And daily tears at thoughts of thee.

THE CONSEQUENCES OF A BALL.

A FEW weeks ago I had a severe attack of Russomania. Ruffalo, my native town, had decided to my eyes into a most prosaic, out-of-the-way place to be born in, and I would willingly have exchanged it with New Archangel, for even the very Aleutians were, in my delusion, converted into a sturdy, handsome and civilised portion of the community. I christened a young pup I had Alexis Schroff, had my moustache trimmed à la Nicholas, and procured a Russian grammar. I spent three sleepless nights pondering over the thirty and odd signs of the alphabet, but what an intense satisfaction I experienced when, by immense labor, permutations and combinations of letters, I was able to scribble some nondescript writing on every available piece of paper in our office. I used to leave them slily behind me on my desk, or dropped them on the floor, till a friend would cry "Old fellow, what the deuce is this?" "What?" "Well, this confounded writing; is it phonography?" "Oh, no," would I answer, swelling all over, "it is Russian!" and all the fellows stared at me. I even went so far as to give a quarter to an old Dane, whom I had several times opening and shutting carriages at Niblo's door, to write me a Russian letter, and you may judge of the sensation it created among our fellow wags, it was left on my desk by the messenger. From that day my reputation as a linguist was established. When the Russian fleet anchored in our waters my satisfaction was unbounded. I went on board of every ship, shook every sailor by the hand, and made myself perfectly ridiculous with conversing. Should one of the Muscovite tars come ashore, I pounced upon him, dragged him to the nearest saloon and treated him to arrack, bits of candles and charlotte russe. I witnessed with the greatest enthusiasm all the pageantry of the Russian reception, and shouted most lustily at the barouches containing the admiral and his officers. I was certain before I would have attracted by my conduct the attention of everybody, and passed—with some reason—for a lunatic; but all New York seemed to be infected with the same mania, and I merely appeared to be a little warmer-hearted than the common run of the martyrs. One morning Graham arose in the full set of excitement; the invitations for the great Russian ball were to be limited to two thousand. Who should go, and who should be left upon shore, that was the question. The amount of fawning, low-scraping, caressing, petting and bullying done at the time to procure an invitation, defies all kind of calculation.

Mr. Jonathan Shoddy, my employer, was one of the privileged ones, and although a justice in his house, I coolly told my fellow-clerks that I also should go to the ball. How it was to be accomplished, I still knew not, but go I must, and go I would. From the morning I took that resolution it impressed itself on my mind as a settled thing altogether, and I very nearly considered myself as invited. I walked Broadway with a firmer step than before, and looked with pity on the poor passers-by whom I knew would not be there. The string of equipages stationed in front of Tiffany's, and the bevy of handsome women literally jamming his store, filled me with a feeling of intense jubilation. "Buy away, my darlings," said I to myself, "make yourselves very handsome, for John Mullins will be there to look at you, and who knows, he may perhaps pick up that handsome lady and you are bargaining for, and clasp it himself on your snowy wrist; and you, also, my beautiful dark-eyed fairy, will you not allow John Mullins to cool your heated forehead with that handsome fan of yours? or languidly ask him to throw on your round-moulded shoulders that gauzy silken scarf?" And I chuckled so audibly that an old gentleman who was just passing looked daggers at me, murmuring something which sounded very much like impertinence.

That very day, while dining in Hudson street on a veal pie and an apple tart, I hit on the plan which was to be my "open Sesame." I grew so elated, vagantly exhilarated that I astonished the waiter by ordering six extra cups of mocha and a "chaser safe" Before going home I bought a second-hand violin-case, and went to bed the happiest mortal in creation. My dreams that night were exclusively Russian. I dreamed that I danced the Tartar quadrille, dressed in full Cossack uniform, with the Empress of all the Russias for partner, and Admiral Lisovski and Queen Pomare for vis-à-vis. All the assembly had their eyes fixed on me, and the dance being ended to everybody's satisfaction, the Empress gracefully allowed me to kiss her hand and presented me with the cross of the Knight of St. Vladimir and a plantation on the Amoor. Another slide put by Morpheus in his magic lantern and I was sitting at a princely banquet. We feasted on raw lard and lighted composites, and drank cod liver oil in silver tankards, while, by way of fashionable diversion, fifty wives of nobles were betted each course knocked to the amount of fifty lashes a piece. One more slide and I was travelling in a sleigh drawn by a dozen reindeer. The pace was terrific, and it seemed to me that the driver took every minute more gigantic proportions. We crossed a vast frozen plain, and suddenly, seven and as far as my eyes could reach stretched the desolate steppes. I shouted to the driver to stop, but he whipped his horses, laughing most horribly, and the gait was increased. A yelling without in my ear that I was going to the Jungouces, to work in the mines. I attempted to scream and awoke. Menschikoff (my dog) was lying on my chest.

I passed the whole of the day in the greatest trepidation, of course. I forgot the office. I bestowed the utmost care on my toilet, and at the last stroke of six I sallied forth in irreproachable black, a pair of white kids in my pocket and my violin-case in my hand. I felt confident that when the first corner of 14th street till the musicians began to fall in by twos and threes. After a few minutes of intense excitement I followed a gentleman who carried a most extraordinary brass instrument, and a few minutes later I was fairly inside the building. I threw my violin-case in the first available corner, and thanks to my acquaintance with the ballroom, laughing in my sleeve at my cunning introduction. I knew no one there, but to do the genteel thing I posted the room up and down, and nodded familiarly at several ladies and gentlemen, without giving them a chance to make out who I was. After a while the room was pretty well crowded, and I was able to retire near a bow-window, and from there enjoy the spectacle

Should you expect a description of the ball you will be deceived. You have all seen and admired the illustrations of it given in Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, and you will not believe that anything to what he described to you so vividly. It might have been an hour or more wrapped in solitary bliss at it did, as my sight fell on, when I was joined by a foreign-looking gentleman, with wonderfully curled whiskers and a bit of blue ribbon at his button-hole. We exchanged some common-place remarks on the ball, the music, and how I came to pass, but we finally exchanged cards, and I read with pride and delight the name of Count Alexander Ivanovitch Ivanoff, and his address, the little bit of pasteboard in the most conspicuous corner of my looking-glass, when the count offered to present me to his countrymen, the Princess Vanoska. I accepted, with a face absolutely beaming with gratitude, and a few steps brought us before the princess, who, with a grand air, only bowed most respectfully, while the count was introducing me as "a friend of his."

The princess was certainly very beautiful, not over twenty-five years of age, and with deep, dark eyes, fringed with long, soft eyelashes. She must have had a great affection for low dresses, and wished the whole world to participate in them, her bust was so fair, and her arm so plump and white, that I could hardly find fault with it. She certainly did not look as much at ease with strange ladies, but I attributed it to her foreign extraction. She was very polite and amiable, and invited me to call on her husband, who was desirous to make my acquaintance, and to see me, the count was such a good and old friend of hers." Once she spoke two or three words to my companion in Russian, and I thought that Russian sounded very much like Irish, but that was my ignorance, of course. Another gentleman whisked up and begged the princess having led the princess to a waltz, I remained alone with the count.

"My dear Mr. Mullins," he said, in a most offhand manner, "you hardly would believe what a charming creature is the princess." I recriminated, pouring at once a flood of eulogies and compliments, but he stopped me by waving his hand and smiling goodnaturedly

"She is," said he, "one of the richest women in Russia, possesses mines of gold, and tar and fisheries on the Volga, but for all that the best-humored and most unpretending of all fair ones. You shall judge for yourself. I have called at all your rooms to-morrow night, and we shall go together to pay our respects in Union square.

I was in the seventh heaven; I could have hugged the count in my arms, but I merely proffered my thanks, and an appointment was made for the next evening at eight o'clock. The rest of the evening was enchanted for me. The count had fairly intoxicated me with his advances and his compliments, and when after supper I made bold to hand the princess to her carriage, I was so intrinsically happy that I threw a dollar to a porter who had taken off his hat to me.

The count was punctual to a minute, and arm in arm we directed our steps to Union square. The princess was alone with the curly-whiskered gentleman of the ball, and received me most graciously. At first I felt a little shy and bashful, but her open manners soon put me at ease, and I spent a most delightful evening.

From that day I saw a good deal of the count, and insensibly fell in love with the princess. I went to most expensive tailors, and increased my bill at the tailor's and haberdasher's to an alarming extent. I once intimated to the count that his lady friend's dress maker would be a second-hand violin-case, and went to bed the happiest mortal in creation. My dreams that night were exclusively Russian. I dreamed that I danced the Tartar quadrille, dressed in full Cossack uniform, with the Empress of all the Russias for partner, and Admiral Lisovski and Queen Pomare for vis-à-vis. All the assembly had their eyes fixed on me, and the dance being ended to everybody's satisfaction, the Empress gracefully allowed me to kiss her hand and presented me with the cross of the Knight of St. Vladimir and a plantation on the Amoor. Another slide put by Morpheus in his magic lantern and I was sitting at a princely banquet. We feasted on raw lard and lighted composites, and drank cod liver oil in silver tankards, while, by way of fashionable diversion, fifty wives of nobles were betted each course knocked to the amount of fifty lashes a piece. One more slide and I was travelling in a sleigh drawn by a dozen reindeer. The pace was terrific, and it seemed to me that the driver took every minute more gigantic proportions. We crossed a vast frozen plain, and suddenly, seven and as far as my eyes could reach stretched the desolate steppes. I shouted to the driver to stop, but he whipped his horses, laughing most horribly, and the gait was increased. A yelling without in my ear that I was going to the Jungouces, to work in the mines. I attempted to scream and awoke. Menschikoff (my dog) was lying on my chest.

I passed the whole of the day in the greatest trepidation, of course. I forgot the office. I bestowed the utmost care on my toilet, and at the last stroke of six I sallied forth in irreproachable black, a pair of white kids in my pocket and my violin-case in my hand. I felt confident that when the first corner of 14th street till the musicians began to fall in by twos and threes. After a few minutes of intense excitement I followed a gentleman who carried a most extraordinary brass instrument, and a few minutes later I was fairly inside the building. I threw my violin-case in the first available corner, and thanks to my acquaintance with the ballroom, laughing in my sleeve at my cunning introduction. I knew no one there, but to do the genteel thing I posted the room up and down, and nodded familiarly at several ladies and gentlemen, without giving them a chance to make out who I was. After a while the room was pretty well crowded, and I was able to retire near a bow-window, and from there enjoy the spectacle

Should you expect a description of the ball you will be deceived. You have all seen and admired the illustrations of it given in Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, and you will not believe that anything to what he described to you so vividly. It might have been an hour or more wrapped in solitary bliss at it did, as my sight fell on, when I was joined by a foreign-looking gentleman, with wonderfully curled whiskers and a bit of blue ribbon at his button-hole. We exchanged some common-place remarks on the ball, the music, and how I came to pass, but we finally exchanged cards, and I read with pride and delight the name of Count Alexander Ivanovitch Ivanoff, and his address, the little bit of pasteboard in the most conspicuous corner of my looking-glass, when the count offered to present me to his countrymen, the Princess Vanoska. I accepted, with a face absolutely beaming with gratitude, and a few steps brought us before the princess, who, with a grand air, only bowed most respectfully, while the count was introducing me as "a friend of his."

The princess was certainly very beautiful, not over twenty-five years of age, and with deep, dark eyes, fringed with long, soft eyelashes. She must have had a great affection for low dresses, and wished the whole world to participate in them, her bust was so fair, and her arm so plump and white, that I could hardly find fault with it. She certainly did not look as much at ease with strange ladies, but I attributed it to her foreign extraction. She was very polite and amiable, and invited me to call on her husband, who was desirous to make my acquaintance, and to see me, the count was such a good and old friend of hers." Once she spoke two or three words to my companion in Russian, and I thought that Russian sounded very much like Irish, but that was my ignorance, of course. Another gentleman whisked up and begged the princess having led the princess to a waltz, I remained alone with the count.

"My dear Mr. Mullins," he said, in a most offhand manner, "you hardly would believe what a charming creature is the princess." I recriminated, pouring at once a flood of eulogies and compliments, but he stopped me by waving his hand and smiling goodnaturedly

"She is," said he, "one of the richest women in Russia, possesses mines of gold, and tar and fisheries on the Volga, but for all that the best-humored and most unpretending of all fair ones. You shall judge for yourself. I have called at all your rooms to-morrow night, and we shall go together to pay our respects in Union square.

I was in the seventh heaven; I could have hugged the count in my arms, but I merely proffered my thanks, and an appointment was made for the next evening at eight o'clock. The rest of the evening was enchanted for me. The count had fairly intoxicated me with his advances and his compliments, and when after supper I made bold to hand the princess to her carriage, I was so intrinsically happy that I threw a dollar to a porter who had taken off his hat to me.

The count was punctual to a minute, and arm in arm we directed our steps to Union square. The princess was alone with the curly-whiskered gentleman of the ball, and received me most graciously. At first I felt a little shy and bashful, but her open manners soon put me at ease, and I spent a most delightful evening.

From that day I saw a good deal of the count, and insensibly fell in love with the princess. I went to most expensive tailors, and increased my bill at the tailor's and haberdasher's to an alarming extent. I once intimated to the count that his lady friend's dress maker would be a second-hand violin-case, and went to bed the happiest mortal in creation. My dreams that night were exclusively Russian. I dreamed that I danced the Tartar quadrille, dressed in full Cossack uniform, with the Empress of all the Russias for partner, and Admiral Lisovski and Queen Pomare for vis-à-vis. All the assembly had their eyes fixed on me, and the dance being ended to everybody's satisfaction, the Empress gracefully allowed me to kiss her hand and presented me with the cross of the Knight of St. Vladimir and a plantation on the Amoor. Another slide put by Morpheus in his magic lantern and I was sitting at a princely banquet. We feasted on raw lard and lighted composites, and drank cod liver oil in silver tankards, while, by way of fashionable diversion, fifty wives of nobles were betted each course knocked to the amount of fifty lashes a piece. One more slide and I was travelling in a sleigh drawn by a dozen reindeer. The pace was terrific, and it seemed to me that the driver took every minute more gigantic proportions. We crossed a vast frozen plain, and suddenly, seven and as far as my eyes could reach stretched the desolate steppes. I shouted to the driver to stop, but he whipped his horses, laughing most horribly, and the gait was increased. A yelling without in my ear that I was going to the Jungouces, to work in the mines. I attempted to scream and awoke. Menschikoff (my dog) was lying on my chest.

I passed the whole of the day in the greatest trepidation, of course. I forgot the office. I bestowed the utmost care on my toilet, and at the last stroke of six I sallied forth in irreproachable black, a pair of white kids in my pocket and my violin-case in my hand. I felt confident that when the first corner of 14th street till the musicians began to fall in by twos and threes. After a few minutes of intense excitement I followed a gentleman who carried a most extraordinary brass instrument, and a few minutes later I was fairly inside the building. I threw my violin-case in the first available corner, and thanks to my acquaintance with the ballroom, laughing in my sleeve at my cunning introduction. I knew no one there, but to do the genteel thing I posted the room up and down, and nodded familiarly at several ladies and gentlemen, without giving them a chance to make out who I was. After a while the room was pretty well crowded, and I was able to retire near a bow-window, and from there enjoy the spectacle

Should you expect a description of the ball you will be deceived. You have all seen and admired the illustrations of it given in Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, and you will not believe that anything to what he described to you so vividly. It might have been an hour or more wrapped in solitary bliss at it did, as my sight fell on, when I was joined by a foreign-looking gentleman, with wonderfully curled whiskers and a bit of blue ribbon at his button-hole. We exchanged some common-place remarks on the ball, the music, and how I came to pass, but we finally exchanged cards, and I read with pride and delight the name of Count Alexander Ivanovitch Ivanoff, and his address, the little bit of pasteboard in the most conspicuous corner of my looking-glass, when the count offered to present me to his countrymen, the Princess Vanoska. I accepted, with a face absolutely beaming with gratitude, and a few steps brought us before the princess, who, with a grand air, only bowed most respectfully, while the count was introducing me as "a friend of his."

The princess was certainly very beautiful, not over twenty-five years of age, and with deep, dark eyes, fringed with long, soft eyelashes. She must have had a great affection for low dresses, and wished the whole world to participate in them, her bust was so fair, and her arm so plump and white, that I could hardly find fault with it. She certainly did not look as much at ease with strange ladies, but I attributed it to her foreign extraction. She was very polite and amiable, and invited me to call on her husband, who was desirous to make my acquaintance, and to see me, the count was such a good and old friend of hers." Once she spoke two or three words to my companion in Russian, and I thought that Russian sounded very much like Irish, but that was my ignorance, of course. Another gentleman whisked up and begged the princess having led the princess to a waltz, I remained alone with the count.

"My dear Mr. Mullins," he said, in a most offhand manner, "you hardly would believe what a charming creature is the princess." I recriminated, pouring at once a flood of eulogies and compliments, but he stopped me by waving his hand and smiling goodnaturedly

"She is," said he, "one of the richest women in Russia, possesses mines of gold, and tar and fisheries on the Volga, but for all that the best-humored and most unpretending of all fair ones. You shall judge for yourself. I have called at all your rooms to-morrow night, and we shall go together to pay our respects in Union square.

I was in the seventh heaven; I could have hugged the count in my arms, but I merely proffered my thanks, and an appointment was made for the next evening at eight o'clock. The rest of the evening was enchanted for me. The count had fairly intoxicated me with his advances and his compliments, and when after supper I made bold to hand the princess to her carriage, I was so intrinsically happy

"MY DEAR COUNT—Should you find it convenient to call at my room 9, to-morrow evening at six o'clock, I will be happy to settle all accounts with you.—Yours truly,

"JOHN MULLINS."

"Yes," grinned Mr. Graham, "we shall settle all accounts, and no mistake."

The next day at five o'clock Mr. Graham was with me. He gave me some instructions and then retired to my bedroom. A few minutes before six arrived the count. I received him most politely, offered him a cigar, and while we brought the conversation on the object of his visit. I walked to my escritoire, and taking out some bills, I asked him to let me see my acceptances. He produced them immediately.

"Verily," said I, looking at the signatures, "my hand was well imitated yesterday night."

This was a signal, and the words were hardly sw of my mouth that Mr. Graham was in the room.

"Jack Farrington," said he, marching to the count, "you are my prisoner. I arrest you for the burglary committed at Hoboken, on the 18th of July last"

The count put his hand to his breast pocket, but the detective was too quick for him.

"Stop that," said he, sternly, pointing a revolver at him; "stop that, or I shoot you down."

"Be kind enough to open the window, and show yourself," said to me.

I did so, and two constables came up, and conveyed "my noble friend" to the Tombs.

A couple of months more of chilling took place in me. I burned my Russian grammar, kicked Menschikoff ignominiously out of doors, laughed at myself whenever I was seen hearing people talk of Russian princesses and Muscovite counts, and looked upon the Russians as a race of semi-barbarians, who ought most unmercifully crushing under a yoke of iron the noble-minded Poles.

GREAT FIRE AT HARTFORD, CONN.

By the burning of Colt's mammoth manufactory of pistols and rifles, on the morning of the 5th inst., there were destroyed a million of dollars worth of property, half a million dollars' worth of machinery, and the balance of two millions of dollars worth of other property. The engraving of the Springfield Union, who was on the spot, says:

"The main walls of the factory began to tumble in at various points as early as 9 o'clock. Huge masses of flaming timber were seen to fall every minute, and the roar of the flames combined with the ringing hollow of fire and the intense heat, were enough to appal the stoutest hearts. No effort was made to get the stock and where the bodies of the burned ones were reported to be. Many of the firemen had narrow escapes from death. Whether any were killed or not was not certainly known.

"The crushing down of a part of the walls would be followed by a sudden increase of fire, as it put to drive back the crowd in haste to a distance of some yards.

"We have never known a fire to spread so rapidly. It commenced in the building, and in half an hour spoken of.

"The fire is a serious calamity to Hartford. The sudden loss of work by between 600 and 2,000 mechanics, but it was found impracticable. It will be seriously felt in all the local interests of that city. The insurance will be a great blessing. It will take probably two years to rebuild and put their extensive establishments as good as new.

"The large Government contracts of the works had been nearly all filled, and the armory of the State of Georgia is a regular sale work, for which there was a ready demand.

"The whole insurance was $750,000."

The Springfield Union says, very truly, that, when first discovered, the fire could have been easily subdued, but it was found impracticable to put upon which the building is only discovered had been tampered with by incendiaries. This leads to the suspicion that the fire was the work of an incendiary.

A despatch from Hartford says that the work will continue to give employment to 700 or 800 men, and that about $500,000 will be thrown up. The main body was known to be killed, and there is one missing. As to the origin of the fire, it is clear it is a mystery.

THE ENROLLMENT ACT.

THE noticeable points of the amended Enrollment or Conscription Bill are these:

Any person drafted may furnish a substitute, and if the substitute is not liable to conscription during the time the substitute is exempt, but is exceeding the number for the district, he is not liable; if he is liable, the principal shall be liable in filling future quotas. If the drafted person pay commutation, such payment shall not be made only for the year ending, and no case shall his exemption extend beyond one year.

Persons who have conscientious scruples against bearing arms, and who are declared to be such on affirmation, may be assigned, when drafted, to hospital service, or pay not exceeding $300 for nurses and wounded soldiers.

Persons who have voted or held office shall be liable to draft. Mariners or able seamen drafted may, within eight days, enlist in the naval service, for a period not exceeding three years, and the whole number of seamen thus entered shall not exceed 10,000. Drafts to be entered and enlisted soldiers of the drafted men but entered the military service. No person is to be enrolled or drafted who is serving a consul, or acting minister, or who is liable to draft, or who is employed or customarily employed in any civil office of the United States, and persons who have served two years during the war shall not be been honorably discharged from the service.

Persons resisting the enrollment, or aiding and abetting the resistance, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $500, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both. Persons procuring exemption by fraud shall be deemed deserters and punished as such, and held for service in the field term of the draft. Persons who procures or attempts to procure a report for himself or another, or who physical condition to be imprisoned for the period of the draft. Surgeons guilty of malfeasance shall be punished by fine and imprisonment.

The 9th section of Mr. Stevens's amended amendment, providing for the enrollment of all able-bodied male citizens of African descent between 20 and 45, and for their draft in the quota of 300,000 called for by the slave, the Secretary of War to appoint a Commission in each State State represented in Congress to award compensation, not exceeding $300, to the masters of colored soldiers.

The Senate contains important amendments to the Senate bill, and of course returns to the Senate for concurrence.

A QUAKER in New Orleans is so upright in all his dealings that he won't sit down to eat.

OUR FANCY DRESS BALLS—MASQUERADE OF THE ARION SO

ARION SOCIETY, AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 11.

WOUNDED.

Lay me lie down,
Just here in the shade of this cannon-torn tree.
Here, low on the trampled grass, where I may see
The surge of the combat; and where I may hear
The glad cry of victory, cheer upon cheer;
Let me lie down.

Oh, it was grand!
Like the tempest we charged, in triumph to share;
The tempest—its fury and thunder we there;
On, on, o'er entrenchments, o'er living and dead,
With the foe under foot and our flag overhead:
Oh, it was grand!

Weary and faint,
Prone on the soldier's couch, sh, how can I rest
With this shot-shattered head and sabre-pierced breast?
Comrades, scroll-call, when I shall be sought,
Say I fought till I fell, and fell where I fought,
Wounded and faint.

Oh, that last charge!
Right through the dread hell-fire of shrapnel and shell,
Through without falt'ring—clear through with a yell,
Right in their midst, in the turmoil and gloom,
Like heroes we dashed at the mandate of Doom!
Oh, that last charge!

It was duty!
Some things are worthless, and some others so good
That nations who buy them pay only in blood;
For Freedom and Union each man owes his part,
And here I pay my share all warm from my heart:
It is duty!

Dying at last!
My mother, dear mother, with meek tearful eye,
Farewell! and God bless you, for ever and ever!
Oh, that I now lay on your pillowing breast,
To breathe my last sigh on the bosom first prest:
Dying at last!

I am no saint,
But, boys, say a prayer. There's one that begins,
"Our Father;" and then says, "Forgive us our sins!"
Don't forget that part, say that strongly, and there
I'll try to repeat it, and you'll say Amen!
Ah, I'm no saint!

Hark!—there's a shout!
Raise me up, comrades! We have conquered, I know!
Up, up on my feet, with my face to the foe!
Ah, there flies the Flag, with its Star-Spangles bright,
The promise of Glory, the symbol of Right!
Well may they shout!

I'm mustered out!
O God of our fathers, our freedom prolong,
And tread down rebellion, oppression and wrong!
O land of earth's hope, on thy blood-reddened sod
I die for the Nation, the Union and God!
I'm mustered out!

The Gulf Between Them.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.

CHAPTER X—CONTINUED.

MRS. HARRINGTON plunged into her natural element at once; Mr. Rhodes was a rich widower, at vulgar and pompous as could well be imagined; but that made no difference, the lady spread her flimsy net and put on all her fascinations at once, leaving the youngsters to their fate. This was splendid sport to Elsie, for Miss Jemima, the daughter, was a gaunt, peaked-nose female, who had been Miss Jemima Harrington many years than she found agreeable, and when any woman ventured even to look at her stout parent, she was up in arms at once and ready for battle against the threatened danger. Mr. Rhodes was at once captivated by the widow's flattery, and Elsie mischievously increased the lady's growing irritation by all sorts of whispers full of homicidal malice.

"Quite a flirtation, I declare," said she; "really, Miss Jemima, you ought to be careful, widows are very dangerous, and she is so fascinating."

"It's ridiculous for a woman to go on so," returned the spinster, shaking her head in vehement indignation; "and as for Mr. Rhodes, I'm sure, my pa isn't likely to be caught with chaff like that."

"Oh, but Mrs. Harrington is considered irresistible."

"Well, I can't see it for my part," retorted Jemima; "she's a tolerable specimen of antique prudishness, but my pa isn't given to the fine arts."

"Oh! Mrs. Harrington," called Elsie, "I wish you could induce Mr. Rhodes to give us a picnic in his woods; now the weather gets too cold—they are very lovely."

Miss Jemima looked as if she had three minds to strangle the pretty torment on the spot.

"La! dear," said Mrs. Harrington, "I am sure I could have no influence."

"Oh, you patient bowing!" muttered Jemima.

"I should be delighted—charmed!" exclaimed Mr. Rhodes. "Madam, it would be a day never to be forgotten that honored my poor house with your presence." he broke off puffing, till the brass buttons on his seat shook like ballstones.

"Oh, you are a dreadful flatterer, I see!" simpered the widow, quite aware of Jemima's rage and delighted to increase it.

"Madam," said the stout man, "on the honor of a gentleman, I never flatter. Miss Elsie, did'nt me."

"Not unless you promise to get up the picnic," said the little witch. "Miss Jemima is anxious to have it—"

"La! dear," broke in the acid damsel, unable to endure anything more, "I am sure I never thought of such a thing. don't speak for me."

"But you will be delighted, you know you will."

"Pa's got to go to Philadelphia," said she, sharply.

"But I could defer the trip, Mimy," said her parent, appealingly.

"Business is business, you always say," retorted the damsel.

Elsie gave a little scream.

"Why, how old," said she. "Mrs. Harrington goes to Philadelphia next week—you can escort her, Mr. Rhodes, she is a sad coward about traveling, I believe."

"I shall be delighted," said the widower, "delighted."

Jemima fairly groaned; she tried to turn her agony into a cough, but it began as a groan; both Elsie and Mrs. Harrington were convinced of that, and it delighted them beyond measure.

"I'll wait on you next week, if Mr. Rhodes," said the widow, "but Elsie, you are an inconsiderate little puss, to think of him taking so much trouble."

"It would be an honor and delight to me," he insisted.

Jemima resolutely arose from her chair, and planted herself in a seat directly in front of her parent—he could not avoid her eye then—the wrath upon them him hesitate and stammer.

"Miss Jemima," said Elsie, "come and look at my geraniums; I think they are finer even than yours."

But nothing short of a torpedo exploding under her chair would have made the heroic damsel quit her post, not for one instant would she leave her parent exposed to the wiles of that abominable widow.

"My dear, I'm so tired," said she, "you must excuse me."

"Perhaps you'd like to go and lie down," persisted Elsie.

"You look fatigued," said Mrs. Harrington.

"Do I, ma'am; you're very kind, I'm sure," snapped the spinster, trying to smile. "I never lie down in the daytime; I'm very comfortable where I am, thank you."

She might be very much at ease herself, but she made her father very uncomfortable, while Elsie and the widow were tossing for a ride for a single instant, till Elizabeth returned to the room and brought them to a little better order.

Luckily Jemima's attention was not Miss Jemima's feelings were softened a little by that, especially as she reflected that her father would be obliged to lend Miss Elsie the dog-cart, because that dreadful Elsie destroyed even that forlorn hope.

"Bessie," said she, "we must ask Mr. Rhodes to play backgammon at the foot of the table, so he shall lead Mrs. Harrington in."

Even Elizabeth could not repress a smile at the little of malicious craft, and there was nothing to be said. The wretched Jemima grew fairly white with rage, but she was obliged to control herself, and the dinner passed off in the gayest manner possible.

At a very early hour Miss Jemima insisted upon returning home, but Elsie had a parting shaft ready for her.

"I have persuaded Mrs. Harrington and these gentlemen to stay over to-morrow," said she; "so we'll all drive in your house and take dinner, Miss Jemima, by way of returning your visit."

The spinster was compelled to express her gratification, but, once home, she hurried to retired herself and her father to dinner at Piney Cove, but her face was a perfect study while the pleasant programme for the morrow was laid.

"We shall be in ecstasy," said Mr. Rhodes.

"You will be in New York," retorted Jemima; "you know you have to go early in the morning."

"My dear, that duty will do as well."

"Now, pa, you know you said—"

"Oh, Miss Jemima," broke in Elsie, "I shall think you a monster if you refuse us."

"And I," said the widow, "shall be mortally offended if Mr. Rhodes runs away the very first time I have had the pleasure of seeing him at home."

"Of course, of course!" said the stout man.

"My daughter, Mimy, is a great business woman—girl, I mean—she knows more like this even business must wait. Ladies, I go home to dream of the honor to-morrow will bring."

"Well, pa, if you will dawdle we had better start," cried the spinster; "we are keeping the horses in the cold."

She made her farewells very brief and carried off her parent in triumph, darting a last defiant look at the widow as she passed.

The moment they were gone Elsie went into convulsions of laughter, clapping her pretty white hands like a child. She cried out:

"She'll poison you, Mary Harrington, I know she will."

"My dear, I'll eat luncheon before I go."

Even Elizabeth was forced to laugh at the ridiculous scene. Elsie mimicked the spinster and turned the affair in so many ridiculous ways that it afforded general amusement for the rest of the evening.

The whole party did drive over to Mr. Rhodes's house the next day, and Miss Jemima was tormented out of her very senses; and Mr. Rhodes was made to appear as ridiculous as only a pompous old widower, with a weakness for the sex, can be made to look.

The question of the picnic came up again, but Elizabeth settled that matter by refusing to have anything to do with it. She was in no spirits for such amusement.

From that day out Miss Jemima always felt a liking for Mrs. Mellen, who had so quietly come to her rescue, and she was the only one of the party whose claret would not have proved a fatal dose to the spinster's sharp glances or secret wishes could have had their due effect.

From some caprice Mrs. Harrington prolonged her stay at Piney Cove for an entire week, and all this time she protested against either of the gentlemen who had accompanied her there returning without her. Elsie, in her careless, childish way, seconded the widow's wishes two men dropped into such easy relations with the family that it seemed difficult to assign any period to their visit Nothing could be quieter than Mr. North's mode of life during his sojourn at the house. If he joined in the light conversation so prevalent at all times, it was with a quiet grace that enabled it without offering rebuke. He seemed to give no preference to the society of any one of the three ladies, but was frequently attended Mrs. Harrington in her walks and rides. To Elsie he was reserved, almost paternal, and in his society the young girl would become grave, sometimes thoughtful.

If this man ever had more than ordinary intercourse with his hostess no one witnessed it, yet a close observer might have seen that he watched her with a quiet vigilance that bespoke some deep interest in her movements. Those who have seen a man watch a lion-house at night and wander cautiously from room to room, as if to fix a plan of the dwelling in his mind, will understand that the watch seemed so purely accidental, had its object; but no one could have discovered, by look or movement, what that object was.

At last the party broke up and returned to the city. Elsie went with them. At first Mrs. Mellen opposed her going, but the pretty creature was resolute enough when her own wishes were concerned, and would listen to no opposition.

"I am not going to live in this stupid place, like a nun in a convent, just because my brother desires to amuse himself in California," she said, when Elizabeth would have dissuaded her from leaving them. "I tell you, I would not wish it. I am not married and obliged to shut myself up and play proper lice you. It's downright cruel of you wanting me to stay here. I'm half dead with grieving already. The house isn't like home without Grant. At any rate, I'm going."

She carried nearly Elizabeth had no absolute authority which could enforce obedience on a creature at once so stubborn and so volatile. So she made no further opposition, fearing that anything like violent measures might prove distasteful to her husband.

But one day now remained of Mrs. Harrington's unwelcome visit. The whole party, except Elizabeth, were to start for New York in the morning, where Mrs. Harrington had resolved to open a splendid succession of receptions and parties in Elsie's behalf.

This last day Elsie declared should be the crowning glory of Mrs. Harrington's visit. They would ride down to the seaside tavern on horseback, have a chowder party on the precipice that divided it, bathe in the ocean, and return home at dusk or by moonlight, as caprice might determine. Mr. Rhodes and Miss Jemima were to be invited, and some of the colored servants were forwarded early in the morning to superintend the arrangements. The dew was hanging thick and bright on the lawn when Mr. Rhodes and his daughter rode up to the Piney Point mansion. A group of horses was gathered in front of the veranda, and a little crowd of ladies, in long riding habits, with gauntlet gloves and pretty hats, stood chatting around the door.

Mr. Rhodes preferred to sit on his handsome bay horse, and after having party to arrange itself, for it was rather inconvenient for him to mount and dismount his high-stepping horse oftener than was absolutely necessary. As for Jemima, she rode a long-legged, slender-bodied horse, and sat him in grim dignity, as the dames of old occupied their high palfreys. Even the beaver hat rose high, and the stiff tuft of feathers that rose from it in front gave a dash of the military to her unusually dejected aspect.

She drew her horse up to the front steps, and sat grimly regarding the city widow, as that lady shook out the folds of her riding-skirt, pulled the gauntlets of her gloves straighter, and, last, and kept her cornelian-headed riding-whip in a constant state of vibration, for the benefit of that unhappy and too admiring widower on the great bay horse.

The party mounted at last, and cantered in a gay cavalcade across the city, leaving the mansion behind them almost in solitude. It was a lovely day, bright and fresh with sunshine, and a cool breeze from the ocean. Mrs. Mellen that day seemed among the most joyous of the party. Whatever care had possessed her she evidently left behind her, and rode rang out among the most cheerful, and her face grew beautiful in the animation of the moment.

At first the party moved on at random; but when the road branched off into a long tract of the woodland the equestrians naturally broke up into pairs, and, either by chance or design, Mr. North joined Elizabeth, who was riding a little in advance. It was almost the first time they'st he had seemed to prefer her society openly during his whole visit, and this movement naturally created a little observation. Elsie looked after the splendid pair as they rode under the overhanging trees, with an expression of subdued wonder in her blue eyes which amounted almost to dismay. Mrs. Harrington laughed with as much meaning as her small share of intellect could concentrate on one idea, and said in a low voice to Elsie:

"Did I not tell you they had met before? She has been playing dutiful as long as she could; see how she breaks out now. Look! look! she is turning down a cross road; it is a mile farther round."

"We will go on direct," said Elsie. "If my brother's wife chooses to ride off alone with any man through the woods, let her. It was decided that we should take the highway, and we will."

Elsie spoke with decision, a cold light came into her blue eyes, and the expression about her lips was almost stern; for a moment the girl was transformed before her friend.

At the cross roads there was a little debate. Miss Jemima turned her horse in the direction Elizabeth had taken. The more intelligent pups was following this lead, when Mr. Hawkins was sent forward to arrest him.

"Straight ahead, that's the programme," he said, tak ng the gold head of his riding-whip from his mouth long enough to speak clearly, "Miss Elsie told me to call you back."

"And the—the other lady," stammered Rhodes, flushing red, to the intense scorn of the spinster.

"Oh, she's gone ahead."

"Then I take this way," exclaimed Jemima, with emphasis; "come, pa."

Mr. Rhodes had wheeled his horse half round, and was casting irresolute looks towards the two ladies riding slowly along the shady road.

"But, daughter, we cannot leave them to ride on alone."

"This—this—person is with them, and they seem to count him as a man," answered Jemima, with a gesture of supreme scorn.

Mrs. Harrington here was seen to draw up her horse in the shade of a huge chestnut, and playfully beckon the widower with her whip.

"Jemima, I must. It would be underbred," cried the desperate man, riding away to the enemy.

Jemima sat upon her horse, petrified with amusement. Her father looked anxiously back while the resolute widow whip and forebodings of the tempest that would follow, but there the spinster sat at the cross roads like an equestrian statue.

"Come, come," said the widow, touching him playfully with her whip, "Elsie is getting impatient. Now for a race."

Her spirited horse dashed forward at a run. The ponderous steed of the widower thundered after, making the forest reverberate with the heavy fall of his hoofs.

Mr. Hawkins fell into a dainty amble, and away the whole party swept into the green shadows of the woods.

Jemima looked right and she looked left. Should she ride on and leave her pa in the hands of that designing creature? Perish the thought, better anything than that! She turned her horse. It turned sharply, and swept down the highway like a greyhound. She struck him on the flank, then the fiery lash of her whip quivered about his ears till he dashed on, flinging back dust and stones with his hoofs.

The party was riding fast. Mr. Hawkins by Elsie, Mr. Rhodes close to the widow—so close, that somehow her right hand, whip and all, had got entangled with his. They were on a curve of the road, around which Jemima came sweeping like a torrent. With a single bound her horse rushed in between them, leaving the heavy gauntlet glove in the grasp of that frightened man, and the cornelian-headed whip deep in the mud of the highway.

Not a word was spoken. The widower sank abjectly down in his saddle, and with his apprehensive eyes turned sideways on the spinster, surreptitiously thrust the empty glove into the folds of his pocket. The widow, convulsed with mingled laughter and rage, gave no doubt of genuine color now, for her face was crimson. Then the two prisoners under military guard, they moved on, with Jemima riding in grim vigilance between them.

The spot chosen for the chowder-party commanded a splendid sea view, and a broad landscape in the inland direction. On the ground a mountain of Piney Cove was a principal object. It was an abrupt precipice, clothed, except in the very front, with a rich growth of trees, whose branches of white pine and clumps of hemlock darkened with the deep green of their foliage such forest trees as cast their shadows in autumn till spring time. The broken precipice in front was tufted here and there with clumps of barberry bushes and other wild shrubs, which might have added a daring adventurer to climb; but he had the merit of safe sufficient. Between this precipice and the shores of the ocean stood the little tavern we have before spoken of, from the windows of which Fleury Point were now bringing up a huge iron pot wherein to cook the chowder, which would be nothing if not hot. In front of the open air, over a fire of sticks, and eaten beneath the hemlock trees.

A bridle path led to the top of this precipice, winding about and back again, and was used by this route the highway party rode to the summit some fifteen minutes before Elizabeth and Mr. North joined them. Whatever other feelings had sprung up on the road, at least a majority of the picnickers seemed resolved to enjoy themselves now. Jemima entered heart and soul into the preparations, keeping a sharp eye on her father all the time, and gave his whole being up to the important subject.

Mrs. Harrington had no great talent for cookery, and feeling beaten and awed by Jemima's dashing generalship, hovered around the outskirts of the preparations, flirting a little with Hawkins, from languid habit rather than any special regard for the young gentleman.

During the bustle these preparations Elizabeth, Mr. North and Elsie had dropped out of the party and wandered off, no doubt, into the shady places of the woods; no one had observed how or where they went. Hawkins had been with Elsie at first, but she had rent him down a ravine for some wild honeysuckle, and when he came back to the stone on which she had been sitting it was vacant. Probably she had become tired of waiting and had gone in search of the honeysuckle herself; as for Mrs. Mellen and North, of course they were all right somewhere, and would be on hand safe enough when the chowder was ready.

While Mrs. Harrington and Hawkins were talking in this idle fashion, they sat on a large ledge of rock that crowned the very brink of the precipice, and chancing to look down, saw two persons near the foot moving towards the tavern. One they recognized, even from that distance, to be Mr. North; for his tall, grand figure was not to be mistaken. The other was a lady; the dark riding-dress and floating plume might belong to any female of the party, there was no individuality in a dress like that. The couple had evidently found some passage down the face of the precipice, for it would have been impossible to reach the spot where they stood by any other route.

"Well," said Mrs. Harrington, "if that isn't a sly proceeding; what on earth does it mean? How Mrs. Mellen can drag her long skirts down that hill, just to look at a common tavern, which she's seen a hundred times, I cannot imagine."

"Perhaps they are going down to the beach," said Hawkins, who had no more malice in his composition than a fellow.

"No, no! they are turning toward the house," said the widow, considerably excited. "What can they want there?"

"Oh, very likely they have gone in to rest. You know North lives there when he comes on the island to fish or shoot."

"What! Mr. North, he live there and never tell me! I thought he was a perfect stranger on the island?"

"As to that," answered Hawkins, a little startled by her earnestness, "he only comes down for a day now and then. It's nothing permanent, I assure you."

"There! there! they have gone in!" exclaimed the lady. "I wonder where Elsie is; I must tell Elsie."

"Why, what nonsense!" answered Hawkins, with some spirit; "can't Mrs. Mellen step into a house to rest herself a moment without troubling her friends so terribly?"

"Just be quiet, Hawkins, you don't know what you are talking about," answered the lady, keeping her gaze fastened on the tavern. "Turn an eye on the house while I look at the time. It must be five o'clock, or since they went in. Dear, dear, what a world we live in!"

Mrs. Harrington kept the little enamelled watch, sparkling with diamonds, in her ungloved hand full six minutes, and then stepped down to the door of the tavern in her vigilance. At the end of that time Mr. North and his companion came out of the house and disappeared by the path undergrowth which lay between that and the precipice.

Mrs. Harrington watched some time for them to appear again, but her curiosity was baffled, and her attention soon directed to other objects. At last she was aroused by Elsie coming suddenly upon the lady, flushed, panting for breath, and glowing with anger. She turned upon Hawkins like a spiteful mockingbird.

"A pretty escort you are, Mr. Hawkins, to leave a lone lady alone in the woods. I declare, Mrs. Harrington, he lost me in one of those dreadful ravines, and I scrambled up the wrong bank and have been wandering everywhere, climbing rocks and tiring myself to death. Only think of dragging this long skirt over my arm and tearing my way through the bushes. I heard the servants laugh and that guided me, or I might have been roaming the woods now."

"My poor dear," said the widow, full of compassion, "how heated and wearied you look! Hawkins, can't you find something to fan her with?"

Hawkins broke off a branch full of leaves and offered to fan her with it. But she snatched it out of his hand and flung it over the precipice.

"Where is mother? Go tell Elizabeth I want to speak with her, if you want to make up with me."

"We have not seen Mrs. Mellen since you went away; nor Mr. North either. They have finished the lunch by strolling off together," said Mrs. Harrington.

Elsie started, and the warm color faded from her face.

"What! Elizabeth; has she been roaming about?" and—and——"

"With Mr. North, Elsie."

The tone in which this was said conveyed more than the words. At first Elsie looked bewildered; then, as if her gentle spirit had received the shock of a painful idea, fell into troubled thought.

"And you saw her go away," she said, in a low voice. "In what direction?"

"We did not know her or when she went, but certainly did see her and Mr. North together."

"Where?"

"Down yonder, going into that tavern!"

Elsie gazed into her friend's face, startled and astonished.

"She would not go there. You must be mistaken, Mrs. Harrington. No person could be recognised from this distance—it's all nonsense."

"Ask her," said Mrs. Harrington, "for here she comes."

Elizabeth came up from a hollow in the woods and joined the party. She seemed completely worn out, and sat down on a fragment of rock, panting for breath. She was very pale, as if some great exertion had left the weariness of reaction upon her. She had evidently rested somewhere before joining them.

Elizabeth, where have you been?" said Elsie, looking anxiously at her sister-in-law.

"Down in the woods."

Elizabeth pointed to the forest that sloped back from the precipice.

Before Elsie could resume her questions Mrs. Harrington broke in with a faint sneer on her lips.

"And where did you leave Mr. North?" she said, fixing a cunning, sidelong glance on Elizabeth's face.

"I have not seen Mr. North," answered Mrs. Mellen, with apparent indifference, though the hot color mounted to her cheek, brought there either by some inward consciousness or the perceptible sneer levelled at her in the form of a question.

"I've seen Mr. North," exclaimed the widow, folding her hands demurely, and smiling down on them as they rested in her lap; "dear me, what things optical delusions are!"

Elizabeth did not hear or heed this, for that instant Mr. North came up to them very quietly and sat down near the widow.

"Oh, I've had a pleasant ramble?" he said, addressing Elsie. "I saw you and Hawkins in the woods and had half a mind to join you."

"And he changed your mind and—may I ask where?" said Elsie, with a shade of pallor on her face; for it seemed as if the man had surprised her with bitter thoughts of his deception in her mind, and remembering her brother, she could not refrain from revealing something of distrust.

"Oh, I took a ramble around the brow of the precipice," he answered, carelessly, "and went into the tavern for a glass of water."

"And the lady," said Elsie, looking steadily in his face. "What lady was in a riding-dress who bore you company? Mrs Harrington saw one from her perch here on the ledge."

North cast a quick glance on Elizabeth, who did not speak, but sat looking from him to her sister-in-law, as if stricken by some sudden terror.

"It was a mistake. No lady shared my rambles," said North.

"But there was a lady," cried Mrs. Harrington, "a good deal excited by the path with my own eyes. Mr. Hawkins remarked her too."

North smiled and shook his head.

"She had on a riding-habit and an upright plume like—"

"Well, well," said North, gently, "it is useless going with the subject. I assure you that I went down the precipice alone, and saw no lady."

Mrs. Harrington looked at Elsie and smiled.

"Of course he is in honor bound to say that," she whispered.

Elsie seemed disturbed and answered quickly, "I, for one, believe that he speaks truth. It is folly to suppose that he would tell a lie about it, besides, it was just as likely to be me as Elizabeth our habits are alike."

"Poor generous sister!" whispered the widow; "you know better; but if you are satisfied it's no business of mine, only if Mellen asks me about it I must tell the truth."

"Mary Harrington, you must have better good than this before you dare to make mischief between husband and wife," said Elsie, with a force of expression that made the widow open her eyes wide. "Don't be slanderous and wicked, for I won't have that, especially against Elizabeth."

"Dear me, what a storm! Well, well, well, well, I did not see a lady, that's enough. And there comes that wonderful colored person of yours, to say that the lunch is spread and the chowder perfect. Come, come, one and all."

The whole party were assembled on the ledge by this time. As Mrs. Harrington spoke she moved, moved off and went laughing and chatting towards a large flat rock, that gleamed out from among the trees and overlooked the sea like a crusted snow bank, so white and crisp was the linen spread upon it. Here a dainty repast presented itself, for the smoking chowder was there, and a stool in the centre gave its name to what was, in fact, a rude breakfast table. Directly the noise of flying corks and the gurgle of champagne arose, with bursts of laughter and flashes of wit, frightening the gulls from their nests in the great tulip-tree overhead, and made its rich yellow blossoms tremble again in the sunshine that was quivering over the forest and rippled up the broad ocean with silvery outbursts.

Whatever had gone before, all was bluffly and hearty comradeship now. Even Elsie, for some out surreptitiously; such graceful compliments, such bright flashes of wit no one had ever heard from the lips that fell from Elizabeth's talent of every one present. When the party broke up from its members went to the covert where their horses had been tied, it was joyously, like birds flying home to their nests.

A ride through the golden coolness of a lovely sunset brought the party back to Piney Cove, and all that had gone before during the day seemed forgotten.

The visitors were to start for New York early in the morning, and, as all were somewhat wearied, the house was closed somewhat earlier than usual.

Elsie had retired earlier than the rest, having some preparations to make for the day's journey. She busied herself awhile about her boudoir and bedroom, selecting a few articles of jewellery and so on to be packed, then sat down and rested awhile; tired of that, she turned down the lights in the sumptuous lily cups, which one of the statues held, sat down in the deep moonshine with which she had thus flooded the room, and fell into a train of reveries she thought; a pale gleam darted up now and then from the lilies and trembled through the flossile curls under which she had thrust her hands, revealing a face more earnest and thoughtful than was usual to the gay young creature. Whether it was that she had become anxious from the dart of suspicion that had been that day cast on her brother's wife or was disturbed by some other cause I cannot say, but her eyes shone bright and clear in the pale radiance that surrounded her, and now and then, she would start up and listen at Elizabeth's door, as if about to enter and question her of the things that evidently troubled her mind. At last she fell into quiet, and lying on the couch scarcely seemed to breathe. It was almost midnight then. The house was still, and she could hear the distant waves beating against the shore. She closed her eyes and listened dreamily, reluctant to seek any other place of rest, yet changing the many cushions of her couch impatiently from one to the other.

At last, as she half rose for this purpose, a noise from the outer room, which was a square passage or hall, in which were placed some bronze statues and antique shields, arrested her attention. Resting on her elbow, she held her breath and listened.

The noise was repeated more distinctly. It seemed as if a door had been opened with caution. Elsie arose, stole softly across the carpet, turned the lock of her door and threw open door and entered the passage, carrying a little nightlamp in her hand, which she had kindled among the alabaster lilies. She had half crossed the hall, resting frightened looks around, when a cry of dismay broke from her lips, for close by the door which led to her sister-in-law's apartments she saw Elizabeth standing, pale as death, but with her eyes burning like fire, turned upon a man who stood leaning against one of the statues. It was Mr. North.

The two women stood face to face, regarding each other in dead silence, while North smiled upon them both. The lamp trembled in Elsie's hand, her face turned white as snow. Without uttering a word she turned, entered her room and locked the door.

The next day she left Piney Point with Mrs. Harrington. Mr. North left also, but he went alone.

OUR FANCY-DRESS BALLS.

We give some space in our present issue to the two great fancy-dress balls, that of the Liederkranz, at the City Assembly Rooms, on the 3d, and that of the Arion, on the 10th, at the Academy of Music. Both were conducted admirably, the greatest attention having been had to make them select and thoroughly enjoyable. The ball of the Liederkranz was a fine affair, the costumes being rich, varied and curious, as our illustration will show. The human giraffe created quite a sensation. The music was fine, as was to be expected, and the enjoyment of the parties present seemed to be complete.

At the Arion ball the Academy had some strange decorations—some of them. Novel birdcages, composed of hoopskirts, fastened to round boards at the bottom, on which were painted some excellent caricatures of well-known individuals. In these cages were a number of roosters, who, about daylight, commenced their morning crow imaginable, crowing away like good fellows. The back of the stage was ornamented with a very beautiful gaslight, representing a harp, surrounded by leaves of laurel, and supporting the word "Arion." The rope dancing of Mr. Blondin was introduced, and the chap who tried to invent a flying machine and failed gave rise to much fun.

The great feature of the evening, however, was the grand march of Fleet Brigadiers. The Fleet was brought in to room, mounted on a jackass. He was escorted to the platform in front of the throne of Marsby, but was prevented by the story limit from ascending. The brigade which showed itself most conspicuously through the costumes was decked all the fun would be unbearable.

The costumes here, as at the Liederkranz, were magnificent. Many were superb. Chinese, burlesques, ladies, market-women, flower-girls, brigands, negroes, Turks, fishermen, and a thousand other every possible kind were so abundant, that to select the best was impossible.

ATTACK OF REBEL CAVALRY

On a Detachment of the 13th Maine, on Matagorda Peninsula.

On the 29th of December one company of the 13th Maine regiment, under Lieut.-Col. Hardline, were sent from Pass Cavallo, Texas, up Matagorda Peninsula, on a reconnoitring and foraging expedition. When about twenty miles from the mouth the party was attacked and surrounded by a large force of rebel cavalry, numbering 1,000 or 1,500. The position of the Federals was a very isolated one. The peninsula, however, was narrow, and the gunboat Granite City, accompanying the expedition, was thus enabled to sweep it with her guns. The Federals, determined to resist to the last, after firing volleys of musketry, succeeded in getting up a breastwork of driftwood on the beach, the Granite City covering them in their rear. Then by vigorous fighting they broke the line formed in close columns to charge. The destruction caused in the rebel line by the bursting of the shells was very great. Finding that further attempts to capture the party of the 13th Maine would only be attended with great loss, after several unsuccessful charges, the rebels, though frustrated, having lost by their own account 30 killed and wounded, withdrew. The loss of the Federals was but one killed, a single man. During the engagement the rebels burned the dwelling-house on the bay at Matagorda, and shelled the Federal party. She was struck by a rifle shell, by one of the gunboat's shells, and completely destroyed.

THE WAR IN FLORIDA.

Capture of the Caroline Gertrude and Flight of the Steamer Columbine on Canoy river.

A SPIRITED rifle-boat place on the Ocklockony river on the 23th Dec., for a sketch of which we are indebted to J. J. Pratt, Paymaster of the State Steamer.

On the night in question two boats of the steamer Columbine took the schooner, which was loaded with cotton and spirits. They worked all night to get her off, but had the foresight to raise a brown rock of the Canoy attack. At 1 o'clock A. M. on the 29th, a company of 40 cavalry made their appearance, and, dismounting, crawled up behind trees bushes and grass to the water's edge. A sharp fight was kept up for two hours. Then the cavalry managed to get her off, they drew her and sailed off. The rebels then mounted their horses and fled, leaving their commander, ordered to reach and save the schooner. This the boarding party proceeded, and by by fill the schooner was totally destroyed, when they returned to the steamer with 2 prisoners and $20,000 worth of cotton.

EUROPEAN SOVEREIGNS IN 1800 AND 1863.—It is a curious fact that at both these periods, France was ruled by a Napoleon, Austria by a Francis, Russia by a Paul, Prussia by a Frederick William, Naples by a Ferdinand and Sardinia by a Victor Emmanuel.

THE WHISPERING OF A FAIRY.

"I come with the birth of the evening wind,
On the spray of a summer shower,
I have dozed away, through a sultry day,
In the folds of a half blown flower.
I come on a mission of light and love,
To a maiden young and fair,
She sleeps in the room of the river's side,
And I'll whisper it to her there."

She slept in the truth of a trusting heart,
With a spirit as pure as kind,
And the fairy flew to this maiden true
On the breath of the evening wind.
He swept from its beautiful, careless fall,
With his wing, her dark brown hair,
And kissing the smile to make it wilder,
He hath whispered his mission there.

As soft and as quick as the silver flash
That hath danced on a moonlit sea,
Or her lip awhile hung a loving smile,
As she read the words he wrote.
And ever the same when a fairy bears
From the spirit-world a beam,
We shudder or smile to make whispered wile,
And his mission we call a dream.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

A YOUNG lady once remarked that there was one word in the Bible that she wished altered, and that was in the sentence, "Whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek turn unto him the other also." On the strength of that she managed to "kiss."

"I DREAMED that I dwelt in marble halls," as the convict said, after serving out his time in the State Prison.

"You bad a dream which was not all a dream," remarked a lieutenant.

"FATHER, did you ever have another wife besides mother?"

"No, my boy; what possesses you to ask such a question?"

"Because I saw in the old family Bible where you married Lucy Dunham, 1850; and that isn't mother, for her name is Sarah Smith."

"MOTHER, did you hear sissy swear?"

"No, my dear; what did she say?"

"Why, she said, she wasn't going to wear her darned stockings through."

A YOUNG girl is a fishing rod—the eyes are the hook, the smile is the bait, the lover is the salmon, and marriage the butter in which he is fried.

A MAN came into a printing office to beg a paper. "We don't like it," we like to read the newspapers very much, but our neighbors are all too stingy to take one!"

THE lady whose "peace of mind" was broken intends to have it repaired.

"Why, my dear, what's the matter?" said the pickpocket said when he robbed a man of his empty one.

WANTED.—Two thousand certificates to the effect that Dr. Scrogum's Patent ought to be called Scrougum's Vegetable Dyspepsia Pitters, and not sarsaparilla, as it is called to kill.

TWO AGAINST TWO.—A gentleman of the name of Hun, residing near a private madhouse, met with a couple of lunatics who had broken from the keeper. The maniac suddenly stopped, and, raising his large stick, exclaimed:

"Who are you, sir?"

"I am a doctor," was the rather alarmed, but thinking to divert his attention by a pun, replied:

"I am a double man; I am a Hun by name and a man by nature."

"Are you?" replied the other; "why, I am a mon beside myself; so we two will fight you two!"

And then knocked the Hun and runaways down.

AT a hotel, a short time since, a girl inquired of a gentleman at the table if his cup was out.

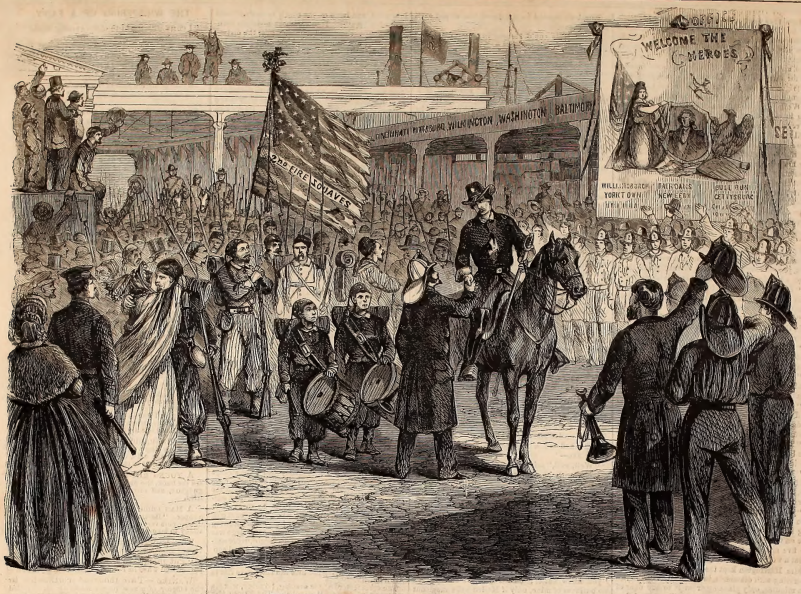
"No," was the reply, "but my eye is."

The poor girl was considerably confused, but determined to have the last word, she added, while she under the stage drove up, and several coming in, the following remark:

"Does the stage drive here?"

"No, sir," was the reply, "it generally runs."

"but the passengers do."



DON'T marry an attorney; it must be a sad thing to be married to a limb of the law.

IF you don't lay out your plans of life betimes, you will probably be laid out before they are.

MOCK TURTLE.—Calling a husband "my dear" in public, when you know you have a private.

THE OLD MAID'S DIARY.

15. Anxious for coming out, and the attention of the men.
16. Begins to have some idea of the tender passion.
17. Rules it down as a coming-to-nothing kind of affection.
18. Puts herself in love with some handsome man who has flattered her.
19. Is a little annoyed at his indifference. While at dinner she stage drove up, and several coming in, the following remark:
20. Considers herself to be fashionable.
21. Still more confidence in her own attractions, and excites the jealousy of other women.
22. Refuses a good offer because he is not a man of fortune.
23. Flirts with every young man she meets.
24. Wonders why she is not married.
25. Rather more circumspect in her conduct.
26. Thinks that she has a large fortune and quite so indispensable.
27. Refuses the company of rational men to flirting.
28. Wishes to be married in a quiet way with a comfortable income.
29. Almost despairs of entering the married state.
30. Rather fearful that she is being cut out.
31. An additional love of dress.
32. Begins to think that she is finding it difficult to get good partners.
33. Would give how men can leave the society of sensible women to flirt with chits.
34. Accepts the first humble but sincere declaration with
35. Some of the praises of woman.
36. Marries with her head who is lately married.
37. Is rather mortified to see a
38. Contemplating of her acquaintances who are married.
39. Finds consolation in their misfortunes.
40. Thinks of princesses.
41. Very meddling and officious. This is a growing
42. Is considered a
43. Sorry against the manners of the age.
44. Strong prediction for religious observances.
45. Partiality for cards and scandal commences.
46. Becomes despondency and takes up
47. Turns all her sensibility to cats and dogs.
48. Adopts a strict regimen and starves herself.
49. Becomes disgusted with the world, and vents all her ill-humor on this unfortunate creature.

THE RECEPTION OF THE FIRE ZOUAVES AT NEW YORK, FEB. 9.

RECEPTION OF THE SECOND REGIMENT OF FIRE ZOUAVES.

On the 9th of February, 1864, the Second New York Fire Zouaves, Lieut.-Col. M. Burns, arrived at the foot of Cortland-street, returning from the seat of war, and welcomed by the Firemen of New York, as they alone can welcome. Our Artist represents the scene when Chief Engineer Decker grasps the hand of the commander of the gallant Fire Boys.

The regiment arrived about half-past two P. M. The department was formed in line through Cortland street. The regiment marched past them and took their station at the head of the line. The department then escorted them up Broadway, through Chatham street and the City Hall Park, where they were reviewed by the Mayor, to Broadway, up Broadway to Fourteenth street, through to Eighth avenue, Hudson street to Clarkson, Carmine and Sixth avenue to Jefferson market.

All along the route the various Engine, Hook and Ladder and Hose Companies were placed, decorated beautifully—among the most noticeable of which were the steamers of Engine Companies Nos. 4, 5, 7, 22 and 42, and others; the carriages of Hose Companies Nos. 27, 29, 61, 36, and Hook and Ladder Companies Nos. 1, 3, 6, 14 and 18, No. 6 being most beautifully decorated with the flags carried by the First Fire Zouaves at Bull run, and the splendid banner carried at the head of the procession was painted by Joseph R. Wheeler, also a member of No. 6 truck.

OUR WAR IN FLORIDA—THE CREW OF THE U. S. STEAMER STARS AND STRIPES, IN THE CAPTURED SCHOONER CAROLINA GERTRUDE, AT OKLOCKONY RIVER, ENGAGING THE DISMOUNTED REBEL CAVALRY ON SHORE.—FROM A SKETCH BY PAYMASTER JOHN J. PRATT, U. S. N.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Secure Good Jewellery at Low Prices.

100,000

Watches, Chains, Sets of Jewellery, Gold Pens, Bracelets, Lockets, Rings, Gents' Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Solid Silver, $1 50.

VETERAN

C. MORTON
Co E 48TH
N.Y.V.

VETERAN SOLDIERS!

We are now prepared to furnish all kinds of Veteran Fins for all the Regiments and Corps now in the field at $1 50 each; also, all the various Army Badges worn by the different armies by the single one, 100 or 1,000. Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for a Circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewellers,
Solid Gold, 18 k. $6 50. 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Beauty.—HUNT'S WHITE LIQUID ENAM., EL prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enameller, H. whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 133 South Seventh Street, and 41 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, PROPOSALS FREE FROM LIFE of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY.
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.

20 cents each, $1 80 per doz. Free by mail. Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., Box 1618, New York city. Send for circular.

J. G. SCHULL.

MERCHANT TAILOR

32 Ann Street, New York,

Has on hand a splendid assortment of French, Eng lish and German Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings which he is prepared to make up in the most fashionable style and to suit on the most reasonable terms for cash

---

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,

Agents for the United States for the celebrated

ALBERTINE

EXTENSION HOLDERS & GOLD PENS

Of the most handsome and durable construction, put up in new fancy cases of one dozen each and not sold in any less quantities. They will retail for $3 each.

Gold pens, per dozen $10 00
" " boxes 25 00

Sent by mail or express, prepaid. Address
SALISBURY, BRO. & CO., Providence, R. I.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.

S. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N Y.

DR R. GOODALE'S CATARRH REMEDY.

It penetrates to the very seat of this terrible disease, and exterminates it, root and branch, for ever. DR. GOODALE'S is the first and only powder ever sold the world what Catarrh really was—where it commenced—and what would cure it. Price $1. Send stamp for a Pamphlet. Depot, 612 Broadway, N. Y. NORTON & CO., Sole Agents.

Union Playing Cards!

National American Amusement Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. 52 stimulated cards to the pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. Two packs mailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the Trade. Address

AMERICAN CARD CO.,
453 Broadway, or 165 William St., N. Y.

CHLOASMA, OR MOTH PATCHES!

Blemishes on the face, called Moth, are very annoying, particularly to ladies of light complexion, as the discolored spots on the skin show more strongly on blondes than on brunettes, but they constitute a defect in marring the beauty on either, and anything that will remove moth patches, without injuring the skin in texture or color, would no doubt be considered a great achievement in medical science. Dr. F. C. PERRY, 49 Bond street, New York, claims his whole time and attention in Diseases of the Skin, will guarantee to remove Moth Patches, Freckles and other Discolorations of the Face without injury to either texture or color of the skin. His success in this as in other branches of his specialty.—DISEASES OF THE SCALP AND LOSS OF HAIR—will warrant him in guaranteeing a CURE IN EVERY CASE. For particulars, address enclosing stamp.

DR. F. C. PERRY, 49 Bond Street, N. Y.

Headquarters for Officers' and Soldiers' Pins of Every Description!

We will send either Army Corps, Division or Company Pin, in Solid Silver, with your Name, Regiment and Co. handsomely Engraved upon it, on the receipt of $1. Also, a Kearney Cross in Fine Gold Plate for $1, or a New Style Solid Silver Cavalry Pin, Engraved as above, for $1 50.

Agents sending for 10 or more at one time will be allowed 15 cents on each.

ALSO, THE EMPORIUM FOR WATCHES AND JEWELRY.

75,000 Watches, Gold Pens and Pencils,

Vest, Guard and Neck Chains, Chatelaine Chains and Pins, Engraved Bracelets, Engraved Spring Lockets, Seal Stone Rings California Rings, Chased Rings, Masonic Rings and Pins, Gents' California Diamond Pins, California Diamond Ear Drops, Beautiful Sets of Jewelry, New Styles Studs and Buttons, etc., etc., etc.,

WORTH $400,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

Certificates naming each article are put into Envelopes, Sealed and Mixed, and sent without regard to choice.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for doing the business 25 cents each, which must be enclosed when the request is made to know what you can have After knowing what you can have, then it will be at your option to send One Dollar, take the article or not.

Five Certificates can be ordered for $1—seven for $2—thirty for $10—and one hundred for $15.

With the information of what you can have will be sent a Circular giving full instructions to Agents and a full Catalogue of articles.

Box 4876, N. Y. S. M. WARD & CO., 208 Broadway, New York.

NEW ARMY WATCHES!

The great New Army Watch, expressly for Soldiers, in very Solid Silver Hunting Cases, Non-Explosive Lever Movements—

$15 Full Jewelled, with a handsome White Dial and Steel Cap Pin, Engine-turned, Engraved or Plain Cases. Warrants a perfect timekeeper for one year, $15. $15

Gold Composite, same as above, exact imitation of the English Army Watch, $15. $15 $15

Fine Double Bottom Silver Engine Lever Hunting Watch, Full Jewelled, Chronometer Balance, $20. $25 $25

OFFICER'S Watch — Genuine American Lever Watch, in 4 oz. Sterling Silver Cases, Full Jewelled, Gold Joints and Double Bottom Cases, $35. $35 $35

$45 American Lever, same as above, with Chronometer Balance, $35. $45 $45

$11 Silver Hunting Watch, English Movement, $11. $11 $11

Lady's very small Hunting Gold Composite Watch, Engine Turned, Engraved, Magic Spring, Sun Screened, can scarcely be detected from Gold, $16. $16 $16

Splendid 18 karat Heavy Gold American Lever Watch, in 40 pennyweight Cases, $85. $85 $85

$92 Same as above, with Chronometer Balance, $92. $92 $92

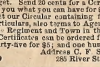
$38 Gold Hunting English Lever Watch, Rare Jewelled and Screw Balance—S. J. Tobin's Make. $38 $38

Constantly on hand Watches of Every Description

We will send any of the above Watches on receipt of price, free of expense, to any address.

Registered Letters come at our risk if properly sealed.

All Watches Registered 20 cents extra.



Great inducements to Agents.

Send for our Circular.

Correspondents will give their address plain.

GEO. A. ELY & CO.,
IMPORTERS,
324 Broadway, N. Y.

AMERICAN BILLIARD TABLE

AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

Approved and adopted by the Billiard Congress of 1863. The best and only reliable Billiard Cushion manufactured. Balls, Cues, and every article relating to Billiards, for sale by

PHELAN & COLLENDER,
434-7 Corner of Crosby and Spring Sts., N. Y.

Sportsmen, Tourists, and Army and Navy Officers.

Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Portability combined with great power in Field, Marine, Tourists', Opera and general out-door day and night double perspective glasses. will show distinctly a person to know him at from 2 to 6 miles, according to the greatest transparent power and strength of magnifying the sight, without the distressing result of frequent changes. Catalogue sent by enclosing stamp.

SEMMONS, Oculists—Opticians,
000a 660½ Broadway, N. Y.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Merchants, Bankers, Teachers and others, etc., etc.,

and warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular

J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce Street, N. Y.

GOLD! GOLD! GOLD!

30,000 WATCHES, CHAINS, &c.

WORTH $150,000,

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 30 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing full list of articles and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in ever- Regiment and Town in the Country.

Six Certificates can be ordered for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $12.

Address C. F. SHULTS,
437-49 285 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read Lovers' Directory, Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. EARL, M. D., 200 pages, mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cents. Address 86 White Street, New York. 435-38

We have furnished our Weapon's Rifles as follows:

State of Kentucky.....	1,366
State of Indiana.....	760
General Ripley.....	150
Colonel Miles.....	200
Capt. Buck's Co., Chillicothe, O.
Col. Gamble.....	Kansas.
Capt. Child's " Athens, Ill.
Capt. Whybeck's Co., Rolla, Mo.
Capt. Reference " Lexington, Mo.
Capt. Hunter's " Sedalia, Mo.
Capt. Olds' " Perryville, Ind.

LEAVENWORTH, Oct. 12, 1862.

DEAR SIR—The Rifles (33) were put to a severe test on the 9th inst. on the State Farm, AND WON A STAND OF COLORS, in a contest against THREE OF OUR BEST COMPANIES. They were to fire in squads of ten, each man having three shots, and to shoot at 100 yards. Time, 2½ minutes. We were OUTNUMBERED TWO HUNDRED shots by the infantry. We scored 330 out of a possible 345 at 100 yards. The greatest number of hits by any infantry company was 315. This establishing the superiority of the KITTREDGE (Western) Gun.

M. S. GRAVES,
Late Lieut. 1st Kansas Cav.

TO MAJOR SHAW, St. Louis, Mo.

S. KITTREDGE & CO.,
435-44 Cincinnati, Ohio.

$50 FOR $20.

SOLDIERS IN THE ARMY,

For $20 we will forward by mail or express, prepaid, the following list of the Gold Plated Jewellery: 4 Vest Chains; 12 Gents' Scale and Seal Rings; 3 Gold Pens and Pencils; 6 Gents' Vest Studs; 1 Gents' Watch Keys; 12 Breast or Scarf Pins; 4 pair Sleeve Buttons; 1 Gents' Chatelaine Pin and Minutes; 2 Double Glass Lockets; and 3 Cluster Stone Pins. Address

THOMAS CAFFERTY & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.—Superior to every other preparation for the hair in power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to overcome effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA HAIR GLOSS
unexcelled in keeping the hair in curl

HOYT'S HIAWATHA TOILET CREAM
oils and colors the hair at the same time; changes light and red hair to brown or black. Price 25c.

HOYT'S EXCLSIOR TOILET POWDER
imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and preserves youthfulness of appearance. Sold everywhere.

JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of AMERICAN PEOPLE,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, their causes and cure. DR. CLYDE, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

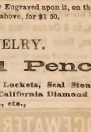
A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden cause of Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

Sent free to all post paid on receipt of stamps and obtain the book Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 26 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 430-52

The Great Money-Making Article.

Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address



E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.
000

$75 A MONTH—I want to hire Agents in every County at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address
436-51 S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

Watches

FOR THE

ARMY.

"Particularly valuable for officers in the army and travellers."—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 27.

"Prettiest, best and cheapest time-piece ever offered."—N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 24.

"Splendidly finished Watches that keep of which is only equalled by those cheapness."—N. Y. Weekly Mail.

MAGIC TIME OBSERVERS!

THE PERFECTION OF MECHANISM!

BEING A HUNTING OR OPEN FACE ON LADY'S OR GENTLEMAN'S WATCH; COMBINED, WITH PATENT SELF-WINDING IMPROVEMENT.

A MOST PLEASING NOVELTY.

One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it, and concealed with its machinery, its own small watch, each containing a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of this Watch are composed of fine metal, the outer one being the 18-carat gold. It has the improved ruby-jewelled lever movement, and is warranted as accurate timepiece. Price, superbly engraved, per case of half dozen, $25. Sent by mail, in neat morocco boxes, $35. By mail the postage is 30 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!

FIRST-CLASS HUNTING TIMEPIECE

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS THESE SILVER WATCHES MUST INSURE

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation of facilities that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. This material being of two metals, the outer one first quality Sterling Silver, while the inner one is German Silver, which can be recognized by cutting or heavy engraving, making it not only a handsome, but a durable watch. The real resemblance of SOLID STERLING SILVER in existence.

The sale of these Watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they now range, at $25 and upwards. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single day by any one of ordinary business tact.

☞ A WHOLESALE ONLY! In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, white enamel dial, and fancy dial hands, in good running order, by the half-dozen, $96; postage, $2 30; registering, 25 cents. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

☞ TERMS, CASH IN ADVANCE. No Agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. If money is sent us by express or mailed in registered letter, it is at our risk. Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., SOLE IMPORTERS,
426 169 Broadway and 3 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

War Songs for Freemen.

Dedicated to the Army of the United States, with Appropriate Music, 20 cents. Comic Songs. A collection of National, Patriotic and Social Songs for the Volunteers, 12 cents. The above books contain each Words and Music. Copies will be sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

Swords, Sashes, Belts.

Wholesale and retail. Also, Presentation Swords
431-36 B. KITTRIDGE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

Royal Havana Lottery.

30 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest prize paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 11 Wall Street, N. Y.

$35. WATCHES. $35.

Genuine Full-Jewelled American Lever Watches, in 4 Ounce Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Gold Joints, for $35.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be prepaid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on goods.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
o 526 Broadway, N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

For Roofs, Outside Work, Decks of Steamers, Iron Work, Railroad Bridges, etc.
E. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Diarrhœa and Dysentery

WILL decimate the Volunteers far more than the bullets of the enemy, therefore let every man see to it that he carries with him a full supply of HOLLOWAY'S PILLS. Their use in India and the Crimea saved thousands of British soldiers.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT are very valuable, owing to the high price of Drugs, &c., at 30 cts., 70 cts., and $1 10 per Box or Pot. o

AMERICAN METALLIC COLLARS

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Choker," to Box 2173, and receive it by return mail.
AMERICAN ENAMELLED METALLIC COLLAR CO., 96 Pine Street, N. Y. o

Agents Wanted (Male or Female). Address HALE & CO., Newburyport, Mass. 0000

Great Chance to make Money!

$650,000 Watches, Jewelry

etc., to be sold with the NOVELTY PRIZE PACKET.

Agents can obtain a WATCH free by investing only $15.

We also offer SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS, $10 invested will yield $55. Such inducements have never been offered; full particulars in Circular.

G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
o 36 Beekman street, N. Y.

Munroe's Edition of Charlotte

TEMPLE, the most delightful ever written, sent postpaid on receipt of price 10 cts.
o GEORGE MUNROE & CO., 137 William street N.Y.

13 More Agents Wanted.

Business Light and Respectable! No Capital required! Salary according to Qualifies, $75 to $150 per Month, besides expenses. For Agents Instructions, samples of Goods, &c., address HOSEA B. CARTER & CO., Inventor's Exchange, Boston, Mass.

Wheeler & Wilson's Highest Premium

LOCK STITCH

Sewing Machines

$38-$70 No. 508 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Watches Given to All our Agents!
A GREAT CHANGE.

READER, delay not one moment, until you send for our New PRIZE STATIONERY PACKAGE Circular, whether you want it or not. It contains important information for everybody. Great inducement off'red to Agents
0000 WELLS & CO., 14 South-Ware St., Phila.

Shirts' Outgoest.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks or money refunded, Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. P. SHULTS Troy, N. Y.

A Beautiful Microscope for 30 Cts.,

MAGNIFYING 500 times, mailed on receipt of price. Five of different powers, $1. Address F. A. BOWEN, Box 230, Boston, Mass.

GOLD PENS AND CASES.

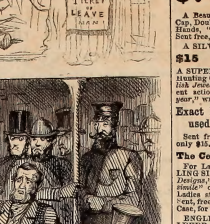
Retailed at wholesale prices. In 14k Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, all warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each Pen. Send for a Circular. Pens repointed and repaired at 25 cents.
438-470 E. S. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining instruction with Amusement, is mailed, prepaid, for $2 25; or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $3; with 24 Objects, $5, by

HENRY CRAIG,
325 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, prepaid, the Reflector, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Plaid Face, accommodating all ages, for $4; with 12 assorted views, $6. A liberal discount to the trade.

STAMMERING



And stuttering cured by Dr. Dascomb's Scientific Appliances. New (new Edition of) descriptive Pamphlets and Drawings, address o H. C. L. DEARS, 277 West 22d St., N. Y.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

ALL Articles for Soldiers at Baltimore A. Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry Newberne, Port Royal, and all other places should be sent 3 half rates, by HAKEDEN'S EXPRESS No. 74 Broadway. Bottles charged new rates. 0000

Dyspepsia Tablets.

For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by Druggists generally. 50 cents per box sent free on the receipt of 65 cents. Depot, 207 Centre Street, second floor. o

Or how a friend of ours, witnessing the performance of "The Ticket-of-Leave Man," and being moved to tears, is suspected all round of being an absconding defrauder, and watched in particular by the police.

GOLD WATCH FREE!

$15 Per Day Easy $15

100,000 men and women wanted to act as Agents in every Town, Village and Camp, to sell our universally popular, unexcelled and saleable EXTRA LARGE SIZE PRIZE PACKAGES, containing large quantities of STATIONERY, RECIPES, YANKEE NOTIONS, etc. Sells wonderfully. Only $1000. Largest, Best and Cheapest ever manufactured. Each Package contains more real valuable articles than any half dozen others ever sold, such as fine Writing Materials, Paper, Envelopes, Pens, Pencils, Blotters, Emblems, Ladies' Paris Fashion Plates, Designs for Needlework, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Companions, Camp Companions (for Soldiers), Parlor Amusements, Guide for Letter Writers, Many Ways to Get Rich, Likenesses of Generals, Gents' Pocket Calendars for the Year, Dime Dialogues, Language of Flowers, Games, Songs, Army Laws and Articles, Rich and Costly Presents, Gold Pens, Jewellery, etc., etc., etc., the whole worth MANY DOLLARS, if bought separately. Price each Package only 25 cents retail. Wholesale rates to Agents over 100, 100 to 200 per cent. profit. All orders GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE ARMY SAFE. All Soldiers are allowed to Smoke and Sell our Goods. A Splendid Gold or Silver Hunting Case Watch, English Movements, and Correct Timepiece, presented "free" to all who act as Agents. Send for our New Circulars for 1864, with full particulars, &c., &c.

S. C. HICKS & CO., 102 Nassau St. New York, the Great Original, Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World. Beware of imposters offering our Premiums. o

To Consumptives!

The Advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection and that dread disease, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, etc. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address
REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
0000 Williamsburg, King's Co., N. Y.

Salesmen Wanted.—Salary Paid. Address (with stamp) to Harris Bros., Boston, Mass. 438-470

BALLOU'S Patented French Yoke SHIRTS.

Warranted to fit, and to be CHEAPER for the same quality than those of any other firm known in this city.

Circular containing drawings and prices sent free.

F.Y.S.

For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the U. S.

BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, New York.

Attention, Company!

VOLUNTEERS who expect to retain their health unimpaired during the campaign must see to it themselves, do not trust to the Army Surgeons, supply yourselves with HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT. Every English Soldier's Knapsack contains them.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT are now reduced, owing to the high price of Drugs, &c., at 30 cts., 70 cts., and $1 10 per Box or Pot.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Lever Cap, Double Case, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Cu Hands, "Duplex Movements," Correct Timekeeper. Sent free, by mail, in a neat case, for only $7.

A SILVER WATCH, same as above, only $7.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15

A SUPERB "EXTRA DOUBLE GOLD-PLATED" Hunting Case Watch—Magic Spring—Genuine English Jewelled Movements—Equal Balance-Escapement action—Correct Timekeeper—"Warranted one year," will stand and, in an Exact Imitation of a $100 Gold Watch used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free, by mail, in Elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.

The Celebrated English Court Watch

For Ladies, Extra heavy Gold Plate on STERLING SILVER Hunting Cases, "Colour Reactions, Designs," Roby Movements, Carved Edges, a "Fac Simile" of the Costly article used by the English Ladies at "Court Levees." Warranted one year. Sent, free by mail, in Rich Embossed Turkey Morocco Case, for only $18.

ENGLISH STERLING SILVER Hunting Case LEVER WATCHES, Jewelled Movements, a Genuine article, only $18.

ENGLISH DUPLEX WATCHES, Fine Article, in Heavy Gold or Silver Cases, from $45 to $100 each. Watches of all descriptions for army use at Low Prices.

We are the Sole Importers of the above European Watches.

N. Y. Illustrated News says: Messrs Norton & Co., an old and reliable firm, offer a "Correct Timepiece," equal in appearance to $150 Watches, for only $15. We recommend them to our Soldiers in the field.

Address CHAS. F. NORTON & CO., Importers,
o 0 Ann Street, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready-Made or to Measure, at $3, $3½, $4 5 per doz

SELF-MEASUREMENT FOR SHIRTS.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3, $3 75 and $4 50 each, all cut one yard long. A single Shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 63 cents postage for each shirt.

Send the Size of your Neck also.

STEEL COLLARS

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last year with a preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a cloth.

To military men and Travellers they are invaluable. Price 63 cents; sent by mail to any part of the Union on the receipt of $1 13.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,
No. 387 Broadway, New York.

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, STEND and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address
438-470 CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

TOMES, SON & MELVAIN

6 Maiden Lane, New York,

Dealers in "Fire Arms" "Cutlery." "Sporting Articles" "Fancy Goods" Perfumery, Soap, Brushes, Meerschaum Pipes, etc., etc.

Military and Navy Equipments in every variety. A large assortment of

RICH PRESENTATION SWORDS.

34-70 Constantly on hand.

MUNN & COMPANY,

Solicitors of American & Foreign Patents,

AND PUBLISHERS OF THE ILLUSTRATED "SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN," 37 Park Row, New York.

Pamphlets of information about patents free. Specimen copies of the paper FREE.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE PERFECT GENTLEMAN;

Or, Etiquette and Eloquence.

A Book of Information and Instruction for those who desire to become Brilliant and Conspicuous in General Society; or at Parties, Dinners, or at Popular Gatherings. Containing Sensible Hints for all occasions, with Directions how to deliver them; 000 Toasts and Sentiments for everyone, and their proper mode of introduction: How to use Wine at Table; with Rules for judging the quality of Wine, and Rules for Carving; Etiquette, or proper Behavior in Company and Public. American Code of Politeness for every occasion; Etiquette at Washington, Receptions, Weddings, Conversation, Dancing, etc. To which is added, The Duties of a Chairman of a Public Meeting, with Rules for the Orderly Conduct thereof; together with Valuable Hints and Examples for Drawing up Preambles and Resolutions, and a great deal of instructive and amusing matter never before published. Hints, cloth, neatly 50 pages.

PRICE $1 25.

Published by DICK & FITZGERALD,
No. 18 Ann Street, N.Y.

Also for sale by all the booksellers in this place. Copies of the above book will be sent, by mail, free, on receipt of price, o

FRENCH FLANNEL DRAWERS SHIRTS

Dress Shirts TO MEASURE.

SIX SHIRTS $22, $15 & $18.

Dress Shirts, TO ORDER, are made a Perfect Fit, Superior Worm, and are Unequalled in Quality for the Price.

An extensive assortment of newly imported SCARFS, TIES, BOSOMS, HDKFS, GLOVES and HDKFSCHIEFS.

JAMES FARRISH, 325 Canal Street, New York

GREAT TRIUMPH.

STEINWAY & SONS, Nos. 82 and 84 Walker Street, N.Y., were awarded a FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.

The special correspondent of the New York Times says:

"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

THE STANDARD

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 440—Vol. XVII.] NEW YORK, MARCH 5, 1864. [Price 8 Cents.

A NEGRO REGIMENT REPULSING
An Attack of Rebels and Bloodhounds.

The use of bloodhounds in hunting down marcon negroes is too well known to need explanation or denunciation. It is one of the features of the system. Our Government once resolved to employ bloodhounds against the Seminoles, in Florida, but the public voice denounced the return to barbarism. Little did the rulers of the land then expe t to see bloodhounds used against soldiers fighting under the Stars and Stripes. But the use of colored regiments by the Government has led the insurrectionary leaders to employ hounds as auxiliaries. There have been several collisions between the sable troops and their enemies, but the negro Seeing for life, unarmed and unequipped, is a different being from the drilled soldier. An affair at Pocotaligo, in December, showed the uselessness of the canine auxiliaries of rebellion. As the rebels attacked the 1st South Carolina volunteers, the bloodhounds rushed upon them, but were soon shot or speared on the bayonets of the men, who held aloft, with no little exultation, the beasts that had been so long a terror to their race.

THE RECENT FEARFUL CONFLAGRATION AT GLOUCESTER, MASS.

The enterprising town of Gloucester has recently been desolated by a terrible conflagration sweeping away the Cape Ann Bank and nearly 100 stores and dwellings. This is the second time that Gloucester has suffered severely by conflagration. Early in the morning of the 16th Sept., 1830, fire broke out near the westerly end of Front street, and, sweeping westward, consumed 30 dwelling-houses and 40 stores and outbuildings, chiefly on the north side of Front street, being a portion of the same locality devastated by the present fire. The amount of property then destroyed was $150,000.

The late disastrous conflagration originated on Feb. 18, in Sawyer's block. It was first discovered about half-past three o'clock, in the upper part of the tailoring establishment of Andrew Elwel, jun. Some think incendiarism was the cause of the conflagration. The alarm was given about four o'clock, when the thermometer was six degrees below zero. The people rallied and did their best, but the flames swept along with fearful power. On the southerly side of Front street the fire was checked at Story's Building, which was saved. At seven o'clock the Selectmen and Engineers began to blow up buildings. An old paintshop, belonging to the Nathaniel Babson estate, was first blown up, then Tappan's Building, then Dr. Worcester's house, then Capt. Lowe's house, until six were destroyed.

There is no doubt that the Salem steam-engine prevented the fire from spreading any further westward after it arrived. The fire on the northerly side of Front street was checked at the Custom House, a brick and fireproof building, on the north-east corner of Pleasant and Front streets; and a change of the wind blowing over the burnt district stopped the flames at Dr. Garland's house. Everything between Front street and the wharves, as far east as Duncan street, was destroyed, with the exception of a black smith's shop.

It is fortunate that there were no accidents of a serious nature during the conflagration. There were rumors of casualties, but these could not be traced to any reliable source. One of the bakeries destroyed contained 300 barrels of flour. The burnt district extends from the fourth or fifth building west of the intersection of Centre street with Front street, and from Sawyer's block, nearly opposite Centre street, on the southerly side, along both sides of Front street, nearly 1,000 feet, and extends south to the wharves.

A large quantity of mackerel was destroyed, valued at $15,000, owned by Isaac Rich, of Boston, for the sale of which John Pew was agent. This large pile of fish was burning briskly when we left. But two vessels were burnt, the Gen. Scott, damaged about $1,500, and an old schooner which was of little value. The people of Gloucester manfully met the demand upon their fortitude caused by a terrible conflagration in bitterly cold weather. They used the means at hand with all the effect possible, and though the flames at one time mocked their utmost efforts, the inhabitants continued to work by such instrumentalities as they possessed, and thus much property was saved that would otherwise have been destroyed.

We learn that Capt. Lowe, the President of the Cape Ann Bank, obtained the keys of the building before the fire spread to it, and removed a large amount of U. S. Bonds and other securities to his residence. By his forethought the bank was thus saved from a heavy loss.

Among the curious incidents is the case of Mr. William Sargent, who lost the house in which he was born and had lived 83 years.

Our Special Artist, on learning of the disaster hastened to the spot, and from Story's building made the sketch which we present of the fearful desolation.

THE SANITARY FAIR AT BROOKLYN.

The city of Brooklyn, not to be outdone by other cities in the land, opens her great fair in behalf of the Sanitary Commission on the anniversary of Washington's birthday. The place selected is the Academy of Music, in Montague street, but a new and striking feature is "The New England Kitchen." The Committee say:

"The idea is to present a faithful picture of New England farmhouse life of the last century. The grand old fireplace shall glow again, the spinning-wheel shall whirl as of old, the walls shall be garnished with the products of the forest and the field, the quilting, the donation and the wedding-party shall assemble once more, while the appleparing shall not be forgotten, and the dinnertable, always set, shall be loaded with substantial New England cheer. The room will be of ample size for the accommodation of a large number of guests, for whose entertainment the best of materials, cooked in the best manner, will be served during the continuance of the fair."

To carry out this idea a building, on the other side of the street, has been secured, and connected with the Academy by a covered bridge. Our illustration shows the appearance of the street at present.

The ladies engaged in the good work in the City of Churches have already, in connection with their fair had an artists' reception and a promenade concert, the latter given by the 13th regiment N. Y. S. N. G., at their own expense, so that the entire proceeds go to the Commission.

THE WAR IN SOUTH CAROLINA—A NEGRO REGIMENT ATTACKED BY REBELS AND BLOODHOUNDS.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE.

At the artists' reception all the leading artists were well represented, G goonr, Durand, Cropsey, Huntington, Kensett, Rossiter, Inn es, D. D. Huntington, Rodrigues, Shattuck, E. Foster and others.

To-day and to-morrow the high character of the ladies managing it, and the feature following manifested by the citizens of Brooklyn, cannot fail to be most gratifying in its results.

Barnum's American Museum.

FOUR ENORMOUS GIANTS—Three men and one woman, each over eight feet high; two Dwarfs, each less than two feet high—besides a host of other novelties. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES afternoon and evening, at 2½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album.

Consisting of 33 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life, both in costume and outdoor costumes, representing Turks, Jews, Greeks, Armenians, Russians, Egyptian and Nubian beauties, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's Lectures.

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every drawing-room table. It is the most elegant and acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Cash only $3. Sent free, by mail on receipt of the price, by C. OSCANYAN,

No. 37 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

NEW YORK, MARCH 5, 1864.

All Communications Book s for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 72 Duane street, between Broadway and Ith. New York.

Posters supplied and subscriptions received for FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER; also FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR, for 1861, 1862, 1863. BRIDGE & CO., Proprietors of the London American, 190 Fleet Street, London, England. Single copies always on sale.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One copy one year	$3 00
Two copies one year, to one address	5 00
Four " " "	10 00
Magazine and paper one year	5 00

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

75 cents a line on the outside or last page.
60 " " on the 14th and 15th pages.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

Major Larmer, of the 5th Pennsylvania Reserves, was shot dead on Monday, 15th, in a skirmish with guerillas, two miles east of Brentsville. We lost in the skirmish, beside Major Larmer, three cavalry men killed and one wounded, and two prisoners. Lieut. Senddeter, Commissary of Col. McCandless's brigade, is supposed to be captured. Several of the rebels are said to have been killed or wounded, as Major's party were treacherously lured to the place.

Pleasanton reports the capture of 28 of Moseby's gang.

ALABAMA.

The 2d (rebel) Kentucky cavalry, formerly commanded by John Morgan, and the 3d (rebel) Alabama cavalry, formerly commanded by Gen. Withers, had a serious fight on the 9th inst., the circumstances of which are as follows: The force of several for which the 2d Kentucky enlisted, expires on the 2d of May next. On the 8th inst. they received an invitation from Gen. Joe Johnston to re-enlist. The regiment almost unanimously refused to do so, and Col. Woodward, Major Lewis and Capts. Elliott, Williams and Kreitzer, who had encouraged the men so to act, were subsequently arrested and placed in prison. At this the regiment mutinied, and were placed under guard of the 3d Alabama, whom they turned upon and whipped, killing and wounding 45 of them. The skirmishing only lost three killed and nine wounded, and succeeded in completely routing the Alabamians. The Kentuckians then scattered in all directions, some 10 of them, including a lieutenant, formerly on Stonewall Jackson's staff, arriving in Chattanooga the next day.

TENNESSEE.

Col. William Stokes' regiment had quite a fight near Lebanon, and another near Carthage, 30 days ago, in which it nearly annihilated a band of guerillas, the leader of which had the Federal oath of allegiance in his pocket, when killed. Some 72 were captured. The 10th Tennessee also captured a squad in Lincoln county, and the 12th Tennessee surprised and captured a small band near Shelbyville.

Reports from Tennessee state that deserters from the enemy's army are still very numerous. Longstreet, at last accounts, is said to be in full retreat.

MISSISSIPPI.

The reports from rebel papers of a fight near Clinton, Miss., on the 4th inst., are confirmed by officers from that point. Our troops charged the rebel battery, and lost 15 killed and 30 wounded. Among the wounded is Col. Rogers, of Illinois. The enemy were driven off, and our forces proceeded toward Jackson.

Gen. Sherman is announced to have reached the Mobile and Ohio railroad, and destroyed the bridges. Mobile papers make mention of a severe battle at Enterprise, Miss., on the railroad below Meridian, on the 13th, but with unknown results. The same papers also announce that Gen. Polk had been completely out-generalled by Sherman, who had got between Polk and Montgomery.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Col. Phillips, commanding the expedition in the Indian territory, reports to Gen. Thayer that he has driven the enemy entirely out of that region, and that, in several skirmishes, he had killed nearly 100 rebels, and captured one captain and 25 men.

GEORGIA.

Johnston has concentrated his troops at Dalton, extending his pickets to Ringgold. The retreat of Longstreet, and the cutting off of Polk, exposes him to an attack from Grant.

FLORIDA.

Brig.-Gen. F. Seymour, conveyed by the gunboat Norwich, Capt. Merriam, ascended the St. John's river on the 7th inst., and landed at Jacksonville on the afternoon of that day.

The advance, under Col. Guy V. Henry, comprising the 40th Massachusetts infantry, the Independent Battalion of Massachusetts cavalry, under Major Stevens, and Elder's Horse battery, 1st artillery, pushed forward into the country on the road to Lake City, passed by the enemy drawn up in line-of-battle at Camp Finnegan, seven miles from Jacksonville, surprised and captured a battery three miles in the rear of the camp about midnight, and reached this place about sunrise this morning.

At our approach the enemy absconded, sunk the steamer St. Marys, and burned 270 bales of cotton in the streets of Jacksonville. We have taken, without the loss of a man, about 100 prisoners, eight pieces of artillery, in serviceable condition and well supplied with ammunition, and other valuable property to a large amount.

ARKANSAS.

Col. Chandler, Provost-Marshal-General, furnishes some interesting statistics. Up to this date nearly 2,400 citizens have taken the oath of allegiance at this point; 5,000 privates and 11 commissioned officers of the rebel army have also taken the oath, and of these over 500 have entered the Union army.

NAVAL.

The navy department receives official intelligence of the destruction of four blockade-runners, the Nutfield, the Dee, the Emily and the Fanny and Jenny. The last was captured once before as the Scotia, condemned and sold, but bought by the parties in interest and sent to Halifax. In endeavoring to escape from her this time, her Captain Coxetter, a native of British provinces, and the first privateer who sailed under that colors.

A British blockade-runner, the Cumberland, has also been captured by the steamer De Soto. The Cumberland had a valuable cargo, consisting of gunpowder, Enfield rifles and uniforms, boots, &c., for the rebels, valued in all at about £70,000 sterling.

From May, 1861, to Oct. 1863, 866 vessels have been captured or destroyed, for violating the blockade or in battle. Of these 696 were sailing vessels, of all sizes, and 170 steamers.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 15th of February, a bill defining the rank, duty and pay of the captain who is referred to as the navy to that of a major of infantry; hold religious meetings twice a week, and keep their libraries for soldiers use. The Enrollment bill was called up, and the Senate by a decisive vote refused to recede from its position. A Committee of Conference must, therefore, be had.

In the House Mr. Arnold offered a resolution declaring that the Government should by no amended laws establish and prohibit slavery wherever it exists." Mr. Holman moved to lay the resolution on the table. Agreed to—yeas 78, nays 67. Mr. Arnold's resolution was adopted; yeas 78, nays 62. The House then took up the Senate's amendments to the Enrollment bill. Mr. Stevens moved concurrence in the Senate's amendments, which, he said, were a better revenue measure than the bill as it passed the House. He explained the amendments at length. Fernando Wood replied, and the debate was continued, without voting, until the hour of adjournment. Mr. Davis, from the Select Committee reported a bill giving certain States, whose Govern ments have been usurped or overthrown, a Republican form of Government. It provides for the appointment of Provisional Governors, charged with civil administration, until, by means of elections, the State Government can be re-established; all slaves in such territory are declared free, and any person hereafter in the rebel public service is declared not to be a citizen of the United States. The bill is laid over to be printed.

In the Senate, on the 16th, on the motion of Mr. Lane, of Kansas, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill setting apart certain lands in Texas for the use of persons of African descent. Mr. Lane addressed a few remarks in support of his bill. The bill is for all soldiers the same pay as the whites.

Mr. Wilkinson presented that the bill would take effect on the 1st of March next. Mr. Garrett Davis proposed to lay on the table any paper now unacquainted as soldiers, and if any shall hereafter be employed it shall only be as laborers or teamsters, and if they are slaves their owners shall be paid just compensation by the United States, and if any slave is lost in the service the full value of him shall be paid to the owner on proof to the State Treasury. Mr. Davis addressed the amendment in a speech. Without vote the House adjourned.

In the House the time was occupied by an interesting discussion as to the status of a seceded State. The State was considered by Mr. Cornell Reverse fell over their taken up. That one feeling to put a tax on whiskey was passed by a vote of 75 to 68. The spirit grade was also voted down 80 to 63. The bill now stands on liquor made up to July, and 80 cents after that. The amendment making an additional tax per gallon on adulterated spirits was agreed to. The House being unable to agree on the question relating to the tax on whiskey, the subject was referred to a Committee of Conference.

In the Senate, on the 17th, Mr. Brown (Mo.), offered a joint resolution proposing the abolition and prohibition of slavery throughout the land. Referred to Select Committee. Mr. Sumner offered amendments to the Constitution as a substitute for those reported by the Judiciary Committee a few days ago. These amendments prohibit slavery in the United States; provide that all persons born and not owing allegiance to any foreign power shall be naturalized citizens of the United States; and forbid the payment of any debt or obligation incurred in the aid of rebellion or for the emancipation of negro slaves to their masters. A bill was introduced to increase the pensions of officers. Gen. McClellan's report was accepted.

In the House the Committee of Ways and Means reported leave to introduce a resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell, from time to time, bonds to the amount of $200,000,000, to be issued and required to pay the interest on the National debt.

In the Senate, on the 18th, Mr. Lane, from the Committee o Conference on the part of the Senate on the Enrollment bill, made a report, which, after a partial reading, was ordered to be printed, and made the order of the day for to-morrow. It proposes that the $300 commutation is agreed to, with a proviso that the draft shall not be stayed longer than a year, and at the expiration of that time such persons shall again be liable to draft. The bill as reported also frees colored persons who may be drafted. It provides that such persons shall be assigned as State troops, but shall be mustered into the service as United States troops. Mr. Lane's bill for organization was passed authorizing the transfer from the loan to the navy fund of such sums as have been paid for seamen as the President may deem necessary.

In the House there was no business transacted of public interest, the time being taken up in considering the bill authorizing the sale of gold. It was finally passed by a vote of 94 to 66. It now goes back to be reported again to-day.

In the Senate, on the 19th, Mr. Foster introduced a bill to provide for the trading of absconded lands, commonly called "Confiscated lands," and for the care and employment of persons freed by the proclamation. Mr. Sumner moved the action of the Secretary of the Treasury in appointing supervising agents, and reported a joint resolution to that effect, so far as it may not interfere with the purposes of the Enrollment bill. Mr. Sumner then took up the report of the Committee of Conference on the Enrollment bill, and explained the provisions of the measure in support. After full discussion the bill was passed—32 ayes to 13 noes.

In the House the committee having in charge the New York Custom-House Investigation, were submitted to take further time. Mr. Van Horn of New York, introduced a resolution declaring that the action of the President in authorizing enlistments in the rebel States, and transfers by the President from the loan to the naval service. Mr. Stevens, for the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back the resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell, with a recommendation against its passage. No action was taken on it. The report of the Committee of Conference on the Enrollment bill was agreed to by of 70 yeas to 23 nays.

FOREIGN.

From Europe we learn that the united forces of Germany, including contingents from Austria and Saxony, are in actual conflict with Denmark. Hostilities commenced on the 1st inst., when the Prussian Field Marshal Austria crossed the Elder and entered the territory of Schleswig. This was followed by a movement against the Danish fortifications of the Dannewerk situated on the rivers Schlei and Sorge. The Prussians attacked the works at Missunde very vigorously, and succeeded in carrying them after a severe contest. Some hundreds were killed and wounded on both sides. On the 2d inst. the Austrians attacked the Danes at Brisdorf, on which their Prussian batteries had fired during the night. The Danes retired to Eckrafford bay, and the Danes had embarged the German shipping in the Baltic.

The British Parliament was opened on the 4th of Feb. The Queen's speech was delivered by commission, and it declares that the relations in peace, despite the unpromising aspect of the Schleswig-Holstein imbroglio. No allusion is made to the war in America. Indications are that there will soon flow into England from various channels.

THE IDLER ABOUT TOWN.

THE Lenten season is never very favorable to the success of opera or operatic speculations; but when we add to this religious period a snap of cold, such as we have been favored with of late, it may well be believed that our musical managers have to struggle through a pretty hard time. Still we hardly think that Max Maretzek's Crystal Palace will be fashionable attendance as the past week has shown at the Academy of Music. In our opera-going letter last week were "Les Ballo Masches," "Il Poliuto," "Faust," and, at the matinée on Saturday, "Norma." The first representation was worthy of a special mention—that of "Il Poliuto" particularly so. We have rarely listened to a more impressive and thrilling than the rendering of the celebrated duo by Medori and Mazzoleni; they seemed worked up to a high pitch of excitement, and their whole souls into the vocal and dramatic effort, and their performance elicited a like enthusiasm on the part of the audience. "Faust," of course, attracted a brilliant and overflowing audience, and one that seemed to linger with delight upon each charming morceau in that most charming opera. We are rarely favored to hear so fine a cast, and our judgment strong in our first impression; and our judgment differing materially from many of our critical brethren, has proved the public judgment after all. Its popularity is steadily on the increase, and the influence of its beauties is more widely spread, and the largeness of the audiences may be accounted for by the fact that the casual visitors who heard it on the first night continue to attend each of its performances, and their influence continually extracts the circle of its admirers. "Faust" is the success, par excellence, of the season, and will continue the trump card for a very long time to come. This week is to be signalized by two important events at the Academy of Music—the appearance of our favorite tenor, Bergmann, and the debut of a Miss Harris, a young aspirant for the honors and emoluments of a prima donna, in the character of Linda. Le Luc di Lammermoor, Robert, speaks strongly in favor of the young lady.

It is said, by-the-by, that the musical enthusiasts of Providence, R. I., have raised a subscription large enough to induce Monsieur Maretzek to vouchsafe to that ancient city a short opera season. This is an example of plack worthy of imitation—if it is true.

We regret to say that the English Opera Company, regarding which we have been so earnest, has broken up, the speculation not being sufficiently remunerative to warrant a continuance of operations. We have had some hopes that the affair could have been profitably carried on, but the season has been brought into thoroughly working order, and the attention of the public directed to the fact of its existence, and even the probability of its permanency. But it was to be expected that a London opera company, as a whole, exists no longer. Such an undertaking, to be a success, must be the result of years of study and rehearsal, and one man, unless he has a great deal of money to lose, is much against it. With the preliminary outlay would absorb a small fortune, if the repertoire of three or four operas was to be changed, as it would be, in a few months in advance of the first performance. To compete with the attractions of Italian Opera, it should be, at least, of a character to compare with it. Nothing of the kind has been done in the present case. The utmost exaggerate such a speculation is evidently now, but the public will not be slow to be deceived. We consider that Mr. Castle, Mr. Campbell and Mr. J. R. Thomas have all the elements necessary for a reliable in such an organization, and with Miss Kellogg and Miss Annie Milner (a young lady from the Opera Comique) that could not be excelled either here or in England, but under the most favorable circumstances, it would be a hazardous undertaking to conduct to our readers, for the popularity of Gottschalk is so deep-seated in the hearts of the people, that every interest in all he does is so keen and general, that the rapid crowd to hear him wherever and whenever he is announced to play. His hold upon the public is not that of the mere musician, but of the performer who would have satisfied curiosity and satiated the appetite long ago, but he has a nationality in figure of his genius; he that marked individuality which he thrusts all his work. He has a fertile and a fanciful ous imagination, which is now decidedly exquisitely beautiful in the delicacy of impassioned, and up to his order, plaintive and untearful. These are the secrets of Gottschalk's charm, and which will be continued as a genius while in many ways, all must admire, even by those who cannot feel for it passion, he gives two more concerts at Niblo's Saloon next week.

The Academy of Music will be the scene of a grand Concert takes place at Irving Hall next Saturday evening, 27th inst. He will be assisted by other artists, and his programme is one of rare interest. The sale of seats for this grand and charming treat will assuredly crowd the hall on this occasion.

The Complimentary Benefit tendered to Mr. J. F. Harrison, will take place at Irving Hall, on Saturday afternoon, March 5th. It is a well-earned one, as the many claims which Mr. Harrison's energy, tact and literary ability have upon the support and support of the public and the profession, and we are glad to learn that the first are moving in the matter with activity to do honor and profit to the cause. The list of assisting artists will be a most imposing one, and in addition, and the programme of a character that will please all. We hope to see a full house on that evening Hall will richly accommodate the crowd that will gather to see Mr. Harrison benefited.

The German opera has migrated to Philadelphia, where it is said to be meeting success and making a great deal of money. Speke's fine opera, "Jessonda," was produced with marked success last week.

The Gran Italian opera company has been successfully performing at the Academy of Quebec. They closed a successful season at Chicago last week, and played one night at St. Louis.

The great public impressario, the by-gone admiral of the Academy of Music, is traveling on the Continent in the suite of Mdlle. Carlotta Patti, whose success at Brussels was very encouraging.

A new opera, under the title of "Mireille," by Gounod, has been produced at the beautiful opera, "Faust," is to be produced at the Theatre Lyrique, and is already about to be put in rehearsal.

Harry Sanderson gave his farewell concert at Hamilton Hall, which was a good one, evening. When he comes to exchange his Spanish gold for greenbacks he will find a greatly lessened value in them.

Miss Bateman, who has made all the success we predicted in London, has been engaged by Mr. Lenox for 100 nights at the Olympic Theatre, to crowded audiences. Miss Bateman's new engagement to Colonel Leslie can hardly hope to see the young actress for years to come.

"Pocahontas" at Wallack's Theatre, is now a text-book of the past season to encourage and interest children, and it is a most wonderfully successful. "Rosedale" has run its course, and the new piece, "Taming a Butterfly," is about to be produced. Mr. Lester Wallack will be absent from the city for a few days. The process of the performance given by the children of the Public Schools has now reached nearly 1,000 dollars. This was from the one benefit alone. Mr. Wallack declined nothing a free gift of Mr. Wallack, who devoted nothing if not a share of his time and energies.

Niblo's Theatre is once more opened for the legitimate drama, and Mr. Lingard announces, literally by no cats this week as "Lucretia Borgia." It is followed by "Lucrezia Borgia," and "The Doge's Wife." It is proposed with this arrangement to run the house every night, with, of course, a change of bill every evening. Next week, Mose Herbigg, will be the great attraction. Mose is a favorite with the house, and will produce Augustin Adams's pleasant comedy of "Mose in China" and other pieces.

"The Ticket-of-Leave Man" is still drawing crowded houses at Winter Garden, and is announced for another fortnight's run. The cast is the same as when it was first brought out, and follows by the Ravens and Miss Ada Clifton, who are the favorites of the place, and present a comfortable little piece of entertainment. The ballet during the piece is worth $5 000 to the English author, Tom Taylor, if he gets only a per cent.

The successful "Colleen Bawn" is still drawing crowded houses at Laura Keene's. It is announced to be withdrawn next week to make room for the new play by Augustin Daly, entitled "Taming a Butterfly," founded from the French play of "Separate Dolly." Mr. Lester Wallack, Jr., Frank Wood, and Frank Wood, Jr., are to appear in the piece.

Barnum is still great upon dimes, and by no means small upon crowds. These dimes, if many more are seen to attract more than one thousand a day, and the receipts from them will be a remarkable curiosity. The Japanese Model is the great feature of the Museum and so is the West Indian Family. The latter is a most interesting exhibition that it is impossible to see in a hundred-odd parts of the Museum. The play of Lecture Room is a new and thrilling drama, called "Miriam's Crime." It is said to be of deep interest.

Miss Avonia Jones, the fame of whose representations has reached us from all parts of the world, will make her debut before a New York audience, at Winter Garden early in next April. If her histrionic abilities bear any proportion to the praise she has elicited in other places, her success in this city will equal her most sanguine expectations.

It is expected that on Shakespeare's Birthday, in April next, every theatre open in the Union will devote the proceeds of that night's performance for the benefit of the New York Dramatic Fund Society. If this expectation is realised, it will recuperate the Fund of that noble Institution which has done so large an amount of good, but which, from various causes, has found its means of doing good greatly diminished of late. Let no one be backward in working for the good cause.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The Post-Office Department of Canada having, for the sake of uniformity, consented to so modify the postal arrangement between the United States and Canada of 1851, as to establish a uniform postage for letters of 10 cents the single rate between Canada and all parts of the United States, it is ordered by Postmaster-General Blair that in future the international postage charge upon all letters between Canada and any part of the United States shall be 10 cents the single rate for half an ounce or under, prepayment optional, without regard to difference of distance or route of conveyance.

—— The price of gold for the past week has been at an average of 160.

—— The Union officers, who lately escaped from Richmond, speak in the highest terms of the kindness shown to them by the negroes in their route from the rebel capital to Williamsburg. When it is borne in mind the vindictiveness of the slaveholders had they been detected some idea may be formed of their courage and fidelity.

—— It is gratifying to see how warmly the people throughout the loyal North are responding to the benevolent movement of the Sanitary Commission. The fairs in connection with this work have already produced large sums. The Ladies' Fair held at Cincinnati, after paying enormous expenses, realized no less than the net sum of $220 000; that of Boston netted $150,000; while those soon to be held in New York and Brooklyn will probably exceed the munificence of any other State. The State of New Jersey will, with a magnanimous ignoring of self, combine with New York. Jersey city is stirring, and Hoboken has organised a committee, which will, doubtless, do its utmost. The absence however, of the best names will somewhat neutralise its activity.

—— There has been a short correspondence between Mayor Gunther and John Brice, Chairman of the Washington Celebration Committee. Upon the latter writing to know if Mayor Gunther would preside on the festive occasion, his honor declined, not out of any disrespect to Washington, but simply with a view to rebuke the growing extravagance of the city authorities. The Mayor says: "As estimated by you in the personal interview had yesterday, it is designed to give a grand dinner to the heads of the departments and the members of both Boards of the Common Council. In time past, when, perhaps the memory of Washington was held in quite as much veneration as at present, it was considered liberal in the Common Council to appropriate a few hundred dollars on Washington's birthday to regale the old soldiers of 1812, and then the military of the city vied with each other in patriotic displays; but of late years it has become fashionable to appropriate thousands of dollars of public money on such occasions, for what can scarcely be considered less than selfish indulgences. I should be glad, for one, to see the Common Council in this respect take a few steps backwards."

Western.—The people of Tennessee are coming en masse for the Union. Meetings are now being held throughout the State to that effect. The resolutions are strongly denunciatory of secession. On the slavery question they generally admit that the slaveowners have struck the suicidal blow against the peculiar institution, and gradual emancipation is now inevitable.

Military.—Provost-Marshal Townsend has received a communication from Col. Fry informing him that districts will be credited on the call for 500,000 men with all enlisted from the 7th July, 1863, to March 9th, 1864, and with all drafted men who have responded in person, by commutation or substitutes.

—— The quota of Jersey City under the last calls has been made up, and the men mustered in and the bounties paid. Hoboken, Hudson City, Harrison, North Bergen, Union, West Hoboken and Weehawken, not having offered any inducements, are still without their required number of men.

—— The 1st New York cavalry were entertained in the Jefferson Market hall on the 18th Feb. In the course of the evening Gen. McClellan entered the room, when he was most enthusiastically received by the soldiers. He was compelled to make a short speech in which he complimented them on their past services and hoped once more to lead them to victory. This regiment, which is here on a furlough, have re-enlisted.

—— A Court-Martial was convened at Memphis, Tenn., at which Lieut.-Col. William D Bowen, 10th Missouri cavalry volunteers, was tried for maliciously and wilfully shooting and killing Col. Florence M. Cornyn, of the same regiment, on or about the 10th of August, 1863. To this charge Lieut. Col. Bowen pleaded not guilty, and after a trial the court found him "not guilty as charged, the homocide being justifiable." The prisoner was therefore acquitted. To this finding Gen. Hurlbut protested, and his protest was published in full in General Orders, No. 63, Vicksburg, Oct. 14, 1863. Gen. Grant, therefore, disapproved of the finding of the court, and dismissed Lieut. Col. Bowen from the service.

Naval.—The Nova Scotia Legislature wants a chance at the Chesapeake case. On a motion to call for all the documents Mr. Bourinot complained that the Confederates had been unjustly shut out from the privilege of asserting and supporting their rights; that a personal messenger was dispatched to Richmond, but had not returned; and in the mean time the Judge had delivered a final decree. The Government replied that all communications from the imperial authorities were strictly confidential, and could not be produced.

—— The United States District Attorney has entered a final decree of distribution of the proceeds arising from the sale of the prize steamer Merrimac and cargo, amounting to $191,038. The United States gunboat Iroquois, the captor, alone shares. The Navy Department purchased the vessel on appraisement for $65 000.

—— The Alabama was lying in 50 miles south of Rangoon, India, on the 5th of January—very positive proof that she was not blockaded at Amoy, China, on the 2d of the month. She was watching for American vessels engaged in the rice and other Eastern trades.

—— The Red'Italia has made another trip to sea and back—the experiment was a brilliant success. With only 20 pounds of steam its average speed was 12½ knots an hour. It is considered by many as the fastest ironclad vessel afloat.

—— The correspondent of a Boston paper writing from Paris says: "You must not be surprised if you hear of a conflict between the Kearsarge and the two pirate ships now in French ports. It is confidently asserted by naval men here that both of them will attack her at the same time.

Personal.—Isaac Vanhouten, of Sugar Loaf, Orange county, says the Goshen Democrat, has sold his farm containing about 145 acres, to the proprietor of the New York Evening Post, for $70 per acre. The Robert Roy Farm, near Sugar Loaf, containing 70 acres, sold soon after to Mr. Isaac Vanhouten for $80 per acre.

—— Gen. Benham, who was recalled from his command in South Carolina on account of the battle of James Island, has been restored to his rank.

—— Mr. J. W. Taylor, late curator of the State Cabinet of Natural Curiosities in Albany, delivered a lecture on Geology before the Mercantile Library on the 19th February. It was a very able and conclusive discourse.

—— Wm. M. Stone, the new Governor of Iowa, was once a canal driver between Roscoe and Cleveland, Ohio, at $3 a month.

—— Miss Sallie Partington, once so great a favorite when Brougham had the Bowery Theatre, is now the chief attraction at the Richmond Theatre.

—— Capt. Stephen Hoyt, a native of Salem, Mass., has just been appointed by Major-Gen. Banks Mayor of the city of New Orleans. Capt. Hoyt served with distinction as an officer in the Mexican war, at the close of which he repaired to St. Louis, Mo., and engaged in commercial pursuits. He filled several offices of municipal honor in St. Louis, including those of City Comptroller and Mayor. In the early part of the rebellion he was appointed a commissary in the volunteer service, and served in that capacity during campaigns in Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee and other States. He lately held the post of supervising commissary and member of the staff of Gen. Banks. The people of New Orleans are to be congratulated upon having so worthy and capable a chief magistrate.

Obituary.—Gen. Wm. Duncan, an old resident of Philadelphia, died last week in the 92d year of his age. He was born and educated in Adams county, was a warm friend of Robert Morris, the great financier of the Revolution, was Brigadier-General of Pennsylvania Volunteers in 1812, was a member of the State Legislature, and held various other places of trust.

—— Mr. George W. Newell died suddenly at Albany last week. He was the Barnburner Canal Auditor in 1851–52, and at the time of his death was engaged in preparing a biography of Gov. Marcy.

—— Theodore Barnard, the correspondent of the Associated Press, with the Army of the Potomac, died at the headquarters of that army on the 18th of February.

—— Mrs. Henry Wood, wife of Mr. Wood of the minstrels, died at Yorkville on the 18th February. She was a lady deeply respected by all who knew her, and remarkable for her numerous charities.

—— James C. Willet, Ex-Sheriff of the County of New York, died at Tubby Hook on the 19th February, in his 54th year. When a young man he was connected with the Sheriff's office, known as a consistent Democrat, and always stood high with the party. Subsequently he was chosen Sheriff, and occupied that position from 1856 to 1859. He was highly esteemed as a friend and as a citizen. His father was an old resident of New York, and carried on business at the corner of Beekman and Cliff streets as far back as 1820. Mr. Willet's family were of the Society of Friends, and were, highly respected in this community.

Accidents and Offences.—The seaport town of Gloucester, Mass., was nearly destroyed by fire, on the 18th Feb.; 50 stores, the Advertiser office, town-clerk's and telegraph office, three lawyer's offices, Freemason's lodge and 15 dwellings were burned. Forty families are houseless. The loss will probably reach $400,000. Owing to the absence of vessels, the loss of this property is trifling. The ruins cover one-half the principal streets and wharves.

—— The floor in Barracks, No. 2, at Nashville, gave way on Feb. 13, precipitating to the ground a number of soldiers who were crowded together on their way to dinner. Ten or twelve were badly bruised, but not seriously injured.

—— Adam Segur, indicted for the murder of his wife, and who was on the point of being tried for the crime, committed suicide in his cell, at Trenton. He hung himself by his bedclothes.

—— A German at St. Louis being told by a neighbor that he had broken one of the city laws in the discharge of firearms, insisted on being arrested, jugged and tried for his offence. He complained against himself at the trial, but the judge acquitted him.

—— Dr. Dennis, of 6 Bleeker street, was arrested on the 18th Feb., charged with having performed an operation for abortion on Ann Killean, which resulted in her death.

—— On Friday, the 12th Feb., some rowdies attacked a party of soldiers at Saratoga Springs with clubs and revolvers. A general fight took place, in which Capt. Hudson, of the 25th New York cavalry, shot one of the ruffians, named Graham. The respectable inhabitants of Saratoga entirely justify the deed. The deceased bore a very bad character.

—— The extensive repair shops of the New Jersey Railroad Company, at East Newark, together with several cars, have been destroyed by fire.

—— A very destructive fire occurred at Leavenworth, Kansas, on the 19th Feb., which destroyed property to the amount of $150,000.

—— An accident occurred near Granville, Vt., on the Rutland and Washington railroad, by which the engineer was killed, the fireman fatally, and a few others slightly injured.

Foreign.—The advices from San Domingo represent the Spaniards as being in terrible straits. They have been severe sufferers from sickness, and of the 12,000 men who composed the first army that landed at St. Domingo scarcely any remain in the field. Vessels constantly arrive at Havana and other Cuban ports with hundreds of the disabled troops. Another army of 30,000 men is to be sent to replace the first, and the money and men for conducting further the despotic scheme of subjecting the Dominicans, which Spain seeks to carry out, are to be furnished in the main by Cuba. There seems to be no doubt that Spain has undertaken to accomplish something in which she is sure to be unsuccessful.

—— A certain Giuseppe Gallo, got into an altercation with a priest at San Fernandino, Naples, which collected a crowd, who took the priest's part and beat the unfortunate Gallo in a horrible manner. As he lay on the ground dying, he begged of a woman standing near to call a confessor, but she, snatching up a club, beat out his brains.

—— A "brilliant effect" is produced by the new candelabra dance in the ballet "Morgano," performed at the Berlin opera. About 40 "gentlemen of the ballet" appear in fancy costumes, each wearing a golden candlestick with five flames, on his head. The striking impression the various groupings of the 200 splendid lights produce is said to be beyond description.

—— At Rainhill Lunatic Asylum, near Liverpool, recently, a virulent disease broke out among the pigs kept at the asylum. Wishing to "turn an honest penny," the steward of the establishment sold 80 of the sick porkers to a butcher, who transformed them into sausages, which were all eaten by the people of Liverpool. "A sensation" has been created in that city by the discovery.

—— In a record of births published in an English paper (the Ripon and Richmond Chronicle), recently, the following announcement appeared: "On the 3d inst., at Ellington, the wife of Mr. Thomas Terry, schoolmaster, of a son. He spoke indistinctly, but was understood to say that, on the 3d inst., at Bondgate, Ripon, the wife of Mr. Joseph Lonsdale, tailor, of a daughter." The fault of the types.

—— At a select ball given by the Empress Eugenie, at the Tuileries, evening of Jan. 26, her majesty was attired in a white dress shot with gold, and with gold fringe at the bottom of the skirt and at the upper part of the corsage. A belt of gold encircled her waist. Her head dress was in green velvet, ornamented with diamonds and emeralds, and the necklace formed of several rows of pearls with drops of emeralds.

—— A case was recently tried in the Divorce Court, London, in which the petitioner was a Mr. Thomas C. Lloyd, who brought a suit for divorce on the ground of adultery committed by his wife with one Lionel Jobert, or "Count Epineul," who was represented as having formerly been in command of a Haytian war-steamer, but more recently in the military service of the United States. It seems that Jobert, or Epineul, while commander of the steamer, and lying at Madeira, induced the wife of Lloyd to come on board the vessel and sailed away with her.

—— The Telegraphic Journal announces that, from prudential motives, the Atlantic Telegraph Company have postponed the laying of the Atlantic cable until next year.

—— The Canadian Parliament opened on the 19th. The Governor-General made quite a lengthy speech in which he says he has given his attention to the reciprocity treaty, and that Parliament will be called upon to devise measures for improving the inland water communication from the western lakes to the St. Lawrence.

Chit-Chat.—A rebel clerk complains, in a letter to the Richmond Whig that his salary of $1 800 a year will only procure bread and butter for himself and wife.

—— From 1691 to 1853 there has been paid in interest on the national debt of England £2 287,226,562, or nearly three times the present amount of the national debt; and as to a great portion of it, the nation has been bound to pay £100 for £60 borrowed.

—— Vavasseur & Co., of London, boast that they made the shot that sunk the Keokuk.

—— Everybody has heard of the famous letters that passed between the adverse chiefs of Sir O'Connell and Tyrone, the most laconic correspondence in history:

"Pay me my tribute, or if you don't—
"O'CONNELL."
"I owe you no tribute, and if I did—
"O'NEILL."

MILTON.

BY TENNYSON.

OH mighty-mouthed inventor of harmonies,
Oh skill'd to sing of Time or Eternity,
God-gifted organ-voice of England,
Milton, a name to resound for ages;
Whose Titan angels, Gabriel, Abdiel,
Starred for Jehovah's gorgeous armories,
Tower, as the deep-domed empyrean
Rings to the roar of an angel onset—
Me rather all that bowery loveliness,
The brooks of Eden mazily murmuring,
And bloom profuse and cedar arches
Charm as a wanderer out in ocean,
Where some refulgent sunset of India
Streams o'er a rich ambrosial ocean isle,
And crimson-hued the stately palmwoods,
Whisper in odorous hights of even.

THE SPOTTED SNAKE:

AN ADVENTURE IN AUSTRALIA.

BY A RETURNED AUSTRALIAN.

IT is not an agreeable thing to be left alone in an Australian forest. There is such an intense solitude in the thought of being miles away from all human habitations and the haunts of men that the mind of the strongest becomes for a time affected; and although he may be as bold as a lion in danger, yet the deep quietude of a forest sensibly affects him and causes his heart to beat with unusual rapidity. At least such was my case when I had completed the repairs of my saddle-girth. While I was occupied with the work I had not given my companions a thought; but now that I was at leisure I found myself listening most eagerly for the sound of their horses' footsteps, and wondering if they were far off, for, to tell the truth, I did not like my position. We were following on the trail of a desperate bushranger; and it was not difficult to imagine that the woods contained a number of such gentry, any one of whom would think but little of taking my life, horse, arms and clothing, and leave my body as food for the wild dogs, whose shrill barks I could hear in a distant part of the forest.

But I did not meet with any mishap. I saw nothing more formidable than insects, and they punched away at me until I was forced to cover my face and hands with stuff which I had brought with me from Melbourne. It was a species of fine, heavy lace, and did some good, but the mosquitoes made the air vocal with their cries at the idea of being foiled, and they did not neglect a single point where an attack promised success. Suddenly my horse plunged, and after staggering on, fell dead. He had been stung by the deadly spotted snake. Taking my saddle I attempted to reach a place of shelter.

In a few minutes it was so dark that I could not see my hand before my eyes, although held close to my face. The wild dogs had already found the body of the horse, and were barking themselves hoarse in their struggles for a supper; and as the music threatened to continue all night, I did not anticipate much sleep. But I laid down at last, put my head on the saddle, placed my revolver and bowieknife so that I could use them at a second's notice, and then commenced counting the stars, a few of which I could see, their light stealing through the branches of the balsam trees, and twinkling a merry good-night to many a poor fellow who was in a worse position than myself, if such a thing were possible.

While I was napping just a little, I suddenly heard something rustle near the bushes, as though a creeping body was passing over dry branches and moving in my direction. I knew what it meant; but I can't say that I was prepared for it. It was so dark that I could see nothing even if I moved, and there was as much danger in leaving my present position as there was in remaining and waiting for something to turn up. Perhaps my heart beat a little faster, and I felt a little nervous, but can't say that I was really frightened, although my position was far from pleasant, with mosquitoes in the air and a snake on the ground—lost in a forest and not an ounce of bread to eat or a drop of brandy to drink, and a mighty small stock of tobacco to smoke.

Suddenly the reptile that was causing the dry branches and leaves to rustle ceased its motions and seemed to listen, as though waiting for definite information respecting my whereabouts. For ten minutes there was a profound silence, with the exception of the quarrel of the wild dogs which were making a feast over the remains of the dead horse.

I began to doze, but was awakened in an instant by a rustling sound. This time it was nearer than before, so I hurled a dry stick in the direction of the sound, and the reptile remained quiet for a moment and then recommenced its movements. I could not keep quiet while threatened in such a manner. I lighted a match and set fire to a dry branch which I had provided before dark to act as a torch. The resinous wood burned brightly, the flame attracted clouds of mosquitoes which dashed into the fire with a buzz, as though in search of fresh blood and fell victims to their own rapacity.

With a revolver in one hand and a torch in the other I started off to search for the reptile that dared to disturb my meditations. I looked under the bushes and in the bushes, but not the least sign of a snake could I see; and after a search which lasted a quarter of an hour, I put out my torch and went back to my hard bed.

I certainly had got rid of the reptile. I lay down and listened for ten minutes; all was quiet. There was no more rustling of leaves and crackling of dry branches. The snake had left me for other quarters, as I supposed; so sleep closed my eyelids, and I dreamt of grotesque and horrible things, and at last awakened with a start, and to the fact that I was quite chilly, and that on my heart, apparently curled up for warmth, and nestled as near the flesh as possible, was a living thing—the snake that had troubled me before I fell asleep. I did not dare to stir; for if I did, I feared that I should receive a deadly wound; and if the customer on my breast was a spotted snake, a speedy death was certain, even if the skin was but grazed. It might be some other kind of snake, but it was not likely it was a harmless one, for but few reptiles that inhabit the dense woods of Australia are innocent of poison.

Although I was quite chilly when I awoke, yet no sooner did I feel the weight which was pressing upon my breast than a profuse perspiration started from my skin, rendering me weak and languid and almost incapable of thought or reason. But, by a strong, mental effort, I rallied my senses, for I feared that I should lose them unless I summoned all my fortitude and looked the danger resolutely in the face. Life was sweet, and I did not care to lose mine just at that time and under such horrifying circumstances.

I listened carefully and attentively. The reptile was sleeping or else curled up on the watch, prepared to strike at the first demonstration of hostilities. I made a first venture as a test, and to see what the result would be. I moved one arm in the direction of the torch which I had used in the early portion of the night. No corresponding movement on the part of the snake took place. This emboldened me to proceed and make another attempt. I thrust my right hand into a pocket where I kept my matches, and succeeded in obtaining several without disturbing the reptile. I thought that this was wonderful good fortune, and I grew bolder in consequence; but I was suddenly checked in my congratulations, for the reptile appeared to have been disturbed. It seemed to have raised its head, listened for a moment, and then curled down in its old place, and once more gone to sleep.

After this demonstration I did not move for a long time.

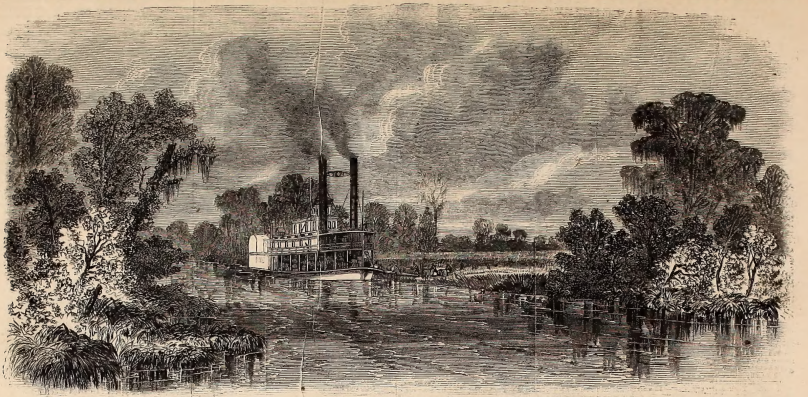
I waited until I thought my visitor was all quiet, and then I carefully lighted a match and set fire to the resinous wood. Still there was no movement on the part of the snake. The flame burned quite feeble at first, and did not give me light enough to see the color of my strange bedfellow; but it gathered headway at last, and burst into a bright flame that threw its rays for many rods into the dark forest. Still there was no movement on the part of the snake. It remained curled up, as quiet as before the fire was kindled, and this gave me hope. I drew my bowieknife and prepared to give a mighty chop, in case the reptile made a spring; and then, with a faint prayer for success, I slowly raised my head and took a survey of the monster. My movement seemed to disturb the sleeping animal; for as I raised my head and moved my body a similar movement on the part of the reptile took place, and when I was able to rest on my left elbow and look at the place where the snake was nestled, I encountered a glittering pair of eyes and an open mouth.

"Now or never!" I shouted, and let my knife descend upon the head of the reptile. It severed it at a blow, and the body, with a convulsive wriggle, tumbled from my breast to the ground.

REBEL BARBARITIES.

WE gave some space in No. 438 to rebel barbarities in Texas, describing and depicting, from Mr. Sumner's sketches, outrages of which he was, to some extent, an eye-witness. We alluded there to the case of Col. Montgomery. A corroboration of this will be found in Lieut.-Col. Fremantle's "Three Months in the Southern States," just published by John Bradburn, New York. He is not at all favorable to the North, and as his book proceeds warms under Southern influence so as to be much less communicative of matter that can tell against his friends. For a half-bred English officer to side with any enemies of the United States is too necessary a part of his character to be found wanting. Were we fighting with gorillas, English writers would be lavish in their praises of the "courage, energy and patriotism" of the gorillas, while their finer feelings would be shocked by "the foolish bullying conduct" of men that regard an oath. Before Fremantle got so thoroughly Southernised, and on the day almost of his entering Texas, he wrote:

"The Captain explained to me that he couldn't cross the river to see McCarthy, as he, with some of his men, had made a raid over there three weeks ago, and carried away some 'renegadoes,' one of whom, named Montgomery, they had left on the road to Brownsville. By the smiles of the other officers, I could easily guess that something disagreeable must have happened to Montgomery. * * * * Half an hour after parting company with Gen. Bee, we came to the spot where Montgomery had been left, and sure enough, about 200 yards to the left of the road we found him. He had been slightly buried, but his head and arms were above the ground, his arms tied together, the rope still round his neck, but part of it still dangling from quite a small mosquito tree. Dogs or wolves had probably scraped the earth from the body, and there was no flesh on the bones."



On page 52 he remarks, after crossing the San Antonio: "A woman was murdered at a ranch close by some time ago, and five bad characters were put to death at San Antonio, by the Vigilance Committee, on suspicion." His squeamishness is evidently wearing off, and his English ideas of justice are quite reconciled to hanging one woman and five men on suspicion.

The Germans of San Antonio were, he says, "at first by no means loyal to the Confederate cause. They objected much to the conscription, and some even resisted by force of arms; but these were soon settled by Duff's regiment," (p. 65).

He elsewhere describes men gloating over the dead Union soldiers, and on page 124 mentions a soldier apologizing for bringing in a Yankee prisoner, on the ground that "he surrendered so quick, I couldn't kill him."

The work contains much matter like this, and gives a really good account of the battle of Gettysburg, which Col. Fremantle witnessed.

MONARCHS sit in their palaces and command sea and land; all men pay tribute to monarchs; but women make monarchs pay tribute to them.

TAKING COTTON AND SUGAR ABOARD A STEAMER AT A PLANTATION ON THE BAYOU TECHE, LA.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. F. BOSWELL.

SOLDIERS' FREE LIBRARY OF WASHINGTON, D. C.

WE insert in this number an excellent view of this Institution, and copy from the Washington Chronicle a brief account of it:

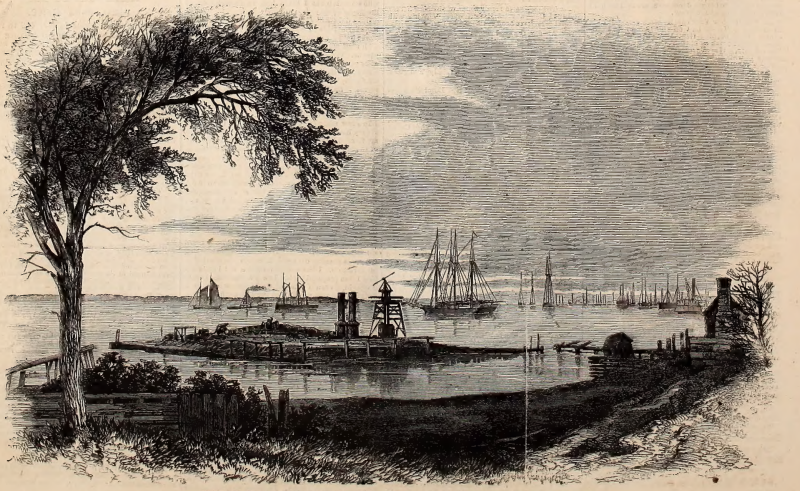
"Mr. and Mrs. John A. Fowle of New York, formerly living in this city, started this enterprise about two years ago, and from a small beginning the "Soldiers' Free Library" has risen to a handsome library of 4,000 volumes, and from a hired room, about 10 feet square, it now occupies a fine building, 62 feet long by 25 feet wide.

"Here in the capital of the nation is a spot where soldiers are supplied with books, with permission to keep them ten days; with daily papers from all the loyal States—for the press nobly responded to the call for regular papers, with magazines and Leslie's pictorial paper, with a great variety of religious reading matter, and Bibles and Testaments, also with pens, ink and paper, and a quiet place in which to write a letter home, all free of charge

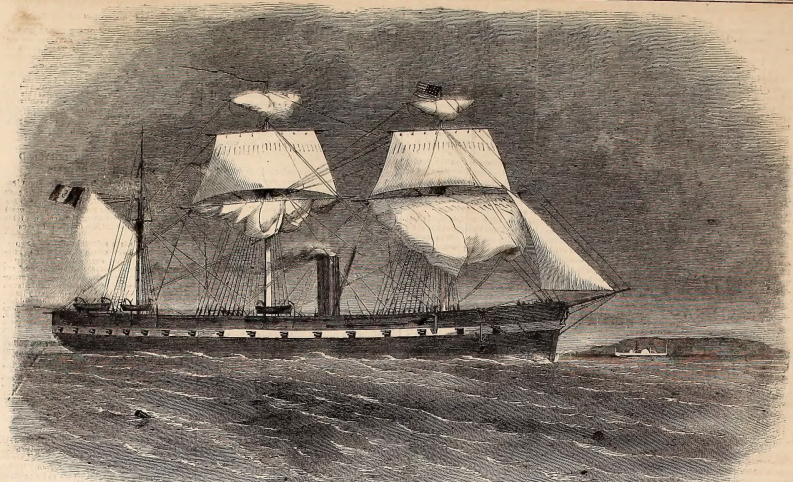
"In the reading-room, which is 50 feet long, there is a melodeon, which any soldier who understands music can enjoy. The walls are decorated with flags and about 100 handsome pictures.

"This enterprise is carried on with little or no expense. Congress granted Mr. and Mrs. Fowle a lot of Government land for the purpose, and Government has given them the use of convalescent soldiers to assist in carrying on the work. About $1,100 were raised to pay for the building and fixtures, and it was raised partly by concerts given by Mrs. Fowle in this city.

"All this is most fully appreciated by the soldiers, who enjoy all the rich privileges so freely granted them. The books donated by friends at the North, are eagerly sought for, the record showing a distribution of over 40,000 volumes."



SOLDIER'S FREE LIBRARY, WASHINGTON, D. C.—FROM A SKETCH BY MR. FILLEY.



NEWBERNE, LOOKING DOWN THE NEUSE.

THE recent rebel attack on Newberne, and the success which attended their long planned and still some effort to capture the Underwriter, give a new interest to the spot. We accordingly furnish a very fine view of the town, looking down the Neuse river.

Newberne is entering on a new phase of existence. The two years occupation by Northern men, the displacement of many of the old settlers, the self-exile of more, will give it hereafter a new life and character.

NEWBERNE, N. C., LOOKING DOWN THE NEUSE.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, F. H. SCHELL.

THE NEW ITALIAN STEAM FRIGATE, RE D'ITALIA, ON HER TRIAL TRIP.

FAITHFUL UNTO DEATH.

BY HENRY C. WATSON.

I PLAYED with the long, long ringlets,
I toyed with each jet black curl,
And I looked in the merry laughing face
Of my beautiful blue-eyed girl.
I looked in her eyes, and it seemed to me
They were frank, and open, and free.
Oh! those jet black curls—those olive cheeks—
Those eyes of heavenly blue!

I gazed in her eyes, and I thought I read
An answering love to mine;
And my soul was drunken with joy's excess,
As with royal ripe old wine.
I took her dimpled hands in my own,
And drew her close to my breast,
And I said, "Oh! Dove, come home to my heart,
And make it your place of rest."

The jet black curls, all trembling now,
Crept round as her head bent low;
Her blue eyes swam in a diamond mist,
And her cheeks were all a-glow.
I folded her close in my nervous arms,
Though then as an infant's weak,
And she breathed the words that I longed to hear,
Though I scarce could hear her speak!

Oh! words of mystic, deep import!
Oh! words with letters of gold!
They live in the heart—they ring in the ear,
Till the world grows hoary and old.
They are neither uttered nor said;
They are murmured, whispered and sighed;
But the ear of love knows their meaning well,
As from lip to lip they glide.

And so she was all in all my own!
Mine for ever, for weal or for wo!
A jewel to wear in my innermost heart,
Whose price I alone should know.
Whose price was above the gold of the earth,
Beyond the pearls of the sea,
A jewel, whose setting was maiden truth,
And all its worth for me!

"Ebb on, flow on, ye faithless sea;
Change fickle winds your course at will;
Firm as a rock my faith shall stand,
And Death shall find me loving still.
Change cannot reach my boundless love;
Time cannot quench its holy fire;
Coldness or scorn may crush my heart,
But only with life shall love expire!"

So nestling near my heart, she wept
Sweet tears of joy, to hear me vow—
Oh! could that worshipped form be pressed
Close to my aching bosom now!

Oh! could I toy with her raven hair!
Oh! could I gaze in her deep blue eye!
Oh! could I woo her from heaven to come
Once more on my throbbing heart to lie!

But wishes are vain—and hope there is none!
Our love was as brief as its moments were blest;
A few short months, and as one in a dream,
I followed my love to her place of rest.
She passed, as an infant sinks into sleep;
Her beauty sublimed as her hour drew nigh;
And oh! the love that shone out of her eyes,
Was the love that burns for eternity!

Years have passed—I am lonely still;
Sorely tempted I linger on;
But the love I gave to my love, who is dead!
No tender woman has ever won.
The faithless sea still ebbs and flows,
The fickle wind still changes at will,
But firm as a rock my love shall stand,
And Death shall find me faithful still.

Mr. Piper gazing in amazement into his transformed Trunk.

No. 10 and No. 20.

By Mary Kyle Dallas.

ONLY ONE room left, sir. Very nice room, sir. No. 10, sir. Crowded time, sir. Very fortunate for any gentleman to receive any room, sir. Walk in, sir. Any refreshment, sir?"

"Yes, chops and a paper."

"Of tobacco, sir?"

"No; a newspaper."

"Budget of Fun, sir?"

"She unlocked her trunk, kneeling beside it for that purpose."

"Yes. And, waiter, send my trunk up immediately."

"Yes, sir."

Off went the waiter of the Lincoln House, Pigeonville, with these words, and the traveller whom he had just ushered into the apartment designated as No. 10, sat down on one of the two chairs which it contained and looked about him. It was a small room, furnished, as most hotel bedrooms are, with a very bright carpet, a very shiny bureau and a great deal of pillow. The bed was single, but there was an immense washstand, with two ewers and two basins upon it, between the windows, and a block of soap a quarter of a yard square in the soapdish, a fact which made up for the utter absence of towels and water. At this article of furniture the gentleman stared absently pending the waiter's return. He was evidently thinking of something, and soon his thought found utterance in the following soliloquy:

"Ah! she is a lovely creature—a very lovely creature. I don't know a lovelier one. I wonder where she went, and who she is, and whether she took notice of my glances? They were fervent, I know. But Diana herself could not have objected to 'em, they were so respectful."

And the gentleman, who was a middle-aged and rather small person, with an air which would have led the close observer to believe that he had something to do with drygoods, rubbed his hands and shook his head.

"I'm goodlooking, I know," he said, glancing at the dressing-glass. "Otherwise Frog & Bottom wouldn't put me behind the ladies' glove counter. And I'm rather proud of my success with the fair sex. Could I not obtain an introduction to my charmer I should not despair. Ah!"

And again the stranger sighed and gazed attentatively, this time at the wall.

Had this wall and the one opposite to it been transparent he might have seen sitting beside the window of an apartment, on the opposite side of the hall, a tall, stout lady, with a very bright color and very black hair, cut short, after the prevalent fashion, who, like himself stared at vacancy and soliloquized.

"A very nice gentleman," she muttered to herself; "so fair and so genteel, and I'm sure I made an impression on her by the gazed eyes. Ah! And Fanny Griffin, when she told my fortune, said that I should marry a small gentleman, with fair hair. Oh, what's that?"

"Only me, mum," replied an advancing chambermaid. "I've brung up the teas, and toast, and jam; and please 'm what was your drink like?"

"My drink! My tea. Drab leather, with brass nails, and P. P. on one end. Mind you let me have it soon; my night things are in it.

The chambermaid set down the tray and departed; the nibbled her toast, and sipped her tea, and sighed. Pretty soon a bumping on the stairs announced that her trunk was being conveyed upon them, and soon a tap at the door and the query:

"Had your's redtape on the handle?"

startled the fair dreamer from her reverie.

"Certainly," she replied. "I forgot to mention it; it has redtape on the handle."

"All right" said the voice from the darkness, and the treasured trunk was brought in and deposited on the floor at the stranger's request. And another trunk, also drab leather, also brass nailed, also marked P. P. on one end, was placed within the apartment occupied by the good-looking employé of Frog & Buttons.

Strange coincidence. Peter Piper, of New York, ere starting on the business entrusted to him by his employers, purchased the twin trunk to that with which Miss Paulina Pettibones had an hour before provided herself at the same place. P. P. it certainly is denied, were the initial letters of both, and both travelling in the same car to the same destination, would have entered the Lincoln House at the same moment but for an unfortunate accident which, calling all the passengers out of the cars, had jumbled them in again without regard to former places, and so had separated Miss Pettibones and Mr. Piper. It had been a case of love at first sight, there was no denying that; and as the course of true love never did run smooth, how could it be expected to deviate from the general rule in the case of Mr. Peter Piper, travelling agent for Frog & Buttons.

They were young, it might be for years and it might be for ever, for neither contemplated a prolonged stay at Pigeonville, and each was ignorant of the other's presence under the roof the Lincoln House.

Paulina Pettibones, after finishing her repast, began to arrange herself for the night. Firstly, she brushed out her short hair; secondly, she covered it with a nightcap; thirdly, she attired herself in a long gown, with ruffles, completing thereby a ghastliness quite alarming to behold; and, finally, she being a good Episcopalian, read the service for the evening, and, looking the door, retired. Just ten minutes before, Mr. Peter Piper, in flannel gown and gobbin head-dress, occupied the couch devoted to him. They slumbered, all within the dreadnought hallowed likewise, and the clock upon the hall wall ticked slowly on until the hands pointed to the hour of midnight, when suddenly the repose was broken and shouts of thieves and murder awoke the household. In an instant every door was open, half-dressed figures rushed into the passages. "Where?" "What?" "Who is it?" "Are we bombarded at last?" "Mercy sakes! Is it the Southerners?" "Please, Mr. Jeff Davis, don't murder me; I always was on your side!" and a similar confusion and promiscuity resounded on all sides. All the ladies were in hysterics before the landlord, having discovered the real facts of the case, could explain to them that the disturbance was caused by the Cuban gentleman, Señor Olloposdons, who had forgotten that he had told the night waiter to call him at midnight, and when that functionary had made his appearance at his bedside and shaken him, according to directions, had tried to shave him with a barrel revolver.

Fortunately the watchman escaped, and the Cuban was sufficiently awake not to fire at any one else, and the alarmed ladies and gentlemen began gingerly to discover that they were not in full dress, hurried back to their apartments.

Amongst these individuals was Mr. Peter Piper, who, proud of his personal appearance, shuddered at the idea of being observed by any one in a flannel straight jacket and goblin peaked nightcap, and who, to his great consternation, had forgotten the way to his apartment. Passage after passage did he explore, guided only by his remembrance of the number of doors, for he had no recollection of the number, and he had many hairbreadth escapes from encounters with lady boarders before his eyes lighted on the long strip of red matting which sweep up the passage of which he was in search.

"Hurrah!" cried Mr. Peter Piper, to himself, "it's the last door to the left, I know."

But as he spoke a ghostly figure, in a white robe, whisked passed him and entered with hasty footsteps the very door which he had a moment before decided to be his own.

"Oh!" breathed Mr. P., "how confused I must be. I could have sworn it was the door to the left. It must be the right hand one." And, stating forward, on tiptoe, he peeped in.

The room was certainly the same. The small bed and big washstand, the bright carpet and shining bureau, and a trunk standing in the middle of the floor. A drab trunk marked P. P., and adorned with brass nails.

"P. P.," said Mr. Piper. "That's proof positive—ha! ha!—P. P. stands for that, too." And without more ado he stumbled into bed and slumbered until morning, awakened only by the sound of the gong, which summoned the inns biteats of Lincoln House to breakfast.

Men have been aroused by fear fal apparitions at dead of night, but surely seven a. m. is an unusual hour for seeing a skeleton at the foot of one's bed. There was no doubt of it, however; There it was, hanging over the post, straight before Mr. P.'s astonished eyes.

Not such a skeleton, however, as the reader imagines. This was of tape and steel—a lady's skeleton—and it peeped short, flowered and embroidered skirts, a gray dress with many buttons, and black gaiters. Mr. Piper rubbed his eyes and stared, still the apparition stood.

At last he arose and tried the door. It was locked as he had left it. Then he looked about for his own attire—it had disappeared. Was he the victim of enchantment? Mr. Piper was not sure. Moreover, as he gazed upon the gray dress trimmed with velvet, and half covered with flounces, something of the truth dawned on him. These were the garments which his enchantress had worn in the car. In the draggeds business as for many years Mr. Peter Piper had been, he had acquired The identical dress—four and six a yard. They had come of it at Frog & Buttons. He remembered wondering if the belt fitted.

How did these garments come into his room? Whither had his own vanished? It was a problem which Mr. Piper could not solve.

However, the gong was sounding and he was hungry—very hungry. His trunk contained another suit, and his trunk, as he knew, was in the corridor. It had also, alas!—for the key was sticking inand as did so his eye caught sight of the tape upon the handle.

"Funny," he said. "I can't imagine how it came there. It's my trunk. There are my initials; but I never tied red tape to the handle. Perhaps the waiter did it."

As Mr. Piper spoke he flung the cover back. Alas! neither broadcloth nor linen greeted his astonished gaze, but the feminine habiliments—a lady's wardrobe, not a gentleman's, lay within.

Mr. P. did not swear. He belonged to Methodist meeting-house, and had been heard to "Jeiminy-phat!" and stood upon his feet, pale with astonishment, in an instant.

"Am I transmogrified into a lady or am I not?" he exclaimed, turning to the shiny bureau. "This is the queerest thing I ever heard tell of. My trunk certain for P. P. is upon it—Peter Piper—proof positive. Decidedly not my clothes, unless I am transmo—into a lady."

He sang, and sat and waited for the waiter. In his absence a chambermaid appeared, to whom Mr. Piper peeped through a crack of the door.

"I rang for the young man," said Mr. P.

"Yes, miss," replied the parlor maid, sotto, "but I allers waits on this side. What would you please to want, miss?"

"The landlord," replied Mr. Piper.

"There ain't no landlord, miss," replied Sally.

"There's a landlady—she's a widder—shall I send her?"

"Not for worlds!" replied Mr. P., shutting his door and locking it quickly. "I wonder what the girl means by calling me miss. It's very singular money."

At the same moment Paulina Pettibones, spinster, springing from her couch, gazed with astonishment at her trunk, and at Jerusha's attire suspended from a chair-back, and then looked wildly around:

"Where are my clothes?" she cried, "Some thief has taken 'em I'm sure; my gracious! Sally, Sally!"

Shrieking the bell as she spoke for the chambermaid she regarded the garments before her with horror, which faded into surprise as she muttered:

"I'm certain I remember that vest; a curious plaid. He wore it, or one like it."

At the moment, a tap at the door, and Sambo's voice:

"Want me, sah?"

"No," cried Miss Paulina, "I don't want you; go away. I want Sally—send her to me."

"Sally don't never wait on dese her rooms, sah!" replied Sambo; "won't I do, sah?"

"No," cried Miss Paulina, through the keyhole. "Go away."

"I wonder why he called me sir," she said to herself. "I'll dress myself and speak to the landlady."

As she spoke she unlocked her trunk; kneeling beside it for that purpose.

"Something has taken the red tape off of the handle," she said to herself in surprise. "What a queer thing! Ah! oh! merey me!"

There were only garments suitable for the majestic form of the sterner sex within the trunk, and Miss Paulina almost fainted. Meanwhile the waiter entered the landlord's room.

"What shall I do?" said Miss Paulina. "The room train will start without me, and Cousin Ann Eliza will think I'm never coming, and I haven't any clothes but these. They are nice clothes for a man's, too, I wonder how they'd fit. Not that I'd put them on for worlds!" said Miss Paulina sat down resolutely in her ruffled gown.

Soon there came another tap at the door.

"Please, sir, if you're up won't you let the sweep come in to go up chimney?"

"Is that Sally?" asked Miss P.

"No, sir; it's Sambo."

"Very well, in a minute."

But, how. She could not confide in Sambo. She must dress herself in those habiliments and open the door. For a few minutes she pondered. Then went to work, and ended by standing in ultra-bloomer costume before the glass.

Meanwhile, Sally, urgent as Sambo, tapped at Mr. Peter Piper's door, and preferred the same with the additional information.

"And missus hopes it an't a inconvenicing of you, miss."

The dreadful landlady. Mr. P. could not encounter her in his flannel shirt waistcoat. He yielded to necessity, and adopted crinoline.

The sweeps were waiting in the passage. The door was ever opened, Mr. P. peeping from his new gentleman opposite who shut the door immediately. Miss Pettibones in shutting her's had caught a glimpse of a lady in a gray travelling dress, across the passage.

At the sight she experienced great relief. "A sister woman must have pity on her unfortunate predicament. As soon as it was possible she would appeal to her. Perhaps it would be best to wait till she had left her room."

But the sweeps once gone, Mr. Piper had no intention of exhibiting himself in crinoline. He also had resolved to appeal to his neighbor, and very impatiently he watched the opposite door. No one emerged from it. At noon he rang for lunch, and partook of it in his own apartment.

Paulina had nothing to ring, she dared not encounter the observing eyes of Sambo.

So the day passed and evening shadows fell, and under the cover of night Miss Pettibones crossed the passage, and knocked at Mr. Piper's door. That gentleman in his crinoline had opened it.

"What a masculine-looking person," was Miss P.'s first thought.

"What an effeminate little wretch," passed through the mind of Mr. Peter Piper.

"Pardon me, madam," began Miss Paulina, "I'm aware that you must think this visit a very strange one; but, the fact is I—I am in a dilemma."

"That's confoundedly like my vest," thought Mr. Piper, who, sitting in his chair, counterfeited the manner of a lady to the best of his ability. "Should be added, "No intrusion, sir, I'm sure."

Miss Paulina smiled, gratefully.

"I know that one of my own sex would never detect you, sir," she continued the true state of things. The fact is, these are not my own clothes."

"I knew they couldn't be," replied Mr. Piper.

"Knew! ah, then, you have discovered that I am not what I appear to be. Oh! dear madam, how thankful I am that you may I have endured since last night no tongue can describe. But I hadn't anything else, and I was forced to put these on. If you'll only lend me some proper clothes for an hour or so, I will be so thankful, so overjoyed."

Mr. Piper glanced at the suspicious waistcoat, and said in a gruff voice:

"Will you explain, sir. I don't quite understand."

"I suppose I mistook the room," said Paulina, "in the fright last night you know, and I have nothing left of my own. All I care for is a dress and stockings, and shoes, for I am exactly very slow. So close was the atmosphere in the tunnel that my feet swelled and I had to take off my shoes, and their vanities would go out.

At one time I was going to scar the head of the street that a small hole, about the size of a stovepipe, broke through; but, fortunately, the hole was observed by the guard, and was a great service in edmi ting air, enabling the passengers to breathe more rapidly.

The tunnel, completed by 31 days or patient toil, was about 60 feet long, and opened into an old house so ed, beyond the line of goodsheds.

As soon as the air was clear, they emerged slowly in small squads of two or three, and sauntered out until they were clear of the sheds, making their way to the Williamsburg road by the nearest routes. The darkness favored them, and the fact that the rebel soldiers whom they met were habited in the gray coats of their foes, which they had received by the supplies sent to our prisoners by the Government, was of great service.

Although they were attired in our army overcoats, and many of them had their knapsacks on their backs, the national uniform a better disguise than it they had worn citizens' dress in place of uniforms.

In order to elude their pursuers, who they knew would soon be on their track, they kept as much apart as possible. Many were their hardships and sufferings, and frequent were their narrow escapes from the rebel cavalry, who, the next morning, were bushwhacking in the neighborhood.

The joy which Col. Streight and four comrades, the engineers of the band, experienced when they first caught sight of our troops sent out to help them and relieve their fears, can better be imagined than expressed.

To the officers and men of the 11th Penn. cavalry, whom the first party met, they express most profound gratitude for their unwearied attention, and also bear testimony to the gallantry with which these gallant fellows pressed the rebel cavalry for several many days of the weary, worn fugitives, who otherwise would have been captured.

Gradually the summer that reached our troops increased, and by the 20th of June each man had been reduced to the rebels.

The whole command was alive during the period. The rebel cavalry scouring the country to recapture the fugitives, and our forces, however, by calling, driving him back to outer quarters. Many on the south of crossed, and were taken prisoners, captured by the negroes—their own friends—needed only this means to make their escape a certainty.

TREES THAT GROW SHIRTS.—"We saw" on the slope of the Cerro D.ilis," says M. Humboldt, "shirt trees, 30 feet high, with a trunk like oil cylinders, unless two feet in diameter from which they peel the red and fibrous bark, without making any longitudinal incision. This bark consists of a sort of garment which resembles a sack of very coarse cloth. Without a single seam. Upper opening serves for the head, and the two lateral holes are used for the arms. The natives wear this shirts of Mariza in the rainy season. They have the form of the ponchos and mosses of cotton which are so common in New Granada, at Quito, and in Peru. As in this climate the riches and beneficence of nature are regarded as the primary causes of the laziness of the inhabitants, the missionaries do not fail to say, in showing the shirts of the tree, in the forests of Cuenoco, garments are found ready made upon the trees."

CHLOROFORM is recommended as excellent for soothing wives. A husband who has tried it says, "We fondly should be without it."

TAKING COTTON AND SUGAR ABOARD

At a Plantation on the Bayou Teche.

The dawn of a peaceful era seems breaking on the rich districts of Louisiana, negroes are seen in more rolling to the steamers the wealth of those fertile lands which have made the Teche country famous.

The approaching restoration of State authority by the Government, which originally purchased the territory and then admitted it to the State Rights which it shared, and which, in fact, made—for that like the rank pictures that we read lay before our readers of Louisiana life. Her people are currently said to have a recurrence of the horrors that preceded Butler's entrance into New Orleans. Petty battles as have drenched her teeming soil in blood.

TRIAL TRIP OF THE IRONCLAD STEAMER RE D'ITALIA.

We present our readers with a fine view of the new ironclad steamer Re d'Italia, recently built in this city, by William H. Webb, Esq., who has accomplished so much for the advancement of naval architecture by supporting the resources of the Navy and Henry Eckford, the founders of the establishment.

The Re d'Italia is a splendid vessel of 32 guns. On the spar-deck she measures 258 feet long; her hold is 43 feet wide, and she draws 18 feet of water. She has two engines of 800 horse-power, of the Merrick and Sons type, manufactured at the Novelty Works. She has made several trial trips, the first on the 19th November, made by the engineer, satisfied the owners that they had a powerful steamer, who visited her. On a second trial trip, December 30, she ran ashore in a fog for which she got off without any injury. On the 17th of February she made another and most satisfactory trip, from New York to the Bay. Among the guns were a commission seat from the Navy Department and also rear admiral Hudson navy. Mr. Webb was also of the number. The trial was run at sea, and the ship went 13 knots. It, and her speed exceeds the contract price, being 14.6 miles an hour in this trip.

The great triumph is that she does not pitch, and rolls no more than an ordinary vessel. Mr. Webb having thus overcome the difficulty encountered in the European ships, the Italian navy and Spain appreciate the high qualities of Mr. Webb, why does not America?

ESCAPE OF 109 OFFICERS FROM THE LIBBY PRISON, RICHMOND.

THE feeling of sympathy for our unfortunate officers and men, who have so long suffered the rage and brutality of the rebels, gave way to a momentary feeling of joy as news came of the escape of 109 officers at once. From time to time a few officers have escaped, but the success of their escapes have been among the most intensely exciting incidents of the war. But the escape of 109 at one time seems to get out of the Southern dungeon, the interest knew no bounds. The method employed was as follows:

Having money with which to find access to the city, they commenced work, relieving one another as opportunity offered. Their implements were very few—pokers, knives, chisels and files. Twice they had to abandon their work, once on account of the discovery of the obstructions which they could not pass. They had bored 15 feet, and found themselves at last outside, but found it impracticable.

After getting through the well they disposed of the excavated soil by dressing it out in a spittoon, which they added to the pond. This would be filled by the party at work in the tunnel, and pulled out into the hall by cord attached thereto. This disposed of it by spreading it in shallow layers over the floor, concealing it beneath the bed. The work was necessarily very slow. So close was the atmosphere in the tunnel that candles would burn in it but for a minute or two at a time, and their candles would go out.

At one time they got to near the bend of the street that a small hole, about the size of a stovepipe, broke through; but, fortunately, the hole was observed by the guard, and was a great service in edmi ting air, enabling the passengers to breathe more rapidly.

The tunnel, completed by 31 days of patient toil, was about 60 feet long, and opened into an old house so ed, beyond the line of goodsheds.

As soon as the air was clear, they emerged slowly in small squads of two or three, and sauntered out until they were clear of the sheds, making their way to the Williamsburg road by the nearest routes. The darkness favored them, and the fact that the rebel soldiers whom they met were habited in the gray coats of their foes, which they had received by the supplies sent to our prisoners by the Government, was of great service.

Although they were attired in our army overcoats, and many of them had their knapsacks on their backs, the national uniform a better disguise than it they had worn citizens' dress in place of uniforms.

In order to elude their pursuers, who they knew would soon be on their track, they kept as much apart as possible. Many were their hardships and sufferings, and frequent were their narrow escapes from the rebel cavalry, who, the next morning, were bushwhacking in the neighborhood.

The joy which Col. Streight and four comrades, the engineers of the band, experienced when they first caught sight of our troops sent out to help them and relieve their fears, can better be imagined than expressed.

To the officers and men of the 11th Penn. cavalry, whom the first party met, they express most profound gratitude for their unwearied attention, and also bear testimony to the gallantry with which these gallant fellows pressed the rebel cavalry for several many days of the weary, worn fugitives, who otherwise would have been captured.

Gradually the summer that reached our troops increased, and by the 20th of June each man had been reduced to the rebels.

The whole command was alive during the period. The rebel cavalry scouring the country to recapture the fugitives, and our forces, however, by calling, driving him back to outer quarters. Many on the south of crossed, and were taken prisoners, captured by the negroes—their own friends—needed only this means to make their escape a certainty.

TREES THAT GROW SHIRTS.—"We saw" on the slope of the Cerro D.ilis," says M. Humboldt, "shirt trees, 30 feet high, with a trunk like oil cylinders, unless two feet in diameter from which they peel the red and fibrous bark, without making any longitudinal incision. This bark consists of a sort of garment which resembles a sack of very coarse cloth. Without a single seam. Upper opening serves for the head, and the two lateral holes are used for the arms. The natives wear this shirts of Mariza in the rainy season. They have the form of the ponchos and mosses of cotton which are so common in New Granada, at Quito, and in Peru. As in this climate the riches and beneficence of nature are regarded as the primary causes of the laziness of the inhabitants, the missionaries do not fail to say, in showing the shirts of the tree, in the forests of Cuenoco, garments are found ready made upon the trees."

CHLOROFORM is recommended as excellent for soothing wives. A husband who has tried it says, "We fondly should be without it."

HER BEAUTIFUL HAND.

SWEET hand that, held in mine,
Seems the one thing I cannot live without,
The soul's one anchorage in this storm and doubt,
I take thee as the sign

Of sweeter days in store
For life, and more than life, when life's done,
And thy soft pressure leads me gently on
To heaven's own evermore.

I have not much to say,
Nor any words that fit such fond request:
Let my blood speak to thine, and hear the rest
Some silent, heartward way.

Thrice blest the faithful hand
Which waits while it believes—held me fast:
Let me not go beneath the flood at last,
So near the better land.

Sweet hand that, thus in mine,
Seems the one thing I cannot live without,
My hope of comfort in life's every care and doubt,
Take this, and make me mine.

Deacon Sloan's Wife's Nephew.

By A. Brock.

"WELL, I do say! Deacon Sloan's wife is enjoying one of the most stuck-up critters that ever I set eyes on, and I can't see that she's anything to brag on neither, less 'tis a lot o' brass. And body with half an eye can see's, those paller curl o' hers are false, the partin' in the middle so white, and as to those pink cheeks and white teeth that everybody pears to be so crazy 'bout; why anybody can paint their cheeks, and I don't know how many such skinny teeth as her's, looks though she never intended to eat nothin' else but fiapdoodle and such like all her days. Gracious me what a fuss they made over her when she first came to Bickertown. Everywhere a body went 'twas, 'Seen Deacon Sloan's wife? Heard Deacon Sloan's wife play the pianner? (she'd better been playin' the washboard). Ain't Deacon Sloan's wife harnsome?' and a host of other questions. As to being harnsomer, she ain't no more a beauty than Annie's canary bird. I know somebody that ain't very far off that was a sight better looking in her younger days. Black eyes are always bright as blue, and she hadden such a dreadful nose to be sure. But I was always taught at school that 'self-praise, no recommendation,' so I shan't say nothin' more. I will, though, Deacon Sloan had left them pink cheeks in Boating, where they belong, so that a body might get a decent sight of their complexion. Ask how Mrs. Stephens's baby, what has got the measle is a sight better; Miss Sloan sot up last night with it."

"Have you seen Reuben sietz get along?"

"Purty well; Miss Sloan took him a bull stock of flannel shirts to make for the young Hottentots."

"What's old Molly Perkin's daughter, Katie doing at the deacon's?"

"Oh, Miss Sloan's going to keep her, an' let her go to school, for what she can do out of school hours."

I guess she'll have her hands full with that young un. A wickedder child never breathed the breath of life's my opinion, and she had a sight better go to the poor-house at once than stay here bothering. Miss Sloan's got tired of her bargain fore long, mark my words. I'm sure I'm as willing to do for the misfortunate as the next one, but that child don't get no more gratitude than an old saw-buck. Here I offered a spell back when old Molly died, to take her in Biddy's place, and give her her food and lodgings for her work, but she only sot right down an' cried, an' cried, till I got out of all manner of patience with her: and told her she was just like her herself, I was done with her. Lord knows 'twould have been no great gain to me, for Biddy's mighty handy, if I have to pay her four dollars a month. There she comes down street now, dressed to death in a new calico frock. Going to school I expect. Susie, you wicked child, come right over here. How dare you speak to that varmint? I'll have take that wood that, and learn to mind your mother after this. Quit hollerin' now, you ain't killed, cause I hit you once or twice."

Thank God! little Katie Perkins had a better friend in Miss Sloan than Deborah Thompson, or shrew Deborah, as she was sometimes to her great rage was called.

"No more shrew then other folks," she would say, "only I am honest enough to speak my opinion. Pity other folks warnt so, too. I have want of any kind, and in anybody, whether they've got pink cheeks and white hair or not."

Bickertown is as pretty a little village as you would want to look at. The principal street is shaded on each side by an even row of trees, and the meeting-house stands at the end of it on a little eminence. Two other places of worship have been built somewhat incongruously in parsonage seats inside, and the younger and graver portion of the community at Bickertown frequent one of these; but the regular meeting-house is the old framed building at the end of the street. Thither the original elders and deacons of the town flock, together with such of their children as have not degenerated. Such of these as are one of those who remained steadfast and true to the old brown edifice, with its high stoop and stiff back seats. He was elected deacon years ago, when his first wife was living. Poor thing! she died in giving birth to a child, seven years after marriage. "Call him John, after my brother," she said, "and, oh, David! do not let him live without an occasional remembrance of his mother," and with a sigh she yielded to the embrace of death. Deacon Sloan sincerely mourned for his wife, and looking upon his son as her legacy he determined to call in his maiden sister to the charge, that he might as near as possible give him the care of a mother. She remained up to the time of his second marriage, and then in a huff determined to take her departure.

"she knew no reason the deacon could have for wanting to get married again. His shirts and socks were in prime order always. It was scandalous, and she would not remain to play second where she had remained supreme for fifteen years."

This she would say to herself, but woe to any one else that uttered it.

"The deacon had as good right to get married as any body else, and better. It was plaguey few men who would have remained fifteen years for his first wife, and she was glad of it, for it must be awful lonely for a man who has had a wife to be without one."

A little bit of a white lie there, Miss Betsy, but she never thought of that.

Wrathy as she was toward the deacon, he yet succeeded in persuading her that the second wife the young wife was domiciled and began to feel at home, hoping by that time that her prejudice would be overcome by Elsie's sweetness, and she would consent to stay, for he shrank from the idea of his sister seeking another home at her time of life. He also thought that perhaps she would still keep charge of the house, and thus relieve the young wife. Where and how he had managed to get his youthful and lovely bride, with his gray hair and wrinkled face, was a great mystery even to the village gossips, but not so to Elsie. When the deacon found his way into her mother's lowly cottage, and asked her hand in his sadly needed, she looked upon him as the best of men. And when in her mother's last illness he had provided the best physician in the village, regardless of expense, taking her own place at the bedside when she was worn out, and gently soothing the sufferer, she rose to him as the very ideal of being and love. And after that mother's death, and she was alone in the world, when he drew her gently towards him and offered her his hand, it was a great mystery saying at the same time that although she would be an old man's bride, yet it would not be long that she would be troubled with him, and that she would always have sufficient to take comfortably upon, she burst into tears and confessed that though she loved him more as a father than a husband, she would try her best to make him a good wife and thus repay her debt of gratitude. Satisfied with this (for the good deacon could not leave the young girl unprotected in the world, you know), he had taken her back to his home as his wife.

Gentle and unassuming, she won the heart of her husband's sister so much so more about leaving the house, for she argued, "had young chit as fit to take charge of the deacon's house, and such a one as John; besides she isn't to blame if the deacon chooses to marry a child." "Child, indeed!" she staid there, keeping all her former respectful civilities upon her own shoulders, giving Elsie ample time to learn the duties of her station. Elsie, she had not helped the "Heathen sietz" as Deborah Thompson called it, from any suspicion of doing good, for she was aware that Elsie was poor, and more children at home who needed the flannel shirts during the severe winter to come, then in the place they were sent to. Still, she was by no means ready help to aid the philanthropic desire of the ladies constituting the society, and that done cast their eyes about for some newly subject nearer home.

Old Molly Perkins lived in the poorest hovel in all Bickertown. A widow for years ago, when Katie was quite small, she entered into marriage. No one knew who she was, or where she came from; but from the fact of her language being very correct, and at times almost refined, it was supposed that she had known better days. Upon the subject of her former life, however, she was obstinately silent. She was a tidy, neat body, and kept either by direct question or skilful strategy. Too poor to send little Katie to school—for the child had very little money to spare—Deborah found out to her death that she had succeeded in teaching her not only how to read, but also some of the rudiments of arithmetic. Deborah's hatred was unbounded for this she had obtained from the minister's wife while doing odd jobs for her during house-cleaning time. They were wide apart from each other in usage, but answered every purpose, and it was found that Katie would not be very far behind her schoolmates in those branches. Miss Sloan having discovered the ambition of Molly to instruct the child, could not but respect it, and feeling also a great deal of pity for the little friendless one, begged her husband's permission to take her to her own home, and putting an education within her reach. Little need was there to ask the deacon. He had an improved opinion of the child, or he could not have refused Elsie. Aunt Betsy was most decidedly averse to her entrance, and tried hard to argue her brother into refusing. "Go to Elsie," he would say, "if she is willing to give it up, all right; but if she still desires it, so be it," and when he found Miss Sadley, in the very pompous "amens" were so plentifully used among the deacons as to make it almost second nature to wind up a sentence with one, he knew that Elsie was well that any appeal to Elsie would be fruitless, nevertheless when talking upon the subject she would not hesitate to express her opinion freely.

"How can you want to harbor that child, Elsie? Seems to me the best thing to do would be to get her bound out somewhere. She'll have to work, and what's the use of putting fine notions of education in her head."

"Oh, aunty, she is so young to be put to hard work now, and little she will want in way of good and clothing we can very well spare."

"But what's the use, Elsie, it will only make her discontented by-by; besides, she isn't fit company for John," said aunt Betsy, speaking out her real objection in the excitement of the moment.

"Oh, never fear," answered Elsie, laughing. "I shall not allow her to contaminate John. She will be to school all day, and when she is home I shall teach her to sew. Aunt Betsy," she continued more gravely, "I should consider it a sin not to help that child get an education. She seems fairly crying for it. I never saw such a grasping a mind in a young person before."

"So grasping and diabolistic" quoth aunt Betsy to herself, as Elsie left the room. "She's crazy on the subject, I believe; but there is no use talking, she will have her own way, and if she wouldn't the deacon would make her."

And so Katie was taken, and after weeks of alternating and contriving, turning and washing old dresses she was sent to school, clean and tidy, on the hour. Her progress in school was perfectly surprising for, as Mrs. Sloan had said, she was eager for knowledge, and her love for her benefactress amounted to almost adoration, but she was as quiet that few suspected the depths of her feeling. She was one small group child, and when dress in the rags, which was all old Molly could give her, she was most decidedly plain. But then you must remember she had suffered with from want of regular food. Now, dressed in a neat frock, and with her black hair glossily brushed, she was at least a very interesting child.

Quiet and unobtrusive, she rarely uttered more than "yes ma'am," or "no ma'am;" but her full eyes would sometimes volumes, and as better and more regular living improved her appearance, many were the comments the neighbors passed upon her, while the friends of Deborah Thompson were indeed—as she called it—plain spoken.

"Pears to me that Katie Perkins' getting mighty shirk all of a sudden; she'll be actin' up for a lady too, by and by, if you don't look out, Deacon, I expect. I hope my Bill don't go shining up to her when she gits older. He's the best-all of us girls. I am a-thinking of being a widow for a-ready. But I bet he don't have easy sailing in that quarter, not if Deborah Thompson knows what's what. I'll be a-managing that sweet-heart there'll be war, that you can bet on. What on earth's the matter now, Biddy? 'Pears to me you're always a-bothering me. Been spillin' fat on the fire again, an burning yourself, to give me the trouble of takin' care of you?"

"Indade, thin, an I haven't, Miss Thompson, betwixt the fire and the spoon I'm impatient bisquare, bealin' of me. Sure an that boy Bill o' yourn is a dirty supplexen, an I, won't sthay in the house wid him," and Biddy, who was buried in her apron and sobs and groans were plentifully interspersed with—"Och! to think of it, the villain, an all the money I've saved, an' me clothes round me—neck instid of me heels! Begorra, I'll be after takin at it again, it 'll be a bloody day for him," and other energetic expressions.

Deborah Thompson had bid exercised all his genius in stretching a cord across the door leading to the yard, and Biddy, in bustling through, had been tripped full length in the most disorderly manner. Discovering, by a snuffling laugh from round the corner of the house, the perpetrator of the outrage, she rushed in search of him, but the one before his mother, and for once Mistress Deborah was silenced. No use to scold; Biddy would rail louder, and cry more, and as to using the rod—Bill, she knew, would arouse the neighbors. So she was obliged to soothe her in the best manner possible, promising Bill's "settin' to rights" for the same hour if it took them both to give it to him.

Katie was attentive and regular at school, and as the winter drew on, Deborah was enabled to hire Mrs. Sloan was obliged to restrict her and give her means of exercise.

"Katie," she would say, "put on your bonnet and shawl and run over to aunt Betsy's. Burt 'll only about three-quarters of a mile, and you can get back in an hour and a half."

Sometimes she would send her to pick a dish of strawberries for her, "You know I am so fond of them fresh from the garden, and no one picks such nice ones as you do."

Katie would blush and smile under the compliment and hasten to fulfil the request with a light heart.

"You make a fool of that child, Elsie," said aunt Betsy.

"Nonsense, aunty. Don't you see how pleased she is; and, poor thing! she has so few to praise her."

The day of the examination came, and Katie, with a trembling heart, stood up to recite. How she managed to answer the questions she never knew, all was a mist to her. The teachers, the committee, the visitors and the scholars were all one confused mass, and she herself an automaton, with only the sense of hearing and answering left her, and it was with a sigh of relief that she returned to her seat.

At last the exercises were over, and the prizes to be distributed. The principal took his station in front of the school.

"The prize for the first class is awarded to Miss Katie Hallday; the second, to Miss Sophia Kemp; the third, to Miss Katherine Perkins; the fourth," &c.

Katie did not hear the fourth. Bewildered by her good-fortune, her head fell on her side had to push her forward to receive it. During the remainder of the school that day she sat as though in a dream, holding in the medal lightly in her hand. At last they were dismissed, and hastening home she rushed into the sitting-room.

"Oh, Mrs. Sloan, I have got the medal!" and burst into tears.

"Well, you needn't cry about it," said the practical John. "If ever I saw such a queer girl; try her best to win a prize and then cry because she got it!"

"Mrs. John, dear!" whispered Mrs. Sloan, and then, calling Katie, and putting an arm round her, she kissed her fondly, and told her how glad and proud she was.

Katie, for once courageous enough to express her real feelings, clasped her arms around her friend's neck and sobbed forth:

"Oh, Mrs. Sloan, how you love! I love you so dearly that I could die for you!"

"Well, here's a go!" began sarah the incorrigible John, but a glance from his mother stopped him.

Astonished at the intensity of expression from the hitherto quiet child, Mrs. Sloan could only caress her, but her eyes were opened in that moment to the depths of the little heart throbbing violently so close to her own, and Katie found a still closer friend in her from that day.

From this time the little girl regularly advanced, gaining prizes in the higher classes as she had in the third, until, at the age of fifteen, she was dismissed as finished. Long before she had made up her mind to seek her own livelihood by teaching, and eighteen months after leaving school applied for a situation in a town seven miles distant, and to her great surprise and unbounded delight, John, now a manly fellow of twenty, offered his services to drive her there, and with a tear of regret at parting, she started.

Elsie missed her sadly, for she had been her constant companion since leaving school, ever on the watch for some gentle office for her benefactress, whose health had become quite delicate latterly. Aunt Bessie would grimly say:

"Fuss! fuss, Elsie, I wish that child had just minded her business and stayed at home where she could be of some use. Whose going to pit the raisins for that great batch of mincepies, I should like to know? I am sure I can't and nobody else to do it."

But down in the bottom of her heart lay the real wish for the cheerful countenance and willing hands, and the raisins might go unpitted if Katie would only return.

John missing his young associate evenings, took to visiting Bickertown at first every week; he would be gone all the afternoon and evening until after ten o'clock, and when questioned would simply answer, "Riding."

Aunt Betsy, however, with a knowing look puckered up her mouth, and said, "The horse seemed to need exercise for many hours steady driving most amazingly well. Didn't he get tired of driving in one direction so much? Should think he had enough of the scenery on that road, when he went every two weeks to see Miss Katie home."

Instead of getting tired of the road John seemed to become attached to it, for every day or two found him on the road. Katie had been absent about two years, no one was surprised at his asking his father's permission to bring her home again to Mrs. Sloan. But Mrs. Sloan promptly put a stop to Molly's daughter, excepting, of course, our friend Deborah. "She thought it mighty come down to have deacon Sloan's wife let their servant go and come into it. She reckoned as how Miss Sloan was sorry she had meddled with that kettle o' fish. As to Katie, if she liked to come and visit, and to take up with her, when there was so many other girls in the village, he might a had for asking. Miss Sloan was a fool to have such a spilt as you want to set eyes on (just like her mother was at her age). But, then, twant no use for him to visit in that quarter. He never should a had her consent, not if Susie cried her eyes out. Besides Susie would not a had him."

"There, I do believe that's she a coming round the corner. Now do go Miss Sloan and receive me to congratulate you. Won't you walk in an take a cup of tea with us? Most supper time, an Bill and Susie 'll be glad to death to see you. It is so long since you've been in these parts that the sight of you is good for sore eyes. Won't come in! can't stop, hey? Well, you an John come another day see us some time, won't you? We always thought a heap o' John. Good evening. Peart thing; thinks she's grateful to her neighbors. I suppose Bill, the fortune goes by favor, and mayhap we'll be rich bym-by. Who knows but my Bill may marry a heiress, or found of high degree. Stranger things have happened, an may happen again."

NEW MUSIC.—Well deserving our notice are the compositions by Mr. FRANZ SCHLOTTER, one of the well-known musical professors of this city. A waltz, composed for the piano, and a galop, bearing the title "Leopold Galop," are among his recent productions, both of once original and brilliant, without being too difficult for ordinary players. The composition has in his case as a thorough knowledge of the effects of the piano-forte. Messrs. BEACH & BARKER are the publishers, and both merit every inducement to make Mr. SCHLOTTER's pen more prolific.

THE ARMY AND NAVY Journal, of NEW YORK, has used G.R. McCLELLAN's Report to the list of officers by the Army and Navy Register printed in that paper. The Report is published entire in supplement form, and uniform with the Register, in form convenient for preservation, and accompanied by a map. The two could be ordered of the publishers. It Report are for sale by Newsdealers, at 10 cents each, and by mail to any part of the United States, W. C. Church, 102 Broadway, on receipt of the price, 60 cts. for the two numbers.

BRITISH STATISTICS.—The CENSUS of Great Britain for 1861 gives the following results: Population of the principal towns of the cities and towns, containing more than fifty thousand inhabitants, so far as follows:

London, 2,803,989; Liverpool and Birkenhead, 405,587; Manchester and Salford, 460,429; Glasgow, 395,503; Edinburgh and Leith, 258,213; Dublin, 258,369; Belfast, 121,602; Sheffield, 185,172; Edinburg, 168,121; Bristol, 154,093; Wolverhampton, 147,670; Plymouth and Devonport, 122,351; Newcastle, 109,163; Bradford, 103,778; Cork, 100,234; Stoke, 101,707; Hull, 97,661; Portsmouth, 94,799; Oldham, 94,944; Dundee, 90,417; Brighton, 87,317; Sunderland, 63,765; Merthyr Tydvil, 63,875; Preston, 82,985.

No country in the world, out of Asia, contains so many large cities as the British Isles.

A FOOLISH fellow, having a house to sell, took a brick from the wall to exhibit it as a sample.

UNION CAVALRY COVERING THE ESCAPE OF UNION PRISONERS FROM LIBBY PRISON, RICHMOND.

GREAT FIRE AT GLOUCESTER, MASS., FEB. 16, DESTROYING 70 BUILDINGS, AND PROPERTY WORTH HALF A MILLION OF DOLLARS.—SKETCHED FROM THE STAGE HOUSE BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

BY ROBERT LOWELL.

O rugged land!
Land of the rock moss!
Land whose drear barrens it is woe to cross,
Thou rough thing from God's hand;
O stormy land!
Land where the tempests war!
Land where the unbroken waves rave mad upon the shore;
Thine outwalls scarce withstand!

O wintry realm,
Where the cold north winds blow;
Where drifting, bitter sleet, and blinding snow
All man's poor work o'erwhelm!
O bleak, bleak realm,
Whose homeward hastening bark
Is crisped with ice; sails, cordage, stiff and stark,
And iced the unruly helm!

What hast thou in thy gift?
The kindly sun has shone
These thousand years these stubborn cliffs upon,
Which thou on high dost lift;
What hast thou in thy gift?
A stinted growth appears;
Grass, shrub and tree, slow-growing in long years,
Where gapes the rocky rift,

Yet thou art good;
Thy barrens feed the deer;
And birds of other lands do Summer here,
In thy lone humble wood.
Ay, thou art good;
The poor man at his door
Gathers his fuel; and year-long thy shore
Yields, in free gift, his food.

And better still;
Beneath a guardian crown
The poor man freely walks and lays him down,
Free in all things but ill;
And better, still;
Here Holy Faith hath come,
Teaching that God will give a glorious home
To those that do His will.

The Gulf Between Them.

By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.

CHAPTER XI.

Months had passed since Grantley Mellen's departure for California; the winter had gone, the summer faded, and though his absence had been prolonged almost two years, there was little hope of his speedy return.

The business upon which he had gone out was not yet settled, and however great his anxiety to get back, he would not endanger his worldly interests so vitally as he would have done by any neglect or reckless inattention in that affair.

Since the night of that unpleasant scene in the hall at Piney Cove, Elsie Mellen had been at home so irregularly that all intimate relations had died out between her and her sister-in-law. Some dark thought seemed to possess the young girl, since the night of that strange adventure; and, though the subject was never mentioned between her and Elizabeth, the young girl's demeanor towards her brother's wife was one of cold, almost hateful, distrust, while Elizabeth grew more pensively sad each day, and seemed to shrink from any explanation with painful sensitiveness.

At last Elsie almost entirely absented herself from the house. The very premises seemed to have become hateful to her. Without deigning to consult Elizabeth, she had been visiting about among her former schoolmates, making Mrs. Harrington's house her headquarters. This was all the announcement of her movements that she chose to make to the woman who had been left her guardian.

How this fair, thoughtless girl lost all respect for her brother's wife so completely that she refused to remain accountable to her for anything, no one could tell, for she never mentioned the affair of that night to her nearest friend. It evidently worked in her heart, but never found utterance.

So the winter wore away drearily enough at Piney Cove; for with all her waywardness, Elsie had been like a sunbeam in the house; and Elizabeth pined in her absence till the dark circles widened under her eyes, and her voice always had a sound of pain in it. But with the most sorrowful, time moves on, and even grief cannot retain one phase for ever.

The second spring began to scatter a little brightness about the old house, and in this fresh outbloom of nature Elizabeth found some sources of enjoyment. Since her virtual separation from Elsie she had received no company, but lived in utter seclusion. Letters from her husband came regularly, but her replies were studied and written with restraint. She never folded one of these missives without tears in her eyes, and when his letters spoke of coming home, which a fond wife so much desires, she would ponder over the writing with a look of strange dread in her face.

So one lovely spring morning Elizabeth Mellen was alone in that quiet old mansion. Elsie had not been home for months, and only brief notes announcing some change of place, or anticipated movements, had warned Elizabeth of her mode of existence. These notes were cold as ice, and the young wife always shivered with dread when she opened them.

It might have been a package of these letters that she had been reviewing. She was alone in the library; quite alone, of course, but the repose and silence about her brought no rest to her soul. Her whole appearance was in strange contrast to the quiet of the scene; her face so changed by the terrible thoughts which kept her company, and forced themselves upon her solitude, that it hardly seemed the same.

She walked up and down the room in nervous haste, her head bent, her eyes looking straight before her, full of wild bewilderment which follows an effort at reflection when the mind is in a fever of unrest. Sometimes she stopped before the table, on which lay a package of open letters; she would glance at them, with a shudder of horror, wringing her hands passionately together at the time, and uttering low moans which sounded scarcely human in their smothered intensity.

Then she would glance towards the mantel, upon which lay a letter with the seal still unbroken, though it had reached her early that morning. It was from her husband, and she had not yet dared to read its contents!

She had been thus for hours, walking to and fro, sometimes sweeping the package on the table away as if unable longer to endure it before her eyes, only an instant after to uncover it as if there were danger in allowing it out of her sight. Then she would take up her husband's letter and attempt to open it, but each time her courage failed and she would lay it down, while that sickening trouble at her heart sent a new pallor across her face, and left her trembling and weak like a person just risen from a sick bed.

It was growing late in the afternoon; the sunlight played in at the windows, and cast a pleasant glow through the room; but the glad beams only made her shiver, as if they had been human witnesses that might betray her fear and misery.

At last she took up the package, to put it resolutely away where she could no longer look at it; as she raised it a miniature fell from among the papers, and struck the floor with a ringing sound. She snatched it up quickly, crushed the whole into a drawer, locked it and put the key in her bosom.

Then with a sudden struggle she started forward to the mantel, caught up her husband's letter, and began to read. A sharp cry broke from her lips; she dropped slowly to her knees, and went on reading in that attitude, as if it were the only one in which she could venture to glance at those kindly words:

"Not coming quite yet," she gasped at length; "thank God, not yet."

She allowed the letter to drop from her hand, and for a few moments gave herself completely up to the horrible agitation which consumed her.

It would have been a piteous sight to the coldest or most injured heart to have seen that beautiful woman crouched on the floor, in the extremity of her anguish, writhing to and fro, and moaning in her mortal agony, which could find no relief in tears.

She remained thus for a long time; at last some sudden thought appeared to strike her mind, which brought with it an absolute necessity for self-control and immediate action.

She rose to her feet, muttering:

"He will be here again soon; he must not find me like this!"

She walked to the mirror, arranged her disordered dress and hair, and stood gazing at her own features in a sort of wondering pity; they were so deathlike and contracted with suffering that she felt almost as if looking into the face of a stranger.

At length she caught up a cloak which lay on the sofa, wrapped herself in it and went out of the house.

She took her way through the woods, walking rapidly and quite regardless that the moisture from the damp earth was penetrating her thin shoes, not feeling the keenness of the wind, which was growing chill with the approach of evening.

The expression of her face had changed; she was deadly pale still, but a look of resolution had settled over her features, and her strong will and self-control had begun to exert themselves.

Beyond the shrubbery was a thick grove of sycamores extending to the very shore, and into their shadow Elizabeth walked with that determined step.

She was evidently waiting for some one; she paced up and down among the trees, the dry leaves rustling under her tread and making her start, as if she feared being surprised in that solitary spot by some curious wanderer.

It was growing almost twilight, but still she kept up that dreary promenade, struggling fiercely with herself, and trying to restrain the whirl of agonizing thoughts which threatened to overwhelm her forced composure.

"He will not come," she muttered; "I must wait—wait—he will not come to-day."

She shuddered at the very sound of her own voice, but as she looked suddenly about a step sounded on the grass, and a man came out from the deeper recesses of the grove, and paused for a moment, glancing on either side as if uncertain which path to pursue. It was Mr. North.

She saw him, but neither moved or spoke, but remained standing there in dumb silence, gazing towards him with an expression in which so many diverse emotions struggled, that it would have been difficult to decide which feeling was paramount.

The flutter of her cloak caught his attention, and he came hurriedly forward with a smile on his lips, and holding out his hand in an easy, reckless way.

"Ten thousand pardons," he exclaimed, "I fear that I have kept you waiting—I never shall forgive myself."

She put up her hand as if to check him, feeling, perhaps, some mockery in his words which was not apparent in his voice.

"We need not make excuses to each other," she said, in a cold, hard tone, "neither you nor I came here for that."

"Scarcely, I believe," and he laughed out in a reckless way which appeared natural to him.

Elizabeth Mellen shuddered in every limb at that musical sound; an absolute spasm of pain contracted her features, she gave no other sign of emotion, but clenched her hands hard together, forcing herself to be calm.

"I only received your letter this morning," he continued, watching her every movement carefully, though standing there with his back against a tree with apparent unconcern; "I should have been earlier if it had been possible."

She made an impatient gesture.

"No more of that," she exclaimed, "enough!"

He looked at her with the same careless smile that lighted up his somewhat worn face into an expression of absolute youthfulness. He was a splendidly handsome man; a type of rare beauty which could not have failed to attract general observation wherever he appeared.

He was tall; the shoulders and limbs might have served as a model for a sculptor; the graceful neck was white almost as a woman's, the magnificent head set with perfect grace upon it, and was carried with a haughty air that was absolutely noble. He might have been thirty-eight, perhaps even older than that, but he was one of those men concerning whose age even a physiognomist would be puzzled to decide.

The face was almost faultless in its contour; the mouth, shaded by a long silken moustache, which relieved his paleness admirably, and lent new splendor to his eyes, which possessed a strange, magnetic power that had worked ill in more than one unfortunate destiny.

It was a face trained to concealment, and yet so carefully tutored that at the first glance one only thought what an open, pleasant expression it had. Even after long intercourse and a thorough knowledge of the man's character, that face would have puzzled the most skilful observer.

Elizabeth Mellen was looking at him in a strange silence; whatever might have been in the past, there was no spell now in those glorious eyes which could dazzle her soul into forgetfulness; wave after wave of repressed emotion passed over her features as she gazed, leaving them at last white and fixed as marble.

"You are so pale," he said, "so changed."

She started as if he had struck her.

"I did not come here to talk of my appearance," she said.

"True," he replied, "very true; but I cannot help wondering. I think of that day when I saved your life——"

"If you had only let me be killed!" she broke in passionately. "If God had only mercifully deprived you of all strength!"

"You were blooming and gay," he went on as if he had not heard her words. "Yes, you are changed since then."

"I will not hear these things," she cried; "I will not be made to look back upon what we all were then!"

She closed her eyes in blind anguish; his words brought back with such terrible force the time of that meeting—the day but one before her marriage when he had started up so fatally in her path, and never left it till this terrible moment.

"Then to change the subject," he said. "In our brief conversation the other day we arrived at no conclusion whatever, nor was your letter any more satisfactory; will you tell me exactly what you have decided upon?"

A sudden flash of anger leaped into her eyes above all the suffering that dilated them.

"Now you are talking naturally," she said, "now you are your real self!"

He bowed in a mocking way.

"It is your turn to pay compliments," he answered; "but I shall not receive them so ungraciously as you did mine."

She passed her hand across her throat as if something were choking her, then she said in a hard, measured tone:

"Have you considered the proposition I made you—will you go away from this country, and remain away for ever?"

He stood playing with his watchchain in an easy, careless way, as he replied:

"It is cruel to banish me—very cruel!"

"Listen!" she exclaimed passionately; "I know more than you think—your residence here is not very safe if many of your actions were brought to light!"

He only bowed again.

"It may be so, but I leave few traces in my path. If you do indeed know anything which could affect me, I am very certain that in you I have a friend who will be silent."

He opened his vest slightly and drew forth from an inner pocket a small paper, at the sight of which Elizabeth grew whiter than before. She made a gesture as if she would have snatched it from him, but he thrust it back in its hiding-place with a sarcastic smile.

"Secret for secret," said he; "but never mind that. After all, you treat me very badly. I wonder I am in the least inclined to be friends with you."

"Don't mock me!" she exclaimed. "Friends! There is no creature living that I loathe as I do you! No matter what the danger might be, I would speak the truth; tell you how utterly abhorrent you are to me and brave the result."

"Yet once——"

She interrupted him with an insane gesture; perhaps he knew her too well for any attempt at trifling further with her just then, for his manner changed, and he said:

"You will take cold here; it is growing dark and the wind is very chill."

"It doesn't matter," she replied, recklessly. "Let us finish what there is to say, then I will go."

The wretched woman could stand upon her feet no longer, she was shaking so with agitation and exhaustion that she was forced to sit down on a fallen log. He seated himself by her side, regardless of her recoiling gesture, and began to talk earnestly.

For a full hour that strange interview went on; their voices rising at times in sudden passion, then sinking to a low tone, as if remembering that they spoke words which must not be overheard.

At last Elizabeth rose suddenly from her seat, folded her cloak about her, and said, quickly:

"Be here to-morrow at the same hour."

Without giving him time to answer or making the least sign of farewell, she darted rapidly through the darkening woods and disappeared in the direction of the house.

North rose, began whistling a careless air and walked slowly back along the path by which he had entered the grove.

When Elizabeth came in sight of the house she saw a light in the library window.

"Elsie is back at last. God help us all!" she muttered.

She moved near the low casement and looked in, saw the young girl standing on the hearth and with a sort of groan hurried towards the entrance.

Elsie had returned home a full hour before, and had searched for Elizabeth vainly about the house. She entered the library, and was walking restlessly about, as if oppressed by this cold welcome home.

Suddenly her eye caught sight of a paper lying under the table; it was one of the letters which had fallen unnoticed by Elizabeth when she put away the package.

Elsie caught it up, glanced her eyes over it, uttered a faint cry, then read it in a sort of horrified stupor.

"Elizabeth! Elizabeth!" broke from her lips.

The discovery which she had made froze the very blood in her veins and left her incapable of thought or action. She sat shivering, as if struck with a mortal chill, and at last crept close to the fire, clutching the letter in her hands, but holding them out for warmth. Sometimes her sister's name broke from her lips in a horrified whisper, and low words died in her throat whose sound made her shudder.

At length the darkness and the solitude seemed to become insupportable to her; she started forward and opened the door, with the intention of fleeing from the room. It had suddenly become odious to her. She took one step into the hall and met Elizabeth face to face. The woman saw the letter which Elsie held in her hand, caught the recoiling gesture which she instinctively made, then for an instant they both stood still, staring in each other's face.

Suddenly Elizabeth caught Elsie's hand, drew her back into the library, and, once there, closed and locked the door.

For more than an hour the pair were alone in that darkened apartment. When at last they emerged from it they were both so white and shaken that it was pitiful to witness their distress. Not a word was spoken between them, but they turned away from each other like ghosts that had no resting-place on earth.

CHAPTER XII.

When North left Mrs. Mellen in the woods he took a moment for consideration and then walked quickly towards the shore tavern. As he turned a point which led from Piney Cove to the bluff which overhung, his little servant, the young mulatto, who had spent most of the season at this retreat, came to meet him with a letter in his hand.

"It had a foreign postmark," said the man; "so I started to meet you the moment it came in, according to orders."

"Right, boy, you are very right," cried North, tearing at the envelope as a hawk rends its prey; "never let a scrap of writing from abroad rest a moment out of my hands."

The man read his letter—only a few lines—and his hands shook till the paper rattled again.

"Boy—boy, what day of the month is this?" he questioned, trying to fold the letter, which he crushed instead.

"The tenth, sir."

North went into a mental calculation, then the cloud on his face broke away and he almost shouted:

"It is in time—it is in time! Any other letters?"

"One for the Cove. Shall I slip it into the old man's parcel or would you rather——"

"Give it to me," said North, cutting the servant short, and snatching at the letter, which was in Mr. Mellen's handwriting and bore the California postmark.

He was too eager for caution and broke the seal recklessly.

"He, too—he coming, too! By Jove, this is glorious sport! Made his will before sailing, ha! —provident man!—one-half to his dear wife, the other to his darling sister, Elsie Mellen. A safe precaution, for ships will get lost at sea."

North crushed the two letters into his pocket and walked with rapid steps towards the tavern. But he only went in long enough to get a telescope, with which he reappeared, and turned into a path leading to the bluff. Once upon the ledge, high above the house, he levelled his glass and took a hasty sweep of the ocean with it. Nothing was in sight that seemed to interest him, so he turned the glass a little landward and levelled it on the Piney Cove mansion, which made an imposing feature in the landscape. From the eminence on which the mansion stood the grounds sloped down to the water's edge in a closely-shaven lawn, pleasantly broken up by flowerbeds, and knots of old trees that looked aged and mysterious enough to have watched the distant sweep of sea for whole centuries.

North seemed to be counting every clump of trees and calculating the value of each broad field that stretched back from the crescentlike Cove.

"It is a glorious old place, and we might live there like monarchs. If I could only command the winds and waves for one week, now, we might defy the rest. Half his property! Why, it is splendid; and the will safe."

With these words he turned his glass again. On a clear day there was a glorious view from the bluff, showing the full extent of the curving bay, with its long line of steep woodlands stretching along the coast and the bright wash of waters beyond till the eye was lost in the white swell of the distant ocean. Other mansions peeped out from among the trees or stood boldly down on the shore, and on the right hand was visible a small village, nestled in at the furthermost extremity of the bay. But he turned the glass directly oceanward, and searched the horizon with keen interest. A ship hove in sight, like a great white bird, beating up from its nest in mid-ocean. The heart in that bad man's bosom made a great bound, and the blasphemy of a thanksgiving sprang to his lips, but the joy was only for a moment. Dropping his glass, he muttered:

"God! to suppose, of all the ships on the ocean, it must be this one. But if it should—if it should!"

He sat down on a fragment of rock, rested his glass on the drooping branch of a tree and watched the ship as it swept out of a bank of luminous fog and took a more definite form. Hitherto it had seemed floating between a curve of the sky and the blue line of water, but now it came out clearly, and as North looked he saw a dark pile of storm-clouds muster up behind it with a slow, threatening danger.

Hour after hour the man sat and watched that one object. The glass was a powerful one, and seconded his keen vigilance. At length he was rewarded, a burst of sunshine fell upon the vessel, the last that illuminated the horizon that day, and he saw her name on the stern. The telescope dropped from his hand, his face turned pale, while the cry that leaped to his lips perished there. The man was frightened by the completion of his own wishes. Had some evil spirit performed a miracle for him? All the time he had been watching a tempest had blackly followed the homeward-bound ship. The ocean had begun to dash and torment itself into a fury of wrath. A high wind came roaring up from the bosom of the waters, and over all gathered a world of blackness, that took a lurid red from the sun when it went down, and afterwards engulfed the ship, which was last seen struggling fearfully in the wild upheaving of the elements.

North seemed possessed of a demon that night. He left his telescope on the earth and went desperately to work gathering up dry wood and brush, which he stacked on the overhanging ledge, never pausing till a great mound was created sufficiently large to keep a fire blazing all night. By the time this was done the darkness became profound Now and then he could see a drift of foam tossed upwards, like the fluttering garments of a ghost but that was all. The little tavern at the foot of the rock was lost in the overwhelming darkness. The lights from the village seemed put out, and there was no vestige of Piney Cove visible. There had been no rain as yet, and at this North rejoiced. The wind came fiercely from the ocean, so fiercely that it threatened the death of any vessel approaching the shore.

With all these elements of terror surrounding him, North worked till the perspiration dropped from his forehead like rain. That cliff had been blackened before with wreckers' fires, but never had a man heaped wood upon wood with so vivid a conviction of the crime he meditated, with such earnest desire for death to follow his toil.

When the evening had reached its darkest gloom this man struck a match, which he took from his pocket in a little case of enamelled gold, and thrust it among the yellow pine splinters with which he had laid the foundation of his deathfire. The blue light of the match flashed closed to his face, revealing it white as death, but smiling.

